BY THE
REV. DR. CHALLONER

NEW YORK, 1845.

THE HOLINESS JOHN PIOUS IX.

Thou shalt love the LORD thy GOD with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul and with thy whole mind.
THIS is the Greatest and First Commandment.

GOD SPOKE
WORDS

I.

I AM the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

Thou shalt not have strange gods before me.

Thou shalt not make to thyself a graven thing, nor the likeness of any thing that is in heaven above or in the earth beneath, nor of those things that are in the waters under the earth. Thou shalt not adore them, nor serve them. I am the Lord thy God, mighty, jealous, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me: And shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

II.

THOU shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that shall take the name of the Lord his God in vain.

III.

REMEMBER that thou keep holy the sabbath day. Six days shalt thou labour, and shalt do all thy works. But on the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: thou shalt do no work on it, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy beast, nor the stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all things that are in them, and rested on the seventh day: therefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it.

IV.

HONOUR thy father and thy mother, that thou mayst be long-lived upon the land which the Lord thy God will give thee.

V.

THOU shalt not kill.

VI.

THOU shalt not commit adultery.

VII.

THOU shalt not steal.

VIII.

THOU shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

IX.

THOU shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife.

X.

THOU shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods.

FAC-SIMILE OF AN ANCIENT GREEK MANUSCRIPT OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

HISTORY OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

THE Holy Bible is the collection of the writings composed at different times by holy men whom God inspired for the purpose, and which have been preserved and handed down by the Jewish and the Christian Church. This series of books begins with the book of Genesis, written by Moses, and ends with the Apocalypse, or Revelation by St John the Apostle.

THE LANGUAGES OF THE BIBLE.

These books were written in different languages, in Hebrew, Chaldaic, and at the end in Greek; only one book, the Gospel of St. Mark, having been, as some suppose, written in Latin; but this is very doubtful.

Under the Old Law, the high-priest and the council of priests, gave these books to the people, and attested that they were inspired by God. When Jesus Christ established His Church, it alone was empowered to pronounce upon this, and to give to the faithful what they were to receive as the inspired word of God.

INSPIRATION.

"Inspiration, as understood in this matter, means a certain influence of the Divine Spirit upon the mind of a writer, moving him to write, and so acting upon him while he writes, that his work or writing is truly the word of God.

"The proof of the inspiration of the Scriptures is easy on Catholic principles. The Church of Christ has always held and taught the doctrine of the inspiration of the Scriptures, and as the Church cannot err in what she teaches, therefore the Scriptures are inspired."

The books of the Holy Scriptures, as laid down in the fourth session of the Council of Trent, are the following:

CANONICAL BOOKS.

Of the Old Testament, the five books of Moses, that is: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy; Josue, Judges, Ruth, the four books of Kings, two of Paralipomenon, of Esdras the first book and the second—which is called Nehemias—Tobias, Judith, Esther, Job, the Psalter of David of a hundred and fifty Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, The Canticle of Canticles; Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus; Isaias, Jeremias with Baruch; Ezechiel, Daniel; the twelve minor prophets, that is: Osee, Joel, Amos, Abdias, Jonas, Micheas, Nahum, Habacuc, Sophonias, Aggeus, Zachatrine (chap. viii., n. 13), in the year 400." These catalogues agree perfectly with the canon adopted by the Council of Trent; the only difference being in form, the prophecy of Baruch being included under the name of the prophet Jeremias, whose secretary he was.

ARK OF THE COVENANT.

rias, Malachias, two books of Machabees, the first and second. Of the New Testament, the four gospels according to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; the Acts of the Apostles, written by Luke the Evangelist; fourteen Epistles of St. Paul to the Romans, two to the Corinthians; to the Galatians, to the Ephesians, to the Philippians, to the Colossians; two to the Thessalonians; two to Timothy; to Titus, to Philemon, to the Hebrews; of Peter the Apostle, two epistles; of John the Apostle, three; of James the Apostle, one; of Jude the Apostle, one; and the Apocalypse of John the Apostle.

THE CANON OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

"In the Latin Church we find numerous monuments of a continued tradition in favor of the canonicalness of all these books. Catalogues of the sacred books are given by Pope Innocent I. in his epistle to Exuperius, in the year 402; and by Saint Augustine, in his second book on Christian Doc-

"The council of Hippo, held in the year 393; the third council of Carthage, held about the year 397; a council of seventy bishops at Rome in 494, at which Pope Gelasius presided in person, all agree with Saint Augustine and Innocent in their enumeration of the sacred books. This third council of Carthage was a national council of Africa, approved of by Saint Augustine, if that great doctor was not actually present, and presided over by Aurelius, Archbishop of Carthage. In the sixth century Cassiodorus, in his first book of Divine Readings, and in the early part of the next century, Saint Isidore of Seville, in his sixth book of Etymologies, enumerate the books of Scripture as they are upon our canon. In the Vetus Italia, the common Latin version of the Western Church, before the time of Saint Jerome, these books are found interspersed among the other books, and when Saint Jerome's translation was adopted by the Church, care was taken that these books should not be disturbed from the places which they had previously occupied in the Latin bibles. There they continued, commented on from time to time, like the other books, arranged in their order in the Roman missal and breviary, like the others, until, coming down to the time of Eugenius IV., we find this pope in his decree for the Armenians, setting forth the same canon which the Council of Trent subsequently adopted.

THE CANON IN THE ORIENTAL CHURCHES.

The testimony of the Oriental Churches is no less uniform. Although they separated from the Latin Church and differed from it on various points of doctrine, they have never objected to any of the books received by the Latin Church, but have always accepted the same books as inspired, and to this day retain them all in their bibles.

"This appears strikingly in the acts of a council held at Constantinople in 1642, when the bishops of the Greek Church rejected the efforts of the Reformers to effect a union with them. They condemned the Protestants in their last decree for the very reason that they had presumed to expunge from the Scripture, books which the Church in her synods had acknowledged as sacred. In 1671, seven archbishops of the Greek Church at Pera signed an attestation adopting and conforming this council, and in the fourteenth article they declare "that the books of Tobias, Judith, Wisdom, Ecclesiastius, Baruch and the Machabees, form part of the Holy Scripture, and are not to be rejected as profane." "All the Christians of the East agree with the Christians of the Greek Church in the tradition respecting the canon. All the Syrians read the Scriptures as they are found in the translation made from the Hebrew at an early period; they have, like the Latins, those parts of Scripture which are not found in the Hebrew copies." It is the same with the Arabic, Armenian, and Chaldees:

THE PROTESTANT CANON.

At the great schism, generally called the Reformation, in itself a revolt of civil government against the Church, the newly-formed Protestant denomination, to avoid apparently Church." This is wrong in philosophy, for it makes God's revelation subject to man's doubt; and wrong in fact, because they actually received several parts, such as Esther in the Old Testament, parts of St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John, the Epistle to the Hebrews, those of St. James and St. Jude, the second the influence of the books of Machabees, which extol those who refused to renounce their ancient faith to embrace a new state religion, adopted a new canon, and refused to recognize as inspired several books of the Old Testament which were not included by modern Jews in their Hebrew bibles. In this they were at variance with the uniform consent of Christendom; they did not pretend to be infallible or inspired; they simply adopted the authority of the Jewish schools of Masora and Babylon, in preference to the Christian Church, although those schools, in arranging the Hebrew Bible, excluded Ben Sira or Ecclesiasticus, because it favored the belief in a Trinity, and the books written in Greek as having led to Christianity. They actually made an anti-Christian authority greater than that of the Church of Christ. The Church of England in its articles, and the Presbyterians, assert that they accept only those books "of whose authority was never any doubt in the

of St. Peter, the second and third of St. John, as well as the Apocalypse, as to all of which doubts had been entertained.

Although they rejected several books and parts of books, they continued to print them in their Bibles as Apocrypha, and the Bibles issued in England by the royal printers, who have an exclusive privilege, are even now required to retain them; but the Bible Societies in England and America have, for years back, absolutely excluded them.

ANCIENT MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

THE HEBREW LANGUAGE.

The language which Moses and the other inspired writers used down to the fall of the Kingdom of Juda, was the Hebrew, and the books were written in the old Hebrew, or, as they are now called, Samaritan letters. During their captivity at Babylon, the Jews acquired the Chaldaic language, and some of the inspired books were written in that tongue. The Jews, moreover, adopted the square Assyrian letters, now known as the Hebrew, and this became so general that the sacred books were copied into this letter, so as to be more easily read. Numbers of Jews who had escaped from the captivity fled into Egypt, where they remained even after the return of their countrymen to Jerusalem. When Alexander the Great conquered Syria and Egypt, Greek kingdoms were set up in those countries, and in time the Greek language became almost universal.

THE SEPTUAGINT.

A translation of the Hebrew Scriptures was made into Greek in Egypt, and as it is said to have been the work of seventy interpreters, this ancient translation is generally called the Septuagint. The last of the inspired books of the Old Testament were also written in Greek. The Apostles wrote in Greek, and in citing the Old Testament use the Septuagint and not the original Hebrew; many of the Synagogues then using the Greek version. As nearly all the early preaching of Christianity was in Greek, then an almost universal language, the Septuagint translation was adopted in the churches with the books originally written in Greek, and was commonly used for at least four centuries. It is the version cited by the great body of the holy fathers in their writings. The earliest Latin version, the Vetus Itala, made, according to Cardinal Wiseman and other students, in Africa, was a translation of the Septuagint. It has strong claims, and is of great value in studying the Hebrew text, for it was made from manuscripts written in the old character, as its correspondence with the Samaritan copies shows. The translators knew the geography of Egypt and the Holy Land, and were familiar with the various birds, beasts, and fishes, trees and plants mentioned in the sacred books, and they, of course, knew both the Hebrew and Greek names for them.

THE VULGATE.

The Latin version of the Bible, which has for many centuries been exclusively used in the Latin Church, in its offices and public teaching, is commonly called the Vulgate. This was declared authentic by the Council of Trent, and a carefully revised edition was issued by Pope Clement VIII., in 1592, as a standard copy. This Latin version is mainly a revision of the Vetus Itala, made by Saint Jerome, a holy and learned Roman priest, who had retired to Bethlehem, and in his Hebrew studies was aided by eminent Jewish scholars. His labors occupied several years, from A.D. 389 to 396. He corrected the Latin version of the Old Testament then in general use by the Hebrew, except Tobias and Judith, which he translated from the Chaldaic; the Psalms, which he revised by means of the Septuagint, and the books of Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, Machabees, Baruch, and the portions of Jeremias, Esther, and Daniel, which are not in Hebrew. These are retained as they were old in the old Latin version or Vetus Itala. Saint Jerome, writing in the Holy Land with the aid of Hebrew scholars and the guidance of the Septuagint, with a knowledge of the country and its products, as well as of the manners and customs of the people, gave his translation the highest accuracy. His version gradually superseded all the older Latin Bibles, and has, since its formal adoption by the Council of Trent, become the official one of the Church.

CATHOLIC VERSIONS.

The Catholic versions of the Bible in modern languages are made from the Vulgate. The English version was made at an English College established at Douay, but which, in conse-to the editions we have now in use. In the years 1749-50, the Rt. Rev. Richard Challoner, Bishop of Debra and Vicar Apostolic of the London district in England, modernized the translation of Gregory Martin. His version, constantly modified by editors, is the bible now in use among Catholics wherever the English language is spoken.

The Douay Version has always been acknowledged to be remarkably faithful to the original, and having the advantage of the care of Saint Jerome and the Septuagint translators, in rendering all terms relating to the manners and customs of the East and the natural history and topography of the countries in which the scenes of the Bible are laid, it avoids the many absurd errors and mistranslations which have made other versions ridiculous.

RULES OF THE CHURCH.

The rules laid down by the Church in regard to the reading of the Scriptures in the vulgar tongue are wise and justified by the efforts made by her enemies to corrupt the faithful.

MORDECAI'S TRIUMPH.

quence of wars and English pressure, removed for a time to Rheims, in France. The translation was the work of Gregory Martin, a graduate of Oxford—a man of the highest learning and ability. He was assisted by Cardinal Allen and other scholars who added the notes. The New Testament was published by John Cogeny, at Rheims, in 1583, and the Old Testament in two volumes at Douay by Laurence Keller, in 1609-10. This version is highly esteemed for its strict adherence to the original, and its absolute faithfulness. It is homogeneous, uniform in style, and in a philological view, of the utmost value, as it embodies the religious language of Catholic England before the Reformation. In this point as well as in its terse, pure, and vigorous English, it is not surpassed by any English version that has ever been made, and is far superior

First. That those who would read the Scriptures in a version must procure a Catholic version. This is surely a most reasonable condition, seeing how easy it is for a translator, hostile to the Church, to pervert the meaning of numerous passages, and thus mislead the unlearned reader.

Secondly. The Church has also a right to require that even a Catholic version, that is to say, one made by a Catholic author, shall not be put into the hands of the people until it shall have received the approbation of the proper ecclesiastical authority, because it belongs to the duty of the Church to take care that the people shall not be misled by a translator, who either wilfully or through ignorance, misrepresents the original.

Thirdly. The Church has, in its discretion, a right to require that the people shall read those versions only which are accompanied with explanatory notes taken from the Fathers or approved Catholic commentators, because since there is a body of teachers established in the Church, whom the people are bound to hear and obey, it follows that the people are not at liberty to attach to the Scriptures any meaning opposed to the teaching of the Church, or at variance with the unanimous interpretation of the Fathers, those witnesses of the apostolic doctrine. Any such meaning would be false. Now, without the explanatory notes of which we speak, the people would often be exposed to the danger of attaching these unsound meanings to the Scriptures. Besides, without such notes, various parts of the Scripture, by reason of their obscurity, would convey no instruction whatever to the unlearned.

Finally, the pastors of the Church have a right to prohibit the reading of the Scriptures altogether to those who are at the same time unlearned and unstable, and more likely to indulge in their own curious speculations, to the great danger of their faith, than to be guided by the notes of learned Catholic writers.

MODERN EDITIONS IN THE ORIGINAL LANGUAGES.

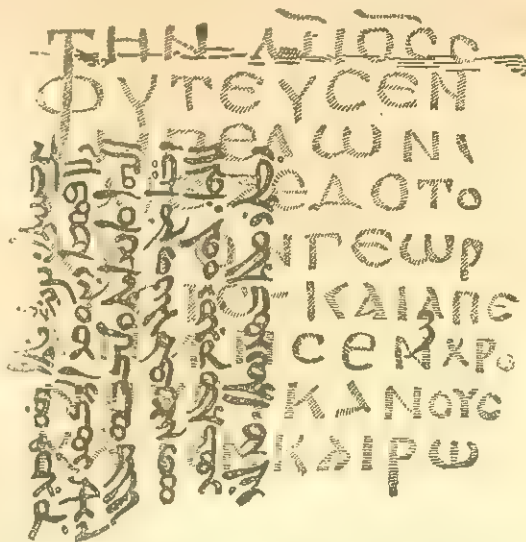

The modern printed Hebrew Bibles and Greek Testaments are nearly all based on editions hastily issued soon after the invention of printing, and without any critical examination of the manuscripts or the attempt to select the most ancient and carefully prepared. The received texts, as they are called, are notoriously incorrect. The received text of the Greek Testament was hastily prepared by Erasmus, who rejected his best ancient manuscript because it differed from the others. These received texts are, however, the basis of the Protestant translations, although the ancient Greek manuscripts, like the Vatican, Sinai, and Alexandrian, sustain the Vulgate, where it differs from the received text.

Recently the Vatican manuscript has been published under the direction of Cardinal Mai; the Sinaitic under a competent critic.

BIBLE REVISION.

The acknowledgment of the incorrectness of the received texts, and of the manifold errors into which translators fell, who, trusting to their own judgment, discarded the testimony of the ancient versions as to topography, natural history, etc., as well as the numerous errors caused by ignorance, prejudice, and a desire to make the Scriptures support certain ideas and theories, has forced many sects to endeavor to give a better and more honest translation of the Bible than that which has long been current among Protestants in England and this country. This is called the King James' Version, having been prepared in the reign of James I., and under his direction. Several attempts at revision were made in this country, and at the present time a body of scholars in England is engaged upon the work. All these revisers admit the erroneous character of King James' version, and especially, that the form of the Lord's Prayer, as given in it, is utterly spurious and without authority.

THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

OLD TESTAMENT.

THE five books, GENESIS, EXODUS, LEVITICUS, NUMBERS, and DEUTERONOMY, were written by Moses, whom God raised up as the ruler and lawgiver of His people. They are called together The Pentateuch, which means Five Books; they were also spoken of among the Jews as The Law. GENESIS gives the history of the world before the deluge, and of the descent of Abraham from Noe and his vocation to be the father of the chosen people. The history of that holy patriarch and his descendants through Isaac and Jacob is then given, with their sojourn in Egypt. EXODUS describes their miraculous departure and wanderings in the desert. LEVITICUS is devoted to the regulation of divine worship, the order of the priests and Levites, the sacrifices, rites, and offerings. NUMBERS is chiefly an enumeration of the people; and DEUTERONOMY, a further exposition of the law of God.

The book of JOSUE was written by Osee or Josue, who succeeded Moses in the government of the Israelites. He describes their entrance into the promised land, and the conquest of most of it.

The book of JUDGES is attributed, by some, to the prophet Samuel, by others, to Phineas, Esdras, or Ezechias. It gives the history of the people of God while governed by the Judges.

The book of RUTH, the inspired author of which is unknown, gives the history of that woman, called by God from her heathen nation to become one of the progenitors of the Messias. As the events occurred in the time of the Judges, the book was sometimes united to Judges.

There are four books of Kings, called in the Hebrew Bible and those translated from it, two Books of Samuel and two of Kings. They were written, it is supposed, by Samuel and other prophets. There are two books of PARALIPOMENON, called in Hebrew, Dibre Hajamim, Books of Days, and by some called Chronicles; these books are attributed by some to Esdras. The books of Kings and Paralipomenon give the history of the Israelites under Saul, David, and Solomon, and then of the two kingdoms of Israel and Juda, till the complete destruction of the former, and the overthrow of the Kingdom of Juda, and the removal of the people to Babylon.

The books of ESDRAS were written by Esdras, a holy priest, who returned from Babylon to Jerusalem with Zorobabel, in the commencement of the reign of Cyrus, 536 B. C. The first book is written in the name of Esdras, and relates the return of the Jews from the captivity. The second book is attributed posed to have been composed by the holy patriarch himself or by Moses. It is in form a poem, and describes the patience of Job amid the afflictions with which God visited him.

The PSALMS of DAVID, to the number of one hundred and fifty, were written in Hebrew, by that holy king, and as some to NEHEMIAS, as the narrative begins in his name. He was cupbearer to Artaxerxes, King of Persia, and was sent to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. It relates what was done to restore religion and revive piety.

The book of TOBIAS, written in Chaldaic, by the father and son of that name, or on their statements, gives the history of the pious Tobias, of the tribe of Nephthali, who amid the idolatry of the kingdom of Israel, and then in captivity at Nineve, adhered faithfully to the divine law. The book is full of pious instructions and examples.

The book of JUDITH, written in Chaldaic, relates the miraculous delivery of Bethulia, by the holy widow Judith, of the tribe of Ruben, and the death and defeat of Holofernes.

The book of ESTHER relates the history of the elevation of Esther, a Hebrew maiden of the tribe of Benjamin, to the throne of Assuerus, and of the plot of Aman, of the race of Agag, to obtain the extermination of all the Jews; a plot defeated by Queen Esther. The book was written as is generally believed, by Mardochoi, in Hebrew, although some additional parts are not now found in that language.

The book of JOB, written in Hebrew with many Arabic and Chaldaic expressions, is supposed, in part by others. They are full of prophecies, especially of the person and life of the Son of God. They have been used from his time in the worship of God by the Jews, and from the establishment of the Church by Christians.

The Book of PROVERBS, called in Hebrew Misle, was written by Solomon, the wise and illustrious King of Israel. They are short lessons of wisdom for all states and conditions of life.

The Book of ECCLESIASTES, in Hebrew Cohoeleth, written also by Solomon, refutes the vain ideas and pretexts of the wicked.

The CANTICLE OF CANTICLES, in Hebrew Sir Hasiim, was written by Solomon, and is a sublime poem, describing, under the allegory of a marriage, the union of Jesus Christ with human nature, with the Church, and with a faithful soul.

The Book of WISDOM was written in Greek, and in its citations follows the Septuagint. It is addressed to kings, rulers, and judges; it extols wisdom, and shows the unhappy end of the wicked. It gives the noblest and grandest ideas of God. The version of Ecclesiasticus and of Wisdom in the Vulgate, is from the Vetus Itala, not having been revised by Saint Jerome.

The Book of ECCLESIASTICUS, called in Hebrew Ben Sira, was written in Hebrew, by Jesus the son of Sirach. It is a collection of maxims and instructions for all conditions of life, and for every station. It also contains eulogies of many of the patriarchs, and of the holy persons of the old law. The Jews, in arranging the Hebrew Bible after the establishment of Christianity, excluded Ecclesiasticus because it seemed to favor the dogma of the Holy Trinity.

THE PROPHETS.—A number of the books of the Bible are called the Prophets, being those which contain the writings of the holy men raised up by God, who foretold the future condition of the Jewish people and the life and passion of the Son of God.

ISAIAS, son of Amos, was the first of the four great prophets. His prophecies began after the death of Ozias, and extend to the reign of Manasses, by whom he was put to death, 758–698 B. C. The principal object of his prophecies is the captivity of Babylon, the return of the Jews, and the reign of the Messias. Isaias is the most eloquent of the prophets, and in his description of our Saviour seems like one of the evangelists.

JEREMIAS, son of Helcias, was a priest, and therefore a descendant of Aaron, and of the tribe of Levi. He was chosen to be a prophet from his mother's womb. He prophesied from 629 B. C. till his death in Egypt, 586 B. C. He denounced the sins of the Jews and foretold the chastisement which God was about to inflict by the hand of Nabuchodonosor. He foretold to kings Joakim and Jechonias the fate that was to befall them. He suffered great persecutions from these obstinate kings. His prophecies were written at his dictation by Baruch, his secretary. At the destruction of Jerusalem, Jeremias carried away the Ark of the Covenant and hid it in Mount Nebo. He was soon after carried off captive with the rest of the people, but was released by order of Nabuchodonosor, who allowed him his choice, either to go to Babylon or to remain in Judea with the small band left there. He remained in Judea, but after great dissensions among the members, most of them retired to Egypt, taking Jeremias with them, and there the holy prophet is supposed to have died. Besides his prophecies he composed his Lamentations, a hymn of mourning over the destruction of Jerusalem.

BARUCH also prophesied, and his prophecies are appended to the book of Isaias.

EZECHIEL, son of Busi was also a priest. He was carried away captive to Babylon before the final overthrow, and prophesied from 594 to 574 B. C. He foretold the destruction of Jerusalem, its restoration, and the rebuilding of the temple. Many of his prophecies are so grand and mysterious that the Jews allowed no man to read them till he was thirty years of age.

DANIEL was a prince of the house of David, and was led away captive to Babylon in his youth, where he was educated at the king's court. He delivered Susanna from a false accusation, foretold the strange madness of Nabuchodonosor; had a vision of four great empires; he was cast into a lion's den by Baltassar, and read the mysterious handwriting on the wall which declared the overthrow of that prince. He foretold the length of the captivity, and fixed the time of the coming of the Messias. He was a second time thrown to the lions. His prophecies were written partly in Hebrew and partly in Chaldaic, and some have come down to us only in Greek.

OSEE. Besides these four great prophets, there are twelve others, whose writings are more brief. Of these the first is Osee, son of Beeri. He prophesied during the reign of Jeroboam II., king of Israel. He lived in his kingdom and foretold its destruction and the captivity of the ten tribes. He also foretold the fall of the kingdom of Juda and the Babylonian captivity.

JOEL, son of Phatuel, the second of the twelve minor prophets is said to have been of the tribe of Ruben. He prophesied in the kingdom of Juda, but at what time is uncertain. He foretold chastisements to the Jews, and the coming of the Messias and the New Law.

AMOS, the third of the twelve minor prophets, also prophesied in the kingdom of Israel, in the time of Jeroboam II., chiefly at Bethel, where the golden calves were. He foretold that Jeroboam should die by the sword, and that the ten tribes should be carried away captive. He then retired to Thecua in the kingdom of Juda where he continued to prophesy.

ABDIAS, the fourth of the twelve, wrote during the Babylonian captivity, he foretells the destruction of the Edomites for their cruelty to the Jews in their distress. He also foretold the return of the Jews to Jerusalem.

JONAS, son of Amathi, the fifth of the twelve prophets, was of Gethopher in Galilee. He lived in the time of Jeroboam II. He was sent by God to announce to Ninive its destruction for its crimes.

The prophet fled to escape the mission, but the ship being assailed by storms, the sailors threw him into the sea, there he was swallowed by a great fish, in which, after being for three days and three nights, he was cast ashore. The Ninivites were converted by his preaching and by their penance appeased God's anger. The prophet was mortified at this, but God miraculously rebuked him. Our Saviour frequently referred to Jonas as a type of his own resurrection, and as a preacher of penance.

MICHEAS of Morasthi, in the southern part of Juda, is the sixth of the twelve prophets. He prophesied in the reign of Joathan, Achaz, and Ezechias. He foretold the fall of the kingdoms of Israel and Juda; the captivity of Babylon, and the return of the Jews. He described the kingdom of the Messias and the establishment of the Christian Church.

NAHUM, the seventh of the twelve prophets, is supposed to have been of Galilee, and to have lived in the time of King Ezechias. His prophecy foretells the destruction of Ninive.

HABACUC, prophesied in the kingdom of Juda at the same time as Jeremias. He foretold the destruction of Jerusalem, the punishment of Nabuchodonosor, and of the Chaldees. He was miraculously carried to Babylon by an angel, to relieve Daniel.

SOPHONIAS, son of Chusi, belonged it is believed to the tribe of Simeon. He flourished in the reign of Josias, King of Juda. He prophesied the captivity and restoration of Juda, and the fall of Ninive.

AGGEUS, the tenth of the minor prophets, is supposed to have been born at Babylon during the captivity, and to have accompanied Zorobabel on his return to Jerusalem. He excited the Jews to resume the building of the new temple, which they had been compelled to stop, and foretold that it should be sanctified by the presence of the Messias.

ZACHARIAS, son of Barachias, the eleventh of the minor prophets, returned from Babylon with Zorobabel. He aided the prophet Aggeus in exciting the high priest and prince to rebuild the temple. He foretold the coming of the Messias, his entrance into Jerusalem riding on an ass and her foal; the thirty pieces of silver. He also prophesied the war of the Romans against Jerusalem.

MALACHIAS, the last of the twelve minor prophets, prophesied in the time of Nehemias. He denounces the sins of the Jews. He foretold the mission of Saint John the Baptist; the coming of the Messias into the temple; the abolition of the ancient sacrifices; and the clean sacrifice to be offered throughout the world.

THE BOOKS OF MACHABEES. The first book was written in Hebrew or in Syriac. It contains the history of the Jews from 175 to 135 B. C. The second, abridged from that of Jason, was written in Greek and comprises the history from 176 to 151 B. C. They relate the struggles of the people to preserve their faith during the persecutions of Antiochus, and of the freedom gained by the Machabees.

CHRIST BLESSING CHILDREN.

SAINT MATTHEW.

BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

THE NEW TESTAMENT comprises the FOUR GOSPELS, written by the Evangelists, ST. MATTHEW, one of the twelve Apostles; ST. MARK, disciple of St. Peter; ST. LUKE, a disciple of St. Paul; and ST. JOHN, the beloved Apostle; then the ACTS OF THE APOSTLES, written by St. Luke; twenty-one EPISTLES, written by St. Paul, St. James, St. Peter, and St. John, and last the Apocalypse, a prophetic work of St. John.

ST. MATTHEW, called in Hebrew Levi, son of Alphaeus, was a Galilean, and was a publican, or tax-collector, when Jesus Christ called him, and soon after chose him to be one of His Apostles. His gospel was written, according to some, in Syro-Chaldaic, or Hebrew according to some, or in Greek according to others. The holy evangelist is generally believed to have been put to death by the Parthians.

"As this gospel was written for the special advantage of the Christians of Palestine, it sets forth what was directly calculated to strengthen their faith. The fulfilment of the prophecies, in the miraculous conception of Jesus Christ, in the place of his birth, in his preaching and miracles, in his suffering and death, is particularly pointed out. In the order of facts it differs from the other gospels, as though the object was only to present a comprehensive view of the teaching and life of Our Lord. The facts connected with the Resurrection are given in detail."

ST. MARK is believed to have been one of the Seventy Disciples, wrote his gospel at Rome, as some suppose, in Latin, but according to the more general opinion in Greek. He suffered martyrdom at Alexandria, in Egypt, 68 A. C.

"St. Mark's Gospel is, as it were, an abridgment of St. Matthew's, attending more to the order of events and giving a summary of the discourses of Our Lord, but adding several miracles, and entering into greater details of some facts which he describes more vividly."

ST. LUKE was a native of Antioch, and a physician. He accompanied St. Paul in many of his apostolic journeys. He died in Greece, and, according to the most authentic accounts, by martyrdom. He wrote in Greek.

This evangelist states many particulars, especially regarding the Blessed Virgin, not recorded by the others, and gives the beautiful Canticles of the Mother of God, of Zachary and Simeon. The incidents recorded in this gospel, from the ninth to the eighteenth chapter, with all their consoling details and parables are related by St. Luke alone.

ST. JOHN, son of Zebedee and Salome, born at Bethsaida, in Galilee, was called at an early age, and attended our Saviour in many important events of his life, and was the only apostle at the foot of the cross. He was Bishop of Ephesus. He was plunged into a caldron of boiling oil in the reign of Domitian, and exiled to the Island of Patmos. There he wrote the Apocalypse. After his return to Ephesus he wrote his gospel, about the year 97. He also wrote three of the canonical epistles. The object of the gospel was to show our Lord as the Son of God. St. John died at a very advanced age, our Lord having intimated that he was not to die by martyrdom.

The Gospel of St. John was written, as the Holy Fathers assure us, at the earnest solicitation of the bishops and faithful, in order to oppose the errors of Cerinthus and Ebion who denied the divinity of Christ. It was the last of the gospels in the order of time, and the first seventeen chapters and parts of others contain matter which the other evangelists had not recorded.

ST. PAUL, originally called Saul, was a native of Tarsus in Cilicia, and a Roman citizen by birth. He was educated by Gamaliel, and was a strict Pharisee and bitter persecutor of the Christians till his miraculous conversion while going to Damascus. He then became an apostle instead of a persecutor, and labored for years in Cyprus, Greece, Asia Minor, establishing churches, and converting Jews and Gentiles, often amid great persecutions. In the year 58 A. C. he returned to Jerusalem, where he was arrested by the Jews, and imprisoned. After long delay he appealed to the Emperor, and was sent to Rome, being shipwrecked on the way at Malta. He was set at liberty A. D. 63. and returned to the East, but two years afterwards was in Rome, where he was imprisoned, and the next year put to death with St. Peter. St. Paul wrote epistles or letters to the churches which he had founded, and to some disciples, and a general one to the Hebrews. These are the Epistle to the Romans, two addressed to the Corinthians, one respectively to the Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, and Colossians, two to the Thessalonians, two to his disciple St. Timothy, one to Titus, and one to Philemon, whose fugitive slave, Onesimus, he had converted.

ST. JAMES, called the Less, and sometimes the brother of our Lord, was son of Alphaeus and of Mary, sister of the Blessed Virgin. He was Bishop of Jerusalem, and honored even by the Jews for his sanctity and morals, but they finally killed him in the temple for proclaiming the true faith. He wrote one epistle addressed to the converted Jews.

The object was to prevent the misunderstanding of St. Paul's epistles, which many used to propagate unsound doctrines. St.

James warns them especially, that faith when not animated by works of charity is dead. The holy apostle explicitly describes the sacrament of Extreme Unction, and the graces imparted through it.

ST. PETER, the Prince of the Apostles, of whom Jesus Christ said: "Thou art Peter, and on this rock I will build my Church." His original name was Simon. He was a native of Bethsaida, and son of John, whence he was called Simon Barjona. He was a fisherman. When he was called by our Lord he received the name Peter or Rock. Our Lord chose him as a witness of many of the great events of His life, and appointed him to rule the sheep and the lambs, the pastors and the people, and charged him to confirm his brethren. St. Peter fixed his see at Antioch, but subsequently proceeded to Rome, of which he was the first bishop, and where he was crucified 66 A. C. Two epistles, written from Rome in the years 50-51, are preserved in the New Testament. They were written in Greek, and show the authority of a high priest.

Like St. James he cautions the faithful in regard to the Epistles of St. Paul, in which "there were many things hard and difficult to understand, which the unlearned and unstable wrested, as also the other Scriptures, to their own destruction."

The three Epistles of ST. JOHN, turn especially on the virtue of charity, which he inculcates most earnestly. He warns the faithful against those who had even then begun to set up their own judgment against the Church and disseminate false doctrine. The second Epistle is addressed to Electa, and the third to Gaius.

ST. JUNE, surnamed Thaddæus or Lebbeus, and also Zelotes, is also called a brother of our Lord, having been son of Mary, sister of the Blessed Virgin, and brother of St. James the Less. His epistle is short, but full of spirit and power.

THE APOCALYPSE.—"The closing book of the Sacred Volume is styled APOCALYPSE or Revelation, being a record of the visions and supernatural communications which St. John the Apostle and Evangelist received whilst in banishment on the Island of Patmos. It is the only Prophetic Book of the New Testament. The first three chapters contain instructions addressed to seven bishops of so many churches in Asia Minor. Then the persecutions which the Church must from time to time endure, and the vengeance which finally overtakes the persecutors, are described under most significant symbols. The triumph of true religion over every form of error and superstition is represented

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE BIBLE.

FROM THE WORKS OF DOM CALMET, ARCHBISHOP DIXON, AND RECENT CATHOLIC TRAVELLERS.

VIEW OF JERUSALEM FROM OLIVET, AS IT APPEARED IN THE TIME OF OUR LORD.

THE Sacred Scriptures, recording events from the creation of the world, treating of nations and empires that have long since passed away, mention many places which exist now only in a few scarcely traceable ruins, many that have been succeeded by others of different names, many that can no longer be identified. The natural features remain, the mountains and valleys, the rivers, lakes, and seas stand as of yore, but even as to these, the ignorance and presumption of later translators, who discarded the earlier guides, have raised doubts in many cases. To an intelligent reading of the holy Scriptures, some knowledge of the geography is necessary.

Of the world before the flood, the Euphrates and Tigris are almost the only names given. After the flood, the ark of Noe rested on the mountains of Armenia. The scene of the events connected with the Tower of Babel was in Sennaar, the country around Babylon. Abraham was born in Ur, of the Chaldees, in the same region, supposed to be Edessa. Then, on his call by God, he removed to the land of Chanaan, now Syria and Palestine, and here and in Arabia and Egypt occur most of the events recorded in Holy Writ, till Ninive and Babylon appear as conquerors of the chosen people and the place of their exile; then Persia ruled over the Holy Land, till Greece, under Alexander the Great, overran all the Eastern countries, establishing a Greek influence that lasted till Rome appeared as the great power, foretold by the prophet Balaam, while the Israelites were marching from Egypt to the Promised Land.

The New Testament shows the Apostles proceeding to Greece and its islands, to Italy, and looking forward to Spain. These are then the lands which are the scenes of the events recorded by the inspired writers.

After the ark rested in the mountains of Armenia, Noe, with his descendants, first occupied the plain of Sennaar. Here, as recorded in Scripture, they, in a spirit of pride, began to erect the Tower of Babel. This was an immense structure of brick laid with bitumen, rising aloft, story after story, but before the builders could complete it, God confounded their language so that they could not understand each other, and from this the place was called Babel or Confusion. The Tower of Babel, it is universally admitted, stood near the site of the city of Babylon, and to this day ruins are pointed out as the Tower of Babel.

The various families then dispersed to found the different nations of the earth. Some of the descendants of Sem remained in that district, and here, in the part called Ur of the Chaldees, Abram was born, whom God elected as the father and founder of His chosen people. Abram was commanded to leave his own country and go to the land of Chanaan or Palestine. In the

"Before Abraham entered the country," says Archbishop Dixon, "it was inhabited by eleven nations, whose names were taken from the eleven sons of Chanaan. These were, first, the Sidonians; second, the Hethites; third, the Jebusites; fourth, the Amorrhites; fifth, the Gergesites; sixth, the Hevites; seventh, the Aracites; eighth, the Sinites; ninth, the Aradians; tenth, the Samarites; and eleventh, the Hamathites. These had the country and its several cities portioned out among them. When, however, God promised the land to Abraham, as related in the fifteenth chapter of Genesis, we find that the possessors of the country, were somewhat differently named, and formed but ten nations, viz.:—the Cineans, Cenezites, Cedmonites, Hethites, Pherezites, Raphaim, Amorrhites, Chanaanites, Gergesites, and Jebusites (Gen. xv. 19–21). In the days of Moses, we find the country in the hands of seven nations, viz.:—first, the Hethites; second, the Gergesites; third, the Amorrhites; fourth, the Chanaanites; fifth, the Pherezites; sixth, the Hevites; and seventh, the Jebusites. These were the seven nations, with which the children of Israel were to make no league, but which they were utterly to destroy. (Dent. vii. 1–2; see also Josue iii. 10, and xxiv. 11.) of Judea, southward: the Chanaanites dwelt in the midland, by the sea, westward; and by the coast of Jordan, eastward; the Gergesites, along the eastern side of the sea of Galilee; and the Hevites, in Mount Libanus, under Hermon, northward. Of all these nations, the Amorrites became the most powerful; so as to extend their conquests over a considerable tract beyond the river Jordan; whence, they are sometimes put for the whole seven nations, as in Genesis xv. 16. In compliance with the command of God, to exterminate these people, we find that within the period of seven years, Moses conquered two powerful kingdoms on the east; and Josue, thirty-one smaller kingdoms on the west of the Jordan; and gave their land to the Israelites; though it appears, that some of the old inhabitants were permitted by God, to remain, to prove the fidelity of the Israelites to the Divine commands; and for their infidelity to these commands, the nations thus spared, were afterwards permitted to oppress them with great severity; nor were they finally subdued, until the reigns of David and Solomon, who reduced them to the condition of slaves. (2 Kings v. 6-8; 3 Kings ix. 20.) Solomon employed one hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred of them, in the most servile parts of his work, in the building of the temple, and of his palace, etc.

HEBRON, IN THE TERRITORY OF THE HETHITES.

"First.—The Philistines, whose territory lay along the sea-shore, in the southwest of Chanaan. They had seized this country from the Hevites, who possessed it previously. The Philistines were descended from Mizraim, the father of the Egyptians; their name is not Hebrew, and hence the Septuagint styles them alienigenæ, foreigners: they had frequent wars with the Jews, and became so considerable a nation, that the Greeks called the whole land of Chanaan, after their name, Palestine Παλαιστίνη. It was only by Judas Machabæus that they were completely subdued and brought under the dominion of the Jews.

"Second. — The Madianites were the descendants of Madian, the fourth son of Abraham, by Cethura. These are the people who sent their daughters to solicit the Israelites to sin, and to worship the idol Phogor; at the same time that the Israelites committed sin with the daughters of Moab, and worshipped their idol Beelphegor; as related in the 25th chapter of Numbers. They oppressed the Israelites exceedingly, in the time of the judges, until Gedeon succeeded in shaking off their yoke. Their country lay to the east of the Dead Sea, and to the south of Moab. We find also in the Scripture that the Madianites dwelt to the east of the Red Sea, near Mount Sinai. Here dwelt

MOUNT HERMON.

"Besides these devoted nations, there were others, either settled in the land at the arrival of the Israelites, or in its immediate environs, with whom the latter had to maintain many severe conflicts: they were six in number.

until Gedeon succeeded in shaking off their yoke. Their country lay to the east of the Dead Sea, and to the south of Moab. We find also in the Scripture that the Madianites dwelt to the east of the Red Sea, near Mount Sinai. Here dwelt

Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses. Some suppose, as Calmet (Diction., voce Madian), that these were descended from another Madian, who was a son of Chus, the eldest son of Cham; and indeed we find Sephora, the wife of Moses, called a Chusite. (Numb. xii. in 1 Heb.) Others think, that the Madianites were made subject to the Israelites. After the separation of the ten tribes, they fell to the part of the kingdom of Israel. Upon the death of Achab, they rebelled, and were severely chastised by Joram, the son of Achab, King of Israel. The precise state of the nation, after that time, is not well known.

all descended from Abraham; but that these, who dwelt to the east of the Red Sea, occupied the country which had been formerly held by the Chusites.

"Third.—The Moabites, a people descended from Moab, the son of Lot. They dwelt beyond the Jordan and the Dead Sea, on each side of the river Arnon. They had taken possession of that country, after expelling a gigantic race, the Emims. (Deut. ii. 11, 12.) The Moabites, in their turn, were forced to give up a part of the country to the Amorrhites. Moses, as we see by Deut. ii. 9, would not be permitted by God to destroy this nation. They carried on several wars against Israel, in after times. They, together with the Ammonites, were conquered by David, and "Fourth.—The Ammonites were a kindred people to the Moabites, being descended from Ammon, the other son of Lot. Their country lay to the northeast of the Moabites. It had been formerly held by a gigantic race, called the Zomzommims. (Deut. ii. 19, 20.) We read in this place here quoted, that the Israelites were forbidden to fight against them, or to take their land. Before the entrance of the Israelites into the land of Chanaan, the Amorrhites had taken a portion of their country from the Moabites and Ammonites; this part, Moses, having recovered from the Amorrhites, gave to the tribes of Ruben and Gad.

MADIANITES IN THE DESERT

In the time of Jephthe, the Ammonites made war on the Israelites, on account of this land; but Jephthe completely overcame them in battle, and preserved these possessions for Israel. We find that, generally, the Moabites and Ammonites were leagued together, in the harassing wars which they carried on against the Israelites; and hence, we have seen above, that David attacked, at the same time, and subdued both these nations. The occasion of this was, that David, who had been a friend to the King of the Ammonites, sent, on hearing of his death, to Hanon, his son and successor, ambassadors, to condole with him on the death of his father. Hanon, supposing that these were spies, treated them ignominiously; whereupon David, to avenge the honor of his ambassadors, made war upon, and subdued the Ammonites, together with their allies of Moab.

"Fifth.—The Amalecites were, according to Calmet, the descendants of Amalec, the son of Eliphaz, and grandson of Esau, mentioned in Genesis xxxvi. 12. The Amalecites were a powerful people, that formerly dwelt in Arabia Deserta, between the Dead Sea and the Red Sea, or between Hevila and Sur. (1 Kings xv. 7.) These attacked the Israelites in the desert of Raphidim, very soon after they had passed over the Red Sea; and they cruelly put to death all those who, through labor or fatigue, had fallen behind on the march (Exod. xvii. 8); for this they were first punished by Josue, who gained a great victory over them, whilst Moses held up his hands in prayer, on the mount, or hill, near where the battle was fought; Aaron and Hur sustaining the arms of Moses. (Exodus xvii. 12.) The Amalecites were, moreover, doomed by God to utter destruction, which was commenced by Saul, and finished by David.

"Sixth.—The Edomites, or Idumeans, were the descendants of Esau, who was also called Edom, and was the elder brother of Jacob. Idumæa, their country, was a province of Arabia, lying southward of Judea, and was originally possessed by the Horites. It was, principally, a mountainous tract, including the mountains of Seir and Hor. The Edomites were inveterate foes to Israel. They were made tributary by David, and, for one hundred and fifty years, continued subject to the kingdom of Juda: thus was fulfilled the oracle of God to Rebecca, that Esau would serve Jacob. (Genesis xxv. 23.) After various attempts, they revolted, in the reign of Joram, the son of Josaphat (2 Paralip. xxi.), and ultimately succeeded in rendering themselves independent. In after times, however, we are informed by Josephus, that John Hyrcanus completely subdued them, and subjected them to circumcision, and the other legal observances.—Antiq., Book xiii. c. 17.

"We come now to speak of the division of the Holy Land among the twelve tribes, made by Josue. He succeeded to Moses, as chief of the people of God; and he it was, who parcelled out to the Hebrew tribes their portions of the land of promise. We find this distribution minutely detailed in the book of Josue, xiii. to xix. We consider a minute detail of that distribution not so necessary now, seeing the great change that has come over the entire face of Palestine since that division was made. We shall, therefore, indicate briefly, after Glaire, the position of the twelve districts assigned to the twelve tribes of Israel by Josue. The tribes of Israel were then thirteen; the sons of Joseph, Manasses, and Ephraim being the heads of distinct tribes; but the tribe of Levi had not a distinct territory assigned to it. The Levites, dispersed among the several tribes, inhabited forty-eight cities, which were given to them. This, then, was the arrangement of the twelve districts of the twelve tribes of Israel:—

"First. — The district of the tribe of Ruben was situated beyond the Jordan; and formed the southern part of the possessions of Israel, on that eastern side of the Jordan.

"Second. — The tribe of Gad was placed to the north of that of Ruben; the Jordan bounded it on the west, and the mountains of Galaad on the east.

"Third. — The tribe of Manasses was situated one-half beyond the Jordan, where it occupied the ancient country of Basan; the other half tribe of Manasses was situated on the inner, or western, side of the Jordan; the limits of its district are not so accurately defined by Josue; but it appears, that it occupied the district to the north of the tribe of Ephraim; and that, on one side, it extended to the Mediterranean Sea, but on the other, reached not as far as the Jordan.

"Fourth.—The tribe of Juda had its territory in the southern part of Palestine, along the eastern coast of the Dead Sea; it was bounded on the north by the tribe of Benjamin; and on the south, by the mountains of Seir, which divided it from Idumæa. This tribe was the most important of all; whether we consider the extent of its territory, or that from it were descended the kings of the people (whence it was called the royal tribe); or, in fine, that from it was to be born the Redeemer of the world.

"Fifth.—The tribe of Simeon was situated to the south and west of Juda; it had to the north, the tribe of Dan, and the MOUNTAINS OF MOAB, AND PLAINS OF JORDAN.

Philistines; to the west, the Mediterranean; and to the south, Arabia Petrea.

"Sixth.—The limits of the tribe of Dan have not been, precisely, traced by Josue. Its district lay on the coast of the Mediterranean; on the north of Simeon, and on the west of Juda. We find, also, that a colony of Danites fixed its seat in the city of Lais, on the northern extremity of the Holy Land. This city was afterwards called Dan.

"Seventh.—The tribe of Benjamin was bounded, on the north, by that of Ephraim, and on the south, by the tribe of Juda; it had the Jordan on the east; on the western side it did not extend as far as the Mediterranean, the territory of Ephraim lying between it and the sea.

"Eighth.—The tribe of Ephraim lay to the south of that half tribe of Manasses, which was situated on the inner side of the Jordan. The territory of Ephraim, from east to west, extended from the Jordan, to the Mediterranean, or the Great Sea.

"Ninth.—The tribe of Issachar, situated in the plain of Jezreel, or Esdrelon, had to the south the district, belonging to the half tribe of Manasses, which was on the eastern side of the Jordan; to the north, it had the tribe of Zabulon; to the east, the Jordan; and the west, the Mediterranean.

"Tenth.—The tribe of Aser, placed to the northwest of Palestine, was bounded, on the north, by Mount Libanus; on the lake formed by the Jordan); and to the west, the Mediterranean; although it is not quite certain that it extended as far as the sea. The way, from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, lay through Zabulon; and hence, this district is called, the way of the sea.—Isaiah ix. 1; Matthew iv. 15.

"Twelfth.—The tribe of Nephthali. The district stretched along the northern part of Palestine; it was bounded by the tribes of Aser and Zabulon, by the lake of Genesareth (the Sea of Galilee), and the Jordan.

EDOM, PETRA.

"After the death of Solomon, the country was divided into two kingdoms: one, formed by the two tribes of Juda and Benjamin, was called the kingdom of Juda; its metropolis was Jerusalem, the chief city of the entire land. It comprised the territories of these two tribes, together with so much of the territories of Dan and Simeon, as were intermixed with the possessions of Juda. The boundary line, of the two kingdoms of Juda and Israel, was the northern limit of the tribe of Benjamin.

"The Kingdom of Israel, included all the northern and middle parts of the Holy Land, occupied by the ten tribes, of which the kingdom was formed. Its capital was Samaria, in the tribe of Ephraim, situated about thirty miles northeast of Jerusalem. The division ceased, on the subversion of the kingdom of Israel, by Salmanasar, king of Assyria; after it had subsisted two hundred and fifty-four years. The last south, by the valley of Jephthael; on the east, by the tribe of Nephthali, and on the west, by the Mediterranean.

"Eleventh.—The tribe of Zabulon had for its limits, to the north, the tribes of Aser and of Nephthali; to the south, the torrent of Oison; to the east, the Sea of Galilee (which was a king of Israel was Osee. The kingdom of Juda continued for one hundred and twenty-seven years longer; until, in the reign of its last king, Sedecias, the people were brought captive to Babylon.

"After the return of the people, who had formed the kingdom of Juda, from captivity, they were subject, in succession, to the kings of Persia, Egypt, and Syria; and it was only under the Machabees, that they recovered their independence. Afterwards, the country became a Roman province. It was next given, by the senate, to Herod the Great, with the title of king. After his death, his three sons, Archelaus, Herod Antipas, and Philip, divided the country among them, and governed it, but without the kingly title. After them, the Romans became again the immediate rulers of the country, which was placed under the presidency of a governor from Rome.

"In the time of our Redeemer, the Holy Land was divided into five provinces, viz., Judea, Samaria, Galilee, Perea, and Idumea.

"I. Judea was bounded on the west by the Mediterranean, on the south by Arabia Petrea, on the east by the Dead Sea and the Jordan, and on the north by Samaria. Jerusalem, the chief city of the Holy Land, was in this province. In extent it was nearly equal to the former kingdom of Juda.

"II. Samaria; this province was so called from the city of Samaria, the ancient capital of the kingdom of Israel. It comprised the territories which had formerly belonged to the tribe of Ephraim, and to that half tribe of Manasses, that lay on the western side of the Jordan. Samaria lay exactly in the middle between Judea and Galilee, so that any one who wished to go directly from Galilee to Jerusalem should of necessity pass through it. (St. John iv. 4.)

"III. Galilee comprised the northern part of Palestine. It was bounded on the north by Phœnicia and Syria; on the east by the Jordan and the lake of Genesareth; on the south by the plain of Esdrelon; and on the west by the Mediterranean and a part of Phœnicia. It was divided into upper and lower, or northern and southern Galilee. Upper Galilee was also called Galilee of the Gentiles, because it reckoned a great many Gentiles or Pagans among its inhabitants. In the territory of the upper Galilee, were situated the twenty cities which Solomon gave to Hiram king of Tyre. (3 Kings ix. 11.) It was in Galilee, in the city of Nazareth, that our Divine Redeemer was conceived, and brought up; it was there that He dwelt for the greater part of His mortal life; in Galilee it was, that He commenced His public ministry, and performed a great number of His miracles. He was called, on this account, the Galilean. Sometimes, also, the name of Galileans was given to His apostles, and to the first Christians.

"IV. Perea; this province lay beyond, that is, on the eastern side of the Jordan. Its name is derived from the Greek word πέραν, beyond. According to the most accurate geographers, it contained the eight following districts: Perea, properly so called, Galaad, Gaulonitis, Ballhanea, Auranitis or Iturea, Trachonitis, Abilene, and a part of Decapolis.

"1. Perea, properly so called, or in its restricted sense, included the southern part of the country beyond Jordan; lying south of Iturea, east of Judea and Samaria. It was anciently possessed by the two tribes of Ruben and Gad. Within this district was the fortress of Macharus, memorable as being the place in which St. John the Baptist was put to death.

"2. Galaad was situated to the north of the torrent or river of Jaboc. It embraced a considerable part of the possessions of Israel beyond the Jordan.

"3. Gaulonitis was a tract on the east side of the lake of Genesareth, and the river Jordan. It extended as far as the mountains of Hermon. This district is not referred to, by name, in the New Testament.

"4. Bathanæa was situated to the northeast of Gaulonitis.

"5. Auranitis or Ituræa (St. Luke iii. 1), anciently belonged to the half-tribe of Manasses, which settled on the east of the Jordan. It was situated to the north of Bathanæa.

"6. Trachonitis was situated to the north of Auranitis, and to the east of Cæsarea Philippi, the ancient city of Dan. Tra-

Arabia. During the Babylonian captivity, the Idumeans seized upon this tract, which had been left uninhabited. These Idumeans, afterwards, were subjugated by the Machabees, and, in the end, embraced Judaism. Yet, this tract, in the time of Christ, and for a considerable period afterwards, retained the name of Idumæa.

chonitis was famous for its caverns, which, even in the time of Herod the Great, were still inhabited. We find from the third chapter of St. Luke's Gospel, first verse, that when the Baptist commenced his mission, Philip, the brother of Herod Antipas, was tetrarch of Ituræa and this district of Trachonitis.

"7. Abilene was the most northern of these districts; it was situated between Libanus and Antilibanus. It was within the borders of Nephthali, although never subdued. At the time of the Baptist, it had for tetrarch Lysanias. (Luke iii. 1.)

"8. Decapolis.—This district, which received its name from its ten considerable cities, included part of the province of Perea. But, concerning its limits, and the names of its ten cities, geographers are not agreed. Scythopolis, the chief city, was on the west of the Jordan. The other cities were, Philadelphia, Raphana, Gadara, Hippos, Dion, Pella, Gerasa, Canatha, and Damascus. Decapolis is mentioned in the New Testament. (Matt. iv. 25; Mark v. 20.)

"V. Province of Idumæa.—This province comprised the extreme southern part of Judea, together with a small part of "The most remarkable towns in these provinces, at the time of our Redeemer's coming, were the following: in Judæa; besides the great city of Jerusalem, Arimathea, Azotus, Bethania, Bethlehem, Bethphage, Emmaus, Ephraim, Gaza, Hebron, Jericho, Joppe, Lydda, and Rama. In Samaria; the city of Samaria, Sichem, and Antipatris. In Upper Galilee; Cæsarea Philippi.

In Lower Galilee; Tiberias, Corozain, Bethsaida, Nazareth, Cana, Capharnaum, Naim, Casarea of Palestine, and Ptolemais. The other remarkable towns of the Holy Land have been already mentioned, under the head of Decapolis."

This portion, as immediately connected with the life, preaching, journeys, passion, death, and resurrection of our Lord, has an especial interest to every Christian heart.

From the time of our Lord's Ascension, the various spots hallowed by His presence became objects of veneration, and were devoutly visited by His followers. Pilgrimages grew up almost spontaneously, and, as Christianity spread over the world, devout Christians set out on the long, weary journey to visit the holy places. The concourse of pilgrims excited the anger of the pagan Roman authorities, and idolatrous statues or shrines were set up in many places to prevent the Christians from approaching; as any act of devotion performed there would be claimed to be paid to the heathen deities. Thus even the enemies of Christianity helped to establish the certainty of many of the sacred spots.

The succession of pilgrims, in successive ages, helped also to keep alive the tradition as to the identity of many towns and villages mentioned in the Scriptures, which had been gradually destroyed in the various wars that have desolated the country during the last two thousand years.

Those immediately connected with the life of our Lord were sought out and marked with churches and chapels, monuments that still endure, by the great Saint Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great—a native of Britain, as some suppose, or converted there. On her son's embracing the true faith, after the miraculous apparition of the inscribed cross in the heavens, and the victory which it presaged, Saint Helena, although bending under the weight of eighty years, made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. Invested by her son with the imperial title and ample power, she employed it for the glory of God. One great object was to recover the Cross of our Lord. Tradition, maintained among the Christians, declared that it had been buried on Calvary. Over it the heathens had reared a temple of Venus, and at the sepulchre a statue of Jupiter. By her order these were removed, and, after digging away the foundations and rubbish thrown there to fill up the spot, three crosses were discovered, one of which, by effecting a miraculous cure, was recognized as the true cross. Saint Helena founded the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, to cover the site of the Crucifixion and the Resurrection. This was in 326.

The devotion of the holy Empress gave a new impulse to the devotion of the faithful. As early as 333, a pilgrim from Bordeaux, on the coast of the Atlantic, wrote an itinerary or guide-book for pilgrims, describing the places in the Holy Land, which is known as the Itinerarium Burdegalense. Saint Jerome studied and wrote among the spots described in Holy Writ, embodying in his translation the accurate local knowledge he acquired. Still later, Saint Adamnan, a holy Irish bishop, visiting the Holy Land as an humble pilgrim, drew up another itinerary; and then Saint Wilfrid, a holy bishop from Saxon England, recorded also the condition of the Holy Land as he found it at the time of his pilgrimage to the scenes of the life of our Lord.

All the important spots in the Holy Land have thus been known from the beginning of the Christian era. Generation after generation of Christians living there, and of pilgrims from every part of the world, have visited them and kept alive the memory. There is in history no such identification of spots and places as we have of those in the Holy Land. As to some of minor importance, mentioned in the Old Testament, which were destroyed before the fall of the kingdoms of Juda and Israel, there is great room for study, as they were uncertain centuries ago; but as to those hallowed by the life and death of our Lord, there can be no question whatever. The constant, connected tradition, the testimony of witnesses coming from different lands, century after century, leaves no doubt whatever. And the tone of some modern writers since the Reformation, who, visiting the Holy Land to find that they have no part there, return to scoff and doubt, is a defiance of history and of common sense.

We will now describe some of these chief cities.

"1. Jerusalem, called at a former period Jebus (Jos. xviii. 28) and Salem (Hebr. vii. 1), signifies the vision of peace. This city, at the first division of the Holy Land, fell to the lot of Benjamin. (Jos. xviii. 28.) After the capture of the city by Josue (Jos. x.), the Jebusites, its former inhabitants, were not expelled; but it was jointly inhabited by Hebrews and Jebusites for about five hundred years, until the time of David, who, having expelled the Jebusites, made it his residence. This city appears sometimes to be reckoned, in the Scripture, among the possessions of the tribe of Juda. It was on the confines of the two tribes of Juda and Benjamin; and is at one time attributed to one tribe, and again to the other. As Calmet observes: by the right of the primitive distribution, under Josue, it belonged rather to the tribe of Benjamin; but, by the right of conquest, Juda had a stronger claim to it, having twice taken it from the enemy; first, under the Judges—although, at that time, the Jebusites were not expelled, as has

David and Solomon, united together the two cities. After the reign of Manasses, we find a second part of the city mentioned (2 Paral. xxxiv. 22); which is supposed, by Calmet, to have been a considerable addition to the former city. Afterwards, Josephus informs us that the Machabees, having made some additions, extended the city, principally on the side of the north;

been already observed—and, secondly, under David. However, after God had chosen this city to be the seat of His temple, it became the metropolis of the whole kingdom; and, afterwards, did not belong, properly, either to Juda or Benjamin, but was the common property of all the Hebrew people. The city of

Jerusalem stood upon two hills, surrounded by a chain of mountains. In the time of our Redeemer, it had become a vast city. When David took it from the Jebusites, it merely comprised within its limits the mountain which lay to the south of the mount on which the temple was afterwards built; that is, to the south of Mount Sion. On this Mount of Sion David built a new city, called by his name: the City of David. In this City of David was built the royal palace; and upon Mount Moria—a part of the same Mount of Sion—the temple of the Lord was erected. Between these two mountains, i. e., the mount on which stood the ancient city of Jebus, and the Mount of Sion, on which stood the city of David, there lay the valley of Mello; which, having been filled up with earth, under so that it took in a third hill. According to the same authority, a fourth hill, called Bezeta, was added by Agrippa; so that the city had never been more extensive than it was when besieged by the Romans. It was, also, exceedingly strong, for that time; being surrounded with three walls. Those three walls, moreover, were provided, at certain distances, and in the most exposed places, with quadrangular towers, forty feet in breadth and height, which served for their better protection; and, among these, the tower of Antonia, on the outermost wall, resembled a regular fortress, and, being a hundred and forty feet high, had an extensive view. On the first wall there were sixty, on the second fourteen, and on the third ninety towers. Following the course of the external wall, the whole circuit of the city was about eight miles.

The ordinary number of its inhabitants was from a hundred and twenty to a hundred and fifty thousand men; but, at the time of the great feasts, it amounted to much more than a million, owing to the prodigious influx of Jews, from all countries; and this explains how so many Jews perished at the destruction of this city by Titus. Those, who, at the time of the festivals, could not find accommodation in the city itself, encamped in tents in the vicinity. During the time of Christ, Jerusalem was adorned with numerous edifices, both sacred and civil; but its chief glory was the temple."

"The Temple of Jerusalem was first built by Solomon—a magnificent work—but its dimensions and parts are too briefly portion to the increased dimensions of the structure: hence, the laver of brass, for the washing of the priests, was so large that it is termed the brazen sea. In the Holy of Holies was placed the ark of the covenant. And, not to dwell more particularly on the matter, suffice it to say, that the temple of Solomon was of surpassing magnificence for the beauty of its materials and the richness of its furniture—particularly the holy house, or temple, strictly so called, of which the inside noticed in the Scripture, to enable one to give an accurate description of it. It stood on Mount Moria, in Jerusalem. This mount formed a part of the mountainous ridge, termed Mount Sion. The temple, therefore, stood in that part of Jerusalem which was called the city of David. It had two courts, of which the inner was the court of the priests. The whole plan of the building was on the model of the tabernacle, but of much larger dimensions. The holy house, or the temple, strictly so called, was divided into the Holy, and the Holy of Holies, and in front of this house stood a vestibule, like a lofty tower, being one hundred and twenty cubits in height. The length of the holy house was one hundred and sixty feet, its breadth forty, and its height sixty feet. It was divided into three stories; and around the lower story there ran a colonnade, in which were the residences of the officiating priests and Levites. The utensils for the service of the temple were in much greater number than they had been in the tabernacle: thus, for example, in the Holy there were ten golden candlesticks. These utensils were also larger in proportion to the increased dimensions of the structure: hence, the laver of brass, for the washing of the priests, was so large that it is termed the brazen sea. In the Holy of Holies was placed the ark of the covenant. And, not to dwell more particularly on the matter, suffice it to say, that the temple of Solomon was of surpassing magnificence for the beauty of its materials and the richness of its furniture—particularly the holy house, or temple, strictly so called, of which the inside and enriched with the gems they had brought from Egypt, upon the walls and ceiling. But not long did this temple retain its pristine splendor—about thirty-three or thirty-four years; after which time, Sesac, king of Egypt, pillaged Jerusalem, and carried away the treasures of the temple. (3 Kings xiv. 25, 26.) The building was finally plundered and burnt by the Chaldeans under Nabuchodonosor.

"After the captivity, the temple was rebuilt by Zorobabel: its dimensions were inferior to those of the temple of Solomon, as the old men, who had seen the first temple, declared, as soon as they had viewed the foundations of this second building. There were also wanting in this second temple several things, which principally contributed to the glory of the first—viz., the Ark of the Covenant; the holy oil;

the Urim and Thummin; and that mysterious cloud which accompanied the tabernacle, and afterwards filled the temple built by Solomon. (3 Kings viii. 10-12.) In one respect, however, this second temple far outshone the first, viz., in the high honor of being visited by the Messias. (Agg. ii. 7-9.)

the wonder of the world in its time. The work was commenced sixteen years before Christ, and, although the work appertaining to the temple itself was substantially finished in eight years, yet the work of further ornamenting the temple, and of raising various other edifices which formed appendages to it, continued

HEROD'S TEMPLE AT JERUSALEM.

"This second temple was, after the lapse of ages, so repaired and ornamented by Herod the Great, that it was afterwards called the temple of Herod, until the period of its destruction by the Romans.

Notwithstanding, however, the extensive character of the changes made by Herod, yet, as divine worship was never interrupted during the progress of his work, and as these changes were gradually introduced, this temple is properly considered one with the temple of Zorobabel; so that our Saviour is well said, according to the prophecy of Aggeus, to have honored the second temple by His presence. Josephus, in the fifteenth book of his Antiquities, and the eleventh chapter, gives a description of this temple of Herod; and, truly, the beauty and the vastness of the work must have rendered it down to the sixty-fourth year of the Christian era. This temple had three courts: the exterior court was called the court of the Gentiles; within that was the court of the Israelites, separated by a wall from the court of the Gentiles. The innermost court, which immediately surrounded the holy house, was the court of the priests; in it was placed the altar of burnt-offerings. In the middle of the court of the Israelites ran a wall, which separated the women from the men—the women remaining in the exterior division of the court. The court of the women was separated from the court of the Gentiles by a low stone wall or partition, of elegant workmanship. From the court of the women, there was an ascent of fifteen steps into the men's court; which latter was separated from the priests' court by a low wall one cubit in height. The lofty wall of the exterior court—that is, the outer wall of the temple—was built of stone, and formed a square of half a mile in circumference. The entrance was by nine gates, which were on every side thickly coated with gold and silver; but, of these, there was one far more precious than any of the rest, being made of Corinthian brass, which in those days was preferred to silver or gold, whilst, at the same time, it was much larger than any of the others, its entire height being fifty cubits, and the height of its doors forty cubits. This is supposed to have been the gate called beautiful. (Acts iii. 2.) Immediately within this outer wall, and surrounding the court of the Gentiles, was a range of porticoes or cloisters, above which were galleries or apartments, supported by pillars of white marble, each pillar consisting of a single piece and five-and-twenty cubits in height. One of these porticoes was called Solomon's porch or portico, because it stood upon a vast terrace which he had raised from the valley beneath, four hundred cubits high, in order to extend the area of the top of the mountain, and make it equal to the plan of his intended building. The south-east corner of the flat roof of this noble portico, where the height was greatest, is supposed to have been the pinnacle whence Satan tempted our Saviour to precipitate Himself. (Matt. iv. 5.) The pavement of all the courts was of variegated marble.

From the court of the priests, twelve steps ascended to the holy house or temple, strictly so called, which was divided into three parts: the porch, the sanctuary or holy place, and the Holy of Holies. The porch was open in front, and in it were suspended the votive offerings that had been made to the temple. From the porch the entrance into the sanctuary or Holy was by a doorway, covered merely with an embroidered veil. The division between the Holy and the Holy of Holies, was also made by an embroidered veil; this latter veil it was which was rent in two, at the death of our Divine Redeemer. The holy house or temple, strictly so called, far surpassed in splendor all the rest of this magnificent edifice. Its exterior was profusely adorned with plates of gold; and Josephus adds, that, to persons approaching it, it appeared at a distance like a mountain covered with snow, for, where it was not decorated with plates of gold, it was of exceeding whiteness. On the top it had sharp-pointed spikes of gold, to prevent any bird from resting upon it, and polluting it. The whole length of the holy house was a hundred or a hundred and ten cubits—its height, a hundred cubits; the porch was loftier and wider than the other parts. The following were the internal dimensions of the three parts: the porch was fifty cubits long by twenty in breadth, and ninety cubits in height; the Holy was forty cubits long by twenty in breadth, and sixty cubits high; the Holy of Holies was twenty cubits square, and sixty cubits high.

“We have but briefly noticed this vast edifice, which goes by the name of the temple of Herod; we have by no means fully described it: but if we add to what has been said, that, according to Josephus, the stones used in this edifice were of vast dimensions—we are told, for instance, that the foundations of the holy house consisted of blocks of white marble, some of which were forty-five cubits long, six cubits wide, and five cubits high—I think that enough shall have been stated to show that the surprise of the disciples of our Lord must have been extreme, when He foretold to them, that soon there should not be left of it a stone upon a stone, that would not be thrown down. (Mark xiii. 2.)”

“Before the erection of the temple, the worship of God was performed in the Tabernacle, the construction of which was prior to the entrance of the Hebrews into the Holy Land. The Tabernacle was a movable and portable structure, so formed that the parts could be easily taken asunder, for the facility of carriage. It was in length thirty cubits, in width ten, and ten cubits also in height. It was divided into two parts by a veil; one of these parts was called the Holy, and contained twenty cubits in length; the other part was called the Holy of Holies, and measured ten cubits in length. In the Holy were the candlestick, the table of the loaves of proposition, and the altar of incense: in the Holy of Holies was the Ark of the Covenant, with the Propitiatory. Into the Holy the priests entered daily, morning and evening, to burn incense, and to trim the lights of the seven-branched candlestick; but into the Holy of Holies, only the High-priest entered, and that on only one day of the year—the great day of expiation. (Lev. xvi.) The walls of the tabernacle were composed of planks or boards, forty-eight in number, each being a cubit and a half in width, and ten cubits in length. Of these, twenty were required for the side towards the north, twenty for the south side, and eight for the west side of the tabernacle; these latter eight made up the exterior breadth of the tabernacle. The east side, on which was the entrance, had merely five gilded columns, covered by a rich veil. The roof was a frame of planks, over which were thrown four coverings, of which the first or innermost was made of fine linen, curiously embroidered in various colors of white, purple, scarlet, and violet; this cover approached within a cubit of the ground, on the sides of the tabernacle; the second covering was of goat's hair curiously wove together; it almost reached to the ground; the third cover was of ram's skins dyed red, and the fourth or outermost of azure-colored skins.

“Round about the tabernacle was a quadrangular court, open above, having one hundred cubits in length, fifty in breadth, and five in the height of the veil with which it was surrounded. (Exod. xxvii. 18.) Sixty columns stood round this court; twenty on the side of the north; twenty on the south side; ten towards the west; and ten towards the east. These columns, formed, as Jahn supposes, of wood, were overlaid with silver; but the bases were of brass. The columns were connected together by poles made of silver, from which the veil was suspended that surrounded the court. The entrance of the court was on the east side, twenty cubits in breadth, where the veil, supported by four columns, was remarkable for the richness and variety of its colors and embroidery. This court was, as it were, the temple of the people, who were not permitted to enter the tabernacle. In the court, at some distance from the tabernacle, stood the altar of holocausts; and between the altar and tabernacle was placed the brazen laver, for the priests to wash themselves before ministering. (Exod. xxx. 18.) The altar of holocausts was three cubits in height, five in length, and five in breadth. It was made of wood in the form of a chest, but hollow, and open at top and bottom. The four corners of the altar above had something like four horns; from these there hung, fastened with four rings and four chains, a grate made of brass, on which the wood and the sacrifices were burnt; and as the ashes fell through, they were received below in a pan.

“Now, as to the furniture of the Holy, there was, first, the golden candlestick, with an upright stem, on each side of which were three curved branches; to all the seven extremities were attached lamps; of these all were kept burning during the night, and three during the day. (Exod. xxx. 8;

HIGH-PRIEST, ARK, ALTAR, AND SACRED VESSELS IN THE HOLY PLACE.

Num. xxxiv. 3; Joseph. Antiq. iii. 8.) It was part of the duty of the priests to trim the lamps, morning and evening. Second, the table of the loaves of proposition. This was made of wood. We may here observe that for all the wood-work of the tabernacle and its appurtenances, there was used the wood of the Acacia tree, which grew in the wilderness, and is said to be incorruptible; in our version it is called setim-wood, after the Hebrew. Well, this table being made of wood, was covered over with plates of gold. The loaves of proposition placed upon this table were twelve in number, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. They were also called the bread of the face, because they were placed before the face—or throne of Jchova, which was in the Holy of Holies. These loaves were of unleavened bread, and were changed every Sabbath by the priests, who alone, according to the law, could eat of them, except in case of necessity. (Matt. xii. 4.) They were a continual acknowledgment, on the part of the twelve tribes of Israel, that they depended upon God for their support; and they were typical of the Holy Eucharist. Third, between the table of the loaves of proposition, which stood on the northern side of the Holy, and the golden candlestick, which was on the south side, there was placed the altar of incense, over against the veil, which divided the Holy of Holies, or most holy place, from the Holy place. It was constructed of the setim-wood; it was a cubit in length and breadth, and two cubits in height—it was ornamented with horns at the four corners, and was all covered with plates of gold; wherefore it was called the golden altar; and, sometimes, to distinguish it from the altar of holocausts, it was called the inner altar. On this altar, every day, morning and evening, was incense offered.

“In the Holy of Holies was the Ark of the Covenant—an oblong chest, constructed of setim-wood, a cubit and a half in breadth and height, and two cubits and a half in length; it was covered on all sides with the purest gold; and on both sides, lengthwise, at equal distances, it was furnished with four rings of gold, through which were passed bars covered with gold, for the purpose of carrying the ark. These bars were always kept in the rings, even when the ark was, afterwards, placed in the temple. The ark was so placed in the Holy of Holies, that the extremities of these bars touched the veil. (Exod. xxv. 10–15, xxxvii. 1–9; 3 Kings viii. 8; 1 Paral.

v. 8, 9.) The cover of the ark made no part of it, but was simply laid upon it. This cover was of the same length and breadth with the ark: it was made of pure gold, and was called the propitiatory or mercy-seat, because on it, was placed the throne of Jehova—as of the Great King among His people; and, here, therefore, the Lord was to be appeased and propitiated. It was also called by a name which signifies the place of giving responses (in the vulgate, oraculum), because here it was usual to consult the Lord, and to receive answers from Him, audibly expressed in words. (Num. vii. 89.) On this cover of the ark stood two figures, representing two cherubim, with their faces turned towards each other, and their wings expanded and joined so as to cover the propitiatory. Because this was the place of the special presence of Jehova among His people, He was said to sit on these wings of the cherubim as on His throne, having under Him the ark, as it were the footstool of His feet. To this there are several allusions in the Scripture, as when God is said to “sit upon the cherubim” (4 Kings xix. 15), and when the Psalmist says, “Adore the footstool of His feet.” (Psalm xlviii. 5.) In the ark there were only the two tables of stone, upon which the ten commandments were inscribed. Beside the ark was kept a portion of the manna in a golden urn. (Exod. xvi. 32–36.) Also the rod of Aaron (Num. xxxi. 26), and the autograph of the volume of the law. (Deut. xxxi. 26.)

“As to the figure of the cherubs or cherubim, that stood on the propitiatory, interpreters are by means agreed. Some suppose that they represented men, others say that they resembled other animals. Josephus declares that they resembled no animals that ever were seen by man, and that their form no man knew in his day. (Antiq. iii. 6.) The learned Jew, Abenezra, thinks that the term cherubim was indiscriminately applied to figures of any kind, that were sculptured on stone, engraven on metal, carved on wood, or inwrought on cloth; although with regard to the cherubim placed by Moses on the propitiatory or mercy-seat, he gives it as his opinion, that these were figures of winged men or boys. Calmet, in his Dictionary (vide Cherubim), says that the cherubim, described in the Scripture, were not all of the same figure, although they all agreed in this, that each of them consisted of the forms of many things collected into one, as of a man, an ox, an eagle, and a lion; of which kind were the cherubim mentioned in Ezechiel (i. 5). Yet Calmet inclines to the opinion, that the cherubim of the ark exhibited the human figure. In fine, taking the cherubim described in Ezechiel, as a guide, we would conclude that each cherub had four distinct faces on one neck—that of a man, of a lion, of an ox, and of an eagle. Each had four wings, the two under ones covering the body, while the upper ones, spread out somewhat above the level of the shoulders, were so joined to the edges of its neighbor's as to form a canopy.

“The tabernacle was constructed in the desert, and with its different parts and furniture, was intended to typify the church of God, militant and triumphant. (See Exod. xxv. 40; Hebrews viii. 5.) After the entrance of the Israelites into the promised land, it continued for a considerable time to be the place for worshipping God. In the time of Heli, the High-priest, the ark was taken by the Philistines. The Israelites had brought it into their camp, hoping that God would grant them victory on account of its presence. The Philistines placed it in the temple of Dagon, their idol. Terrified, however, by the manifestations of Divine power, they soon restored the ark to the Hebrews, but it does not appear that the tabernacle and ark were ever united afterwards. In the beginning of Solomon's reign, we know that the tabernacle was at Gabaon, in the tribe of Benjamin; the Scripture does not speak of it afterwards. The ark of the covenant was in existence until the destruction of the temple built by Solomon, and was then conveyed by the prophet Jeremias to a cave on Mount Nebo." (2 Macc. ii. 4.)

"When the Hebrews entered the promised land, God declared that they ought not to do like the heathen nations, that is, to upon high places, provided that they offered them to God alone, and by the hands of His priests, according to the rites prescribed by the law. And, in effect, it does not appear that they were blamed for this.* (See Josue viii.; Judges vi., xiii.; 1 Kings vii., ix., xvi.; 2 Kings xxiv.) It was only when the temple of Solomon had been built, and the Ark of the Covenant placed there permanently, that God would no longer endure, under any pretext, victims to be offered to Him outside the precincts of this sacred dwelling. Those who were, otherwise, reckoned among the best of the kings, were blamed for having permitted the altars to remain on the high places, although they were consecrated to the Almighty. And as we see by the after history of the Israelites, this toleration led to deplorable consequences. For, by little and little, the Israelites went on from this violation of the law to embrace all the excesses of an idolatrous worship; insomuch that nothing could hinder them from constructing high places, like the other nations, erecting altars on the adore on the mountains and the hills; but that they were to go to the place which He Himself would select, to establish His name there, and to dwell there; and that it was in this place only, that they should offer their sacrifices as well as their gifts, their tithes, and all their other offerings. Now, this place was first at Silo, where the tabernacle and altar were, until the time of Heli; then at Nob, afterwards at Gabaon, etc., and lastly at Jerusalem. We may here observe that all the places where the ark was stationed at any time, were regarded by the Hebrews as so many holy places. It is altogether likely, that as long as the Israelites were sojourning in the desert, they neither immolated victims nor presented the oblations, except at the entrance of the tabernacle. Such was the law. But, when once established in the land of Chanaan, many of them found themselves placed at a great distance from this holy sanctuary; these did not think that it was forbidden to them, to offer to the Lord sacrifices mountains, planting groves, and placing idols in them, to be worshipped according to the rites of the Gentiles.

"Although the temple was the only place in which sacrifices could be offered, it was not in like manner the only place in which solemn prayer could be offered to God, and religious instruction communicated. For these purposes, the Jews erected also other buildings, which are known by the name of synagogues. These were necessary, especially in towns and villages at a distance from Jerusalem, which the people could not visit every Sabbath. On that day they met in their local synagogues to hear the holy Scriptures and to pray. Worship, properly so called, was offered only in the temple at Jerusalem, which every one was required to visit on the great feasts of the year. These were the feasts of the Pasch, of Pentecost, and of Tabernacles. They were instituted as memorials of some of the principal favors conferred by God upon the Hebrew nation. The pasch, and the feast of tabernacles, were celebrated with an octave; or, to speak in a way which may be more accurate, the most solemn of all the Hebrew festivals. It was instituted in memory of the miraculous liberation from Egypt, and the preservation of the first-born of the Hebrews, whom the exterminating angel spared, whilst he put to death the first-born of the Egyptians. The name of the festival, in the Hebrew, signifies a pasch continued for seven days—the feast of tabernacles for eight; the eighth day of this latter festival being termed the day of assembly and congregation, in Levit. (xxiii. 36). But only on the first and last days of each solemnity, was abstinence from servile works prescribed; and even on these days, all labor necessarily required for the preparation of food was permitted. (Exod. xii. 16; Levit. xxiii. 7-21-35.) The Feast of Pentecost had no octave. (Lev. xxiii. 16-22.) On these three festivals, all adult Hebrews were to proceed with their gifts to the tabernacle or temple, where they celebrated the solemnity by offering sacrifices, feasting, and rejoicing. But now to speak of the particular manner in which each of these festivals was celebrated—and, first, of the Pasch. The Feast of the Pasch, in the Hebrew פסח (pesach), usually written by St. Jerome, in his translation of the Old Testament, phase, was the passing by or over, and it was given to this solemnity because, at its first celebration, the exterminating angel passed by, that is, spared the houses of the Hebrews, which were marked with the blood of the paschal lamb. This solemnity commenced on the evening of the 14th day of the month Abib, called afterwards Nisan, which was the first month of the sacred year, and corresponded partly with our March, and partly with April. The feast extended to the twenty-first day of Nisan, inclusively. The most solemn days, as has been observed before, were the fifteenth of Nisan or Abib, commonly called the first day of the pasch, and the twenty-first of the same month—the last day of the solemnity. Throughout this whole week unleavened bread only was used, and hence it is called the feast of Azyms or of unleavened bread. (Exod. xii.

18; xiii. 6-7; xxiii. 15; Levit. xxiii. 6; Num. xxviii. 17.) On the evening of the fourteenth day, all leaven was removed from the houses, so that, during the whole week, nothing leavened might ever be seen. Wherefore, not only the fifteenth of Nisan, but also the fourteenth, may be well called, as it is in Levit. (xiii. 6), the first day of Azymes; because on the fourteenth, before evening, all leaven was removed; and hence it is that in one place, Josephus allots eight days to the paschal solemnity, although in reality it had only seven full days.

On the tenth day of Nisan, the father of each family designated, and set apart the paschal lamb, as it was called, although it might be either a lamb or a kid. It was to be a male, without blemish, and of the first year, that is, not more than one year old.

On the 14th day of the month, between the two evenings, the father, or head of the family slew—or immolated his lamb—in the early times at the tabernacle, and afterwards in the temple. The victim being slain, the blood was received into a vessel by sons from another family. In the time of Josephus, the number joined in the eating of a paschal lamb was to be, at least, ten, and not more than twenty. (Jewish War, Book 6, c. 9, § 3.) At the first celebration of the pasch, in Egypt, the Hebrews were commanded to eat the lamb quickly, having their loins girded, shoes on their feet, and staves in their hands, i. e., ready for their journey: these ceremonies were afterwards omitted, as we see in the New Testament where they are spoken of as reclining at table as though the Roman fashions had been introduced even into this most sacred rite. Another injunction, however, which they received, was to be of perpetual obligation, as long as the Jewish law continued, that was, not to break a bone of the paschal lamb. In this, and in several other respects, the paschal lamb was an illustrious type of Christ. (See John xix. 36.) The removal of leaven, during the paschal solemnity, was a type of the sanctity of the Christian state. (See 1st Epist. to Corin. v. 7, 8.) We have finally to observe, regarding the paschal lamb, that whatever remained of it—not eaten—was to one of the priests, and by him, or by some other of the priests, brought and sprinkled at the base of the altar. As to the expression the time between the two evenings it is variously understood. Josephus and the rabbins explain it, of the interval between the ninth hour, or three in the afternoon, and the eleventh hour, or sunset.

“When the pasch was celebrated for the first time in Egypt, the fathers of families marked the doors of their houses with the blood of the lamb, in compliance with the command of God, who was to spare the first-born in the houses marked in this manner. The paschal lamb was to be roasted whole; it was then to be eaten with bitter herbs or wild lettuces. Each family, whatever might be its number, was bound to immolate a paschal lamb; but, for the eating of it, a certain sufficient number was required; and, hence, when a family was too small to eat the entire lamb, its number was to be filled up, by adding persons from another family. The victim indeed, in all sacrifices, was to be entirely consumed either by fire or by eating.”

On the sixteenth day of Nisan, the second day of the paschal solemnity, the first sheaf of the barley harvest was offered to the Lord, accompanied by a particular sacrifice: this rite was a dedication of the harvest to God. (Levit. xxiii. 5-13.) On each of the other days of the paschal solemnity, expiatory victims for the sins of the people, were prescribed to be offered. (See Num. xxviii. 16, and following.)

“The Feast of Pentecost. From the sixteenth day of Nisan or Abib, which was the second day of the pasch, fifty days were to be counted, and the fiftieth day was the Feast of Pentecost (Πεντηκοστή), which, coming thus, at the end of seven weeks from the pasch, is called the Feast of Weeks. (Exod. xxxiv. 22; Levit. xxv. 15, 16; Num. xxviii. 26; Acts ii. 1.) It was celebrated in thanksgiving for the harvest; whence it is also called the Feast of Harvest. (Exod. xxiii. 16.) On this day the Jews presented to God the first-fruits of the wheat harvest in bread baked of the new corn, and a portion of the new flour (Exod. xxvii. 16; Levit. xxiii. 17; Numb. xxviii. 26); and hence this feast is also called the day of first-fruits. (Num. xxviii. 26.) On this day was also commemorated the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, which was on the fiftieth day after the departure out of Egypt. On this day many holocausts and victims for the sins of the people were offered. (Levit. xxiii. 11-20.) Pentecost attracted to Jerusalem a vast crowd of Jews from all parts; see Acts ii., where the sacred writer speaks of the Pentecost upon which the evangelical law was solemnly promulgated to the world. The Pentecost of which there is question in that second chapter of the Acts, might well be called the day of the first-fruits of the Spirit.

"The Feast of Tabernacles was instituted in memory of the journey of the Israelites through the desert, where they lodged in tents or tabernacles. This shows us whence the festival—in Greek Σκηνοπηγία—got its name. The feast commenced on the fifteenth day of the seventh month (Tischri), and lasted for eight consecutive days—the eighth day being one of special solemnity. (Levit. xxiii. 34-42; Num. xxiv. 12-35; Dent. xvi. 13-15.) The Hebrews, during these eight days, were bound to dwell in tents. (Levit. xxiii. 42, 43.) But as this festival was also to be a time of thanksgiving to God, for the ingathering of the fruits, and for the vintage, it is therefore called the feast of the Ingathering of the Fruits. (Exod. xxiii. 16; xxxiv. 22.) During the continuance of this feast, they carried in their hands branches of palm-trees, olives, citrons, myrtles, and willows. (Levit. xxiii. 43; 2 Machab. x. 7.) During each day of the solemnity, they walked in procession round the altar, with the above-mentioned branches in their hands, amid the sound of trumpets, singing Hosanna (Save, I beseech thee); and hence all the days of the feast were called Hosanna. But, because on the seventh day they went round the altar seven times, in memory of the destruction of Jericho, this day was therefore called the great Hosanna. The feast of tabernacles was one of great rejoicing, and the public sacrifices prescribed for it were more numerous than those prescribed for any other festival. (See Num. xxix. 12-39.) In more recent times, the Jews took occasion from the 12th chapter and 3d verse of Isaias, to introduce the rite according to which, on each day of the feast, water was brought from the fountain of Siloe, and poured out at the altar, amidst great rejoicing. The people, it is said, sang upon this solemn occasion the 12th chapter of Isaias, particularly that 3d verse, 'You shall draw waters with joy out of the Saviour's fountains.' This ceremony throws great light upon the allusion of our Redeemer in John vii. 37.

in like manner, prohibited under pain of death. On this day only, in the course of the year, was the high-priest permitted to enter the Holy of Holies. Previously to his entrance, he washed himself in water, and put on the holy linen vestments and the mitre; he then conducted to the altar a young bullock, to be offered for his own sins, and the sins of his household; and two he-goats, to be offered for the sins of the people. Only one of the goats, however, was to be slain in sacrifice, the other was to be led out into the desert and there permitted to go free. Lots were, therefore, cast, to decide which of the goats should be slain. (Levit. xvi. 6-10.) This being done, the high-priest was first to sacrifice the bullock, as a sin-offering for himself and his household; and to take some of the blood into the inner sanctuary, bearing in his hand a censer, with incense burning, kindled at the sacred fire on the altar, and to sprinkle the blood with his finger upon the propitiatory or mercy-seat, and seven times towards the floor of the most holy place, before the ark, to purify it (the Holy of Holies) from the pollution it might be supposed to have contracted from his sins and transgressions during the preceding year. He was then to sacrifice the allotted goat, for the sins of the whole nation, and to enter the inner sanctuary a second time, and to sprinkle it with blood as before, to purify it from the pollution of the people's sins and transgressions of the foregoing year. After which, he was to purify, in like manner, the tabernacle—or the Holy, and the altar. (See Levit. xvi.

"The Day of Expiation was another great day in the Mosaic ritual. This was the tenth of the seventh month—Tisri. This festival was instituted for the expiation of all the sins and irreverences committed by the Hebrew people during the course of the year. It was enjoined, under pain of death, to observe this day as a most rigorous fast; no food was allowed from the evening preceding to the evening of the festival. (Levit. xxiii. 27-29.)

All servile work was,

11-19.) The high-priest, coming now into the court before the altar, solemnly placed both his hands upon the head of the live goat; by this symbolical action, he was understood to impose upon him the burthen of all the sins, transgressions, and prevarications of the Israelites. He then committed him to the care of a person who was to lead him out into the desert, and there to let him go free. This was figurative of the remission of the sins of the Israelites. This goat was called the emissary goat, or the scape-goat. The goat and the young bullock which had been immolated—the first for the sins of the people—the other for the sins of the high-priest and his household—were to be burned outside of the camp; and, after the building of the temple, outside of the city of Jerusalem. (Levit. xvi. 20-22, 26-28.) Finally, the high-priest, having laid aside the white garments, and clothed himself in the usual dress of his ministry, offered holocausts for himself and the people, and another sacrifice for sin. (Levit. xvi. 23-25; Numb. xxix. 7-11.) It does not belong to our scope here, to explain fully the typical character of this great day of expiation, or to show how its many types found their fulfilment in Christ. We may observe, at the same time, that the ceremony of this day, in addition to its otherwise typical character, was a public acknowledgment of the inefficacy of the Mosaic sacrifices to take away sin: because on this day there was a commemoration of all the sins of the year, although several sacrifices had been offered for these same sins previously in the course of the year. (Hebrews x. 3.)”

The modern city of Jerusalem, after the lapse of ages and the vicissitudes of war and change of government under Christian Emperors, Saracens, the Crusaders, and, finally, the Turks, retains few vestiges of the ancient city of David. It is still regarded as a holy city. The Jews go there to pray and weep before a part of the old temple wall, which is therefore generally called “the wailing-place of the Jews;” the Mohammedans venerating the site of the Temple of Solomon, especially the rock which they call El Sakbra, erected here under Omar, the Mosque which is the most striking feature when one approaches the modern city. Universal tradition points out the great rock in the centre of the Dome as the threshing-floor of Acrena the Jebusite, on which Solomon set up the great altar of sacrifice. The Mosque glistens with Mosaic within and without, and is exquisitely proportioned. The marble columns are magnificent and the dome seen so far off is entirely gilded within, the only ornaments being beautiful Saracenic devices and letters. Many spots in Jerusalem connected with the last days of our Saviour’s career are pointed out, but to the Catholic the interest centres in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Near the spot hallowed by the tomb of the Blessed Virgin is the grotto of the Agony, a cave of some depth where our Lord, after leaving His disciples in the Garden of Gethsemane, withdrew from them and prayed, till the blood ran down like sweat under the intensity of His suffering. About a stone’s cast from the grotto is the Garden of Gethsemane, enclosed by a high wall, and now under the guardianship of the Franciscan friars. Eight venerable olive trees still remain, but the indiscretion of pilgrims, all of whom desire to carry away a piece, has made it necessary to enclose these trees and their gnarled roots in order to preserve them from utter destruction. Let us describe the great Church of the Holy Sepulchre:

“On entering the Church of the Holy Sepulchre the first thing that meets the eye is the Stone of Unction, that is the stone on which the Body of our Lord was laid after death for the anointing. From thence turning to the left you come to a circular building, like the Pantheon at Rome, in the centre of which is the Holy Sepulchre. The entrance is by a low door which leads into what is called the ‘Chapel of the Angel’ for here the angel sat upon the stone which had been rolled away from the Sepulchre. In the centre of this octagonal chapel is the stone itself; and at the western end of the little ante-chamber is a little door, through which, stooping very low, you pass and find yourself within the Holy Sepulchre. It is like a little vault with a domed roof. To the right is the Sepulchre itself, raised nearly three feet above the floor and of pure white marble; the slab which covers it serves as an altar, on which the Holy Sacrifice is daily offered. The space is so small that there is room for the officiating priest and a server only; while those who intend to communicate kneel in the outer chapel and then crawl in, almost on hands and knees, one by one. Over the Sepulchre burn forty-two silver lamps day and night; while the air is heavy with incense, and the floor is strewn with the sweet smelling flowers of mimosa and orange blossoms. A priest is always watching in adoration by the shrine, and all day long a continual stream of pilgrims, taking off their shoes at the entrance, bend the knee and bow the forehead before the marble slab where the Lord was laid. In fact it is only those who pass the night within the sacred building who can ever have the comfort of praying thus, in stillness and in peace, and without being compelled every moment to make way for a fresh worshipper. But even with this great drawback, it is difficult to describe the feelings of a person while kneeling there.

"Behind the chapel of the Holy Sepulchre is the Oratory of Magdalene (built over the supposed spot where Christ appeared to her in the garden), you descend, by two steps, to a low, dark chamber hewn out of the rock, which, by tradition, as old as the twelfth century, goes by the name of 'Our Lord's Prison,' as being the place where He was confined previous to His Crucifixion. From thence, a side door leads into the Greek Church, the Copts; and a little beyond, the Chapel of the Syrians, which is like a grotto hewn out of the rock. Passing onwards and turning around a pier to the left, you come to the chapel of the Apparition, so called because it is built on the site of the house to which the Blessed Virgin is said by tradition to have retired when the Crucifixion was over, and where our Saviour appeared to her after His Resurrection. It is a quadrangular building, belonging exclusively to the Franciscans; and to the south side of the altar, is a large porphyry fragment of the Column of the Flagellation. Each of the Latin Kings who, during the Crusades, so heroically struggled, for a hundred years, to save from infidel hands the site of their Master's Passion, was crowned at the altar of this chapel, and then, humbly ascending the steps each deposited his crown on the altar of Calvary—refusing, like their great leader, to wear the diadem in the city where their Saviour had worn the Crown of Thorns.

which is directly in front of the entrance to the Holy Sepulchre. To understand the singular form and arrangements of this church it is necessary to recollect, that when built by the Crusaders it was intended only for the Catholics, here called Latins, and confided to the charge of the Augustinians. When the Crusaders were expelled by Saladin, the Greeks got possession of a portion of the building, and have ever since retained it.

FOUNTAIN OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN, JERUSALEM.

"The chapel, which was originally the Latin choir, is divided in half by an elaborately carved screen, which cuts off the apse in which stands the high altar and the patriarch's throne. The choral stalls still remain on each side of the Bishop's chair. Beneath the centre of the lantern and clerestory, is a short marble column. The whole is gorgeously decorated, gilt, and illuminated with ostrich egg lamps, and cupola roof, in which four lights are pierced. It is a massive and beautiful crypt, supported on thick dwarf columns, with basket-worked capitals of a Byzantine character—the whole looking as if untouched since the days of the Great Empress. To the south of her altar is a marble chair, in which she is said to have sat while superintending the excavations which led to the discovery of the True Cross.

“A staircase of twelve steps, hewn in the rock, leads down from hence to the ‘Chapel of the Discovery of the Cross.’ In a recess on the south side stands an altar and crucifix, on the identical spot where the True Cross lay, dishonored and unknown, for three centuries. The rude rock remains uncovered and unadorned, with the marks of the pickaxe, as if the workmen had only just left off their search; so that this part of the sacred building has a look of greater reality and antiquity than all the rest.

“The chapel to the right is that of the palm, and covers the spot where our Blessed Lord was nailed to the cross. “Arimathea, a city of Judea, remarkable, as having been the city of Joseph, who took care of the burial of Christ. (See St. Luke xxiii. 50-51.) According to St. Jerome (in Epitaph. Paul- le), it was situated between Lydda and Joppe. It is now called Ramla.

“Azotus.—This town, in the division under Josue, had been assigned to the tribe of Juda. It was, however, detained a long time by the Philistines, and among the five principalities of the Philistines, it was considered the most powerful. It lay between Ascalon and Accaron. It is mentioned, in the New Testament, as the place in which Philip the deacon was found, after baptizing the Ethiopian eunuch. (Acts viii. 40.) It is, at present, an inconsiderable place. In this vicinity are numerous relics of antiquity.

1 Kings xvi. 1; xvii. 12, 15.) But it has acquired the greatest celebrity, in consequence of being the birth-place of our Redeemer. Bethlehem is about six miles southwest from Jerusalem. It is said to contain at present between a thousand and fifteen hundred inhabitants."

Ibrahim Pasha, in one of the freaks not uncommon with rulers in those lands, drove all the Mohammedans out of Beth-

SHEPHERDS' FIELD, BETHLEHEM.

"Bethania was a town, situated at the foot of Mount Olivet, to the east of Jerusalem, on the way leading from Jericho to Jerusalem. Here dwelt Martha and Mary, and their brother Lazarus, whom Jesus restored to life. Here, also, Mary anointed our Redeemer's head, with precious ointment. Bethania was only fifteen furlongs distant from Jerusalem. It is now a miserable Arab village," called Lazarié, inhabited by some thirty poor families, living in huts, or grottoes, that seem fit rather for animals than men. The people, partly Mohammedans and partly Christians, live peaceably by tilling the soil, but there is nothing to recall the spot which Jesus loved to visit. The cave-tomb of Lazarus has nothing striking but a poor little altar, on which mass is said annually.

"Bethlehem (House of Bread), a town of the tribe of Juda. It was commonly called Bethlehem of Juda, to distinguish it from another town of the same name, in the tribe of Zabulon. It was also called Ephrata, and its inhabitants Ephrateans. It was not remarkable for greatness or riches. However, it was a place of note among the Jews, as the seat of the family of David, and the birth-place of David himself. (Ruth ii. 1-4; iv. 14-17;

lehem and razed their houses. It is, consequently, entirely Christian, chiefly Catholic, with some schismatic Greeks. There is not even a Mohammedan aga or muezzin. The monastery is not only the place of prayer, but the only tribunal of the people who live happily amid their fertile and picturesque lands, studded with orchards of fig and olives. The chief monument of Bethlehem is the fortress-like Latin convent and church, which dates back to the days of Justinian. The two edifices adjoin each other, and within their precincts are all the spots hallowed by Christian tradition. Two entrances lead to the grotto of the Nativity, the one belonging to the Latins, the other to the Greeks. Entering the Latin door at the end of the Franciscan chapel, a flight of fifteen steps leads down past grotto chapels, dedicated to the Holy Innocents, Saint Joseph, Saint Jerome, Saint Paula and her daughter Eustochium, to the Sanctuary of the Nativity, a grotto cut in the rock, lined with marble and red silk hangings. It is supported by three marble columns and illuminated by thirty-five silver lamps, hanging from the vault. The spot where our Saviour was born is marked by a marble slab, in the centre of which is a piece of jasper with a silver sun around it. About the rays are these words in large letters: "HIC DE VIRGINE MARIA JESUS CHRISTUS NATUS EST."—"Here Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary." Above this slab rises a little altar lit by three lamps, the richest gift of Louis XIII. of France. A few paces to the right, two steps lead to the manger, the crib, now at Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome, is replaced by a block of marble, marking the site of the Sacra Culla, where the Holy Babe was laid.

"Bethphage, a village at the foot of Mount Olivet, between Bethania and Jerusalem. To this place our Redeemer, coming from Bethania, sent His disciples, that they might procure an ass, on which He would ride into Jerusalem. (St. Luke xix. 29, and St. Matt. xxi. 1.)" The village no longer exists.

"Emmaus, a small village of Judea, sixty furlongs distant from Jerusalem, on the northern side of the city. It is celebrated on account of the conversation between our Lord and two of the disciples who were going thither on the day of the resurrection. (St. Luke xxiv. 13.)"

"Emmaus is in a fertile and smiling valley, with a little lake on one side, and with olive, fig, and apricot trees on the other. On the right is the hill on which stands the church of Neby Samuel (now converted into a mosque), built by the Crusaders during their temporary occupation of the Holy Land, on the spot from whence they first beheld the Holy City. On the left is another rising ground from whence there is a magnificent view of the whole plain, from Emmaus to the sea: with Lydda and its ruined church, and Ramleh (Arimathea) and its hospitable convent, and Jaffa with its flat-roofed houses and bright orange groves glistening against the blue Mediterranean. In the valley between these two hills, stands a hospice and chapel, recently erected by a pious and noble French lady, to mark the site of the house of Cleophas, and on the very spot, "where He was made known unto them in the breaking of bread."

"Ephraim, or rather Ephrem, a considerable city of Juda, eight miles north of Jerusalem, and near a desert of the same name; to which our Redeemer retired, after raising Lazarus from the dead. (John xi. 54.)

"Gaza, was a celebrated city of the Holy Land. At the distribution under Josue, it fell to the lot of the tribe of Juda. (Josue xv. 47.) It was one of the five principalities of the Philistines; and we find it, for a considerable time after Josue, a formidable city to the Jews. Samson carried away its gates (Judges xvi. 1), and there Samson died, having pulled down the temple of the god of the Philistines. (Judges xvi. 30.) In after times, Gaza fell, successively, under the dominion of several masters. At length, it was laid waste by Alexander the Great. After which event, a new and smaller town of the same name, being built nearer to the sea, the ancient Gaza fell to decay. The Gaza mentioned in Acts (viii. 26), is the ancient city, which is now desert. The ancient city was distant about sixty miles southwest from Jerusalem.

"Hebron, the most ancient city in Palestine, rivals Damascus in interest and antiquity. It stands on a hill side, rising from the valley of Eshcol, in a fertile district, with vines, carob, and olive trees, and evergreen oaks. Here Abraham walked and communed with God: here he and Sarah, Isaac, Rebecca, Jacob, and Joseph were laid to rest in the double cave. Later still, in the history of God's people, it became a Levitical city, and here David was anointed and first reigned as king over the tribes that acknowledged his divine election. The tombs of the patriarchs are now covered by a mosque, and until very recently none but Mohammedans were allowed to enter. The cenotaphs are covered with dark green silk carpets worked with gold; some with rich canopies over them; others with bright banners of green silk and gold with gilt finials, resting against them. Each has an inscription marking it, embroidered in gold.

"Jericho, a celebrated city in the tribe of Benjamin, often mentioned in the New Testament. It was distant about nineteen miles from Jerusalem. It was the first city taken from the Chanaanites by Josue. The wonderful manner in which it was taken, is described in the book of Josue (vi. 1). Josue pronounced an anathema against any one who would rebuild it, saying, "In his first-born let him lay the foundations thereof, and in the last of his children let him put on the gates:" a curse which was literally fulfilled, afterwards, in Hiel, the Bethelite. (3 Kings xvi. 34.) After being rebuilt by Hiel, it became a flourishing town, and, in the time of our Redeemer, it was rich and populous. Here

He performed some of His miracles; and here was the house of Zacheus, the publican, which he honored by His presence. Jericho is, at present, a wretched village. Its modern name is Rihah.

"Joppe was a maritime city of Palestine, the only port of the Mediterranean frequented by the Jews. The city is frequently polis, it is now known by the name of Loudd. It was not far distant from Joppe, lying on the way from the latter place to Jerusalem. It is celebrated in the Acts of the Apostles, for the cure of a paralytic, named Eneas, by St. Peter. (Acts ix. 32-34.)

"Rama, a small town in the tribe of Benjamin, about thirty miles north of Jerusalem. This place is frequently mentioned mentioned, both in the Old and New Testament. It is now called Jaffa."

"The sacred memories of Jaffa date back to remote antiquity. Here the Lebanon cedars were landed for the construction of the temple. Here Jonas embarked when shrinking from his Ninevite mission. Here Saint Peter had the mysterious vision of the sheet let down from heaven full of clean and unclean animals, to teach him more fully the new Law of Him who came not to call the just but sinners to penance. Here also He restored Tabitha to life, a miracle doubtless wrought to confirm the faith of the people; though, according to the Jewish legend, so full of mysterious suffering to herself. Here again He received the messengers of Cornelius, inviting Him to Cæsarea. The house of Simon the tanner is still shown by the sea-side, part of it being now converted into a chapel; and the well is used by the tanners of this day for the same purpose. Here also the Blessed Virgin is said to have embarked with Saint John for Ephesus after the death of her divine Son."

"Lydda.—This town of Judea was called in later times Diosin the Old Testament. St. Matthew also mentions it (ii. 18), where he quotes a passage of Jeremias, with reference to the massacre of the Innocents. Rama appears to have been a place of great importance formerly. It was advantageously situated, lying immediately in the high road from Joppe to Jerusalem.

At present, the number of its inhabitants is not much above five thousand.

"In Samaria, the remarkable towns, at the time of our Redeemer's public ministry, were:

"1. The City of Samaria.—From about the year 935 before Christ, this city was the capital of the kingdom of Israel, as distinguished from the kingdom of Juda. After the ruin of the kingdom of Israel, by the Assyrians, it became the chief seat of the people whom the king of Assyria planted in the desolated country; who were hence called Samaritans. The town was utterly destroyed by Hircanus, the high-priest and ruler of the Jews, in the year 129 before Christ. In this state it remained until the time of Herod the Great; who, being pleased with the situation, rebuilt the city, and called it Sebaste (a Greek word, equivalent to the Latin Augusta) in honor of the emperor Augustus. At present, there is only to be found on the site of the ancient city a miserable village, called Sebastien (the Arabic form of Sebaste). The city of Samaria is scarcely ever referred to in the New Testament; but the district or province of Samaria is often mentioned.

"2. Sichem, called also Siehar, now Naplouse or Naplose, a city of the province of Samaria, about forty miles distant from Jerusalem. After the destruction of Samaria by Hircanus, it became the metropolis of the Samaritans. Beside it is the well of Jacob, memorable for our Saviour's discourse with the Samaritan woman. (John iv. 6.) Beside the city was 'the part of ance, and in which the bones of Joseph were buried. (Josue xxiv. 32.) The remains of the sect of the Samaritans, now but few in number, chiefly reside here." Maintaining the ancient rites and

"3. Antipatris, a small town of the province of Samaria, lying on the way between Jerusalem and Cæsarea of Palestine. It was only from the time of Herod the Great, that it had the name of Antipatris, which Herod gave to it, in honor of his father Antipater. Herod, moreover, rebuilt and beautified the town.

at Jerusalem. (Acts xxiii. 31.) In upper Galilee, the most remarkable town, in connection with the Gospel history, was Cesarea Philippi.

"Cesarea Philippi, formerly called Paneas, was situated at the foot of Mount Paneas, near the source of the Jordan. It was In lower Galilee there were many cities illustrious in the Gospel history.

"1. Tiberias, a celebrated city of lower Galilee, situated on the coast of the sea of Genesareth, which was also called the lake or sea of Tiberias. It was built by Herod the tetrarch, and first called Lais. When the tribe of Dan made themselves masters of it, they gave it the name of Dan. (Judges xviii. 7-29.) However, Eusebius and St. Jerome say that Cesarea Philippi (formerly called Paneas) was a distinct place from Dan (formerly called Lais), and that these two towns were four miles asunder. It is thought that the name Paneas was imposed upon it by the Phœnicians—or, rather, the name which it originally had was Banias, which the Greeks and Romans called Paneas. It was rebuilt, or at least beautified, by Philip the tetrarch, who gave to it the name of Cesarea, in honor of Tiberius Caesar. Cesarea was a day's journey from Sidon, and a day and a half from Damascus. In the vicinity of this city took place the conversation between our Redeemer and His apostles, in which such illustrious promises were made by Him to St. Peter above all the rest. (Matt. xvi.) This city has dwindled into an insignificant village, and has resumed again the name of Banias.

named Tiberias in honor of Tiberius Caesar. At present, it is called by the natives Tabaria or Tabbareah, and has a population of between fifteen hundred and two thousand souls, who are principally Jews.

"2. Corozain, a town on the western coast of the sea of Galilee, not far distant from Capharnaum. It was one of the places most frequently favored by our Redeemer's preaching and miracles. Its obdurate inhabitants, however, not having corresponded with the graces bestowed upon them, are severely upbraided by our Redeemer in the Gospel. (St. Matt. xi. 21; St. Luke x. 13.) This town has long since disappeared.

"3. Bethsaida was a town beyond the Jordan, on the coast of the sea of Tiberias. Its situation was near the entrance of the Jordan into this sea of Tiberias. Philip, the tetrarch, enlarged and ornamented this city, and gave to it the name of Julias, in honor of the daughter of the Roman emperor Augustus. It was the residence of the apostles Peter, Andrew, and Philip. (John i. 44.) Like Corozain, it was frequently visited by our Redeemer, during His public ministry; it heard His discourses, and witnessed His miracles; but it imitated Corozain in its infidelity. (See St. Matthew xi. 21.) It must be observed here that Reland, in his Palæstina, p. 653, is supposed by many to have accurately in the upper part of the town, near the Maronite church, which towers over all the terraces on the hill side. To the right, as you descend, is the Greek church, and lower down the house of Saint Joseph, where our Lord worked in his boyhood. Near the Greek church is an ancient synagogue where, according to tradition, our Lord one day explained, as relating to himself, distinguished two Bethsaidas, one on the western, and the other on the northeastern border of the lake or sea of Tiberias. The former was the city of Andrew and Peter. The other was the Bethsaida of Gaulonitis, afterwards called Julias. Both these towns have disappeared. There was also Bethsaida or Bethabara on the Jordan.

"4. Nazareth, a small city in the district of Zabulon, in lower Galilee. It is celebrated in the Scriptures as having been the residence of our divine Redeemer for so many years; there He became incarnate; there He was brought up in subjection to Joseph and Mary; from it He was called a Nazarene. At present, it is called Nassara; the number of its inhabitants is stated to be about three thousand, mostly Christians."

"Nazareth, like Bethlehem, is a Christian city. It stands on the southern slope of a mountain. The few Turkish houses are the prophecy of Isaias. Of the three Christian churches, that of the Annunciation is rich and beautiful. It has a high altar raised on a double flight of steps, and a beautiful shrine below, leading to the house of the Blessed Virgin. Here is a little chapel with a marble altar lit by silver lamps, at the very spot where tradition attests that the Annunciation took place. A star marks the spot. "Hic Verbum carotum est."—"Here the Word was made flesh." A broken column suspended from the roof indicates the spot where the Blessed Virgin is supposed to have knelt. The altar is in a vault, partly natural, partly artificial, on the rock against which the house was built.

"5. Cana, a small town of Galilee, remarkable as being the place in which our Redeemer performed His first miracle. It was called Cana of Galilee, to distinguish it from another Cana, which belonged to the tribe of Aser, and was situated near to the city of Sidon. (Josue xix. 28.) It is commonly supposed to have been the place now called Kefr Kenna. This is still a neat village, having a large spring in the neighborhood, supposed to be that from which the water was drawn, at our Lord's visit. Dr. Robinson (Biblical Researches, vol. iii., p. 204-208), does not subscribe to this common opinion, about the present site of Cana.

"8. Cæsarea of Palestine, was so called, because, when the Romans governed Palestine, they made Cæsarea the metropolis; and there was the residence of the Roman governor. This city was about thirty-five miles from Jerusalem. It had been formerly called the Tower of Strato. It was Herod the Great who,

CAPHARNAUM.

"6. Capharnaum, a town of Galilee, on the coast of the sea of Tiberias, and on the borders of the districts of the tribes of Zabulon and Nephthali. It was the usual abode of our Redeemer, during the greater part of the time of His public ministry. Hence, it is called His own city. (Matthew ix. 1.) Notwithstanding the many miracles which they witnessed, the great mass of its inhabitants were inattentive to our Saviour's instructions. Hence, He pronounces a woe upon them. (Matt. xi. 23.) Near to this city was the Custom-house, in which St. Matthew, then a publican, sat when he was called by Christ to be His disciple. It was, obviously, a place of great consideration at the time of which the Gospel history treats; but at present there is scarcely a remnant of it to be found."

According to recent explorers the modern Tell Hum marks the site of Capharnaum.

"7. Naim, a town of Galilee, not far from Capharnaum; where Christ raised to life a widow's son, whom they were carrying to the tomb. (St. Luke vii. 11-15.) It is now a small hamlet, having the name of Nein.

having enlarged and beautified the city, named it Cæsarea, in honor of Augustus. It is very frequently mentioned in the New Testament. Here St. Peter baptized Cornelius, the Centurion. (Acts x.) Here St. Philip, the deacon, resided. (Acts xxi. 8.)

Here St. Paul was detained by the Roman governors, Felix and Festus, before being sent to Rome; at which time he made his defence against the Jews and their orator Tertullus (Acts xxiv.); and again before departing from the city, he justified his conduct in the presence of King Agrippa. (Acts xxvi.) Wherever, in the Scripture, Cæsarea is mentioned without any addition, this is the city which is designated. At present, Cæsarea retains nothing of its former splendor.

"9. Ptolemais, anciently called Acco (Judges i. 31), is situated on the coast of the Mediterranean, on the conflines of lower and upper Galilee. Here St. Paul rested for one day, on his journey from Ephesus to Jerusalem. (Acts xxi. 7.) The crusaders gave to this city the name of St. Jean d'Acre. It is now commonly known by the name of Acre.

"We shall not delay to make any particular observations on the cities of Decapolis, the names of which, according to the more probable opinion, we have already given; of these, Scythopolis, the chief city, was on the western side of the Jordan. Gadara, according to Josephus, was the metropolis of Peræa, or of the region beyond the Jordan.

"Damascus, the celebrated capital of Syria, is a very ancient and celebrated city; but, although it occasionally fell under Hebrew or Jewish dominion, it does not appear that it could, properly, be called a Hebrew city. Mention is made of it both in the Old and New Testament. Some have ascribed the building of it to Abraham. The city certainly existed as early as the days of Abraham; as is clear from Genesis xiv. 15; xv. 2; but the way in which it is spoken of in these passages, shows that even at the time to which they refer, it was not a new nor an unknown place. In the New Testament it is mentioned in connection with the conversion and first preaching of the Apostle St. Paul. (Acts ix. 3-20.) The spot where Saul, on his way to Damascus, saw the light from heaven, is still pointed out, according to the tradition preserved among the Christians of the country; as is also the part of the wall at which the apostle was let down in a basket, to escape the indignation of the Jews. (Acts ix.) Damascus is still an important city. Lamartine estimates its population at three hundred thousand, of whom thirty thousand are Christians. Others, however, are of opinion, that this writer has much overrated the number of its inhabitants."

"Palestine is a mountainous country; two chains of mountains—one on the west of the Jordan, the other on the east of that river—stretch from Syria to Arabia; these are, in several places, broken by plains, more or less extensive. The principal mountains of Palestine are:—

"First.—Libanus, which is composed of two chains or ridges, in the midst of which, is situated the great valley called by the ancients Coele-syria. The Greeks give the name of Anti-Libanus to the eastern ridge, and of Libanus to the western. The Hebrews made no such a distinction, but called both by the common name of Libanus. It is upon this mountain that once grew those magnificent cedars, so celebrated in history, especially in the Holy Scripture. These trees are of a prodigious height and girth. It appears, however, by the accounts of travellers, that the number of the ancient trees is now very small—these are known by their extraordinary height, and the vast circumference of the trunk; some are found to have thirty-five, and even forty, feet of circumference. Anti-Libanus is more elevated than Libanus, and has its summit constantly covered with snow: although, on the highest part of Mount Libanus, snow is also found, even in summer. The chief summit of Anti-Libanus was called by the Jews Hermon. The height of these mountains is from nine thousand to nine thousand six hundred feet. These two ridges, Anti-Libanus and Libanus, run parallel to each other, from the neighborhood of Sidon on the west, to the vicinity of Damascus eastward, and from the extreme northern boundary of the Holy Land.

"Second.—Carmel is a chain of mountains situated about ten miles to the south of Ptolemais or Acre, on the coast of the Mediterranean. These mountains, and the valleys which intersect them, form a most beautiful district of country. The summits of the mountains are covered with oak and fir trees; whilst the valleys are shaded by the olive and laurel trees, and watered by an infinite number of streams. The greatest height of Carmel is about two thousand one hundred feet. In the territory of the tribe of Juda there was another Mount Carmel, and a city of the same name.

"Third.—Thabor, a mountain in Galilee, of a conical form, entirely detached from any neighboring mountain. It stands upon one side of the great plain of Esdrelon, and is computed to be nearly one mile in height. On its summit there anciently stood a city, the ruins of which are still to be seen. Jahn supposes that this city was no other than the Thabor in the tribe of Zabulon, mentioned in 1 Paralip. vi. 77. According to ancient tradition, this mount was the scene of the transfiguration of our Lord.

"Fourth.—The mountains of Israel, called also the mountains of Ephraim, occupy the very centre of the Holy Land, and stand opposite to the mountains of Juda. In both ranges the soil is fertile, except in those ridges of the mountains of Israel which lie near the region of the Jordan; and also with the exception of the chain which extends from Mount Olivet, near Jerusalem, to the plain of Jericho; which latter has been always famous for affording lurking-places to robbers. (Josue xvi. 18; xviii. 17; Luke x. 30.) The most elevated summit of this ridge, is now known by the name of Quarantana, and is supposed to have been the scene of our Saviour's temptation. (Matt. iv. 8.) In Deuteronomy and Josue, mention is made of the mountains Hebal and Garizim, situated, the one to the north, the other to the south of Sichem or Napolose. The Samaritans had their temple on Mount Garizim. Here we may mention Mount Moria, on which Solomon built his temple; and Sion, on which stood the city of David. These two were closely a short distance from Jerusalem: from it Christ ascended to heaven. Near to the city of Jerusalem stood also mount Olivet, upon which our Saviour accomplished the great work of the redemption of mankind.

MOUNT QUARANTANA, JERICHO.

"Fifth.—Not many miles distant from Mount Thabor, to the south and south-east, rises a range of hills which advances to the borders of the Jordan, and continues thence, for some miles northward, to bound the west of the valley of that river. This is the range which was formerly known by the name of the mountains of Gelboe, and even now is called by the natives Hjebel Gilbo. Here was the scene of that battle in which Saul and Jonathan fell. Hence David, mourning for their death, says: 'Ye mountains of Gelboe, let neither dew nor rain come upon you,' etc. (2 Kings i. 21.) Travellers inform us, that this mountainous ridge is of a sterile and arid character, in which it is remarkably distinguished from all the other mountains in its neighborhood.

united, and formed a part of the site of Jerusalem, from the time of David.

"The Mount of Olives, or Mount Olivet, so called, on account of the great number of olive trees which covered it, stood at "Sixth.—The mountains of Galaad, situated beyond the Jordan, and extending in a long chain from Anti-Libanus to Arabia Petraea. They received different names in the different countries which they traverse. The northern part of the range was known by the name of the mountains of Basan; these were once celebrated for their pastures and their stately oaks. The middle part of this range was called, in a stricter sense, the mountain of Galaad; whilst in the southern part lie the mountains of Abarim: among which, the most eminent are Nebo and Phasga, which form a continued ridge, and command a view of the whole land of Chanaan. It was from Mount Nebo that Moses was permitted to take a view of the promised land before Azotus, Gath, and Accaron. Another tract, extending from Joppe to Carmel, was called Saron, and must not be confounded with another Saron, lying between Thabor and the Lake of Genesareth; nor yet with a third Saron, situated in the tribe of Gad, beyond the Jordan, and renowned for its pastures.

"Second.—The plain of Jezreel, or Esdrelon, which extends from Mount Carmel and the Mediterranean, to the place where the Jordan issues from the sea of Tiberias. It lies in the middle he died. (Num. xxvi. 12, 13.)" And it was in a cave in this mountain that the prophet Jeremias deposited the Ark of the Covenant. (2 Mac. ii.)

"Seventh.—We may go a little outside of the limits of the land of the children of Israel, to mention the mountain of Sinai, famous as the place upon which Moses received from God the tables of the law; and the mountain of Horeb, upon which God appeared to Moses in the burning bush. (Exod. iii. 1.) Both these mountains were situated in Arabia Petraea, and near to each other.

"The most remarkable plains are:—

"First.—The coast of the Mediterranean Sea, from the southern limit of Palestine, which was near the Torrent of Egypt (Rhino-corura), as far as Mount Carmel. The tract of country from Gaza, as far as Joppe, was called simply the plain. In it were the five celebrated cities of the Philistines, Gaza, Ascalon, Azoth or of the Holy Land. This was called the great plain. Hence, Josephus always refers to it by this name. It was from twenty-four to thirty miles long, and from twelve to fifteen broad. It was exceedingly fertile, abounding in wheat, wine, oil, and other valuable products.

"Third.—The district of the Jordan, that is, the eastern and western shores of that river, extending from the Lake of Genesareth as far as the Dead Sea. In this district was, 1st, the Plain of Jericho; 2d, the Valley of the Salt Pits, beside the Dead Sea (4 Kings xiv. 7); 3d, the Plains of Moab, beyond the Jordan. Valleys abound in Palestine, as in all mountainous countries. We shall only speak of the following:—

"First.—The Valley of Ennom, called, also, the Valley of the Children of Ennom. It lay near Jerusalem, on the south side, and separated the tribe of Juda from that of Benjamin. This Valley is celebrated as being the place in which human sacrifices were offered to the idol Moloch. The part of the valley in which the human victim was burned, in honor of the idol, was called Topheth (4 Kings xvi. 13, and xxi. 20; Jerem. vii. 31), a name supposed to be derived from the Hebrew word, toph, a drum, because drums were beaten to drown the cries of the word Josaphat, signifies the judgment of God. (See Calmet on the word Josaphat.)

"The Lake of Genesareth, is very frequently mentioned in the New Testament. It is called, also, the Sea of Galilee, the Sea of Tiberias, and the Sea of Genesareth. The name of Genesareth appears to have been derived from a town of that name, burning victims of Moloch. From this valley was derived the name of Gehenna, which means the Valley of Ennom, and is used by the Scripture to designate the hell of the damned. (St. Matt. v. 22.)

"Second.—The Valley of Josaphat deserves particular notice, seeing that Christians generally, as well as Jews, believe that this shall be the scene of the general judgment. This belief has been founded upon the words of the Prophet Joel (iii. 12). Opinions have been divided on the precise situation of the valley to which the prophet refers. However, it is generally supposed to be the valley lying between the city of Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives. It is rather more than a mile in length, but narrow. The brook of Cedron runs through it. Some, however, are of opinion, that the Prophet Joel did not refer to any place in particular when he used the words found in the text above referred to, but that he speaks symbolically of the Valley of God's Judgment. In reality the Hebrew name or which had formerly occupied the site on which, in the time of Christ, stood the city of Tiberias. As to the name of sea, which was given to this lake, this was in conformity with the usage of the Jews, who called every large expanse of water by the name of sea. In estimating the dimensions of this lake, travellers do not agree. According to Mr. Buckingham's estimate, which is, perhaps, the most accurate that has been formed—'Its great length runs nearly north and south, from twelve to fifteen miles, and its breadth seems to be, in general, from six to nine miles.' Over this lake our Divine Redeemer repeatedly passed during His public ministry; and it is mentioned in connection with several of the Gospel narratives. The Jewish writers dwell with enthusiasm on the excellencies of this noble lake—the transparency of its waters—the great abundance of fish which it contains—the fertility of its coast, and the sublime scenery which surrounds it.

"The Lake of Sodom, or Sea of Sodom, called also the Dead

Sea, has been celebrated not only by the sacred writers, but also by Josephus, and several profane authors. It was anciently called, as we learn from Scripture, the Sea of the Plain (Deut. iii. 17), because it occupied the place where once stood the cities of the plain—Sodom, and the other cities of Pentapolis. It was called, also, the Most Salt Sea (Deut. iii. 17), from the extremely saline and bitter taste of its waters. Also the East Sea (Ezech. lxvii. 18), from its situation, relatively to the Mediterranean, called by the Jews the West Sea. By Josephus and other writers, it is called the Lake Asphaltites, from the abundance of asphaltos, or bituminous matter found in it. The name of the Dead Sea was given to it in consequence of the impression, which universally prevailed among the ancients, that no living thing was to be found in it. Some modern travellers, however, assure us, that a small species of fish is found in it, such as is altogether peculiar to this lake. As to the extent of this lake, modern travellers commonly estimate its length to be about forty-one geographical, or forty-six and a half English

Before the conflagration and destruction of Sodom and the other cities, it is considered probable that the Jordan divided itself into streams in this valley, by means of which an extraordinary fertility was communicated to this delightful region; and that the river then buried itself in the earth; and it is, therefore, supposed that even before the disaster recorded in Scripture, the Dead Sea existed as a subterranean lake, covered with a thick crust, in a great measure formed and supported by the asphaltos, or bituminous matter. Even at present, masses of this bituminous substance are seen to rise and float upon the lake.

“We read in Genesis that, before the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, there were in this valley many pits of bitumen, which came, no doubt, from the subterranean lake. God having caused fire to descend upon the valley, the bitumen was inflamed, and the earth, which had covered the lake, being thus deprived of the support of the bituminous stratum on which it rested, was precipitated in the waters, and thus the lake became apparent. As the waters of the Jordan miles, and its greatest breadth to be nearly thirteen and a half. The place now occupied by the waters of this lake was, before the destruction of Pentapolis, an agreeable and fertile valley, watered by the Jordan, and compared for beauty to the Garden of Eden. At present, the Jordan empties itself into this lake.

and of several other rivers flow unceasingly into this lake, and as there is no visible outlet from it, it must be that it makes its way by subterranean passages, either to the Red Sea, or to the Mediterranean. Everything which is thrown into this lake is immediately covered with a saline crust; and so great is the specific gravity of the water from the quantity of saline matter which it holds in solution, that it will support a man lying motionless on its surface. Josephus informs us that when the Emperor Vespasian came to see this lake, he caused several men, who knew not how to swim, and whose hands were bound behind them, to be cast into it: and Josephus adds, that all these floated on the surface. (Josephus, Wars of the Jews, Book IV., Chapter 8.) 'This great specific gravity of the water is proclaimed, also, by modern travellers, who have themselves tested its power. One of these, quoted by Kitto, in his Pictorial History of Palestine, says, that 'he could have lain and read there with perfect ease.' (Volume II., chapter 6, of the Physical History, page 204.) On the plain of this lake grows the solanum melongena, or mad apple, called the apple of Sodom; and referred to, moreover, in Scripture, by the name of the bitter grape of the vine of Sodom. (Deut. xxxii. 32; Prov. xv. 19; Mich. vii. 4; Wisd. x. 7.) This fruit is beautiful to the eye, but the interior is like ashes. This is supposed to be the work of a certain insect. When the fruit is attacked by this insect, the skin is pierced with a hole, scarcely perceptible, and remains apparently perfect, and of a beautiful color, while the inside is converted into a powder, like dust or ashes.

"As for rivers:—

"The only river in Palestine, which has a considerable volume of water, is the Jordan. The source of this river is the Lake Phiala, at the foot of Anti-Libanus. The discovery of its true source was made in the time of Philip, Tetrarch of Trachonitis, as it is related by Josephus. Leaving the Lake Phiala, it runs for some miles under ground, until it emerges to the light from a cave in the vicinity of the city of Paneas (or Cæsarea Philippi, now called Banias). It flows then due south, intersecting the Lake Merom, and the Lake of Genesareth; and after making a course of about one hundred miles from its emerging at Paneas, it loses itself in the Dead Sea. Its breadth and depth are various. Dr. Shaw computed it to be, on the average, about thirty yards broad, and three yards, or nine feet, in depth; and states that it discharges daily into the Dead Sea about six millions and ninety thousand tons of water. Anciently, the Jordan overflowed its banks about the beginning of the harvest time, that is, about the middle of April, when the snows being dissolved on the mountains, the torrents discharged themselves into its channel with great impetuosity. (Josue iii. 15, and iv. 18; 1 Paral. xii. 15.) Hence, we find that in the vicinity of Jericho, of which place we speak, each side of the river has two banks, one of which marks the swollen state of the river, and the other marks the ordinary breadth of its channel. Many recent travellers were of opinion, that the river did not, in latter times, ever overflow its ordinary banks; but not having visited the river at the proper season, they were not properly qualified to pronounce upon the matter. A still more recent traveller than any of these, Dr. Robinson, having visited the river in the harvest season, testifies that he found it overflowing the banks of its ordinary channel.

"The name Jordan is supposed by many to be derived from the Hebrew word yeor, a river, and Dan, the name of that Jewish city which many have confounded with Paneas, or Cæsarea Philippi. (However, the two cities stood very near to each other.) Glaire prefers the opinion which derives the name Jordan from the Hebrew verb yarad, to descend. Besides the Jordan, there are several smaller rivers and brooks in Palestine. Of these, several fall into the Dead Sea, viz.: First, the Saphia, or Saphria, which is rather a considerable river; Second, the Zered, which runs beyond the Jordan, on the frontiers of the Moabites; Third, the Torrent of Arnon, which has its source in the valleys of Galaad; and Fourth, the torrent or Brook of Cedron. This last, which traverses the valley of Josaphat between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, is dry for almost the entire year, except in the spring season. Over this brook our Divine Redeemer crossed with His disciples, when, at the approach of His Passion, He went to pray to His Heavenly Father, as it is related in the Gospel; and, in a word, whenever he went from Jerusalem to the Mount of Olives, He passed over this stream."

EGYPT.

"Although it does not fall within our scope, precisely, to dwell upon the history of countries which lay outside of the limits of the Holy Land, yet there are special reasons why we should not pass over Egypt with this mere geographical notice of its boundaries and extent. It cannot be denied, that before still remain the admiration of the world. The Israelites, therefore, during the four hundred and thirty years that they remained in Egypt, must have learned much from a people so far advanced in the arts of civilized life. Moses, in particular, having been brought up at court, had thus an excellent opportunity of making himself acquainted with the learning of the Egyptians, and with the advanced state of the arts and sciences the time when Abraham, and later, when Jacob and his family went down to Egypt, by the invitation of Pharaoh, the Egyptians were acquainted with agriculture, and all those arts of civilization and government which indicate a social existence, extending backwards for a considerable time. This appears from several statements in the books of Moses, which are confirmed, in a striking manner, by architectural remains that have survived the ravages of above thirty centuries; in them we see that winged circle which caused the prophet Isaiah to call it, 'Land with the Winged Cymbal.' (Is. xviii. 1.) For while the Israelites, under the immediate successors of Josue, were still warring with the among them. And, indeed, St. Stephen, in the Acts of the Apostles (vii. 22), informs us that he (Moses) 'was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; and that he was mighty in his words and in his deeds.' The inspired volume—particularly the writings of Moses—is not only the best authority which we possess on the early history of Egypt; but after all the labor that has been bestowed on the attempt to decipher the hieroglyphics, it still continues to be also the fullest authority on the subject. The interesting view of ancient Egypt, which so many references in the Scripture give us, and which is so strikingly confirmed by many monuments, has induced men of profound

Chanaanites for the possession of the land of promise; or yet earlier, while they were yet slaves in Egypt; that most interesting land was distinguished for palaces, temples, porticoes, obelisks, statues, and canals, which declare that they had been preceded by a considerable period of civilization, and which learning and great powers of mind to engage, with extraordinary ardor and perseverance, in the attempt to decipher the hieroglyphics. It is considered still, even after all that has been made known by the highly interesting works of Young, Champollion, and many others, that the success has been by no means commensurate with the labor that has been expended upon this object: and that the progress made in reading the hieroglyphics, or the amount of knowledge as yet acquired by means of them, is not at all as great as the public was led to expect. Whatever knowledge, however, has been acquired, as to the state of ancient Egypt, by any channel distinct from the sacred writings, has been found to harmonize fully with those inspired records: as Christians knew, a priori, should be the case. And if the revelations which have been up to the present time drawn from the hieroglyphics are comparatively meagre, there is yet another class of monuments that supplies us with most abundant and important disclosures respecting the ancient history of the Egyptians. These are the paintings and sculptures with which that people left the walls of their

"Egypt is a well-known country of Africa, which, in the ancient geography, might have been about five hundred miles in length; but its breadth was not considerable. On the east, it was bounded by Arabia Petrea and the Red Sea; on the south by Ethiopia, or rather, Nubia; on the west by the deserts of Libya; and on the north by the Mediterranean Sea. It was divided into two, and sometimes into three parts, viz., northern, or the lower Egypt, which is called the Delta; and southern, or the upper Egypt, called by the Arabians, Zaid, and by the Greeks, Thebais. The lower part of the upper Egypt, was sometimes reckoned a third part, and called Heptanomis, because it consisted of seven districts. The celebrated river Nile, which, in the Scripture, is usually designated by the name of tombs and temples decorated, in forms and colors which have not yet faded from the sight."

Yeor (the river), divides the country into two parts. Each year, in the months of August and September, it overflows its banks, and by the deposit which it leaves, fertilizes the country round about. The Nile empties itself into the Mediterranean by two mouths; these alone, of the seven it formerly had, now remain. The more remarkable cities of Egypt, were—Thebes, or the great Diospolis, the metropolis of upper Egypt, celebrated by Homer for its hundred gates, and still famous by its ruins; Memphis, near the confines of the lower and upper Egypt, on the western shore of the Nile; Tunis, now called Menzaleh; it was the seat of the kings of the twenty-first and twenty-third dynasties of Manetho, and, according to some, the birth-place of Moses. It was from this city that one of the principal branches of the Nile took the name of Tanitic. Alexandria: this city is situated on a tongue of land formed by the Mediterranean Sea and the Lake Moeris. This superb city was built by Alexander the Great, who named it after himself: it was the residence of the Nile. Jahn has brought together several very probable reasons to show that it ran near the place formerly called Rhinocorura, now El-arisch."

ARABIA.

Arabia, the country in which the Israelites wandered for nearly half a century after their miraculous rescue from Egypt, is frequently mentioned in Holy Writ, and the holy patriarch Job is supposed to have dwelt here.

"Arabia is an extensive country of Asia, situated to the west of the Tigris and the Euphrates, and to the east and south of Palestine. By the inhabitants of Palestine, it was called the eastern country; but, by the Babylonians, the western country. Hence, even in the Scripture, its inhabitants are sometimes designated as the people of the east; sometimes as the people of Ptolemy, and the capital of Egypt during the period of the Roman domination. It acquired great renown for its beautiful port, and still more for its library and museum. The ruins which yet remain of the ancient city may give us some idea of what it formerly was.

"The land of Gessen, which the Israelites inhabited in Egypt, was a fertile country well adapted for pasturage. Interpreters and geographers are much divided as to the true situation of this country. Glaire adopts, as most probable, the opinion which places it in lower Egypt, to the east of the Pelusiac branch of the Nile, between Heliopolis and Heroopolis.—Glaire, Introduc., tom. ii., page 16.

"One of the limits of the land of Gessen was the Torrent of Egypt, which is often mentioned in the Scripture. Some interpreters have thought that this Torrent of Egypt referred to the the west. (Compare Judges vi. 3; 1 Kings iv. 30; Isaiah xi. 14; Jer. xlix. 28; 2 Para. xvii. 11; and xxi. 16.) The division of this country by Ptolemy and others into Arabia Felix, Petrea, and Deserta, is not observed in the Bible, nor is it known to the Arabians themselves.

"Arabia Felix, so called on account of its fertility, was called also Sabea and Saba or Seba; whence its inhabitants have been designated by the name of Sabeans; it was bounded on the east by the Persian Gulf; on the south by the Indian Ocean; on the west by the Red Sea; and on the north by the mountains which separated it from the two other parts of Arabia.

"Arabia Petrea, so called from its capital city, Petrea, lay along the Red Sea; being bounded on the north by Palestine; and on the east and south by Arabia Deserta, and a part of Arabia Felix.

"Arabia Deserta, according to the ancient geography, was bounded on the west by Trachonitis; on the north by the country of Damascus, Syria, and Mesopotamia; and on the south by Babylonia, and by the mountains which separated it from Arabia tween the continuation of Mount Libanus and the sea. Its principal cities were Sidon and Tyre, which are frequently mentioned in the Scriptures, although the name of Phœnicia does not occur there. Sidon was a city of great importance in the Felix. Arabia Deserta was the ancient abode of the Edomites, the Moabites, the Madianites, the Amalekites, and, in fine, of the Israelites, for forty years after their departure from Egypt; its capital was Bosra, called also Bostram, or Bostra."

PHŒNICIA.

Near the Holy Land was Phœnicia, the seat of the most famous commercial nation of ancient times, which founded colonies at Carthage in Africa, and in Spain, and whose fleets penetrated beyond the straits of Gibraltar to the shores of Britain and Ireland. The language of the people resembled the Hebrew, and there was a friendly intercourse between the kings of Tyre, and David and Solomon.

"Phœnicia extended from the gulf of Issus, where it bounded Cilicia on the north, along the coast southwards, to the termination of the ridges of Libanus and Antilibanus near Tyre, where it met the border of Palestine. In breadth, it only comprehended the narrow tract be-time of Josue, who refers to it by the name of the great city. (Josue xi. 8, xix. 28.) Tyre, more recent than Sidon, became more celebrated. Having been destroyed by Nabuchodonosor, it was rebuilt upon a site adjacent to that of the ancient city. It was afterwards overturned by Alexander the Great, and from that time, although again restored, it never recovered its former greatness."

ASSYRIA AND BABYLON.

"Assyria was, at first, but a small province beyond the Tigris. Its limits, in early times, are unknown. Having been gradually enriched by the accession of new provinces, it, at length, extended as far as Syria and Palestine, and became exceedingly powerful and celebrated under the name of the Assyrian empire. Its capital, Ninive, was situated on the eastern bank of the Tigris, opposite to the present Mosul. Whilst the Assyrian empire flourished, Ninive was the most considerable city of Asia. We learn from the book of Jonas, that, in the days of that prophet, Ninive was exceedingly populous and of vast extent. The last verse of the book gives us to understand that there were in the city one hundred and twenty thousand children so young as not to be able to distinguish between their right hand and their left. It must have occupied a vast space of ground, since it is said to have been 'a great city, of three days' journey.' (Jonas iii. 3.) It is doubted whether or not the three days' journey lay in a straight line through the city. Some suppose that the space of three days was required to go through all the chief streets and public places. In either case, the ground occupied by the city must have been very great. But it is not necessary to suppose that it was all occupied by streets and houses; as the large cities of Asia had not only gardens, but even fields in the midst of them. Ninive has been for ages a heap of ruins.

ulous men were found who treated as a fable, not only what profane history related of the splendor of ancient Assyria, but even what the Scripture contained respecting the greatness of Ninive in the days of Jonas the prophet, and the vast military resources of the Assyrian monarch. Modern discoveries, we may say, have more than confirmed what the Scripture relates; as may be seen by the specimens of the former grandeur of the country of which we speak, that have been forwarded to Paris and London by the two distinguished explorers of the ancient Ninive, Botta and Layard. The ruins which have been hitherto explored are truly wonderful: palaces of vast dimensions, with gigantic ornaments in the shape of winged bulls and lions; bearing on their sculptured walls the records of battles, sieges, triumphs, the bringing of tribute by various conquered peoples; as well as the record of feasts and amusements. These discov-

SEDECIA'S BEFORE THE KING OF BABYLON:

"Assyria is, in an especial manner, entitled to our notice, by reason of its connection with the history of the Hebrew people. For a long time did its princes continue to harass the two kingdoms of Juda and Israel; until, at last, they took away captive the people of the latter kingdom, and repopled their country from the Assyrian dominions. After the reign of Asor-Haddan (mentioned 1st Esdras iv. 2), the Medes having shaken off the yoke, the Assyrian empire began to decline. It continued to exist, however, until the defeat of its last monarch, Sardanapalus II., by Cyaxares, king of Media, and Nabopolassar, viceroy of Babylon, about 620 B. C., when Ninive was taken, and Assyria, having been reduced to a province of Media, suddenly disappeared from sacred and profane history, and thus continued a blank for a long succession of ages; so that, at length, incred-eries also prove, to a demonstration, that at that early period, so many ages before the Christian era, the arts of life were better known and more skilfully cultivated than they are at this day, in those countries. These discoveries, therefore, illustrate several allusions to the arts and usages of life found in the Scripture: upon which they throw even a greater light than do the researches amidst the monuments of Egypt. And, indeed, this was to be expected, considering the relation in which Assyria stood towards Palestine, as it is recorded in the sacred volume.

"Moreover, the written records of the Assyrian monarchy, which are so abundant on the walls of the palaces at Khorsabad and Nimroud, and wherever else excavations have been made round about the site of the ancient Ninive, promise to throw a still greater light on these ancient times and their usages; as soon as a satisfactory progress shall have been made in deciphering the cuneiform and arrow-headed characters."

"Babylonia, so called from its capital city Babylon, so celebrated in history, is the country of which Moses speaks by its ancient name of Sennaar. (Genesis x. 10.) Ptolemy assigns its limits: to the north, Mesopotamia; to the east the Tigris, after its junction with the Euphrates; to the west Arabia Deserta; and to the south a part of the Persian Gulf, and the extremity of Arabia Deserta. Chaldea, which, strictly speaking, was but by bridges and tunnels. The walls were three hundred and sixty-five feet high, and the palaces and hanging gardens were wonders of beauty. The ruins even now cover an immense surface, extending from the modern village of Iscanderia. An immense ruin still bears the name of Birs-Nemrod, or Palace of Nemrod. The temple of Belus, the gardens, and a fourth great ruin, still unidentified, form three other conspicuous masses of ruin. All confirms the destruction foretold by the prophet Isaias.

a part of Babylonia, has sometimes been used to signify the entire of that country: for, in Jeremias, as in all the writings of his time, when there is question of the Chaldeans, we must understand the inhabitants of the country round about Babylon. It is in the same sense that Ezekiel places Babylon in Chaldea (Ezekiel vii. 13). What the precise limits of Chaldea strictly taken were, is a matter of dispute. According to Rosen-

MEDIA, PERSIA, ETC.

"Media was a country which extended from the 32d to the 40th degree of north latitude, bounded on the west by Assyria and Armenia, on the north by the Caspian Sea, on the east by Hyrcania and Parthia, and on the south by Persia. Its metropolis was Ecbatana, now called Hamdan. This country forms one of the scenes in which the book of Tobias is laid, and is that to which the younger Tobias was sent.

müller, in his Biblical Geography of Central Asia (chapter eighth), Chaldea was the southwestern part of Babylonia, lying towards Arabia Deserta."

Babylon was one of the most ancient and splendid cities of the world. It lay on both sides of the Euphrates, which was crossed

"Persia is that tract which extends from Media on the north as far as the Persian Gulf to the south. In its extended sense, it comprehended Elymais and Susiana. In a more restricted sense, however, it excluded both these, and had Susiana to the west and Caramania to the east.

"Susiana, of which the metropolis was Susan, was situated between Persia and Babylonia, having to the south the Persian Gulf. It is now called Chuzistan, or Khouzistan." This is the country where the scene of the book of Esther is laid.

"Elymais, so called from Elam, the son of Sem, was formerly taken to designate all Persia; although, rigorously speaking, it was but a province of that empire, situated to the north of Susiana, and to the northeast of Babylon; having on another side Media. Its limits cannot be accurately defined."

ASIA MINOR.

The Apostles of our Lord carried the Gospel far beyond the confines of Palestine, and even during their lifetime spread it far and wide, leaving their successors to fulfil the prophetic command to teach all nations.

Asia Minor, to use the term in its general acceptance, was one of the first countries to receive the light of the Gospel; and though it has long groaned under the Mohammedan yoke of the Turks, is still full of Christian interest. The principal divisions of Asia Minor were Mysia, Lydia, Caria, and Lycia on the Ægean Sea; Bithynia, Paphlagonia, and Pontus, on the Euxine or Black Sea; Pamphylia and Cilicia, on the Mediterranean; and Galatia, Phrygia, Pisidia, Lycaonia, and Cappadocia, which lay in the interior.

Many cities in these provinces occur in the New Testament, being mentioned by St. Luke in the Acts of the Apostles, or by St. Paul in his Epistles, or by St. John in his Apocalypse, where seven churches are specially addressed.

To begin with Cilicia. Tarsus, the chief city, is believed by Dom Calmet to be identical with the Tharsis mentioned in the prophet Jonas and elsewhere. In the New Testament, Tarsus is mentioned as the birth-place of St. Paul. It was apparently a Roman colony, giving Roman citizenship to those born there, and it is supposed that it was in this way that St. Paul acquired the right.

Derbe was the city to which St. Paul and St. Barnabas retired when driven from Iconium. A church was formed here, and Caius, a disciple both of St. Paul and St. John the Evangelist, was a native of this place.

Lystra was the birth-place of St. Timothy, the disciple and follower of St. Paul. The Apostle of the Gentiles and St. Barnabas having cured one who had been a cripple from birth in this city, were taken by the idolatrous people for gods, and supposed to be Jupiter and Mercury. They were even going to offer sacrifices to them. But, led by the persuasions of some Jews who were enemies of Christ, they soon after sought to destroy the apostles. Another Lystra is mentioned in Acts xxvii. 5, but the city there mentioned is called Myra in Greek, and was in Lycia.

Iconium, now called Konieh, was in ancient times the capital of Lycaonia. St. Paul, in his apostolic journey, preached in the city, and here converted the illustrious virgin, Saint Thecla. He was driven out by the Jews, but subsequently visited the place again. It is still a town of some importance.

Pisidia, another province of Asia Minor, contained a city called Antioch, like the capital of Syria. St. Paul and St.

COLOSSE.

Barnabas preached here also (Acts xiii. 14). In modern times it has borne several names, and been known as Versatgeli, Tahoya, Sibi, etc.

The province of Pamphylia numbered among its important cities Perga, which was situated on the river Cœstrus. Like Ephesus, this place was famous for a temple dedicated to the goddess Diana. St. Paul preached here, as mentioned in Acts xiii. 14.

Phrygia contained Colosse, to the Christians of which place

EPHESUS.

St. Paul wrote an epistle from Rome, which is still preserved as one of the canonical books. It lay on the river Lycus, and may have been visited by the apostle during his labors in Phrygia. On the same river was Laodicea, to which St. Paul apparently addressed another epistle not extant. The church here must have attained considerable extent, as the bishop is rebuked in the Apocalypse.

Lydia, another province of Asia Minor, numbered several important cities, Smyrna, Sardis, etc. It was for years a kingdom of influence, with Sardis as its capital. It had a rich soil, was well cultivated, and contained mines of the precious metals. Money is said to have been first coined in Lydia. Sardis, once the capital, is now a mass of ruins, amid which a few Turkish shepherds find a shelter: but not a Christian is to be found here. It was one of the seven churches to which messages were sent through St. John in the Apocalypse.

Smyrna, still an important city, was early a seat of Christianity. The church is one of those mentioned in the Apocalypse, and the bishop there praised is generally supposed to be the illustrious martyr St. Polycarp.

Ephesus was a famous city of Ionia, its temple of Diana being one of the wonders of the world. St. Paul's preaching so injured the worship of this goddess that the silversmiths saw their trade decay and instigated a riot against him. St. John the Evangelist fixed his See here, and the Blessed Virgin here spent the last years of her life. St. Timothy was also bishop of Ephesus.

The chief city of Bithynia was Nicæa, but though subsequently an important place in Christian annals, it is not mentioned in the new Testament.

St. Paul preached, however, in the province of Mysia (Acts xvi. 7, 8). Philadelphia, a city in this province, soon became the See of a bishop who is referred to in the Apocalypse (iii. 7). It stands some leagues east of the ruins of Sardis. It is called by the Turks Allah Shehr, or City of God, and has a large Christian population, a striking fulfilment of prophecy.

Troas, a city of Mysia, or according to others of Phrygia, in a district of the same name, stood near the ruins of the famous city of Troy, so memorable in Greek history and poetry. While in this city, St. Paul was miraculously called to Macedon. In his Epistle to Timothy, the holy apostle, writing from Rome, mentions having left some articles in Troas.

Thyatira, now Ak Hisar or White Castle, was also called Pelopia. In the Apocalypse, the bishop of this See is addressed, but the faith died out here, and in the time of St. Epiphanius there were no Christians at Thyatira.

South of Cilicia was Cyprus, a large island, three hundred and fifty miles in circuit, to which many Christians fled after the death of St. Stephen. St. Paul and St. Barnabas founded many churches here, and St. Paul converted the proconsul Sergius Paulus. It has now a population of only thirty thousand.

East of Cyprus was Crete, now called Candia. St. Paul, after founding a church here, made St. Titus bishop. It was anciently called Caphtorim, and the Philistines are said to have descended from the Cretans. St. Paul, in his voyage to Rome as a prisoner, urged the captain of the ship to winter in this island, but he would not listen to the Apostle's advice, and suffered shipwreck.

Off the coast of Caria, in that group of islands which dot the sea known as the Archipelago, was the little island of Patmos.

GREECE.

Passing now to the mainland of Europe, we enter Greece. Its geography is too well known and enters too remotely into the sacred writings to require any extended notice here. The most famous part, distinguished for the republics which gave Greece her renown, was called the Peloponnesus, while north and east of the gulf which separated the two parts, were Thessaly, Macedonia, and Thrace. The first apostolic visit of St.

ATHENS, AND THE ANCIENT PORTS RESTORED.

Here the beloved disciple of our Lord, the adopted son of Mary, was banished by the Roman emperor in the year 94. And it was on this spot, as most commentators agree, that the venerable apostle and prophet received, during his two years exile, those heavenly visions which he has recorded in the Apocalypse, the last of the inspired books. It has invested the island with a kind of sanctity. It never had a pagan temple and scarcely feels the Moslem rule. It is now called Patmos or Patmol. It is about twenty-five or thirty miles in circuit, and a grotto is shown where, under the convent of St. John, the holy apostle is said, by tradition, to have written his revelations. The only place of any size on the island is the little town of Pathmos.

Rhodes, another famous island, where stood in ancient times the Colossus, a gigantic brazen statue of Apollo, was also visited by St. Paul.

Paul led him to Samothracia, then to the city of Neapolis, Philippi, Amphipolis, Apollonia, Thessalonica, Berea, Athens, Corinth, Cenchrea.

Neapolis, now called Napoli, was a city of Macedonia, near the borders of Thrace. St. Paul landed here from the island of Samothrace (Acts vi. 11).

Philippi was originally called Crenides, but received its new name in honor of Philip of Macedon, father of Alexander the Great, who restored, adorned, and fortified it. The place is now in ruins, and known by the appellation of Felibé. Near it was fought the decisive battle between the army of Brutus and Cassius and the army of Augustus and Antony, which decided the fate of the Roman empire. St. Paul preached here A. D. 52 (Acts xvi. 12, 13), and converted several, among others Lydia, a dealer in purple. He also delivered a girl possessed by a pythonical spirit, which enabled her to answer many questions to the profit of her owners. This aroused the whole city against the apostle, who was arrested and scourged, then thrown into prison. When, however, he asserted his rights as by birth a Roman citizen, the magistrates trembled and implored him to the faith many of the idolaters of the city. At last, however, the unbelieving Jews excited a riot, and besieged the house of Jason where St. Paul and Silas had lodged. The holy apostle escaped their violence and was taken by some of the disciples to Berea. The church founded here persevered under persecutions. When Silas and Timothy came to St. Paul at Corinth and reported the state of the Church at Thessalonica, the holy apostle wrote his first Epistle to the Thessalonians, giving them instructions leave the place. The converts at Philippi were most fervent; they assisted St. Paul on several occasions; they sent him money when he was in Achaia, and when he lay a prisoner at Rome, sent their bishop Epaphroditus to relieve him. One of his epistles, addressed to these faithful Christians, is among the inspired books of the New Testament.

Amphipolis, a city between Macedonia and Thrace; it lay on the Strymon River, and was made by Philip one of the bulwarks of his kingdom. With its port, Eion, it is now in ruins, and known by the name of Jendkevi.

Apollonia, another city of Macedon mentioned in the account of St. Paul's journeys, was at the entrance of Chalcidica. It is now a heap of ruins, bearing the name of Palao Chori.

Thessalonica, a city on the Gulf of Thermæ, was a famous city of Macedonia, and capital of that kingdom under Philip, who enlarged it and gave it the name to commemorate a victory over the Thessalians. In the time of the apostles the Jews had a synagogue there, where St. Paul preached on three Sabbaths in the year 52, and gained many converts; he also won to as to the last judgment, and the true Christian mode of sorrowing for the dead. He wrote soon after a second Epistle to reassure them against the misinterpretation some had put on his former epistle. He condemns idleness and restless curiosity. He alludes in this epistle to the mystery of Iniquity and the Enemy of God who are to appear. Thessalonica is now known by the name of Saloniki.

Berea was another city of Macedon, where St. Paul preached with success after leaving Thessalonica: the Jews calmly testing his doctrines by the Scriptures and not resisting the Gospel. It was not a place of great importance.

Athens, the capital of Greece, in the splendor of its renown, the seat of its great orators, historians, dramatists, sculptors, and architects, was one of the most famous cities of the ancient world. In literature and art it was unrivalled. Its port was the Piræus, and was connected with Athens by a beautiful road. Over Athens rose the Areopagus or hill of Mars, where the Senate sat. St. Paul reached this capital in the year 52, and found it a centre of gaiety and frivolity: but he preached Jesus Christ so as to arrest their attention, and he was taken before the Areopagus. On his way he passed an altar inscribed "To the Unknown God," and seizing this incident, he declared that the sea. Its port was Cenchrea, on the Saronic Gulf. It was a rich, commercial, and voluptuous city, famous, too, for the great Isthmian games celebrated within it. It was destroyed 146 B.C., by the Consul Mummius, but restored by Julius Cæsar. St. Paul visited it for the first time in the year 52, and lodged with, Aquila and his wife Priscilla, tent-makers like himself. He preached every Sabbath in the synagogues, but finding the mass of the Jews obdurate, he turned to the Gentiles. He remained for eighteen months, and during his stay wrote his two epistles to the Thessalonians. Then he set out for Jerusalem, and on the way wrote from Ephesus his first Epistle to the Corinthians in the year 56, and a second one from Macedonia in the following year.

Cenchrea, though at some distance from Corinth, was regarded as a suburb of that city, to which it was the port.

MALTA.

St. Paul, on his voyage to Rome, after passing Crete, was wrecked on the island of Malta, called Melita in ancient times, from its abounding in honey. St. Paul was bitten by a snake, which was in some wood he had gathered to make a fire, but he shook it off into the fire, and to the astonishment of the people was uninjured. It is remarkable that, in modern times, no venomous serpent is found on the island. St. Paul cured the father of Publius, the governor of the island, and numbers of sick who were brought to him to be healed of their diseases. He remained here three months, and established a church, according to tradition, in the house of Publius. It has always preserved the Catholic faith. After they were driven from Rhodes, the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem established themselves in this island, and from this circumstance were often called Knights of Malta.

ITALY.

Italy, the seat and centre of Roman power, is alluded to in the prophecy of Balaam (Num. xxiv. 24); and more fully in that of Daniel, who foretold their overthrow of the Grecian kingdoms of Asia Minor, and their destruction of Jerusalem under Titus (Dan. xi. 30; ix. 26). The noble Macchabees were the first of the Jews who were in direct communication with Rome. They sought and obtained the favor and protection of that republic. (Macc. xii. 3.)

The Acts, detailing the voyage of St. Paul, mention Syracuse, a famous city in Sicily, on the eastern side. It was originally a Greek colony, founded in 757 by the Corinthians. The holy apostle remained there only three days.

Rhegium, the next spot he reached (A. D. 61), is a city in the kingdom of Naples. Puteoli, now Puzzuoli, is a well-known city in the same kingdom, eight miles from the capital.

Appii Forum, the market-place of Appius, was a considerable place near the sea, about sixty miles from Rome; and the Three Avernus, another place in the Acts, was about half that distance.

Christianity was already planted in Rome, and the Christians of the Capital of the world, to whom St. Paul had already addressed an Epistle, hearing of the coming of the great apostle, came out to these two places to meet him.

ROME.

Rome, "the mistress of the world," "the Eternal City" as it is often called, was founded 752 B. C. At the time of our Saviour's coming, Augustus had made himself Emperor, and ruled over a vast empire. God had foretold its greatness by the prophet Daniel, who described it as the kingdom of Iron. In the designs of God, this union of so many countries under one rule, facilitated greatly the diffusion of the Gospel.

Rome then had gathered to it the science and arts of Greece, and was at the height of its splendor. Her orators and historians rivalled those of Greece, and her sculptors and painters were no unworthy followers of Zeuxis and Praxiteles. Her capitol, seated on one of the seven hills, was the Senate House of the world. Magnificent temples, arches, theatres, and baths, abounded on all sides; luxury was at its culminating point. But amid its splendor was a populace of poor and slaves who were treated more as beasts than as men. Saint Peter first visited Rome, according to Dom Calmet and others, about the year A. D. 42, and fixed his See there, though he subsequently returned to the east. St. Paul arrived there in the year 61, and remained two years. He returned in the year 65, and in the following year was with St. Peter confined in the Mamertine prison. They were both martyred in the year 66; St. Peter crucified with his head down;

St. Paul, a Roman citizen, beheaded. Their bodies rest together beneath the high altar of St. Peter's, while above it, supported by four doctors of the church, is St. Peter's Chair, in a precious case that preserves the form.

Another apostle, so often associated with St. Peter, was also in Rome. The beloved disciple, St. John the Evangelist, was sent to Rome in the year 95, during the persecution of Domitian, and was cast into a caldron of boiling oil at the Latin Gate, but was unhurt.

St. Peter, as bishop of Rome, had all the primacy conferred upon him by the Son of God; and Christendom beheld in his successors men who inherited that primacy with all its powers, the rulers of the universal Church, the sources of authority, the judges of doctrine. Thence follow the long line of Popes down to our own time, a line of succession without a parallel. First come the martyr popes from St. Peter to St. Melchiades; then the great legislators of the Church, the Sylvesters, Julius, Siricius, Innocent, Celestine, Leos, and Gregories. Then Popes who fought for the liberties of the Church against the encroachments of the new kingdoms that had arisen, a Gregory VII., Urban II., Pascal II., Alexander III., Innocent III., Gregory IX., Innocent IV. Then, at a later date, when these governments had fostered the terrible schisms and heresies of the sixteenth century, the great reforming pontiffs, Pius IV., Paul IV., St. Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., Clement VIII.; and in the last century and this, the prisoner popes, illustrious in all that they have accomplished for the Church amid the war made against religion by infidelity, secret societies, and crafty state policy that veils its tyranny under the specious pretexts of public good. Such are Pius VI., Pius VII., and Pius IX.

Rome was for centuries the capital of the Popes, and with an adjoining territory formed the States of the Church, ruled by the Sovereign Pontiff. The French Revolution deprived Pius VI. of this heritage; and Napoleon, after restoring Pius VII., made him a prisoner: in our days, Victor Emmanuel has seized Rome and holds Pius IX. a prisoner.

Rome is still one of the great cities of the world; great in what the Popes have made it, great in the associations that have clustered there during the eighteen centuries in which it has been the capital of the Catholic Christian world. Its cathedral, St. Peter's, is the grandest temple ever raised to the worship of the Almighty, a church not of the city but of the world; and amid its churches and convents, its halls of learning and seminaries, many now polluted or turned to base uses, are the ruins of the Pagan Rome; and beneath this Rome is the Rome of the Catacombs, where lie thousands of martyrs who laid down their lives in the great persecutions, and where the faithful of Rome so long worshipped in secret and in dread.

AS the traveler approaches Rome the eye takes in the castle of Saint Angelo, the bridge that spans the Tiber, and, towering over all the buildings of the city, ancient and modern, the magnificent dome of Saint Peter's. The castle of Saint Angelo is a relic of ancient Roman rule, and was a mausoleum erected to contain the ashes of the emperor Adrian. It is 270 feet in circumference, and was originally crusted with marble and decorated with pilasters and statues. It became in later times a castle for the defence of Rome, and, from the apparition of Saint Michael above it, received its present name. A covered way connects the castle with the Vatican, and its history is thus blended with that of the Popes.

GENERAL VIEW OF ROME AND OF THE CASTLE OF SAINT ANGELO.

The great interest of Rome centers in Saint Peter's church. This basilica stands alone in the world with nothing to rival it. No description can give an adequate idea of its majesty and beauty, and to the pilgrim it is only gradually that he begins to conceive how vast and grand it is. Here, in the worst quarter of ancient Rome, Saint Peter was crucified and his body laid among the faithful who had already fallen. Pope Saint Anacletus erected an oratory over the body of Saint Peter, and in it for three centuries the faithful offered up their prayers and sacrifices. Constantine began a church worthy of the great Apostle, himself digging the first ground. Within the basilica of Constantine were laid the relics of Saint Peter and Saint Paul in a silver shrine, incased in gilt bronze. This church lasted for many ages, but in the fifteenth century, as it showed signs of decay, Pope Nicholas V. laid the foundation of the present basilica; Pope Julius II. adopted for the structure the plan of Bramante; it was modified by Michael Angelo to the shape of a Greek cross, and that great architect designed the dome which is itself like a mighty church suspended in the air. The cupola was finished under Sixtus V., and the front erected by Paul V. This great temple of the living God was 176 years building. The dome is 195 feet in diameter, and the top of the cross is 434 feet from the ground. The nave is 88 feet wide and 146 feet high; at a distance of 613 feet from the entrance in this nave rises the high altar with its twisted columns. Here is a beautiful bronze chair upheld by four doctors of the church—the chair which Saint Peter used in the house of the Roman senator Pudens. Along the nave are the statues of the founders of the religious orders; in the center the confessional of Saint Peter's, and near it a famous statue of Saint Peter, placed there by Saint Leo. The dome is reached by a spiral staircase. Beneath the church in the grotto you walk on the pavement of Constantine's basilica. Here are the tombs of the Apostles, which have made the church a pilgrimage from the earliest days for Christians from all parts of the world. Chapels and monuments of sovereign Pontiffs line the church so that it is almost endless. Before the edifice is a majestic and imposing CHURCH OF SAINT JOHN LATERAN, ROME.

The Lateran Basilica, or church of Saint John Lateran, is styled "the Mother and Mistress of all the churches in the world." One of the five doors is the golden gate opened only in the year of the Jubilee. The nave has under the windows the prophets. The chief events in Old Testament history are depicted on one side, their fulfillment on the other. Near the principal arch are two porphyry columns from the Pantheon of Agrippa. In this church are the tombs in which repose the bodies of many of the saints and martyrs of the primitive church. In the center of the transepts and nave, supported by four pillars of oriental granite 38 feet high, stands the papal altar on which Saint Peter said mass. It has been inclosed in marble by Pius IX. Directly over the altar are inshrined the heads of Saint Peter and Saint Paul. The church of Saint Mary Major stands on the ancient Macellum Livia, where many early martyrs died. The church was erected here by John Patrizzi in 352, in consequence of a which stood near the spot. The ceiling is gilded with the first miracle. The nave of the present church is supported by 36 gold brought from America by Columbus. The high altar is columns of white marble, from the temple of Juno Lucina formed out of an ancient porphyry urn.

INTERIOR OF THE PANTHEON, NOW CHURCH OF SANCTA MARIA AD MARTYRES.

The Pantheon, now known as Sancta Maria ad Martyres, or la Rotonda, was erected by Agrippa, son-in-law of Octavius, twenty-seven years before the Christian era, and was dedicated to Mars and Jupiter. It was called the Pantheon, as all the gods were adored in it. The church is circular, being 143 feet in diameter, and 143 feet high. It receives light only from a circular opening at the top. Chapels stand in niches around the wall. The choir of the high altar is a semicircle formed in the wall, and the arch is adorned with two thick, fluted columns of yellow marble. The walls are covered with marble. These churches are but a few of those which adorn Christian Rome and make it the capital of the Christian world.

In this edition of the Holy Scriptures, we shall adhere to the Text of the venerable and Right Rev. Dr. Richard Challoner; and we shall insert all his Notes either verbatim, or at least shall give their full sense, placing his signature, Ch., at the end. In like manner, when any additional observation is made the author from whom it is taken will be specified, either at length or by an abbreviation, which will easily be understood by attending to the following remarks. The most ancient Greek version, by the Septuagint, or 72 interpreters, about 284 years B. C. or perhaps something later, for some parts of the version, will be designated Sept. or 70. The authentic Latin translation of S. Jerom will be written Vulg. This version has ever since been esteemed the most accurate, and was rendered into English by Dr. Gregory Martin, and published at Douay and Rheims, 1582, 1609–10, with the Notes of Dr. Thomas Worthington, on the Old Testament, and those of Dr. Richard Bristow on the New. The whole was revised by Dr. R. Challoner, 1750–2. Another translation of the New Testament was published, with excellent Notes, 1730, by Dr. Robert Witham, president of Douay College; and a valuable exposition of the Apocalypse by the late pious and learned Bishop Charles Walmesley, under the name of Pastorini, 1771; who, with the other commentators most frequently consulted, will be thus marked—B. Bristow, C. Calmet, Ch. Challoner, D. Du Hamel, E. Estius, M. Menochius, P. Pastorini or Walmesley, T. Tirinus, W. Worthington, Wi. Witham. We shall also sometimes insert a few original observations, or such, at least, as we cannot easily trace to their real authors, either through forgetfulness, or because we have adopted some alteration, or have received them from some of our learned friends, whose names we are not at liberty to mention. These will be marked with the letter H. With respect to the other Notes, except those of Bishop Challoner, which we shall generally give at length, we shall deem it sufficient to express the sense. When the very words are preserved, and are of such importance as to require this distinction, we shall denote them by inverted commas. We shall reserve the more elaborate Biblical Disquisitions till the Text and Notes be completed; and then, if required, they may be published, and bound up either at the beginning or at the end of the Holy Bible.

ADMONITION.

THE Scriptures, in which are contained the revealed mysteries of divine truth, are undoubtedly the most excellent of all writings: they were written by men divinely inspired, and are not the word of men, but the word of God, which can save our souls, 1 Thess. ii. 13, and James i. 21; but then they ought to be read, even by the learned, with the spirit of humility, and with a fear of mistaking the true sense, as many have done. This we learn from the Scripture itself: where St. Peter says, that in the epistles of St. Paul, there are some things hard to be understood, which the unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, to their own perdition. 2 Peter iii. 16.

To prevent and remedy this abuse, and to guard against error, it was judged necessary to forbid the reading of the scriptures in the vulgar languages, without the advice and permission of the pastors and spiritual guides whom God has appointed to govern his church, Acts xx. 28. Christ himself declared, "he that will not hear the church, let him be to thee as the heathen and the publican." Matt. xviii. 17.

Nor is this due submission to the Catholic Church, (the pillar and ground of truth, 1 Tim. iii. 15,) to be understood of the ignorant and unlearned only, but also of men accomplished in all kind of learning. The ignorant fall into errors for want of knowledge, and the learned through pride and self-sufficiency.

Therefore let every reader of the sacred writings, who pretends to be a competent judge of the sense, and of the truths revealed in them, reflect on the words which he finds in Isaiah, chap. lv. 8, 9. My thoughts are not as your thoughts, neither are your ways as my ways, saith the Lord; for as the heavens are exalted above the earth, even so are my ways exalted above your ways, and my thoughts above your thoughts. How then shall any one, by his private reason, pretend to judge, to know, to demonstrate, the incomprehensible and unsearchable ways of God?

The following Letter of his Holiness Pius the Sixth, to the Most Rev. Anthony Martini, now Archbishop of Florence, on his translation of the Holy Bible into Italian, shews the benefit which the faithful may reap from their having the holy Scriptures in the vulgar tongue.

POPE PIUS THE SIXTH.

BELOVED SON: Health and apostolical benediction. At a time that a vast number of bad books, which most grossly attack the Catholic religion, are circulated even among the unlearned, to the great destruction of souls, you judge exceedingly well, that the faithful should be excited to the reading of the holy Scriptures: for these are the most abundant sources which ought to be left open to every one, to draw from them purity of morals and of doctrine, to eradicate the errors which are widely disseminated in these corrupt times: This you have seasonably effected, as you declare, by publishing the sacred writings in the language of your country, suitable to every one's capacity; especially when you shew and set forth, that you have added explanatory notes, which, being extracted from the holy fathers, preclude every possible danger of abuse: Thus you have not swerved either from the laws of the Congregation of the Index, or from the constitution published on this subject by Benedict XIV. that immortal Pope, our predecessor in the pontificate, and formerly, when we held a place near his person, our excellent master in ecclesiastical learning, circumstances which we mention as honourable to us.

We therefore applaud your eminent learning, joined with your extraordinary piety, and we return you our due acknowledgments for the books which you have transmitted to us, and which, when convenient, we will read over. In the mean time, as a token of our pontifical benevolence, receive our apostolical benediction, which to you, beloved son, we very affectionately impart. Given at Rome, on the calends of April, 1778, the fourth year of our Pontificate

To our beloved Son, Anthony Martini, at Turin.

PHILIP BUONAMICI, LATIN SECRETARY.

(A translation from the Latin original.)

A PRAYER BEFORE THE READING OF ANY PART OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURE.

COME, O Holy Spirit, fill the hearts and minds of thy faithful servants, and inflame them with the fire of thy divine love.

LET US PRAY.

O GOD, who by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, didst instruct the hearts of thy faithful servants; grant us in the same spirit, to discern what is right, and enjoy his comfort for ever: Through our Lord Jesus Christ, who liveth and reigneth one God, with thee and the same Spirit, world without end. Amen

A TRANSLATION OF THE

DECREE OF THE COUNCIL OF TRENT,

CONCERNING THE CANONICAL SCRIPTURES.

Sess. IV. April 8, 1546—Signed by 255 Prelates, Dec. 4, 1563; and confirmed by Pius IV. Jan. 26, 1564.

THE holy Oecumenic and general Council of Trent in the Holy Ghost lawfully assembled, the three aforesaid Legates of the Apostolic See presiding therein, having always this in view, that all errors being taken away, the purity of the Gospel should be preserved in the Church; that Gospel,* before promised by the Prophets in the Holy Scriptures, our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, first promulgated with his own mouth; and afterwards commanded his Apostles to preach the same to all nations as the source of every saving Truth, and moral discipline: and the Synod clearly seeing that this Truth and discipline is contained in the written Word, and in the unwritten Traditions, which the Apostles received from the mouth of Christ himself, or from the Apostles themselves, being the dictate of the Holy Ghost to them, and delivered as it were from hand to hand, came down to us: following the examples of the Orthodox Fathers, with due veneration and piety receiving all the books as well of the Old as of the New Testament, seeing that God is the immediate Author of both, and also receiving these Traditions, appertaining to Faith and Morals, as coming from the mouth of Christ, or dictated by the Holy Ghost, and held in the Catholic Church by a continued succession. The Synod therefore thought proper to annex to this decree a catalogue of the Sacred Books, lest any doubt might arise concerning those that were approved of. They are the following: (Here occur the names of the Books of the Old and New Testament as mentioned below.) Now, if any one, reading over these books in all their parts, as they are usually read in the Catholic Church, and being in the Latin Vulgate edition, does not hold them for Sacred and Canonical, and knowing the aforesaid traditions, does industriously condemn them, let him be Anathema.

The 72 Books of the Holy Bible, written by divine inspiration, by the authors whose names they bear, or by others of unquestionable authority, were composed, according to Calmet, &c. about the following years before or after Jesus Christ, whose nativity is generally fixed about the year 4000. Absolute certainty in these matters cannot be obtained, as able chronologists vary concerning this most important epoch 3214 years. R. Nahasson advances it to 3740; K. Alphonsus, on the other hand, postpones it to the year of the world 6984. Pezron places the death of Christ A. M. 6000.

From the above Decree it follows that all these books are of divine and infallible authority; those concerning which some doubts were formerly entertained, such as Judith, the Epistle of Jude, &c. as well as those which have always been venerated by Catholics. Let all therefore who turn the Apocrypha to ridicule, attend and dread this curse!

"Moreover, the same sacred Synod, considering that no small benefit might accrue to the Church of God, if it were stated clearly which among all the Latin editions of the sacred books now in circulation should be deemed authentic, she makes the following decree and declaration, that this same old and Vulgate edition, which has been approved by being used in the same Church for so many ages, should be accounted authentic in public lectures, disputations, sermons and expositions, and that no one should dare or presume to reject it under any pretext whatsoever.—In order likewise to restrain petulant geniuses, she enjoins that no one depending on his own prudence in matters of faith and morals, pertaining to the edification of Christian doctrine, twisting the sacred Scripture to their own senses, in opposition to that sense which the holy mother the Church has adopted, and still holds, to whom it belongs to judge of the true sense and interpretation of the holy Scriptures, or even against the unanimous consent of the Fathers, should dare to interpret the same sacred Scripture, although such interpretations were never to be published. Let those who act contrary to this decree be denounced by the Bishops, and suffer the legal punishment. Wishing also to set just bounds in this point to printers, who now without any reserve, as if they supposed that they could do lawfully whatever they pleased, print without leave of the Ecclesiastical superiors the sacred books of Scripture and annotations upon them, and expositions of any one without discrimination, often concealing and frequently feigning the place where they keep their printing-office; and what is worse, not specifying the name of the author; and sell such books printed elsewhere, to any person who may ask for them, she enacts the following decree, that henceforward the sacred Scripture, and particularly this same old and Vulgate edition, shall be printed with the utmost exactitude; and that none shall print, or cause to be printed, any books on sacred topics, without the name of the author; nor sell them in future, nor keep them, unless they have been first examined and approved by the Bishops. . . . Let the approbation appear authentically at the head of the book . . . and be given gratis, that the things which deserve approbation may be approved, and the reverse condemned. Lastly, being desirous to repress that temerity by which the words and sentences of sacred Scripture are turned and twisted to profane purposes, to scurrilous, fabulous, and vain things, to flattery, detractions, impious superstitions and diabolical incantations, divinations, lots, even libels, she commands and orders, to take away such irreverence and contempt, that no one, in future, shall dare, in any manner, to use the words of the sacred Scripture for these or similar purposes, that all such profane violators of the word of God shall be repressed by such punishments as the law has specified, or the Bishops shall devise."

How full of wisdom are these ordinances! How solicitous is the Church that we should have the pure word of God; not only the letter, but also the spirit and sense, and that we should make use of it for the edification of our souls! Our dissenting brethren of the church of England have followed the example of the Council of Trent in many particulars, though they unhappily refuse to be guided by her authority, and prefer choosing for themselves, being thus condemned by their own judgment. They blame the Council for declaring the Vulgate authentic, and not to be rejected, though the originals and all other versions, except the Latin ones then in use, be not in the least depreciated by this declaration; and at the same time, they sanction various contradictory versions of their own, and require the assent and consent of their people to them, as the Calvinists of France do, even though they acknowledge that more accurate versions might be given. Bingham, ii. 754, says, "we do not thereby declare it to be the best translation, or absolutely without faults, but only such a one as we can piously use and read publicly in the church." What more does the Council of Trent assert, when she declares the Vulgate to be authentic? Let misrepresentation cease and union be restored. Let us hear, understand and obey the decisions of the Church. H.

PREFACE.

AMONG the many and great blessings which God has bestowed upon his Church, by means of the sacred Council of Trent, we may justly reckon this as one of the greatest, that out of so many Latin editions of the divine Scriptures, he has declared, in the most solemn manner, the ancient Vulgate alone to be authentic, which had been approved in the Church, and used during so many hundred years. For, not to mention that many of the late editions seemed to have been falsely translated, on purpose to maintain the heresies of the present times; so great a variety of contradictory versions was undoubtedly calculated to introduce great confusion in the Church of God. For, at the present period the same inconvenience is observable, which was noticed by S. Jerom (præf. in Jos.) in his time; I mean that there were as many different works as there were copies, tot fuisse exemplaria quot codices; as each person allowed himself the liberty of inserting or leaving out what he thought proper. The authority, however, of this old Vulgate edition, was always so much superior to that of any other, that no equitable judge can entertain a doubt, but that it deserves to be preferred before them all. For the books which are contained in it, as it has been handed down to us by our ancestors, have been received partly from the version or correction of S. Jerom, partly retained from a very ancient Latin edition, which S. Jerom styles the common and the Vulgate (in C. 49, Isai.) S. Aug. the Italic (De doc. Chri. ii. 15.) and S. Gregory the old translation (Ep. ad Leand. C. 5.) Concerning this old or Italic edition's superior accuracy, there is still extant the glorious testimony of S. Aug. in the second book of Christian Doctrine; where he says, that in his opinion the Italic deserved to be preferred before all the numerous Latin editions which were then in the hands of the public, because it adhered closer to the words of the original, and delivered the sense in a clearer manner. The ancient Fathers have moreover frequently spoken in the highest terms of S. Jerom, whom S. Aug. (above, and de Civ. 18. 43.) styles a most learned man, and one perfectly acquainted with the three languages; and he shews that his translation is accurate, from the testimony of the Jews themselves. S. Gregory extols the same person in such a manner, that he says, his translation, which he calls the new one, is more accurately taken from the Hebrew in all respects than any other; and hence upon it, we may entirely depend. (Moral. 20, 24.) S. Isidore likewise in many places gives the preference to S. Jerom's version, before any other, and testifies that it was generally received and approved of by the Christian Churches, because the words were more expressive of the genuine meaning of the text. (Etymol. 65.) The learned Sophronius, perceiving the approbation which was given to it, not only by the Latins, but also by the Greeks, was so much taken with it, that he gave an elegant Greek version of S. Jerom's translation of the Psalms, and also of the Prophets. The men most eminent for learning in the following ages, Remigius, Bede, Rabanus, Haymo, Anselm, Peter Damian, Richard, Hugh, Bernard, Rupert, Peter Lombard, Alexander, Albert, Thomas, Bonaventure, and all the rest who have flourished in the Church for these nine hundred years, made use of S. Jerom's version in such a manner, that all the others, though they could hardly be numbered, being almost entirely neglected by Divines, have become obsolete. Hence, it is not without reason that the Catholic Church speaks in such exalted terms of S. Jerom, 'the greatest doctor, divinely raised up to interpret the sacred Scriptures;' and it will be no rash or difficult matter to censure the judgment of all those who either do not acquiesce in the learned labours of so renowned a doctor, or even have the boldness to think that they can offer something better, or at least equal, to the public. However, lest this very accurate translation, which has been found of so very great service to all parts of the Church, should in any degree be adulterated, either by the injuries of time or by the negligence of printers, or by the rashness of those who undertake to correct without sufficient grounds, the same most sacred Council of Trent added very wisely in her decree, that this same ancient and Vulgate edition should be printed with all possible accuracy; and that none should be allowed to print it without the permission and approbation of superiors. By which decree, she at the same time set bounds to the licentious temerity of printers, and excited the vigilance and industry of the pastors of the Church to preserve with all vigilance so great a treasure. And although the Divines of some celebrated academies had acquired much applause by their attempts to restore the Vulgate edition to its ancient beauty, yet, as in a matter of so great importance, too great diligence cannot be exerted; and many MSS. of the greatest antiquity had been procured and brought to the city by order of the Pope; in a word, as the execution of decrees of the General Councils, and the integrity and purity of the Scriptures, belong in a particular manner to the care of the apostolic see; hence the sovereign pontiff, Pius IV. watching with the greatest diligence over every part of the Church, commissioned some chosen Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, and others who were the best acquainted with sacred learning and the various languages, to correct the Vulgate Latin edition in the most accurate manner, after having examined the most ancient manuscripts, the Hebrew and Greek original texts of the Bible, and the commentaries of the ancient Fathers. This plan was pursued by Pius V. But when, on account of the many urgent occupations of the apostolic see, this learned body had not met for a long time, Sixtus V. being called by divine Providence to the high priesthood, assembled them again with all diligence, and ordered the work, which was at last brought to a conclusion, to be put to press. When it was printed, and the same Pope was about to send it forth into the world, perceiving that not a few mistakes had crept into the Bible by the fault of the press, which seemed to require a more diligent revision, he judged it expedient, and determined to begin the work afresh. But as he could not execute this his design, being prevented by death, Gregory XIV. who, after the 12 days pontificate of Urban VII. had succeeded Sixtus V. in compliance with his intention, undertook to perfect what he had begun, and again deputed some eminent Cardinals, and other learned men, for that purpose. But he also, and his successor, Innocent IX. being taken out of this world, in a very short space of time, at last, towards the commencement of the pontificate of Clement VIII. who now governs the Universal Church, the work which Sixtus V. had intended, by the assistance of God, has been brought to a conclusion.

"Receive then, Christian reader, by the consent of the same pontiff, Clement, from the Vatican press, the ancient and Vulgate edition of the sacred Scripture, corrected with all possible diligence, which though indeed it be difficult, considering human weakness, to assert that it is absolutely perfect, yet that it is more correct and pure than any which till this day have been published, cannot admit of any doubt. And truly, though in this revision of the Bibles, no small pains have been taken in examining the manuscripts, the Hebrew and Greek originals, and even in comparing the commentaries of the ancient Fathers, yet in this Vulgate reading, as some alterations have been designedly made, so also some passages which seemed to claim the same privilege, have been purposely left unchanged. The reasons for so doing, are because S. Jerom frequently admonish us (Ep. ad Sun. & Fret. præf. in Evang.) that this is a necessary precaution to avoid offending the people: besides, we may easily believe that our forefathers, who gave Latin translations out of Hebrew or Greek, were in possession of better and more correct copies than those which are come down to us, which being often copied out, in such a length of time, have perhaps lost something of their purity and correctness: and finally, because it was not the intention of the sacred congregation of most eminent Cardinals, and of other very learned men, who were set over this work by the holy see, to undertake any new edition, or by any means to correct or rectify the old translator, but merely, by removing the mistakes of former transcribers, and the corrections improperly inserted, to restore the same old and Vulgate Latin edition, as far as possible, to its pristine integrity and purity; and to do their utmost endeavours, after it should be thus restored, to have it printed with all accuracy, in compliance with the decree of the General Council. Moreover, in this edition it has been judged expedient to insert nothing but the Canonical books, every other work of human industry, as foreign to our purpose, being removed at a distance; and this is the reason why the 3d and 4th books of Esdras, which the Council of Trent did not number among the Canonical books, and even the prayer of King Manasses, which is extant neither in Hebrew nor in Greek, nor in the more ancient MSS. nor forms a part of any Canonical book, have been placed out of the order of the Canonical Scripture. Besides, there are not here to be seen any concordances in the margin, (which in future editions are not forbidden to be inserted) no notes, no various readings, no prefaces, no arguments at the beginning of books. But, as the apostolic see does not condemn the industry of those who in other editions have inserted concordances, concordantias locorum, (or what may help to remove apparent contradictions in the text) and also various readings, prefaces of S. Jerom, and other things of the like nature, so she does not forbid these helps for the advantage of the studious being inserted, in a different type, in future impressions of this Vatican edition, provided the various readings be not marked on the margin of the text itself.—”

This is the Preface originally prefixed to the Vatican edition of the Vulgate. As it contains an abridgment of the Bull of Sixtus V. and gives some account of the pains which have been taken, and of the means adopted, to give a correct edition of this so much admired Vulgate, we thought it could not prove unacceptable to the English reader. The brief of Clement VIII. dated 9th Nov. 1592, in the 1st year of his pontificate, shews the solicitude of his Holiness that this work should descend unadulterated to posterity; and hence he prescribes due limits to the enterprise of printers, and calls upon the vigilance of pastors to prevent any corruption or change being inserted by private authority. This is unquestionably the meaning of those general prohibitions inserted in the Brief, as well as in the Bull of Sixtus V. where this limitation is expressly inserted. “We forbid, in the most decided manner, any person to undertake the impression of the text of a new Vulgate edition of the Bibles, without the express leave of the Apostolic see. Neither let any one dare, or presume, to frame a different edition to suit his own private or peculiar judgment. . . .” They never intended to control future Popes, over whom they could claim no such authority; as they would enjoy the like sovereign power as themselves. Hence if, at any future period, any material improvements should be discovered, by the unremitting labours of the learned, they will be at liberty to authorize them to be adopted; neither can they entertain the smallest apprehension of their infallibility being endangered on this account, nor fear the cavils of Protestants, who, in imitation of Thomas James, (d. 1629) may perhaps amuse their deluded admirers by a sequel to his Papal war. Had the doctor rightly understood the Bull of Sixtus V. and the decree of the Council of Trent, when it defined the Vulgate to be the only authentic Latin version, it is probable he would have spared himself the trouble of shewing that there were many variations in the two editions of Sixtus V.

and Clement VIII. However, leaving the doctor and his admirers to their own discretion, we cannot but applaud the labours of these great pontiffs for the good of the Church; and we are glad to find, that some of the most learned even of the Protestants, join with us in extolling the accuracy of the Vulgate. I will only mention the learned Mills at present, as his authority must have considerable weight, particularly in this country, to which his labours and judgment have done so much honour. “We look,” says he, (Proleg. in N. Test. p. 142) “upon the old Italic version with sovereign respect. . . . We are also far from saying any thing against the Vulgate edition of S. Jerom. . . . We are so far from thinking that it ought to be corrected by any printed Greek copy, that we are persuaded no more essential service can be rendered to it, than by correcting it according to the ancient MSS. that by this method it may become, as much as possible, similar to that which S. Jerom published.”

To acknowledge, as Drusius has done, (ad loca diff. Pentat.) that the Vulgate is a good translation, and superior in point of authority, to those Latin versions which had made their appearance before the decree of the Council of Trent was promulgated, is all that the Church requires; and this, no equitable judge, who has compared them together, will surely ever deny. One thing ought particularly to make it dear to all Christians, that it was composed so many years before the late dissensions about religion took place; and that by men who cannot be said to have been biased on either side, and who are revered as men of sound doctrine, both by Catholics and Protestants. That the Vulgate was composed by the inspiration of God, as the originals certainly were, no person asserts; neither do Catholics maintain that it is actually free from every imperfection, much less that it was so at the time of the Council of Trent, 1546, April 8th, when the famous decree was made, 46 years before the Clementine edition was given to the public. Since the last correction, many alterations have been proposed by Lucas Brugensis, whose work is published in the 4th edition of Du Hamel. Bellarmine, who was one of those celebrated Cardinals employed by Clement VIII. to revise his edition of the Vulgate, Baronius, and N. Alexander, in their annals, &c. point out several amendments which might still be made. None of them, indeed, affect the faith or morals of Christians; but still they deserve attention, as nothing can be esteemed little which regards the word of God. Hence, in the notes which will accompany this edition, the most important amendments at least will be noticed: not that we mean to reject the Vulgate, or to take upon ourselves the right of deciding that they ought to be admitted, but only in imitation, and by the authority of so many great and good Catholics, to promote the cause of God, by separating what may be called in question, from his most sacred and undoubted revelation. See Philip’s C. Pole, ii. 17. Bellarmine, Diss. &c.

So much we thought proper to premise, in order to obviate the mistakes or clamours of those who may be less informed. In the dissertations which may be printed after the sacred books are finished, a more particular account will be given of the Vulgate, as also of the original texts, and of the most authentic versions; for we must here again observe, with Bellarmine, (Dissert. on the Vulg.) that the oriental churches possess authentic versions, though not declared in such express terms as the Vulgate has been for those of the western parts; authentic, we mean, in the sense of the Council of Trent, conformably to the decision of civilians; “That writing is authentic (says Julian J. C. de fide Instrumentorum) which in itself deserves credit in courts of judicature, and is of sovereign authority, so that it ought not to be rejected or called in question by any one.” Scriptum aliquod ex se fidem facit in judicio, & supremæ est auctoritatis ut a nullo rejici vel in questionem vocari debeat. Thus the Vulgate must not be rejected, though there may be a dispute concerning some particular passage; it is of such authority, that in disputes it may be safely alleged. So may also the Septuagint; and still more the originals, which are intrinsically authentic; whereas the versions can possess only an extrinsic authenticity. Yet all must be examined with care. If the originals were certainly in the same state as when they came from the hands of the sacred penmen, no syllable could be rejected; but as they have been subject to the same inconveniences as other writings, from the carelessness, or from the malice of transcribers, as has been abundantly proved both by Catholics and Protestants, (See Kennicott's two Dissertations, Capellus, Critica sacra, &c.) Despise not on this account the prophecies; but prove every thing, maintain what is right, 1 Thess. v. 21. We shall shew in another place, that these mistakes do not injure our faith, though they sometimes prove a stumbling-block to infidels, and are truly a scandal to heretics, who build their faith entirely upon the Scriptures, heedless of the command of Christ, when he said to his apostles, He that heareth you heareth me . . . and He that will not hear the Church, let him be to thee as the heathen and the publican. With some appearance of reason, therefore, did Protestants, for many years, maintain the absolute perfection of the originals; and those who denied it, were declared accursed by the churches of Switzerland, not many years ago, as we learn from Kennicott. This learned man calls upon the English church, (to which he gives the titles of the ground and pillar of truth, which were given by S. Paul to the Catholic Church alone) he earnestly solicits the heads of this church, to sanction the many important improvements which he had collected from Hebrew MSS. that when a new English version should be given, as it is loudly called for by him, Dr. Blaney, and others, on account of the inaccuracies of the present Protestant version, it may be more conformable to what was dictated by the Almighty. Such a work, if well executed, might indeed be of great service to those who study the sacred Scriptures, though we could hardly hope but that the false doctrine of those who are engaged in error, would give a leaven of insincerity to their translations, as it did to those of Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus, and more recently to that of Beza, of whom Pearson, a Protestant writer of eminence, complains on this very account. (Pref. in Sept. Cantab.)

Hence, though we have occasionally consulted some of the heterodox versions and commentators, in points of criticism; yet it has been with fear of deception, and we have dwelt upon the works of Catholic authors, both with greater pleasure and advantage. To obviate the misinterpretations of the many heretical works which disgrace the Scripture, and deluge this unhappy country, has been one main design of the present undertaking. In our endeavours to explain the Vulgate, the notes will be selected from commentators of the highest respectability, whose names we shall mention, at least in matters of any importance, or where any of them has suggested an explanation, striking and peculiar to himself. To adhere on all occasions to their very words, or to attribute to the first inventor every observation, we do not suppose will be requisite; neither would the trouble attending such researches, or expense of printing so many names, be compensated by the utility. We shall subjoin at the end of this preface the names of those who have been chiefly consulted. Little Greek or Hebrew will be inserted; the latter will only be given in English characters, expressing each Hebrew letter by such as are adopted either in the Rabbinical, or in a new method of reading Hebrew without points. The English letters which here correspond with the Hebrew alphabet, are, a, b, g, d, e, u or v, z, e, t, z or j, c, l, m, n, s, a, p, ts, k, r, ss, th. Of these, six are vowels, a, e, u, i, long e and a: But u and i are also consonants before vowels; the other 16 letters are consonants, and are pronounced, when many come together, by inserting o; thus m l e c, must be pronounced moloc, a king; also the name of an ancient idol, e d k, edok, a thorn; ari, a lion; Jeve, the Self-existent Being, pronounced Jehovah by moderns, though without reason. See Amama, p. 319. This method frees . . . the student from the perplexing difficulties of the Massorets, and allows him time to improve himself in things which may be of far greater service. The invention of Hebrew points, is allowed by all good critics to have been a work of too late a date to be of any great authority; and when we reflect that by these points the Jews have frequently rendered passages obscure, which were favourable to the Christian religion; we ought to be upon our guard how we find fault with the versions of S. Jerom, and of the Septuagint, who were acquainted with them. This observation will also serve to point out the cause of the many different versions of the same passage in the ancients, and of the wonderful conformity which is observed among the modern interpreters. The accents and spirits in Greek are not of greater authority; they are entirely omitted in the famous Alexandrian MS. of the Septuagint, (not to mention others) and are also neglected in the Complut. Polyglot; because they were not found in the MSS. which were consulted, nor indeed are they in any of those which are most esteemed for their antiquity. We do not deny but that they may be of some service, as well as the Hebrew points; but they cannot stand their ground in a dispute, or make the victory declare for either party, as their origin is certainly human. Punctuation, though nearly of the same nature, must not however be altered to favour heresy or to pervert morals, which has sometimes been the case. Thus the Socinians read, John i. 1. "and God was. This word was," &c. instead of the word was God; and libertines read, 1 Cor. vii. 36. let him do what he will he does not sin; if he marry.

In all these things let us cling invariably to the doctrine of the Church, and receive the bread which she breaks for her little ones with gratitude and submission; she invites us to take into our hands the sacred volumes, and to meditate on them, day and night: she cautions us indeed against the false translations and comments of heretics, whose doctrine creepeth as a cancer. But she assures us, that there is nothing to fear from this ancient and Vulgate version, provided we receive it in that sense, in which it was first delivered, and as it has been constantly expounded by the Catholic Church, to whom alone this province belongs. To her judgment we entirely submit all our labours, and retract whatever may be found worthy of censure by her sovereign judgment. "I may fall into a mistake," says the humble S. Aug. "but I will not be a heretic." It was from the Church we received these venerable books: as the same Saint observes, "I would not believe the Gospel, unless the authority of the Catholic Church influenced me to do so." c. Epist. Fundam. And why should we refuse to receive the interpretation of all difficult passages from the same unerring source, the ground and pillar of truth? 1 Tim. iii. What has Marcion, Luther, or Wesley to do in her field? she possessed it first; she received it from those Apostles to whom it certainly belonged. No; the gates of hell itself shall not prevail against her. Christ is with her all days; his Holy Spirit is sent purposely to guide her into all truth which is necessary for man to know. Search then the Scriptures under her guidance, Jo. v. 39.) in which, as S. Peter admonishes us, (2 Pet. iii. 16, 17.) are some things hard to be understood, which the unlearned and unstable wrest . . . to their own destruction. You therefore, brethren, knowing these things before, take heed, lest being led aside by the error of the unwise, you fall from your own steadfastness. If you read in this spirit, the Scriptures will prove a book of life, the covenant of the Most High, as it is justly styled in Eccus. xxiv. 32. This is the book of the commandments of God, says Baruch, and the law that is for ever; all that keep it, shall come to life; but they that have forsaken it, to death. Return, O Jacob, and take hold of it, walk in the way by its brightness. . . . We are happy, because the things which are pleasing to God, are made known to us. In a word, whenever we take this sacred book into our hands, let us bless God, who has given such gifts to men, and raising our hearts and minds to the Father of lights, and the God of all consolation, let us beg, with all earnestness, that we may read for our improvement in all virtue, and neither be deceived by misunderstanding what we read, nor lead others astray. Non decipiar in his, non decipiam ex his. S. Aug. Come, Holy Spirit, &c. Let us never forget those memorable words of the Prince of the Apostles: We have also the more firm prophetic word, whereunto you do well to attend, as to a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your heart. Understanding this first that no prophecy of Scripture is made by private interpretation; for prophecy came not by the will of man at any time, but the holy men of God spoke, inspired by the Holy Ghost, 2 Pet. i. 19, 20.—This Book of God, as the Arabic version styles the Book of Genesis, as the head of all the Scripture, this Book of Wisdom, shall praise her own self, shall glory in the midst of her people, and shall open her mouth in the Churches of the Most High... I came out of the mouth of the Most High... as a cloud I covered all the earth... come over to me all ye that desire me, and be filled with my fruits, &c. Eccles. xxiv. 1 &c. H

Those who have a Cross prefixed to their Names, have been perhaps Men of Learning, but they have erred from the Faith which was once delivered to the Saints, and can therefore be consulted only as Critics, or to be refuted. A more particular account of many of these Authors might probably be desired, but we must refer to the Historical Dictionaries, and other sources of information. In quoting any Work, we shall observe the utmost brevity: thus, S. Aug. de C. D. x. 5 Plin. v. 6. will refer to the City of God, 10 Book, 5 number, by S. Aug.; and to the 5 B. 6 number of Pliny's Natural History—this will easily be understood by the Learned, who alone will probably consult the originals.

THE BOOK OF GENESIS.

The Hebrews now entitle all the Five Books of Moses, from the initial words, which originally were written like one continued word or verse; but the Sept. have preferred to give in the titles the most memorable occurrences of each work. On this occasion, the Creation of all things out of nothing, strikes us with peculiar force. We find a refutation of all the heathenish mythology, and of the world's eternity, which Aristotle endeavoured to establish. We behold the short reign of innocence, and the origin of sin and misery, the dispersion of nations, and the providence of God watching over his chosen people, till the death of Joseph, about the year 2369 (Usher) 2399 (Sal. and Tirin) B.C. 1631. We shall witness the same care in the other Books of Scripture, and adore his wisdom and goodness in preserving to himself faithful witnesses, and a true Holy Catholic Church, in all ages, even when the greatest corruption seemed to overspread the land. H.

This BOOK is so called from its treating of the GENERATION, that is, of the Creation and the beginning of the world. The Hebrews call it BERESHITH, from the word with which it begins. It contains not only the History of the Creation of the World, but also an account of its progress during the space of 2363 years, that is, until the death of JOSEPH.

CHAP. I.

God createth Heaven and Earth, and all things therein, in six days.

IN the ^abeginning God created heaven and earth.

2 ^bAnd the earth was void and empty, and darkness was upon the face of the deep: and the Spirit of God moved over the waters.

3 And God said: ^cBe light made. And light was made.

4 And God saw the light that it was good: and he divided the light from the darkness.

5 And he called the light Day, and the darkness Night: and there was evening and morning one day.

6 And God said: Let there be a firmament made amidst the waters: and let it divide the waters from the waters.

^a A. M. 1, A. C. 4004.—Acts xiv. 14. and xvii. 24. Psal. xxxii. 6. and cxxxv. 5. Eccli. xviii. 1.—^c Heb. xi. 3.

CHAP. I. Verse 1. Beginning. As St. Matthew begins his Gospel with the same title as this work, the Book of the Generation, or Genesis, so St. John adopts the first words of Moses, in the beginning; but he considers a much higher order of things, even the consubstantial Son of God, the same with God from all eternity, forming the universe, in the beginning of time, in conjunction with the other two Divine Persons, by the word of his power; for all things were made by Him, the Undivided Deity. H.—Elohim, the Judges or Gods, denoting plurality, is joined with a verb singular, he created, whence many, after Peter Lombard, have inferred, that in this first verse of Genesis the adorable mystery of the Blessed Trinity is insinuated, as they also gather from various other passages of the Old Testament, though it was not clearly revealed till our Saviour came himself to be the finisher of our faith. C.—The Jews being a carnal people and prone to idolatry, might have been in danger of misapplying this great mystery, and therefore an explicit belief of it was not required of them in general. See Collet. &c. H.—The word BARA, created, is here determined by tradition and by reason to mean a production out of nothing, though it be used also to signify the forming of a thing out of pre-existent matter. 21. 27. C.—The first cause of all things must be God, who, in a moment, spoke, and heaven and earth were made, heaven with all the Angels; and the whole mass of the elements, in a state of confusion, and blended together, out of which the beautiful order, which was afterwards so admirable, arose in the space of six days: thus God was pleased to manifest his free choice in opposition to those Pagans who attributed all to blind chance or fate. Heaven is here placed first, and is not declared empty and dark like the earth; that we may learn to raise our minds and hearts above this land of trial, to that our true country, where we may enjoy God for ever. H.

VER. 2. Spirit of God, giving life, vigour, and motion to things, and preparing the waters for the sacred office of baptism, in which, by the institution of J. C., we must be born again; and, like spiritual fishes, swim amid the tempestuous billows of this world. v. Tert., &c. W. H.—This Spirit is what the Pagan philosophers styled the Soul of the World. If we compare their writings with the books of Moses and the prophets, we shall find that they agree in many points. See Gertius. H.

7 ^dAnd God made a firmament, and divided the waters that were under the firmament, from those that were above the firmament. And it was so.

8 And God called the firmament, Heaven: and the evening and morning were the second day.

9 God also said: Let the waters that are under the heaven, be gathered together into one place: and let the dry land appear. And it was so done.

10 And God called the dry land, ^eEarth: and the gathering together of the waters he called Seas. And God saw that it was good.

11 And he said: Let the earth bring forth the green herb, and such as may seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after its kind, which may have seed in itself upon the earth. And it was so done.

^d Psal. cxxxv. 5. and cxlvi. 4. Jer. x. 12 and li. 15. ^e Job xxxviii. 4. Psal. xxxii. 7. and lxxxviii. 12. and cxxxix. 6.

VER. 3. Light. The sun was made on the fourth day, and placed in the firmament to distinguish the seasons, &c.; but the particles of fire were created on the first day, and by their, or the earth's motion, served to discriminate day from the preceding night, or darkness, which was upon the face of the deep. H.—Perhaps this body of light might resemble the bright cloud which accompanied the Israelites, Ex. xiv. 19, or the three first days might have a kind of imperfect sun, or be like one of our cloudy days. Nothing can be defined with certainty respecting the nature of this primal light. C.

VER. 4. Good; beautiful and convenient:—he divided light by giving it qualities incompatible with darkness, which is not any thing substantial, and therefore Moses does not say it was created. C.—While our hemisphere enjoys the day, the other half of the world is involved in darkness. S. Augustine supposes the fall and punishment of the apostate angels are here insinuated. L. imp. de Gen. H.

VER. 6. A firmament. By this name is here understood the whole space between the earth and the highest stars. The lower part of which divideth the waters that are upon the earth, from those that are above in the clouds. Ch.—The Heb. Rokia is translated stereoma, solidity by the Sept., and expansion by most of the moderns. The heavens are often represented as a tent spread out Ps. ciii. 3. C.

VER. 7. Above the firmament and stars, according to some of the Fathers; or these waters were vapours and clouds arising from the earth, and really divided from the lower waters contained in the sea. C.

VER. 11. Seed in itself, either in the fruit or leaves, or slips. M.—At the creation, trees were covered with fruit in Armenia, while in the more northern regions they would not even have leaves: Calmet hence justly observes, that the question concerning the season of the year when the world began, must be understood only with reference to that climate in which Adam dwelt. Scaliger asserts, that the first day corresponds with our 26th of October, while others, particularly the Greeks, fix it upon the 25th of March, on which day Christ was conceived; and, as some Greeks say, was born and nailed to the cross. The great part of respectable authors declare for the vernal equinox, when the year is in all its youth and beauty. H. See T. and Salien's Annals, B.C. 4053.

12 And the earth brought forth the green herb, and such as yieldeth seed according to its kind, and the tree that beareth fruit, having seed each one according to its kind. And God saw that it was good.

13 And the evening and the morning were the third day.

14 And God said: Let there be lights made in the firmament of heaven, to divide the day and the night,* and let them be for signs, and for seasons and for days and years:

15 To shine in the firmament of heaven, and to give light upon the earth. And it was so done.

16 And God made two great lights: a greater light to rule the day, and a lesser light to rule the night: and the stars.

17 And he set them in the firmament of heaven, to shine upon the earth.

18 And to rule the day and the night, and to divide the light and the darkness. And God saw that it was good.

19 And the evening and morning were the fourth day.

20 God also said: Let the waters bring forth the creeping creature having life, and the fowl that may fly over the earth under the firmament of heaven.

21 And God created the great whales, and every living and moving creature, which the waters brought forth, according to their kinds, and every winged fowl according to its kind. And God saw that it was good.

22 And he blessed them, saying: Increase and multiply, and fill the waters of the sea: and let the birds be multiplied upon the earth.

23 And the evening and morning were the fifth day.

24 And God said: Let the earth bring forth the living creature in its kind, cattle, and creeping things, and beasts of the earth, according to their kinds. And it was so done.

25 And God made the beasts of the earth according to their kinds, and cattle, and every thing that creepeth on the earth, after its kind. And God saw that it was good.

26 And he said: ^bLet us make man to our image and likeness: and let him have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the air, and the beasts, and the whole earth, and every creeping creature that moveth upon the earth.

27 And God created man to his own image: ^cto the image of God he created him: male and female he created them.^d

28 And God blessed them, saying: ^eIncrease and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it, and rule over the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the air, and all living creatures that move upon the earth.

VER. 14. For signs. Not to countenance the delusive observations of astrologers, but to give no ice of rain, of the proper seasons for sowing, &c. M.—If the sun was made on the first day, as some assert, there is nothing new created on this fourth day. By specifying the use and creation of these heavenly bodies, Moses shows the folly of the Gentiles, who adored them as gods, and the impiety of those who pretend that human affairs are under the fatal influence of the planets. See S. Aug. Confes. iv. 3. The Heb. term mohadim, which is here rendered seasons, may signify either months, or the times for assembling to worship God; (C.) a practice, no doubt, established from the beginning every week, and probably also on the first day of the new moon, a day which the Jews afterwards religiously observed. Plato calls the sun and planets the organs of time, of which, independently of their stated revolutions, man could have formed no conception. The day is completed in twenty-four hours, during which space the earth moves round its axis, and exposes successively different parts of its surface to the sun. It goes at the rate of fifty-eight thousand miles an hour, and completes its orbit in the course of a year. H.

VER. 16. Two great lights. God created on the first day light, which being moved from east to west, by its rising and setting made morning and evening. But on the fourth day he ordered and distributed this light, and made the sun, moon, and stars. The moon, though much less than the stars, is here called a great light, from its giving a far greater light to the earth than any of them. Ch.—To rule and adorn, for nothing appears so glorious as the sun and moon. M.—Many have represented the stars, as well as the sun and moon, to be animated. Ecclesiastes xvi. speaking of the sun says, the spirit goeth forward surveying all places: and in Esdras ix. 6, the Levites address God, Thou hast made heaven and all the host thereof; and thou givest life to all these things, and the host of heaven adoreth thee. S. Aug. Ench. and others, consider this question as not pertaining to faith. See Spen. in Orig. c. Cela. v. C.—Whether the stars be the suns of other worlds, and whether the moon, &c. be inhabited, philosophers dispute, without being able to come to any certain conclusion: for God has delivered the world to their consideration for dispute, so that man cannot find out the work which God hath made from the beginning to the end. Eccles. iii. 11. If we must frequently confess our ignorance concerning the things which surround us, how shall we pretend to dive into the designs of God, or subject the mysteries of faith to our feeble reason? If we think the Scriptures really contradict the systems of philosophers, ought we to pay greater deference to the latter, than to the unerring word of God? But we must remember, that the sacred writings were given to instruct us in the way to heaven, and not to unfold to us the systems of natural history; and hence God generally addresses us in a manner best suited to our conceptions, and speaks of nature as it appears to the generality of mankind. At the same time, we may confidently assert, that the Scriptures never assert what is false. If we judge, with the vulgar, that the sun, moon, and stars are no larger than they appear to our naked eye, we shall still have sufficient reason to admire the works of God; but, if we are enabled to discover that the sun's diameter, for example, is 763 thousand miles, and its distance from our earth about 95 million miles, and the fixed stars (as they are called, though probably all in motion) much more remote, what astonishment must fill our breast! Our understanding is bewildered in the unfathomable abyss, in the unbounded expanse, even of the visible creation.—Sirius, the nearest to us of all the fixed stars, is supposed to be 400,000 times the distance from the sun that our earth is: or 38 millions of millions of miles. Light, passing at the rate of twelve millions of miles every minute, would be nearly 3,000 years in coming to us from the remotest star in our system, beyond which are others immensely distant, which it would require about 40,000 years to reach, even with the same velocity. Who shall not then admire thy works and fear thee, O King of ages! Walker.—Geog. justly remarks, “we are lost in wonder when we attempt to comprehend either the vastness or minuteness of creation. Philosophers think it possible for the universe to be reduced to the smallest size, to an atom, merely by filling up the pores;” and the reason they allege is, “because we know not the real structure of bodies.” Shall any one then pretend to wisdom, and still call in question the mysteries of faith, transubstantiation, &c., when the most learned confess they cannot fully comprehend the nature even of a grain of sand? While on the one hand some assert, that all the world may be reduced to this compass; others say, a grain of sand may be divided in infinitum! H.

VER. 20. Creeping: destitute of feet like fishes, which move on their bellies. M.—Fowl. Some assert that birds were formed of the earth, but they seem to have the same origin as fishes, namely, water; and still they must not be eaten on days of abstinence, which some of the ancients thought lawful, Socrates v. 20. To conciliate the two opinions, perhaps we might say, that the birds were formed of mud, (C.) or that some of the nature of fish, like barnacles, might be made of water and others of earth. C. 11. 19.—Under: Heb. on the face of the firmament, or in the open air. H.

VER. 22. Blessed them, or enabled them to produce others.—Multiply: the immense numbers and variety of fishes and fowls is truly astonishing.

VER. 26. Let us make man to our image. This image of God in man, is not in the body, but in the soul; which is a spiritual substance, endued with understanding and free-will. God speaketh here in the plural number, to insinuate the plurality of persons in the Deity. Ch.—Some of the ancient Jews maintained that God here addressed his council, the Angels; but is it probable that he should communicate to them the title of Creator, and a perfect similitude with himself? C.—Man is possessed of many prerogatives above all other creatures of this visible world: his soul gives him a sort of equality with the Angels; and though his body be taken from the earth, like the brutes, yet even here the beautiful construction, the head erect and looking towards heaven, &c. makes S. Aug. observe, an air of majesty in the human body, which raises man above all terrestrial animals, and brings him in some measure near to the Divinity. As Jesus assumed our human nature, we may assert, that we bear a resemblance to God both in soul and body. Tertullian (de Resur. 5.) says, “Thus that slime, putting on already the image of Christ, who would come in the flesh, was not only the work of God, but also a pledge.” H. See S. Bern. on Ps. xcix. W.

VER. 27. Male and female. Eve was taken from Adam's side on this same day, though it be related in the following chapter. Adam was not an hermaphrodite as some have foolishly asserted. C.—Adam means the likeness, or red earth, that in one word we may behold our nobility and meanness. H.

VER. 28. Increase and multiply. This is not a precept, as some protestant controvertists would have it, but a blessing, rendering them fruitful: for God had said the same words to the fishes and birds, (ver. 22.) who were incapable of receiving a precept. Ch.—Blessed them, not only with fecundity as he had done to other creatures, but also with dominion over them, and much more with innocence and abundance of both natural and supernatural gifts.—Increase. The Hebrews understand this literally as a precept binding every man at twenty years of age (C.); and some of the Reformers argued hence, that Priests &c.

29 And God said: Behold I have given you every herb bearing seed upon the earth, and all trees that have in themselves seed of their own kind, to be your meat:*

30 And to all beasts of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to all that move upon the earth, and wherein there is life, that they may have to feed upon. And it was so done.

31^b And God saw all the things that he had made, and they were very good. And the evening and morning were the sixth day.

CHAP. II.

God resteth on the seventh day, and blesseth it. The earthly paradise, in which God placeth man. He commandeth him not to eat of the tree of knowledge. And formeth a woman of his rib.

SO the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the furniture of them.

2 And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made: and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had done.

3 And he blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made.

4 These are the generations of the heaven and the earth, when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the heaven and the earth:

5 And every plant of the field before it sprung up in the earth, and every herb of the ground before it grew: for the Lord God had not rained upon the earth; and there was not a man to till the earth.

6 But a spring rose out of the earth, watering all the surface of the earth.

* Infra ix. 8.—^b Eccl. xxxix. 21. Mark vii. 37.—^c Exod. xx. 11. and xxxi. 17.

were bound to marry: very prudently they have not determined how soon! But the Fathers in general agree that if this were a precept with respect to Adam, for the purpose of filling the earth, it is no longer so, that end being sufficiently accomplished. Does not St. Paul wish all men to be like himself, unmarried? 1 Cor. vii. 1. 7. 8. H.

VER. 29. Every herb, &c. As God does not here give express leave to eat flesh-meat, which he did after the deluge, it is supposed that the more religious part of mankind, at least, abstained from it, and from wine, till after that event, when they became more necessary to support decayed nature. H. M.—In the golden age, spontaneous fruits were the food of happy mortals. C.

CHAP. II. VER. 1. Furniture, ornaments or militia, whether we understand the Angels, or the stars, which observe a regular order and obey God. M.

VER. 2. He rested, &c. That is, he ceased to make any new kinds of things. Though, as our Lord tells us, John v. 17. He still worketh, viz. by conserving and governing all things, and creating souls. Ch.—Seventh day. This day was commanded, Ex. xx. 8. to be kept holy by the Jews, as it had probably been from the beginning. Philo says, it is the festival of the universe, and Josephus asserts, there is no town which does not acknowledge the religion of the sabbath. But this point is controverted, and whether the ancient patriarchs observed the seventh day or some other, it is certain they would not fail, for any long time, to shew their respect for God's worship, and would hardly suffer a whole week to elapse without meeting to sound forth his praise. The setting aside of stated days for this purpose, is agreeable to reason, and to the practice of all civilized nations. As the Hebrews kept Saturday holy, in honour of God's rest, so we keep the first day of the week, by apostolic tradition, to thank God for the creation of the world on that day, and much more for the blessings which we derive from the resurrection of J. C. and the sending down of the Holy Ghost, which have given it a title above all other days. H.—On the seventh day, at the beginning of this verse, must be taken exclusively, as God finished his work on the 6th, whence the same Sept. and Syr. have here on the 6th day. H.—But the Heb. and all the other versions agree with the Vulgate. C.—The similarity of v. 6. and v. 7. in Heb. may have given rise to this variation. H.

VER. 4. Day. Not that all things were made in one day: but God formed in succession; first, heaven and earth, then the ornaments of both. Every plant, &c. which on the first day did not spring up, (as water covered the surface of the earth,) on the 3d, by the command of God, without having any man to plant, or rain to water them, pushed forth luxuriantly, and manifested the power of the Creator. H.—Thus Christ founded his Church by his own power, and still gives her increase; but requires of his ministers to co-operate with him, as a gardener must now take care of the plants which originally grew without man's aid. D.—By observing that all natural means were here wanting for the production of

7 And the Lord God formed man of the slime of the earth: and breathed into his face the breath of life and man became a living soul.^d

8 And the Lord God had planted a paradise of pleasure from the beginning: wherein he placed man whom he had formed.

9 And the Lord God brought forth of the ground all manner of trees, fair to behold, and pleasant to eat of. the tree of life also in the midst of paradise: and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

10 And a river went out of the place of pleasure to water paradise, which from thence is divided into four heads.

11^e The name of the one is Phison: that is, it which compasseth all the land of Hevilath, where gold groweth.

12 And the gold of that land is very good: there is found bdellium, and the onyx stone.

13 And the name of the second river is Gehon: the same is it that compasseth all the land of Ethiopia.

14 And the name of the third river is Tigris: the same passeth along by the Assyrians. And the fourth river is Euphrates.

15 And the Lord God took man, and put him into the paradise of pleasure, to dress it, and to keep it.

16 And he commanded him, saying: Of every tree of paradise thou shalt eat.

17 But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat. For in what day soever thou shalt eat of it, thou shalt die the death.

18 And the Lord God said: It is not good for man to be alone: let us make him a help like unto himself.

19 And the Lord God having formed out of the ground all the beasts of the earth, and all the fowls of plants, God asserts his sole right to the work, and confounds the Egyptian system, which attributed plants, &c. to the general warmth of the earth alone. C.

VER. 7. Breath of life or a soul, created out of nothing, and infused into the body to give it life. H.

VER. 8. Of pleasure, Heb. Eden, which may be either the name of a country, as C. iv. 16. or it may signify pleasure, in which sense Symmachus and S. Jerom have taken it.—From the beginning, or on the 3d day, when all plants were created, Heb. mikedem, may also mean towards the east, as the Sept. have understood it, though the other ancient interpreters agree with S. Jerom. Paradise lay probably to the east of Palestine, or of that country where Moses wrote The precise situation cannot be ascertained. Calmet places it in Armenia others near Babylon, &c. Some assert that this beautiful garden is still in being, the residence of Henoch and Elias. But God will not permit the curiosity of man to be gratified by the discovery of it. C. iii. 24. How great might be its extent we do not know. If the sources of the Ganges, Nile, Tigris, and Euphrates, be not now changed, and if these be the rivers which sprung from the fountains of Paradise, (both which are points undecided) the garden must have comprised a great part of the world, H., as the Ganges rises in Judea, and the Nile about the middle of Africa. T.

VER. 9. The tree of life. So called, because it had that quality, that by eating of the fruit of it, man would have been preserved in a constant state of health, vigour, and strength, and would not have died at all. The tree of knowledge. To which the deceitful serpent falsely attributed the power of imparting a superior kind of knowledge beyond that which God was pleased to give. Ch.—Of what species these two wonderful trees were, the learned are not agreed. The tree of knowledge, could not communicate any wisdom to man; but, by eating of its forbidden fruit, Adam dearly purchased the knowledge of evil, to which he was before a stranger. Some say it was the fig-tree, others an apple-tree. Cant. viii. 5. But it probably agreed with no species of trees with which we are acquainted, nor was there perhaps any of the same kind in paradise. T.

VER. 10. A river, &c. Moses gives many characteristics of Paradise, inviting us, as it were, to search for it; and still we cannot certainly discover where it is or whether it exist at all at present, in a state of cultivation. We must therefore endeavour to find the mystic Paradise, Heaven and the true Church; the road to which, though more obvious, is too frequently mistaken. See S. Aug. C. D. xiii. 21. Prov. iii. 18. H.

VER. 15. To dress it. Behold God would not endure idleness even in Paradise. H.

VER. 17. The death of the soul, and become obnoxious to that of the body: thou shalt become a mortal and lose all the privileges of innocence. Though Adam lived 930 years after this, he was dying daily; he carried along with him the air, brought them to Adam to see what he would call them: "for whatsoever Adam called any living creature, the same is its name."

20 And Adam called all the beasts by their names, and all the fowls of the air, and all the cattle of the field: but for Adam there was not found a helper like himself.

21 Then the Lord God cast a deep sleep upon Adam: and when he was fast asleep, he took one of his ribs, and filled up flesh for it.

22 And the Lord God built the rib which he took from Adam into a woman: and brought her to Adam.

23 And Adam said: "This now is bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of man."

24 "Wherefore a man shall leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife:" and they shall be two in one flesh.

25 And they were both naked: to wit, Adam and his wife: and were not ashamed.

CHAP. III.

The serpent's craft. The fall of our first parents. Their punishment. The promise of a Redeemer.

NOW the serpent was more subtle than any of the beasts of the earth which the Lord God had made.

the seeds of death, as we do, from our very conception. He had leave to eat of any fruit in this delicious garden, one only excepted, and this one prohibition makes him more eager to taste of that tree than of all the rest. So we struggle constantly to attain what is forbidden, and covet what is denied, cupinusque negata. God laid this easy command upon Adam, to give him an opportunity of shewing his ready obedience, and to assert his own absolute dominion over him. Eve was already formed and was apprised of this positive command, (C. iii. 8.) and therefore, transgressing, is justly punished with her husband. True obedience does not inquire why a thing is commanded, but submits without demur. Would a parent be satisfied with his child, if he should refuse to obey because he could not discern the propriety of the restraint? If he should forbid him to touch some delicious fruits which he had reserved for strangers, and the child were to eat them, excusing himself very impudently and blasphemously, with those much abused words of our Saviour, It is not what enters into the mouth that defiles a man, &c. would not even a Protestant parent be enraged and seize the rod, though he could not but see that he was thus condemning his own conduct, in disregarding, on the very same plea, the fasts and days of abstinence, prescribed by the Church and by God's authority? All meats are good, as that fruit most certainly was which Adam was forbidden to eat; though some have foolishly surmised that it was poisonous; but, the crime of disobedience draws on punishment. H.—Even when the sin is remitted, as it was to Adam, the penalty is not of course released, as some have pretended. This also clearly appears in baptized infants, who suffer the penalties due to original sin, as much as those who have not been admitted to the laver of regeneration. S. Aug. W. T. &c.—If on this occasion, Eve had alone transgressed, as she was not the head, her sin would have hurt only herself. But with Adam, the representative of all his posterity, God made a sort of compact, (Ose. vi. 7.) giving him to understand, that if he continued faithful, his children should be born in the state of innocence like himself, happy and immortal, to be translated in due time to a happier Paradise, &c. but if he should refuse to obey, his sin should be communicated to all his race, who should be, by nature, children of wrath.—S. Aug. C. D. xvi. 27. Bede in Luc. 11. &c.—H. C.

VER. 20. Names, probably in the Hebrew language, in which the names of things, frequently designate their nature and quality. See Bochart.—C.

VER. 21. A deep sleep. Sept. "an ecstasy," or mysterious sleep, in which Adam was apprised of the meaning of what was done, and how the Church would be taken from the side of Christ, expiring on the cross. M.

VER. 23. Of my flesh. God did not, therefore, take a rib without flesh, nor perhaps did he replace flesh without a rib in Adam's side, though S. Aug. thinks he did. These words of Adam are attributed to God, Mat. xix. because they were inspired by him.—Woman. As this word is derived from man, so in Hebrew Isha (or Asse) comes from Ish or Aiss; Latin vira woman, and virago comes from vir. H.—But we do not find this allusion so sensible in any of the Oriental languages, as in the Hebrew, whence another proof arises of this being the original language. C.

VER. 24. One flesh, connected by the closest ties of union, producing children, the blood of both. S. Paul, Eph. v. 23. discloses to us the mystery of Christ's union with his church for ever, prefigured by this indissoluble marriage of our first parents. C.

VER. 25. Not ashamed, because they had not perverted the work of God. Inordinate concupiscence is the effect of sin. H.

CHAP. III. VER. 1. Why hath God? Heb. "Indeed hath God, &c." as if the serpent had overheard Eve arguing with herself, about God's prohibition, with a sort of displeasure and presumption. S. Augustine thinks, she had given some

And he said to the woman: Why hath God commanded you, that you should not eat of every tree of paradise?

2 And the woman answered him, saying: Of the fruit of the trees that are in paradise we do eat:

3 But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of paradise, God hath commanded us that we should not eat: and that we should not touch it, lest perhaps we die.

4 And the serpent said to the woman: "No, you shall not die the death."

5 For God doth know that in what day soever you shall eat thereof, your eyes shall be opened: and you shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

6 And the woman saw that the tree was good to eat, and fair to the eyes, and delightful to behold: and she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave to her husband, who did eat.

7 And the eyes of them both were opened: and when they perceived themselves to be naked, they sewed together fig-leaves, and made themselves aprons.

8 And when they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in paradise at the afternoon air, Adam and his wife hid themselves from the face of the Lord God, amidst the trees of paradise.

entrance to these passions, and the love of her own power, and hence gave credit to the words of the serpent, de Gen. ad lit. xi. 30. She might not know or reflect that the serpent could not reason thus, naturally; and she had as yet, no idea or dread of the devil. Lombard, 2 Dist. 21. This old serpent entered into the most subtle of creatures, and either by very expressive signs, or by the motion of the serpent's tongue, held this delusive dialogue with Eve. Moses relates what happened exteriorly: but from many expressions, and from the curse, v. 15, he sufficiently indicates, that an evil spirit was the latent actor. H.—Of every tree. Satan perverts the word of God, giving it an ambiguous turn: in doing which, he has set heretics a pattern, which they follow. M.

VER. 3. Not touch it. She exaggerates, through dislike of restraint, S. Amb. Or through reverence, she thought it unlawful to touch what she must not eat, lest perhaps, as if there could be any doubt. "God asserts, the woman doubts, Satan denies." S. Bern. Thus placed, like Eve, between God and the devil, to whom shall we yield our assent? H.—Perhaps we die, Heb. "lest ye die."

VER. 5. God. The old serpent's aim is, to make us think God envies our happiness. H.—Or he would have Eve to suppose, she had not rightly understood her maker, who would surely never deprive her of a fruit which would give her such an increase of knowledge, as to make her conclude she was before comparatively blind. M.—As gods, Heb. Elohim, which means also princes, angels, or judges. It appears, that our first parents had flattered themselves with the hopes of attaining a divine knowledge of all things. C.

VER. 6. Woman saw, or gazed on with desire and fond dalliance. M.—Consulting only her senses, which represented the fruit to her as very desirable and caused her to give credit to the devil's insinuations, rather than to the express word of God. Do not unbelievers the like, when they refuse to admit the real presence and transubstantiation, though they cannot be ignorant, that this way of proceeding always leads to ruin.—Her husband, who, instead of reproving her for her rashness, did eat, through excessive fondness, not being able to plead ignorance, or that he was deceived. "Earth trembled from her entrails, sky loured, and muttering thunder, some sad drops wept at completing of the mortal sin."—Original, &c. Paradise Lost, ix. 1000. H.—Gen. ii. 14. In what light soever we consider the fault of this unhappy pair, it is truly enormous: the precept was so easy and just, the attempt to be like God in knowledge so extravagant, that nothing but pride could have suggested such woeful disobedience. By the disobedience of one man, many were made sinners, Rom. v. 19. This ruin of himself, and of all his posterity, Adam could not hide from his own eyes. C. B. 17. C.

VER. 7. And the eyes, &c. Not that they were blind before, (for the woman saw that the tree was fair to the eyes, ver. 6.) nor yet that their eyes were opened to any more perfect knowledge of good; but only to the unhappy experience of having lost the good of original grace and innocence, and incurred the dreadful evil of sin. From whence followed a shame of their being naked; which they minded not before; because being now stript of original grace, they quickly began to be subject to the shameful rebellions of the flesh. Ch.—Behold the noble acquisition of experimental knowledge! This is supposed to have taken place about a week after they had enjoyed the sweets of innocence and of Paradise, that they might afterwards be moved to repentance, when they contrasted their subsequent misery with those few golden days. They saw that they had received a dreadful wound, even in their natural perfections, and that their soul was despoiled of grace, which, of themselves, they could never regain. O! what confusion must now have seized upon them! "Confounded long they sat, as stricken mute." Milton.—H.

9 And the Lord God called Adam, and said to him: Where art thou?

10 And he said: I heard thy voice in paradise; and I was afraid, because I was naked, and I hid myself.

11 And he said to him: And who hath told thee that thou wast naked, but that thou hast eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat?

12 And Adam said: The woman, whom thou gavest me to be my companion, gave me of the tree, and I did eat.

13 And the Lord God said to the woman: Why hast thou done this? And she answered: The serpent deceived me, and I did eat.

14 And the Lord God said to the serpent: Because thou hast done this thing, thou art cursed among all cattle, and beasts of the earth: upon thy breast shalt thou go, and earth shalt thou eat all the days of thy life.

15 I will put enmities between thee and the woman, and thy seed and her seed: she shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel.^b

16 To the woman also he said: I will multiply thy sorrows, and thy conceptions: in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children, and thou shalt be under thy husband's power, and he shall have dominion over thee.

middle; a practice, which even the wild Indians and Americans observed, when they were discovered by Columbus. They will rise up in condemnation of those pretended civilized nations, who, like the Greeks, could wrestle or bathe quite naked, without any sense of shame. H.—Adam's fig-tree, in Egypt, has leaves above a yard long, and two feet broad. C.

VER. 8. Afternoon air. God's presence has often been indicated by an unusual wind, 8 Kings xix. 12. Act. ii. 2. The sovereign judge will not suffer the day to pass over, without bringing our first parents to a sense of their fault. They hid themselves, loving darkness now, because their works were evil.

VER. 9. Where. In what state have thy sins placed thee, that thou shouldst flee from thy God? S. Amb. C. 14. Some think it was the Son of God who appeared on this occasion, S. Aug. &c. or an Angel. C.

VER. 10. Afraid. The just man is the first to accuse himself: But Adam seeks for excuses in his sin: he throws the blame on his wife, and ultimately on God. M.—Thou gavest me. Heretics have since treated the Sovereign Good with the like insolence; saying plainly, that God is the author of sin, and that the crime of Judas is no less his work than the conversion of S. Paul. See Calvin's works, and many of the first reformers, Luther, &c. cited. Ex. 8. 15. H.

VER. 13. The serpent, which thou hast made so cunning, and placed with us, deceived me. God deigns not to answer their frivolous excuses. M.

VER. 14. Cursed. This curse falls upon the natural serpent, as the instrument of the devil; who is also cursed at the same time by the Holy Ghost. What was natural to the serpent and to man in a state of innocence, (as to creep, &c. to submit to the dominion of the husband, &c.) becomes a punishment after the fall. S. Chrys.—There was no enmity, before, between man and any of God's creatures; nor were they noxious to him. T.—The devil seems now to crawl, because he no longer aspires after God and heavenly things, but aims at wickedness and mean deceit. M.

VER. 15. She shall crush. Ipsa, the woman: so divers of the fathers read this place, conformably to the Latin: others read it ipsam, viz. the seed. The sense is the same: for it is by her seed, Jesus Christ, that the woman crushes the serpent's head. Ch.—The Hebrew text, as Bellarmine observes, is ambiguous: He mentions one copy which had ipsa instead of ipsam; and so it is even printed in the Hebrew interlineary edition, 1572, by Plantin, under the inspection of Boderianus. Whether the Jewish editions ought to have more weight with Christians, or whether all the other MSS. conspire against this reading, let others inquire. The fathers who have cited the old Italic version, taken from the Sept. agree with the Vulgate, which is followed by almost all the Latins; and hence we may argue with probability, that the Sept. and the Hebrew formerly acknowledged ipsa, which now moves the indignation of Protestants so much, as if we intended by it to give any divine honour to the blessed Virgin. We believe, however, with S. Epiphanius, that "it is no less criminal to vilify the holy Virgin, than to glorify her above measure." We know that all the power of the mother of God is derived from the merits of her Son. We are no otherwise concerned about the retaining of ipsa, she, in this place, than in as much as we have yet no certain reason to suspect its being genuine. As some words have been corrected in the Vulgate since the Council of Trent, by Sixtus V. and others, by Clem. VIII. so, if, upon stricter search, it be found that it, and not she, is the true reading, we shall not hesitate to admit the correction: but we must wait in the mean time respectfully, till our superiors determine. H. Kennicott certainly advanced a step too far, when he said that all the ancient fathers read ipsam. Victor, Avitus, S. Aug. S. Greg. &c. mentioned in the Douay Bible, will convict him of falsehood. Christ crushed the serpent's head by his death, suffer ag himself to be wounded in the heel. His blessed 17 And to Adam he said: Because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee, that thou shouldst not eat, cursed is the earth in thy work: with labour and toil shalt thou eat thereof all the days of thy life.

18 Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and thou shalt eat the herbs of the earth.

19 In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return to the earth out of which thou wast taken: for dust thou art, and into dust thou shalt return.^a 20 And Adam called the name of his wife Eve: because she was the mother of all the living.

21 And the Lord God made for Adam and his wife garments of skins, and clothed them.

22 And he said: Behold Adam is become as one of us, knowing good and evil: now therefore lest perhaps he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever.

23 And the Lord God sent him out of the paradise of pleasure, to till the earth from which he was taken.

24 And he cast out Adam: and placed before the paradise of pleasure Cherubims, and a flaming sword, turning every way, to keep the way of the tree of life.

mother crushed him likewise, by her co-operation to the mystery of the Incarnation; and by rejecting, with horror, the very first suggestions of the enemy, to commit even the smallest sin. S. Bern. ser. 2, on Missus est. "We crush," says S. Greg. Mor. l. 38. "the serpent's head, when we extirpate from our heart the beginnings of temptation, and then he lays snares for our heel, because he opposes the end of a good action with greater craft and power." The serpent may hiss and threaten; he cannot hurt, if we resist him. H.

VER. 16. And thy conceptions. Sept. "thy groaning." The multifarious sorrows of childbearing, must remind all mothers (the blessed Virgin alone excepted) of what they have incurred by original sin. If that had not taken place, they would have conceived without concupiscence, and brought forth without sorrow. S. Aug. C. D. xiv. 26.—Conceptions are multiplied on account of the many untimely deaths, in our fallen state. Power, which will sometimes be exercised with rigor. H.—Moses here shows the original and natural subjection of wives to their husbands, in opposition to the Egyptians, who, to honour Isis, gave women the superiority by the marriage contract. Diod. i. 2. C.

VER. 17. Thy work, sin; thy perdition is from thyself; this is all that man can challenge for his own. H.

VER. 18. Thorns, &c. These were created at first, but they would have easily been kept under: now they grow with surprising luxuriance, and the necessities of life can be procured only with much labour. All men are here commanded to work, each in his proper department. The Jews were careful to teach their children some trade or useful occupation. S. Paul made tents, and proclaimed, If any man will not work, neither let him eat. 2 Thes. iii. 10. C.

VER. 19. Dust, as to the visible part; and thy soul created out of nothing. This might serve to correct that pride, by which Adam had fallen; and the same humbling truths are repeated to us by the Church every Ash-Wednesday, to guard us against the same contagion, the worm of pride, to which we are all so liable. Thus Adam was again assured that he should die the death, with which God had threatened him, and which the devil had told Eve would not be inflicted. V. 4. God created man incorruptible, (inextinguishable, immortal). But by the envy of the devil, death came into the world. Wisdom ii. 23. H.

VER. 20. The living. Heb. chai, one who brings forth alive, (Symmachus) or one who imparts life, in which she was a figure of the blessed Virgin. C.—Adam gives his wife this new name, in gratitude for not being cut off by death on the very day of his transgression, as he had every reason to expect and fear he would have been. C. ii. 17. H.—The printed Hebrew reads here, and in many other places, Eva, he, instead of Eja, she; thus, He was the mother, v. 12. he gave, &c. an inaccuracy unknown to the Samar. and the best MS. copies. Kennicott.

VER. 21. Of skins, which Adam took from the beasts which he offered in sacrifice to his merciful Judge, testifying thereby that he had forfeited his life, and uniting himself to that sacrifice of the woman's promised seed, by which alone he believed the sin of the world was to be expiated. H.

VER. 22. Behold Adam, &c. This was spoken by way of reproaching him with his pride, in affecting a knowledge that might make him like to God. Ch.—"These are the words of God, not insulting over man, but deterring others from an imitation of his pride." S. Aug. de Gen. xi. 39.—For ever. The sentence is left imperfect: (C.) but by driving man from Paradise, God sufficiently shewed how he would prevent him from eating of the tree of life, (H.) which Adam had not yet found. As he was now condemned to be miserable on earth, God, in mercy, prevented him from tasting of that fruit, which would have rendered his misery perpetual. M.—He would suffer him to die, that, by death, he might come, after a life of 930 years, spent in sorrow and repentance, to the enjoyment of himself. H.—Lest perhaps. God does not exercise his absolute

CHAP. IV.

The history of Cain and Abel.

AND Adam knew Eve his wife; who conceived and brought forth ^aCain, saying: I have gotten a man through God.

2 And again she brought forth his brother Abel. And Abel was a shepherd, and Cain a husbandman.

3 And it came to pass after many days, that Cain offered, of the fruits of the earth, gifts to the Lord.

4 ^bAbel also offered of the firstlings of his flock, and of their fat: and the Lord had respect to Abel, and to his offerings.

5 But to Cain and his offerings he had no respect: and Cain was exceeding angry, and his countenance fell.

6 And the Lord said to him: Why art thou angry? and why is thy countenance fallen?

7 If thou do well, shalt thou not receive? but if ill, shall not sin forthwith be present at the door? but the lust thereof shall be under thee, and thou shalt have dominion over it.

8 ^cAnd Cain said to Abel his brother: Let us go forth abroad. And when they were in the field, Cain rose up against his brother Abel, and slew him.^d power, or destroy free-will, but makes use of ordinary means and precautions, to effect his designs. S. Aug. W.

VER. 24. Cherubims. Angels of the highest order, and of a very complex figure, unlike any one living creature. Theodoret supposes that God forced Adam to retire from that once charming abode, by the apparition of hideous spectres. The devils were also hindered from coming thither, lest they should pluck the fruit of the tree of life, and, by promising immortality, should attract men to their service. The flaming sword, might be a fire rising out of the earth, of which Grotius thinks the pits, near Babylon, are still vestiges. These dreadful indications of the divine wrath would probably disappear, when Paradise had lost its superior beauty, and became confounded with the surrounding countries.—Thus we have seen how rapidly Moses describes the creation of all things, the fall of man, and the promised redemption. But in these few lines, we discover a solution of the many difficulties which have perplexed the learned, respecting these most important subjects. We know that the world is not the effect of chance, but created and governed by divine Providence. We are no longer at a loss to explain the surprising contrast of good and evil, observable in the same man. When we have attentively considered the Old Adam and the New, we find a clue to lead us through all the labyrinths of our Holy Religion. We could wish, perhaps, for a greater detail in Moses, but he left the rest to be supplied by tradition. He has thrown light enough upon the subject, to guide the well-disposed, and has left sufficient darkness to humble and to confound the self-conceited and wicked, who love darkness rather than the light. C.—Concerning the transactions of these early times, parents would no doubt be careful to instruct their children, by word of mouth, before any of the Scriptures were written; and Moses might derive much information from the same source, as a very few persons formed the chain of tradition, when they lived so many hundred years. Adam would converse with Methuselah, who knew Sem, as the latter lived in the days of Abram. Isaac, Joseph, and Anram, the father of Moses, were contemporaries: so that seven persons might keep up the memory of things which had happened 2500 years before. But to entitle these accounts to absolute authority, the inspiration of God intervenes: and thus we are convinced, that no word of sacred writers can be questioned. H.

CHAP. IV. VER. 1. Through God. Heb. may signify also "even God," as if she thought this was the promised seed, who, as Onkelos paraphrases it, would serve the Lord. C.—So little could she foresee the future conduct of Cain, whose name may be derived either from kone, possession and acquisition, or from kun, lamentation. The latter interpretation would have been better verified by the event, and the name of Abel, vanity, or sorrow, for which his parents allege no reason, might also have been reversed, on account of his justice, for which he is canonized by Christ himself, and declared the Just. Pious and significant names were imposed by either parent. Cain was the second man. He was not conceived till after the fall, and was therefore the first born in original sin. H.

VER. 4. Had respect. That is, shewed his acceptance of his sacrifice (as coming from a heart full of devotion): and that as we may suppose, by some visible token, such as sending fire from heaven upon his offerings. Ch.—The offerings of Cain are mentioned without any approbation: those of Abel are the firstlings and fat, or the very best; by which he testified, that he acknowledged God for his first beginning. Sacrifice is due to God alone, and to Him it has always been offered in the Church. We have the happiness to offer that truly eucharistic sacrifice to God, of which those of ancient times were only figures. What sacrifice can our erring brethren shew? W. C.

VER. 7. Over it. This is a clear proof of free-will. To destroy its force, Protestants translate over him, as if Cain should still retain his privilege of the Abel? And he answered: I know not: am I my brother's keeper?

10 And he said to him: What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth to me from the earth.

11 Now therefore cursed shalt thou be upon the earth, which hath opened her mouth and received the blood of thy brother at thy hand.

12 When thou shalt till it, it shall not yield to thee its fruit: a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be upon the earth.

13 And Cain said to the Lord: My iniquity is greater than that I may deserve pardon.

14 Behold thou dost cast me out this day from the face of the earth, and from thy face I shall be hid, and I shall be a vagabond and a fugitive on the earth: every one therefore that findeth me, shall kill me.

15 And the Lord said to him: No, it shall not so be: but whosoever shall kill Cain, shall be punished sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, that whosoever found him should not kill him.

16 And Cain went out from the face of the Lord, and dwelt as a fugitive on the earth at the east side of Eden.

17 And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived, and first-born, notwithstanding all his wickedness, and should rule over Abel, who would willingly submit, "unto thee his desire," &c. But God had made no mention of Abel. The whole discourse is about doing well or ill; and Cain is encouraged to avoid the stings of conscience, by altering his conduct, as it was in his power, how strongly soever his passions might solicit him to evil. H.—The Hebrew is understood by Onkelos, and the Targum of Jerusalem, in the sense of the Vulgate. The latter reads, "If thou correct thy proceedings in this life, thou wilt receive pardon in the next world. But if thou do not penance for thy sin, it shall remain till the day of the great judgment, and it shall stay, lying at the door of thy heart. But I have given thee power to govern thy concupiscence: thou shalt sway it, either to embrace good or evil." Calmet shews that the Hebrew perfectly admits of this sense. S. Augustine will not allow of the turn which the Manichees gave it. "Thou shalt have dominion over (illina.) What? thy brother! (absit) by no means: over what then, but sin? De C. xv. 7. Protestants formerly abandoned the translation of 1579, (which they have again resumed) and translated better, "unto thee shall be the desire thereof, and thou shalt rule over it," which R. Abenezra explains also of sin. To which of these editions, all given by royal authority, will Protestants adhere? Luther wrote a book against free-will, and Calvin would not admit the very name. But we, with all antiquity, must cry out with S. Jerom, c. Jov. 2. "God made us with free-will, neither are we drawn by necessity to virtue or vice; else where there is necessity, there is neither damnation nor reward." W. H.

VER. 8. Let us go forth abroad. These words are now wanting in the Hebrew; being omitted, according to Kennicott, since the days of Aquila 180; they are found in the Samaritan copy and version, in the Sept. &c. H.—The Masorets place a mark, as if something were defective here, and in 27 other verses, or in 25 at least. H.—Abel's violent death was a figure of that of Jesus Christ, inflicted for the like cause. See Heb. xii. 2. C.—In consequence of these crimes, Cain separated from the Church, and the Jews became no longer God's people: both Cain and the Jews became vagabonds. H.—The Targum of Jerusalem observes, that Cain talked against God's providence and the future world, which Abel hearing with marked indignation, Cain took occasion to kill him. W.

VER. 15. My iniquity, &c. Like Judas, Cain despairs. The Rabbins make him complain of the rigour of God's judgment, "My sin (or punishment) is too great to be borne." I must then be driven from the land of my nativity, from the society of my brethren and parents, from thy presence, for ever. Why do I then live? Let the first man I meet, kill me. Liran.

VER. 14. Every one that findeth me, shall kill me. His guilty conscience made him fear his own brothers, and nephews; of whom, by this time, there might be a good number upon the earth: which had now endured near 180 years; as may be gathered from Gen. v. 3, compared with Chap. iv. 23, though in the compendious account given in the Scripture, only Cain and Abel are mentioned. Ch.—Cain is little concerned about any thing but the loss of life. M.

VER. 15. Set a mark, &c. The more common opinion of the interpreters of holy writ, supposes this mark to have been a trembling of the body; or a blemish and consternation in his countenance. Ch.—God gave this first murderer a reprieve, allowing him time for repentance; but he neglected it, and died a reprobate; having been, during life, the head of an apostate church, and of the city of the devil, which has ever since opposed the city of God, and the society of the faithful. Though all his posterity were drowned in the deluge, some were soon found, even in the family of Noe, who stood up for the wretched pre-eminence in wickedness and rebellion, against the truth. See S. Aug. W. &c. H.

VER. 16. A fugitive, according to his sentence. Heb. noth, which the Sept brought forth Henoch: and he built a city, and called the name thereof by the name of his son Henoch.

18 And Henoch begot Irad, and Irad begot Maviael, and Maviael begot Mathusael, and Mathusael begot Lamech, 19 Who took two wives: the name of the one was Ada, and the name of the other Sella.

20 And Ada brought forth Jabel: who was the father of such as dwell in tents, and of herdsmen.

21 And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the father of them that play upon the harp and the organs.

22 Sella also brought forth Tubalcain, who was a hammerer and artificer in every work of brass and iron. And the sister of Tubalcain was Noema.

23 And Lamech said to his wives Ada and Sella: Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, hearken to my speech: for I have slain a man to the wounding of myself, and a stripling to my own bruising.

24 Seven-fold vengeance shall be taken for Cain: but for Lamech seventy times seven-fold.*

25 Adam also knew his wife again: and she brought forth a son, and called his name ^bSeth, saying: God hath given me another seed for Abel, whom Cain slew.

26 But to Seth also was born a son, whom he called Enos: this man began to call upon the name of the Lord.

CHAP. V.

The genealogy, age, and death of the Patriarchs, from Adam to Noe. The translation of Henoch.

THIS is the book of the generation of Adam. In the day that God created man, ^ahe made him to the likeness of God.

2 He created them male and female; and blessed have taken for a proper name. "In the land of Naid, over against Eden," (H.) or in the fields of Nyse, in Hyrcania, to the east of Eden and Armenia. C.

VER. 17. His wife. She was a daughter of Adam, and Cain's own sister; God dispensing with such marriages in the beginning of the world, as mankind could not otherwise be propagated.—He built a city, viz. In process of time, when his race was multiplied, so as to be numerous enough to people it. For in the many hundred years he lived, his race might be multiplied even to millions. Ch.—The Hanuchta, which Ptolemy places in Susiana, (C.) may perhaps have been built after the flood, in the same place. Josephus says, Cain was the first who fortified a city; designing it for a retreat, where he might keep the fruits of his robberies. Ant. i. 3. Peirere founds his ill-concerted system of Preadamites, or of men existing before Adam, on the history of Cain exercising husbandry, building a city, &c.; as if there were any difficulty in supposing, that the arts would have made some progress in the lapse of above a century. H.

VER. 19. Two wives. Lamech first transgressed the law of having only one wife at a time. C. 11. 24. None before the deluge is mentioned as having followed his example, even among the abandoned sons of men. Abraham, the father of the faithful, and some others, after that event, when the age of man was shortened, and the number of the true servants of God very small, were dispensed with by God, who tolerated the custom of having many wives at the same time among the Jews, till our Saviour brought things back to the ancient standard. Mat. xix. 4. And why do we excuse the patriarchs, while we condemn Lamech? Because the one being associated with the wicked, gives us reason to judge unfavourably of him, while Abraham is constantly mentioned in Scripture with terms of approbation and praise, and therefore we have no right to pass sentence of condemnation upon him, as some Protestants have done, after the Manichees. Hence the fathers defend the one, and reject the other with abhorrence. H.—Tert. (Monog. c. 5.) and S. Jerom, c. Jovin. i. says, "Lamech, first of all, a bloody murderer, divided one flesh between two wives." It was never lawful, says P. Innocent III. c. Gaudemus, for any one to have many wives at once, unless leave was given by divine revelation; and S. Aug. joins with him in defending the patriarchs, by this reason, "When it was the custom, it was not a sin."

VER. 22. Noema, who is supposed to have invented the art of spinning. C.—All these worthy people were distinguished for their proficiency in the arts, while they neglected the study of religion and virtue. H.—The inventors of arts among the Greeks lived mostly after the siege of Troy. C.

VER. 23. Said. This is the most ancient piece of poetry with which we are acquainted. Fleury.—Lamech may be considered as the father of poets. H.—I have slain a man, &c. It is the tradition of the Hebrews, that Lamech in hunting slew Cain, mistaking him for a wild beast: and that having discovered them: and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created.

3 ^aAnd Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begot a son to his own image and likeness, and called his name Seth.

4 And the days of Adam, after he begot Seth, were eight hundred years: and he begot sons and daughters.

5 And all the time that Adam lived, came to nine hundred and thirty years, and he died.

6 Seth also lived a hundred and five years, and begot Enos.*

7 And Seth lived after he begot Enos, eight hundred and seven years, and begot sons and daughters.

8 And all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years, and he died.

9 And Enos lived ninety years, and begot Cainan.

10 After whose birth he lived eight hundred and fifteen years, and begot sons and daughters.

11 And all the days of Enos were nine hundred and five years, and he died.

12 And Cainan lived seventy years, and begot Malaleel.

13 And Cainan lived after he begot Malaleel, eight hundred and forty years, and begot sons and daughters.

14 And all the days of Cainan were nine hundred and ten years, and he died.

15 And Malaleel lived sixty-five years, and begot Jared.

16 And Malaleel lived after he begot Jared, eight hundred and thirty years, and begot sons and daughters.

17 And all the days of Malaleel were eight hundred and ninety-five years, and he died.

what he had done, he beat so unmercifully the youth, by whom he was led into that mistake, that he died of the blows. Ch.—S. Jerom, 9. 1. ad Dam. acknowledges the difficulty of this passage, on which Origen wrote two whole books. W.

VER. 24. Seventy times. A similar expression occurs, Mat. xviii. 22. to denote a great, but indefinite number. God had promised to revenge the murder of Cain seven fold, though he had sinned voluntarily; so Lamech hopes that, as he had acted by mistake, and blinded by passion, in striking the stripling, the son of Tubalcain, he would deserve to be protected still more from falling a prey to the fury of any other. But many reject this tradition as fabulous, unknown to Philo, Josephus, &c. Moses nowhere mentions the death of Cain. Some, therefore, understand this passage with an interrogation; as if, to convince his wives that his sin was not so enormous as was supposed, he should say, Do not think of leaving me. What! have I killed a young man, as Cain did Abel, and still he is suffered to live unmolested; or have I beaten any one so that I should be punished? Onkelos, in effect, puts a negation to the same purport, "I have not killed, &c." (C.) others understand this passage, as if Lamech considered his crimes as much more grievous than even those of Cain. T.

VER. 26. Began to call upon, &c. Not that Adam and Seth had not called upon God before the birth of Enos, but that Enos used more solemnity in the worship and invocation of God. Ch.—He directed all his thoughts towards heaven, being reminded by his own name, which signifies one afflicted, that he could look for no solid happiness on earth. Seth had brought him up, from his infancy, in these pious sentiments, and his children were so docile to his instructions, that they began to be known in the world for their extraordinary piety, and were even styled the Sons of God. C. vi. 2. H.—Religion was not a human invention, but many ceremonies have been adopted, at different times, to make an impression on the minds of the people. Before Enos, the heads of families had officiated in their own houses; now, perhaps, they met together in places consecrated to the divine service, and sounded forth the praises of the Most High. Enos was probably most conspicuous for his zeal on these occasions: at least, a new degree of fervour manifested itself in his days. On the other hand, "the name of the Lord began to be profaned" about this time, as the Rabbin understand this passage, by the introduction of idolatry; which is a common effect of a dissolute life, which many began now to lead. Wis. xiv. 12. C.—The beginning of fornication is the devising of idols. We have, nevertheless, no certain proof of idols being introduced till many years after the deluge. H.

CHAP. V. VER. 2. Adam: the common name of mankind, made to the likeness of God. H.

VER. 5. He died. Eccles. xiv. 12. says very justly, the covenant of this world is he shall surely die. God prolonged the lives of the patriarchs to a more ad

18 And Jared lived a hundred and sixty-two years, and begot Henoch.

19 And Jared lived after he begot Henoch, eight hundred years, and begot sons and daughters.

20 And all the days of Jared were nine hundred and sixty-two years, and he died.

21 And Henoch lived sixty-five years, and begot Mathusala.

22 And Henoch walked with God: and lived after he begot Mathusala, three hundred years, and begot sons and daughters.

23 And all the days of Henoch were three hundred and sixty-five years.

24 And he walked with God, and was seen no more: because God took him.*

25 And Mathusala lived a hundred and eighty-seven years, and begot Lamech.

26 And Mathusala lived after he begot Lamech, seven hundred and eighty-two years, and begot sons and daughters.

27 And all the days of Mathusala were nine hundred and sixty-nine years, and he died.

28 And Lamech lived a hundred and eighty-two years, and begot a son.

vanced age, that the world might be sooner filled. Their constitution was then more excellent, the fruits of the earth more nourishing, &c. But the sole satisfactory reason for their living almost a thousand years, while we can hardly arrive at 70, is, because so it pleased God, in whose hands are all our lots. There is a great difference in the number of years assigned by the Hebrew and Vulgate, from that which the Samaritan copy mentions; and the Sept. differs from both. Whether the difference be real, or only apparent, we shall not pretend to determine. The Church has not decided which system of chronology is the most accurate. In the Martyrology, she adopts that of the Sept. and places the birth of Christ in 5199, after Eusebius and Bede, though Riccioli calculates the Sept. at 5634 years. H.—Adam died penitent, as we are assured by the Holy Ghost. Wis. x. 2; and tradition affirms the same of Eve, inasmuch, that the heresy of the Eucharites, who condemned our first parents to hell, was exploded with horror. Epip. 8. Aug. in hæres. T.

VER. 24. Walked with God. Sept. "was pleasing to God," by continual recollection and watchfulness over himself. Thus he became perfect.—Was seen no more; or, as S. Paul reads, after the Sept. he was not found. Heb. xi. 5.—God took him alive to some place unknown, which is commonly supposed to be Paradise, conformably to Ecclus. xiv. 16. though in Greek we do not read Paradise. Henoch pleased God, and was translated [into Paradise,] that he may give repentance to the nations. To him, that of Wisdom iv. 10. may be applied. He . . . was beloved, and living among sinners, he was translated. He will come again, when the charity of many of his children (for we all spring from him) shall have grown cold; and shall at last suffer death for opposing Antichrist. Apoc. xi. H.—"Though it be not an article of faith, whether Henoch be now in that Paradise, from which Adam and Eve were driven, or in some other delightful place; yet the holy Scriptures affirm, that God translated him alive, that he might not experience death," S. Chrys. hom. 21. with whom the other fathers agree, cited in the Douay Bible; so that it is matter of surprise, how any Protestant can call it in question. He is the other witness, who will come with Elias, before the great day of the Lord, to perform the same office to the nations, as the latter will to the Jews. Malac. iv. God preserves these two alive, perhaps to give us a striking proof how he would have treated Adam and his posterity, if they had not sinned; and also to confirm our hopes of immortality, when we shall have paid the debt of nature. W.

VER. 29. Noe means consolation, or repose. After he had beheld the most dreadful catastrophe or disturbance that ever happened in the world, he settled mankind once more in the friendship of God, and merited a blessing both for himself and for the whole earth. He gave, likewise, comfort to all, by useful inventions in agriculture, and in the art of making wine. He saw an end of the distractions caused by the wicked sons of Cain, and became the restorer of a new world; in a word, he was a progenitor of the Messiah, who is the King of Peace, and our only solid comfort. M. H.

VER. 31. Old. It is wonderful if Noe had no children before this time; but he might have had many, whom the Scripture does not mention, either because they were dead before the deluge, or taking evil courses with the daughters of men, deserved to perish with them. Noe kept the three, who were born after God had foretold the deluge, with the greatest care, under his own eyes. S. Augustine (C. D. xv. 20.) thinks, however, that many of the Patriarchs had no children till they were pretty far advanced in years. As Sem was born when Noe was 902, and Cham was the youngest, Japheth must have been the first-born. Comp. C. x. 21., with C. ix. 24. There is no reason to suppose they were all born the same year. C.

CHAP. VI. VER. 1. Daughters. These had borne equal proportion with 29 And he called his name *Noe, saying: This same shall comfort us from the works and labours of our hands on the earth, which the Lord hath cursed.

30 And Lamech lived after he begot Noe, five hundred and ninety-five years, and begot sons and daughters.

31 And all the days of Lamech came to seven hundred and seventy-seven years, and he died. And Noe, when he was five hundred years old, begot Sem, Cham, and Japheth.

CHAP. VI.

Man's sin is the cause of the deluge. Noe is commanded to build the ark.

AND after that men began to be multiplied upon the earth, and daughters were born to them,

2 The sons of God seeing the daughters of men, that they were fair, took to themselves wives of all which they chose.

3 And God said: "My spirit shall not remain in man for ever, because he is flesh, and his days shall be a hundred and twenty years.

4 Now giants were upon the earth in those days. For after the sons of God went in to the daughters of men, and they brought forth children, these are the mighty men of old, men of renown."

the males from the beginning; but here they are particularized, because they were the chief instruments in corrupting the descendants of Seth. H.—Even the sons of these libidinous people were so effeminate, as to deserve to be called women. M.

VER. 2. The Sons of God. The descendants of Seth and Enos are here called Sons of God, from their religion and piety: whereas the ungodly race of Cain, who by their carnal affections lay grovelling upon the earth, are called the children of men. The unhappy consequence of the former marrying with the latter ought to be a warning to Christians to be very circumspect in their marriages, and not to suffer themselves to be determined in choice by their carnal passion, to the prejudice of virtue or religion. Ch.—See S. Chrys. hom. 22, &c. Some copies of the Sept. having the angels of God, induced some of the ancients to suppose, that these spiritual beings (to whom, by another mistake, they attributed a sort of aerial bodies) had commerce with women, as the pagans derived their heroes from a mortal and a god. But this notion, which is borrowed from the book of Henoch, is quite exploded. C.—The distinction of the true Church from the synagogue of satan, here established, has been ever since retained, as heretics are still distinguished from Catholics. W. S. Aug.

VER. 3. His days shall be, &c. The meaning is, that man's days, which before the flood were usually 900 years, should now be reduced to 120 years. Or rather, that God would allow men this term of 120 years, for their repentance and conversion, before he would send the deluge. Ch.—He spoke therefore to Noe in his 480th year. S. Aug. Those who suppose, that he foretold this event 20 years later, think with S. Jerom, that God retrenched 20 years from the time first assigned for penance. The Spirit of the sovereign Judge was fired with contending; or, as others translate it, with remaining quiet as in a scabbard, and bearing with the repeated crimes of men. He resolved to punish them severely in this world, that he might shew mercy to some of them hereafter. S. Jer. 9. Heb. C.—If we suppose, that God here threatens to reduce the space of man's life to 120 years, we must say, at least, that he did it by degrees: for many lived several hundred years, even after the deluge. In the days of Moses indeed, few exceeded that term. But we think the other interpretation is more literal, and that God bore with mankind the full time which he promised. W.

VER. 4. Giants. It is likely the generality of men before the flood were of a gigantic stature, in comparison with what men now are. But these here spoken of, are called giants, as being not only tall in stature, but violent and savage in their dispositions, and mere monsters of cruelty and lust. Ch.—Yet we need not imagine, that they were such as the poets describe, tearing up mountains, and hurling them against heaven. Being the offspring of men, who had lived hitherto with great temperance, but now gave full scope to their passions, and the love of the fair daughters whom they chose, we need not wonder that they should be amazingly strong and violent. Nephilim, rushing on. as Ag. translates. That there have been giants of an unusual size, all historians testify. Og, Goliath, &c. are mentioned in Scripture, and the sons of Enac are represented as much above the common size, as the Hebrews were greater than grasshoppers. Num. xiii. 34. If we should suppose they were four or five times our size, would that be more wonderful than that they should live nine or ten times as long, as we do! See S. Aug. C. D. xv. 2. 23. Calmet's Dissert. &c. Delrio affirms that in 1572 he saw at Rouen, a native of Piedmont, above nine feet high. H.—Of old. The corruption of morals had commenced many ages ago, and some of the sons of Seth had given way to their lusts; so that we are not to suppose, that these giants were all born within a hundred years of the flood, as some might suppose from their being mentioned here, after specifying the age of Noe C. v. 31. H.

5 And God seeing that the wickedness of men was great on the earth, and that all the thought of their heart was bent upon evil at all times,*

6 It repented him that he had made man on the earth. And being touched inwardly with sorrow of heart,

7 He said: I will destroy man, whom I have created, from the face of the earth, from man even to beasts, from the creeping thing even to the fowls of the air, for it repenteth me that I have made them.

8 But Noe found grace before the Lord.

9 These are the generations of Noe:^b Noe was a just and perfect man in his generations, he walked with God.

10 And he begot three sons, Sem, Cham, and Japheth.

11 And the earth was corrupted before God, and was filled with iniquity.

12 And when God had seen that the earth was corrupted (for all flesh had corrupted its way upon the earth),

13 He said to Noe: The end of all flesh is come before me, the earth is filled with iniquity through them, and I will destroy them with the earth.^c

14 Make thee an ark of timber planks: thou shalt make little rooms in the ark, and thou shalt pitch it within and without.

15 And thus shalt thou make it. The length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits: the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits.

16 Thou shalt make a window in the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish the top of it. and the door of the ark thou shalt set in the side: with lower, middle chambers, and third stories shalt thou make it.

17 Behold I will bring the waters of a great flood upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life under heaven. All things that are in the earth shall be consumed.

18 And I will establish my covenant with thee, and thou shalt enter into the ark, thou and thy sons, and thy wife, and the wives of thy sons with thee.

19 And of every living creature of all flesh, thou shalt bring two of a sort into the ark, that they may live with thee: of the male sex, and the female.

20 Of fowls according to their kind, and of beasts in their kind, and of every thing that creepeth on the earth according to its kind: two of every sort shall go in with thee, that they may live.

21 Thou shalt take unto thee of all food that may be eaten, and thou shalt lay it up with thee: and it shall be food for thee and them.

22 And Noe did all things which God commanded him.

CHAP. VII.

VER. 5. At all times. Heb. only evil continually. They had no relish for any thing else: as we may say of a glutton, he thinks of nothing but his belly. Yet some good thoughts would occur occasionally, and we may grant that they did some things which were not sinful. M.—If we follow corrupt nature, and live among sinners, we find a law within us warring against the spirit; and a very powerful grace is necessary to rescue us from such a dangerous situation. C.—Though the expressions in this place seem general, they must be understood with some limitations. W.

VER. 6. It repented him, &c. God, who is unchangeable, is not capable of repentance, grief, or any other passion. But these expressions are used to declare the enormity of the sins of men, which was so provoking as to determine their Creator to destroy these his creatures, whom before he had so much favoured. Ch.—God acted outwardly as a man would do who repented. H.

VER. 8. Grace. Notwithstanding the general denunciation against all flesh, we see here that God will not confound the just with the guilty, in the same punishment. Noe pleased God, by observing the most perfect justice, in the midst of a corrupt generation. S. Chrys. &c. W.

VER. 12. Its way, being abandoned to the most shameful and unnatural sins. Liran.

VER. 13. All flesh. I will destroy all these carnal and wicked people, and, because all other creatures were made only for man's use, and will be useless, I will involve them in the common ruin, reserving only what will be necessary for the support of the few, who shall be preserved, and for the repeopleing of the earth. H.

VER. 14. Timber planks. Heb. "gopher wood," which is no where else mentioned in Scripture. It was probably a sort of wood full of resin, and being smeared with something like our pitch, was capable of resisting the fury of the ensuing tremendous storm, for a length of time. C. H.—Rooms to separate the birds, various animals, provisions, &c.—Pitch, lit. "besmear it with bitumen," which has a very strong smell, able to counteract the disagreeable odours arising from beasts confined. M.—It might be mixed with some other ingredients, naphtha, pitch, &c. C.

VER. 15. Three hundred cubits, &c. The ark, according to the dimensions here set down, contained four hundred and fifty thousand square cubits; which were more than enough to contain all the kinds of living creatures, with all necessary provisions: even supposing the cubits here spoken of to have been only foot and a half each, which was the least kind of cubits. Ch.—It is therefore unnecessary for us to have recourse, with Cappel, to the sacred cubit, which was twice as large as the common one, but which seems not to have been in use among the Jews before the Babylonish captivity. Still less need we adopt the geometrical cubit, which contains six ordinary ones, as we might be authorised to do by the great names of Origen and S. Aug. de C. D. xv. 27. q. in Gen. i. 4. These dimensions would make the ark as large as a city. Moses always speaks of the same sort of cubit, used probably in Egypt. Apelles and other heretics, with some modern infidels, have attempted to shew, that this account of Moses is falacious. But they have been amply refuted by able calculators, John Butco, Pelletier, &c. This amazing structure, for which God himself gave the plan, was divided with three stories, besides the lower part of the vessel, which might serve to keep fresh water. The different species of animals are not so numerous, as some imagine. Fishes, and such creatures as can live in water, would not need to come into the ark. Animals deprived of exercise, and allowed barely what may support nature, will live upon a very little. Even an ox, according to Columella, will live on 80 pounds of hay, or on a cubic foot, a whole day, so that 400 of these large creatures might be supported on 146,000 cubic feet. The middle story for provisions, would alone contain 150,000 cubits. Noe's family, and the birds, would probably occupy the room above, in which was a window all round, of the height of a cubit, without glass or crystal, which were not yet invented, but defended with lattice work of wood, like our dairy rooms. H.

VER. 16. In a cubit. This is understood by some, of the height of the window; by others, of the roof, which would be almost flat, like the top of a conch. Menoch supposes, that the whole ark was to be measured with the cubit in every part, from the bottom to the top; and the words of it, properly refer to the ark.—Side, or at the end, about the middle way, that the animals might be conveyed easily to their stalls. The door would open into the story allotted to the beasts, and all things might enter it by a sort of bridge, or by sloping planks. C.—Ordure might be thrown down into the lowest part of the ark, separated from the reservoir of fresh water, or might be brought up with ropes and buckets to the window at the top, which would easily open. T.

VER. 18. My covenant, that thou shalt be saved, amid the general ruin. This is the second covenant of God with man: the first was with Adam, the third with Abraham, when circumcision was instituted, and the last with Moses. Ex. xix. All others were only ratifications of these; and even these were only figures of that which our Saviour entered into with men, when he undertook to make satisfaction for them to his Father. C.

VER. 19. Two, intended for the propagation of their kind. God afterwards specifies what more Noe should preserve for food. C. vii. 2. C.—Wild beasts forgot their savage nature, and became subject to the just Noe; and all came readily at his beck, in the same manner as domestic animals come when we offer them food. Yet, in all this we must acknowledge the work of God, and a sort of miracle. H.

CHAP. VII. VER. 2. Of all clean. The distinction of clean and unclean beasts, appears to have been made before the law of Moses, which was not promulgated till the year of the world 2514. Ch.—Clean: not according to the law of Moses, which was not yet given, but such as tradition had described—fit for sacrifice; (M.) though they might be of the same species as were deemed clean in the law, which ratified the ancient institution.—And seven: (Heb.) simply seven, three couple and an odd male, for sacrifice after the deluge: one couple was to breed, the other two perhaps for food. H.—Some imagine, that there were fourteen unclean and four clean animals, of every species, in the ark, because the Sam. Sept. and Vulg. read, "seven and seven." Origen, &c.—But our Saviour, sending the Disciples to preach two and two, did not appoint a company of four to go together, but only of two, as is generally allowed. Mark vi 7 C

3 But of the beasts that are unclean two and two, the male and the female. Of the fowls also of the air seven and seven, the male and the female: that seed may be saved upon the face of the whole earth.

4 For yet a while, and after seven days, I will rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights: and I will destroy every substance that I have made, from the face of the earth.

5 And Noe did all things which the Lord had commanded him.

6 And he was six hundred years old, when the waters of the flood overflowed the earth.

7 *And Noe went in and his sons, his wife and the wives of his sons with him into the ark, because of the waters of the flood.

8 And of beasts clean and unclean, and of fowls, and of every thing that moveth upon the earth, 9 Two and two went in to Noe into the ark, male and female, as the Lord had commanded Noe.

10 And after the seven days were passed, the waters of the flood overflowed the earth.

11 In the six hundredth year of the life of Noe,^b in the second month, in the seventeenth day of the month, all the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the flood-gates of heaven were opened:

12 And the rain fell upon the earth forty days and forty nights.

13 In the self-same day Noe, and Sem, and Cham, and Japheth, his sons: his wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, went into the ark.

14 They and every beast according to its kind, and all the cattle in their kind, and every thing that moveth upon the earth, according to its kind, and every fowl according to its kind, all birds, and all that fly, 15 Went in to Noe into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein was the breath of life.

16 And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, as God had commanded him: and the Lord shut him in on the outside.

17 And the flood was forty days upon the earth: and the waters increased, and lifted up the ark on high from the earth.

18 For they overflowed exceedingly: and filled all on the face of the earth: and the ark was carried upon the waters.

19 And the waters prevailed beyond measure upon the earth: and all the high mountains under the whole heaven were covered.

20 The water was fifteen cubits higher than the mountains which it covered.

21 *And all flesh was destroyed that moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle, and of beasts, and of all creeping things that creep upon the earth: and all men.

22 And all things wherein there is the breath of life on the earth, died.

23 And he destroyed all the substance that was upon the earth, from man even to beast, and the creeping things and fowls of the air: and they were destroyed from the earth: and Noe only remained, and they that were with him in the ark.

24 And the waters prevailed upon the earth a hundred and fifty days.

VER. 11. Seventeenth day. On the tenth, God had given the last warning to the wretched and obstinate sinners, to whom Noe had been preaching both by word and by building the ark, for 120 years; all in vain. This second month is, by some, supposed to be the month of May; by others, that of November. Usher makes Noe enter the ark on the 18th Dec. 1656. The waters decrease May 17, mountains appear July 31, he sends out the raven Sept. 8, and leaves the ark Dec. 29, after having remained in it a year and ten days, according to the antediluvian computation, or a full year of 365 days. The systems of those pretended philosophers, who would represent this flood as only partial, affecting the countries which were then inhabited, are all refuted by the plain narration of Moses. What part of the world could have been secure, when the waters prevailed fifteen cubits above the highest mountains? To give a natural cause only for this miraculous effect, would be nugatory: but as waters covered the earth at first, so they surely might again, by the power of God. II.—Fountains and flood-gates. These are the two natural causes which Moses assigns for the deluge, the waters below, and those above in the sky or firmament. Heaven is said to be shut when it does not rain, (Luc. iv. 25.) so it is here opened, and flood-gates, or torrents of rain, pour down incessantly. But God attributes not the deluge to these causes alone; he sufficiently intimates that it would be miraculous, (v. 4. I will rain;) and still more emphatically, (C. vi. 17.) Behold I. Heb. "I, even I myself, do bring on a flood of waters." The idea which Moses gives of the flood, corresponds with that which he before gave of chaos, when earth and water were undistinguished in one confused mass, c. i. 6. The Hebrews look upon it as a continual miracle, that the earth is not always deluged, being founded, as they represent it, on the waters. Jer. v. 22. Calmet and others have proved, both from Scripture and from philosophical arguments, the universality of the deluge, against Isaac Vossius, &c. II.

VER. 16. The Lord shut him in, by an angel besmearing the door with pitch, to prevent the waters from penetrating, while Noe did the like in the inside. C.—Thus God supplies our wants when we are not able to provide for ourselves, and though he could do all by himself, yet he requires us to co-operate with him, and often makes use of secondary causes. W.

VER. 24. Days: counting from the end of the forty days, when the deluge was at its height. C.—In all the histories of past ages, there is nothing so terrible as this event. What became of all those myriads of human beings who perished on this occasion? We know not. Some have charitably supposed, that, although the far greater part perished everlastingly, a few who had been incredulous while Noe preached, opened their eyes at last, when it was too late to save their bodies, and by sincere repentance rescued their souls from the flames, and were consigned to do penance, for a time, in the other world. These heard the preaching of J. C., or believed in his redemption, while they were yet living, and so deserved to partake of his mercies, and joyfully beheld his sacred person when he came to visit them in their prison of purgatory. 1 Pet. iii. 19. He came and preached to those spirits that were in prison: which had been sometime incredulous, when they waited for the patience of God in the days of Noe, when the ark was a building: wherein a few, that is eight souls, were saved from drowning by water. Whereunto baptism, being of the like form, now saves you also, &c. See F. S. Bullarmine, &c. In these last words of S. Peter, we may also notice, that the ark was a figure of baptism, which is so necessary, that without its reception, or desire of it at least, no man can be saved. It is also a figure of the cross, and of the one true Church, as the Fathers remark, with S. Aug. de C. D. xv. i. M. &c. S. Greg. hom. 12 in Ezech. &c.—This is so striking, that it deserves to be seriously considered. It was only one, though God could have ordered many smaller vessels to be made ready, perhaps with less inconvenience to Noe, that we might reflect, out of the Church the obstinate will surely perish. S. Jer. ep. ad Dam.: In this ark all that were truly holy, and some imperfect, like Cham, were contained, clean beasts and unclean dwelt together, that we need not wonder if some Catholics be a disgrace to their name. The ark had different partitions, to remind us of the various orders of Clergy and Laity in the Church, with one chief governor, the Pope, like Noe in the ark. It was strong, visible, &c. and pitched all over with the durable cement, bitumen, and riding triumphant amid the storms, the envy of all who were out of it, till at last it settled upon a rock. So the Church is built on a rock, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail: she is not less obvious to the sincere seeker, than a city built on the top of the highest mountain, &c. We might here take a retrospective view of the chief occurrences and personages of the former world; we should observe the same order of things from the beginning,—the conflict of virtue and vice, the preservation of the true faith and worship of God among a few chosen souls, who preferred to be persecuted by worldlings, rather than to offend God. They contended earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints, to Adam and Eve, once innocent, and afterwards penitent. We beheld original sin, and the promised remedy for mankind; while the rebel angels are abandoned, without redress. There was kept up a communion of saints: sacrifice to the one God was performed generally by the heads of families, who were priests in the law of nature. Even Cain, though a bad man, through hypocrisy, chose to offer sacrifice before he had quite broken off from the society of the faithful, and resolved to become the father of all excommunicated persons, and of all scoundrels. C. iv. 18. He was admonished by God that he had free will, and might merit a reward by a different conduct. His sentence, as well as that pronounced upon Adam, and upon all mankind, before the flood, reminds us of the particular and general judgment; as the translation of Henoch sets before us the happy state of the blessed, and the immortality, of which it was an earnest. See Douay Bible, where the chief mysteries of faith are pointed out as the creed of the Antediluvians. Even the B. Trinity was insinuated, or shewn to them, at a distance, in various texts: the unity and indissolubility of marriage were clearly expressed; the true Church continued in Noe, while the chain of schismatics and heretics was broken, and Cain's progeny destroyed. CHAP. VIII.

The deluge ceaseth. Noe goeth out of the ark, and offereth a sacrifice. God's covenant to him.

AND God remembered Noe, and all the living creatures, and all the cattle which were with him in the ark, and brought a wind upon the earth, and the waters were abated:

2 The fountains also of the deep, and the flood-gates of heaven, were shut up, and the rain from heaven was restrained.

3 And the waters returned from off the earth going and coming: and they began to be abated after a hundred and fifty days.

4 And the ark rested in the seventh month, the seven and twentieth day of the month, upon the mountains of Armenia.

5 And the waters were going and decreasing until the tenth month: for in the tenth month, the first day of the month, the tops of the mountains appeared.

6 And after that forty days were passed, Noe opening the window of the ark, which he had made, sent forth a raven:

7 Which went forth and did not return, till the waters were dried up upon the earth.

8 He sent forth also a dove after him, to see if the waters had now ceased upon the face of the earth.

9 But she not finding where her foot might rest, returned to him into the ark: for the waters were upon the whole earth: and he put forth his hand, and caught her, and brought her into the ark.

this period of time, we may discover what the ancients so often describe respecting the four ages:—The golden age is most perfectly found in Paradise; but only for a few days, or perhaps only a few hours, during which our first parents preserved their innocence. The silver age may have lasted rather longer, till the murder of Abel, or 128 years, when Cain began to disturb the peace of the world. From that time, till the giants made their appearance, we may reckon the age of brass. But that of iron had continued for many years before the flood. The like deterioration of morals we may discover after the deluge, and again after the renovation of the world, by the preaching of the gospel. For some time after these two great events, things bore a pleasing aspect; Noe was busy in offering sacrifice to God, Christians were all one heart and one soul, enjoying all things in common, and God gave a blessing to the earth, and confirmed his covenant with men. Then Cham, Nimrod, and Babel appear, heresies in the new law break forth, and disturb the lovely harmony of mankind: but still a sufficient number preserve their integrity, till about the days of Abraham and Arius, in their respective periods, and may be said to have lived in the silver age, when compared with the brass insolence of the great majority of those who came after. The iron age of these two periods, may be dated from the persecution of Epiphaneas against the Jews, when so many apostatized from the faith, and from that much more terrible persecution which will be raised against the Christians by Antichrist, the man of sin, (of which the former was a type) when the charity of many shall grow cold, and Christ will hardly find faith upon the earth. To that age may justly be applied, those strong expressions of disapprobation which God made use of before the flood. G. vi. 3. 6. 12. He will punish the crimes of that age with a deluge of fire, and say, The end of all flesh is come before me, &c. v. 13. Time shall be no longer. Apoc. x. 6. H.

CHAP. VIII. VER. 1. Remembered; not as if God had ever forgotten Noe, but he now shews his remembrance of him by the effects. M.—A wind, lit. a spirit, which S. Amb. and Theodoret understand of the Holy Ghost, that as he moved over the waters at first, (C. 1. 2.) to give them fecundity, and to exercise his power in establishing order, so he may shew the same cure and providence for this new world, emerging, like the former, from the waters. H.—Most interpreters, however, understand this of a violent wind; (Prov. xxv. 23. Exod. xiv. 21.) a strong blast, such as was sent to divide the Red sea. M.

VER. 3. And the waters returned, &c. S. Jerom on this passage remarks, "that all waters and torrents repair to the womb of the abyss, through the hidden veins of the earth," and by the abyss understands the sea: according to that of Ecclesiastes, 1. 7., all the rivers run into the sea. But as the sea itself, on this occasion, exceeded its limits, (otherwise its waters would not have been higher than the land) the sense perhaps is confined to this, that the waters by degrees were diminished; as we may say of the inundations of land, that the waters are gone off, not by the regular course of ditches, but from the effects of the sun and winds which dry them up. E.

VER. 4. And the ark rested on the mountains of Armenia. The Hebrew word is Ararat, which also occurs in the 37th chap. of Isaiah, and the 51st of Jeremiah; for in these places our interpreter retained the Hebrew word, but in the 4th book

10 And having waited yet seven other days, he again sent forth the dove out of the ark.

11 And she came to him in the evening carrying a bough of an olive tree, with green leaves, in her mouth. Noe therefore understood that the waters were ceased upon the earth.

12 And he stayed yet other seven days: and he sent forth the dove, which returned not any more unto him.

13 Therefore in the six hundredth and first year, the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were lessened upon the earth, and Noe opening the covering of the ark, looked, and saw that the face of the earth was dried.

14 In the second month, the seven and twentieth day of the month, the earth was dried.

15 And God spoke to Noe, saying:

16 Go out of the ark, thou and thy wife, thy sons and the wives of thy sons with thee.

17 All living things that are with thee of all flesh, as well in fowls as in beasts, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, bring out with thee, and go ye upon the earth: *increase and multiply upon it.

18 So Noe went out, he and his sons: his wife, and the wives of his sons with him.

19 And all living things, and cattle, and creeping things that creep upon the earth, according to their kinds went out of the ark.

20 And Noe built an altar unto the Lord: and of Kings, xix. 37, where the same history is related, it is translated by the land of the Armenians. E.—Seventh month, of the year, not of the deluge, as appears from v. 13, &c. M.—Seven and twentieth. So also the Sept., but the Heb. &c. have the 17th. It is not easy to decide which is right. On the seventeenth the waters only began to decrease, and some hence argue for the Vulgate, as they say it is not probable the ark would stop that very day. C.—This, however, might be the only mean by which Noe could discern that the waters were abating. H.—The ark being about fourteen cubits sunk in the water, might soon touch the summit of the highest mountains, such as M. Taurus, of which the Ararat, here mentioned in the Hebrew, a mountain of Armenia, forms a part, according to S. Jerom. The Armenians still boast that they have the remains of the ark. Berosus, the Pagan historian, says bitumen was taken from it as a preservative. Jos. Ant. 1. 3. Eus. præp. ix. 4. The Chaldee has Cordu for Ararat, whence some have supposed, that the ark rested on the Cordyean or Gordian mountains. The Armenians call the mountain near Erivan, Mesensar, or the mountain of the ark. C.

VER. 7. Did not return. The negation Not, is not to be found in any Hebrew copy now extant; though it is still retained by the Septuagint, and several Latin manuscripts, according to the testimony of Liranus. If we adhere, therefore, to the Hebrew text, we must translate it with S. Jerom, thus; It went forth, going and returning, (Egrediebatur exiens et revertens) sometimes repairing to the mountains, where it found carcasses to feed on, and at other times returning not unto the ark, but to rest upon the top of it. E. Ch.—Or receded farther from it; as the Hebrew may be explained, agreeably to the Vulgate, Sept. Syr. &c. which admit the negation. C.—Till, as long as the waters covered the earth, not that it returned to the ark afterwards. M.

VER. 9. Whole earth, excepting the mountains; so that the dove presently returned. H.

VER. 11. Green leaves. The olive tree preserves its verdure, and grows even at the bottom of the Red sea, and other seas in the East. Plin. xii. 25.—Many other trees and seeds will live for a long time under the waters. C.—This tender branch of the olive seems to agree better with spring than autumn; whence Tirin infers, that the deluge began and ended in spring.

VER. 13. Year of Noe's age, who, we may suppose, was born on the first day of the year. So that his 601st year corresponds with the 1657th of the world, B.C. 2343, on which day the deluge ended. Still Noe waited for God's order to leave the ark till the 27th of the ensuing month, when the earth was more perfectly dried. H.—Covering. Some think that the window was at the top, like a sky-light. C.

VER. 17. Increase. Heb. "let them increase." This is spoken of the brute creation, the blessing is given to men. C. ix.—Neither Noe's family, nor any of the animals, had any young in the ark. C.

VER. 20. Holocausts, or whole burnt offerings. In which the whole victim was consumed by fire upon God's altar, and no part was reserved for the use of a priest or people. Ch.—This is the first time we read of an altar, though Abel had surely made use of one. M.—Noe delays not to shew his gratitude to God. S. Amb. W.

taking of all cattle and fowls that were clean, offered holocausts upon the altar.

21 And the Lord smelled a sweet savour, and said: I will no more curse the earth for the sake of man: for the imagination and thought of man's heart are prone to evil from his youth: therefore I will no more destroy every living soul as I have done.

22 All the days of the earth, seed-time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, night and day, shall not cease.

CHAP. IX.

God blesseth Noe: forbiddeth blood: and promiseth never more to destroy the world by water. The blessing of Sem and Japheth.

AND God blessed Noe and his sons. And he said to them: ^bIncrease, and multiply, and fill the earth.

2 And let the fear and dread of you be upon all the beasts of the earth, and upon all the fowls of the air, and all that move upon the earth: all the fishes of the sea are delivered into your hand.

3 And every thing that moveth, and liveth shall be meat for you: even as the green herbs have I delivered them all to you:*

4 Saving that flesh with blood you shall not eat.^d

5 For I will require the blood of your lives at the hand of every beast, and at the hand of man, at the hand of every man, and of his brother, will I require the life of man.

6 *Whosoever shall shed man's blood, his blood shall be shed: for man was made to the image of God.^f

7 ^gBut increase you and multiply, and go upon the earth and fill it.

^hThus also said God to Noe, and to his sons with him:

9 Behold I will establish my covenant with you, and with your seed after you:

Supra vi. 5. Mat. xv. 19.—Supra i. 22. and viii. 17.—^aSupra i. 29.—^aLev. xvii. 14. Acts xv. 29.

VER. 21. Smelled, &c. A figurative expression, denoting that God was pleased with the sacrifices which his servant offered, (Ch.) and in this sense it is expressed in the Chaldee, "God received his offering gratefully." God requires sacrifices of us, to testify his dominion, and not for any advantage he derives from them; but rather to bless us, if we perform our duty with fervour.—For the sake of, or on account of men's sins. They are so prone to evil, that, if I were to punish them as often as they deserve, new deluges might be sent every day. I take pity on their weakness. I will punish the most criminal, but not as I have done, by cursing the earth. These words of God, are by some addressed to Noe, by others to God the Son. Heb. "he said to his heart;" Onkelos, "he said in his word;" Sept. "he said with reflection." C.—Noe was beloved by God, and therefore may be called his heart. To speak to the heart, often means to comfort. H.

VER. 22. Seed-time, according to the Targum of Jonathan, is the equinox of September; harvest, that of March; winter and summer denote the solstice of December and of June. But the Hebrews probably divided the year into summer and winter; or perhaps they might also admit the season of spring, with the Egyptians and the ancient Greeks, who represented the seasons by the three hours, daughters of Jupiter. C.

CHAP. IX. C. 1. Blessed, with fecundity. Barrenness was deemed a curse. C.

VER. 2. Fear, &c. God confirms the dominion of man over all animals, though he must exercise it now by compulsion; they will not obey always without reluctance, as they would have done in the state of innocence. H.

VER. 3. Meat. The more religious, at least, had hitherto abstained from flesh, being content with herbs, &c.: which had been expressly granted. Now, the salt waters of the deluge had vitiated the earth, its plants were no longer so nutritive. M.—God gives leave to eat flesh meat, but with some restriction, that we may still learn to obey. W.

VER. 4. With blood. This was a matter of indifference in itself, like the forbidden fruit. But God gave the prohibition, to keep people at a greater distance from imbruing their hands in the blood of others, which nevertheless we know some have drunk! He would also assert his dominion over all things; the blood or life of animals being reserved to be offered in sacrifice to him, instead of the life of man. Lev. xvii. 11. Blood of brutes is gross and unwholesome. M.—The apostles required this law to be observed by the first Christians, that the Jews might not be disgusted; but, after a competent time had been allowed them, the Church thought proper to alter this discipline. S. Aug. c. Faust. xxxii. 13.

10 And with every living soul that is with you, as well in all birds, as in cattle and beasts of the earth, that are come forth out of the ark, and in all the beasts of the earth.

11 ⁱI will establish my covenant with you, and all flesh shall be no more destroyed with the waters of a flood, neither shall there be from henceforth a flood to waste the earth.

12 And God said: This is the sign of the covenant which I give between me and you, and to every living soul that is with you, for perpetual generations.

13 I will set my bow in the clouds, and it shall be the sign of a covenant between me and between the earth.

14 ^jAnd when I shall cover the sky with clouds, my bow shall appear in the clouds:

15 And I will remember my covenant with you, and with every living soul that beareth flesh: and there shall no more be waters of a flood to destroy all flesh.

16 And the bow shall be in the clouds, and I shall see it, and shall remember the everlasting covenant, that was made between God and every living soul of all flesh which is upon the earth.

17 And God said to Noe: This shall be the sign of the covenant, which I have established, between me and all flesh upon the earth.

18 And the sons of Noe, who came out of the ark, were Sem, Cham, and Japheth: and Cham is the father of Chanaan.

19 These three are the sons of Noe: and from these was all mankind spread over the whole earth.

20 And Noe a husbandman began to till the ground, and planted a vineyard.

21 And drinking of the wine was made drunk, and was uncovered in his tent.

VER. 5. At the hand; a Heb. idiom. God orders an ox to be stoned, which had slain a man. Ex. xxi. 28.—Man, (hominis) every man, (viri) brother. By these three terms, God inculcates a horror of bloodshed; because we are all of the same nature, ought to act like generous men, and to consider every individual as a brother, since we spring from the same stock. M.

VER. 6. Shed. God had not subjected Cain to this law of retaliation, as he was the first murderer, and the earth was unpeopled. H.—Here he declares, that it is just to inflict such a punishment on the offender. M.—Judges are hence authorized to punish murderers with death. C.—The general law, thou shalt not kill, admits of exceptions, and forbids killing by private authority, or out of revenge. H.—The blood of your lives, may signify the blood on which your life depends; or, according to the Rabbin, it is a prohibition of suicide, which one would think is so contrary to the first law of nature, self-preservation, as to require no prohibition; and yet, to the scandal of philosophers, some have written in its defence! H.

VER. 10. Soul . . in birds, &c. The covenant of God is made with animals, only in as much as they are subservient to man. D.—The Egyptians adored most of them; and many oriental nations, and even philosophers, pretended they had intelligent souls, and could speak a rational language, which some of them would have the people believe they could understand. C.—This was the case of those great impostors Apollonius of Tyana, Mahomet, &c. H.—Moses shews sufficiently that beasts were neither divinities nor rational. C.

VER. 13. My rain bow. This had been from the beginning; but it was not before appointed for a sign that the earth should no more be destroyed by water. It is styled God's bow, on account of its beauty and grandeur. M. Eccles. xliii. 12.—"As the rain-bow, which makes its appearance in the clouds, borrows all its effulgence from the sun, so those only who acknowledge the glory of Christ in God's clouds, and do not seek their own glory, will escape destruction in the deluge." S. Aug. c. Faust. ii. 21.

VER. 16. Remember; or I shall cause men to reflect, when they see the rain bow, of the horrors of the deluge, and of my gracious promises and covenant.

VER. 18. Chanaan, who, it seems, is here mentioned to his shame, having first discovered and told his father that Noe was drunk. He was probably but young at the time, being born after the deluge.

VER. 20. A husbandman. Heb. lit. "a man of the earth." H.—To till, perhaps with a plough, which he is said to have invented. M.

VER. 21. Drunk. Noe by the judgment of the fathers was not guilty of sin in being overcome by wine; because he knew not the strength of it. Ch.—Wine

22 Which when Cham the father of Chanaan had seen, to wit, that his father's nakedness was uncovered, he told it to his two brethren without.

23 But Sem and Japheth put a cloak upon their shoulders, and going backward, covered the nakedness of their father: and their faces were turned away, and they saw not their father's nakedness.

24 And Noe awaking from the wine, when he had learned what his younger son had done to him, 25 He said: Cursed be Chanaan, a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren.

26 And he said: Blessed be the Lord God of Sem, be Chanaan his servant.

27 May God enlarge Japheth, and may he dwell in the tents of Sem, and Chanaan be his servant.

28 And Noe lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years.

29 And all his days were in the whole nine hundred and fifty years: and he died.

The genealogy of the children of Noe, by whom the world was peopled after the flood.

THESE are the generations of the sons of Noe: Sem, Cham, and Japheth: and unto them sons were born after the flood.*

2 The sons of Japheth: Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and Thubal, and Mosoch, and Thiras.

3 And the sons of Gomer: Ascenez and Riphath and Thogorma.

* 1 Par. iii. 5.

Though vines had grown from the beginning, the art of making wine seems not to have been discovered; and hence Noe's fault is much extenuated, and was at most only a venial sin. M.—His nakedness prefigured the desolate condition of Christ upon the cross, which was a scandal to the Jews, and foolishness to the Gentiles. But by this folly we are made wise; we are redeemed, and enjoy the name of Christians. Sem and Japheth represent the multitude of believers, Cham and Chanaan the audacity and impudence of all unbelievers. S. Aug. c. Faust. xii. 24. de C. D. xvi. 2. S. Cyp. ep. 68. ad Cæcil. W.—Like the Manichæes, modern heretics are very free in condemning many innocent actions of the patriarchs. H.

VER. 23. Neither ought we to be so quick-sighted in discovering the faults of any; which we often represent as real, when they are only apparent. H.

VER. 25. Cursed be Chanaan. The curse, as well as the blessings, of the patriarchs were prophetic: and this in particular is here recorded by Moses, for the children of Israel, who were to possess the land of Chanaan. But why should Chanaan be cursed for his father's fault? The Hebrews answer, that he being then a boy was the first that saw his grandfather's nakedness, and told his father Cham of it; and joined with him in laughing at it: which drew upon him, rather than upon the rest of the children of Cham, this prophetic curse. Ch.—Theodoret, q. 57. The children of Sem executed this sentence, in exterminating many of the Chanaanites under Josue. W.—They perished for their own wickedness, which God foresaw, and revealed to Noe. Cham was severely punished by this denunciation of his children's misery. See Milton, xi. 754. xii. 27. Deut. ix. 4. H.

VER. 27. Enlarge Japheth. His name signifies latitude or enlargement. W.—May he, God, according to some; but more probably Japheth, of whom the rest of the sentence speaks. H.—This was verified by the extensive dominion of the children of Japheth, both in the islands and on the continent; more particularly, when the Romans subdued the Jews, and posterity of Sem. M.—Referring all this to the Church, the Gentiles entered in, upon the refusal of the Jews, though preachers of that nation were the instruments of their conversion. Chanaan, in the mean time, cherishes his slavery, and seeks not to obtain the liberty and glory of the sons of God, in which he is a figure of heretics, (H.) who serve to make Christians more upon their guard, and by persecuting them, exercise their patience and increase their crown. W.

VER. 29. He died, having witnessed the attempt of his children to build the tower of Babel, (we may suppose with disapprobation) and having been concerned in the dispersion of nations. Some imagine he travelled eastward, and founded the empire of China, which is denied by others. H.—The fathers conclude that he had no children after the deluge, as the Scripture mentions the world was divided among his three sons and their offspring. Perhaps the fabulous account of Saturn is a perversion of Noe's history, as the three great pagan deities, Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto, to whom Saturn gave the empire of heaven, seas and hell, may have been intended for the three sons of Noe. The Egyptians have attributed to their Osiris the erecting of altars, cultivating vines, teaching agriculture, &c. for which we have seen Noe was so famous. C.—This great and virtuous patriarch had only been dead two years, when the faithful Abraham

4 And the sons of Javan. Elisa and Tharsis, Cetthim and Dodanim.

5 By these were divided the islands of the Gentiles in their lands, every one according to his tongue and their families in their nations.

6 And the sons of Cham: Chus, and Mesraim, and Phuth, and Chanaan.

7 And the sons of Chus: Saba, and Hevila, and Sabatha, and Regma, and Sabatacha. The sons of Regma: Saba, and Dadan.

8 Now Chus begot Nemrod: he began to be mighty on the earth.

9 And he was a stout hunter before the Lord. Hence came a proverb: Even as Nemrod the stout hunter before the Lord.

10 And the beginning of his kingdom was Babylon, and Arach, and Achad, and Chalanne in the land of Sennaar.

11 Out of that land came forth Assur, and built Ninive, and the streets of the city, and Chale.

12 Resen also between Ninive and Chale: this is the great city.

13 And Mesraim begot Ludim, and Anamim and Laabim, Nephthum.

14 And Phetrusim, and Chasluim; of whom came forth the Philistines, and the Caphtorim.

15 And Chanaan begot Sidon his first-born, the Hethite, was born, as it were to succeed him in maintaining the cause of God. H.—The Rabbins assert, that God gave some general laws to Noe, which were necessarily to be observed by all who would obtain salvation. 1. To obey the laws. 2. Not to curse God. 3. Nor admit of any false god, nor of any superstition. 4. Not to marry one's mother, mother-in-law, sister by the same mother, or another person's wife, nor to commit sins against nature. 5. Not to shed blood, that of beasts must be buried. 6. Not to steal, or break one's word. 7. Not to eat the limb of a living creature. Maimonides thinks this last was given to Noe, the rest to Adam. C.

16 And the Jebusite, and the Amorrhite, and the Gergesite.

CHAP. X. VER. 2. Japheth. From his being placed first, some conclude that he was the eldest; and perhaps the famed Japetus of the Greeks is the same person. D.—Sem comes last, though elder than Cham, that the history of the true Church may be more connected. Though it would be a work of great labour to discover what nations sprung from the people here mentioned, yet some are sufficiently obvious; and the learned Bochart has given very plausible applications of the different names to the respective nations, in his Phaleg, or sacred Geography. Gomer is supposed to be the father of the Cimbr in Germany, from whom the French and English also probably sprung. H.—Magog, father of the Scythians, &c. Ezee. 36. Madai of the Medes, Javan of the Ionians in Greece, Thubal of the Iberians and Spaniards, Mosoch of the Muscovites, Thiras of the Thracians.

VER. 3. Ascenez father of the Germans, Thogorma father of the Turks. M.

VER. 5. The islands. So the Hebrews called all the remote countries, to which they went by ships from Judea, as Greece, Italy, Spain, &c. (Ch.) whether they were surrounded with water or not. Jer. xxv. 22. M.

VER. 9. A stout hunter. Not of beasts but of men; whom by violence and tyranny he brought under his dominion. And such he was, not only in the opinion of men, but before the Lord; that is, in his sight who cannot be deceived. Ch.—The Sept. call him a giant; that is, a violent man. According to Josephus, he stirred up men to rebel against the Lord, maintaining that all their happiness must come from themselves, &c. Ant. i. 4. Thus he broached the first heresy after the deluge. W.—He seems to have been the same as Bel, father of Ninus, and the author of idolatry. M.

VER. 11. That land of Sennaar, near the city of Babylon. Assur or Ninus, who founded the Assyrian empire. M.—But many understand this of Nemrod, who, in his progress from Babylonia to conquer the world, and oppress the rest of his brethren, came forth into Assyria, as if it were written Assarah; the He signifying motion towards, being often omitted in names of places. See 2 Kings, vi. 10. Bochart. There he built Ninive, on the Tigris. But the exact situation of this vast city is not even known. C.—And the streets, &c. which were amazingly extensive. Jonas iii. 3. It may also signify the city Rohoboth. Pagnin.—Chale perhaps of Halah. 4 Kings xvii. 6. on the banks, or near the source of the river Chaboras.

VER. 12. Resen, perhaps Larissa, here written without the La; as 1 Par. v. 26 Hala has the preposition, and is written Lahela. Bochart.—This, &c. It is doubtful which of these three cities is meant: but as we know that Ninive was remarkable for size and magnificence, we may suppose that it is designated. C. M.

17 The Hevite and Aracite: the Sinite

18 And the Aradian, the Samarite, and the Hamahtite: and afterwards the families of the Chanaanites were spread abroad.

19 And the limits of Chanaan were from Sidon as one comes to Gerara even to Gaza, until thou enter Sodom and Gomorrha, and Adama, and Seboim even to Lesa.

20 These are the children of Cham in their kindreds and tongues, and generations, and lands, and nations.

21 Of Sem also the father of all the children of Heber, the elder brother of Japheth, sons were born.

22 The sons of Sem: *Elam and Assur, and Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram.

23 The sons of Aram: Us, and Hull, and Gether; and Mes.

24 But Arphaxad begot Sale, of whom was born Heber.

25 And to Heber were born two sons: the name of the one was Phaleg, because in his days was the earth divided: and his brother's name Jectan.

26 Which Jectan begot Elmodad, and Saleph, and Asarmoth, Jare, 27 And Aduram, and Uzal, and Decla,

28 And Ebal, and Abimael, Saba,

29 And Ophir, and Hevila, and Jobab. All these were the sons of Jectan.

30 And their dwelling was from Messa as we go on as far as Sephar, a mountain in the east.

31 These are the children of Sem according to their kindreds and tongues, and countries in their nations.

32 These are the families of Noe, according to their people and nations. By these were the nations divided on the earth after the flood.

CHAP. XI.

The tower of Babel. The confusion of tongues. The genealogy of Sem down to Abram.

AND the earth was of one tongue,^a and of the same speech.

* 1 Par. i. 17.—Wis. x. 5

VER. 19. To Lesa, or Laisa to the north, on the Jordan, as Sodom was on the southern extremity of that river. Sidon and Gaza were on the Mediterranean sea, north and south; so that these four cities are like four points, determining the extent of the promised land, which, as it was important for the Israelites to know, Moses descends to these particulars in speaking of the Chanaanites.

VER. 21. Of Heber. That is, of the nations beyond the Euphrates. Hebrews, &c. C.—The elder brother, fratre Japheth majore, may be rendered as well "Japheth being his elder brother," which, as we have already observed, was probably the case. By mentioning him alone, we may gather that Sem was elder than Cham, who is called the less or younger son. H.—The Hebrew may be translated either way. But the Chald. Liran, and many excellent interpreters, make Japheth the eldest. C.

VER. 24. Begot Sale; either his son, or his grandson, by Cainan. See Luke iii. 38. where we shall examine this question; also C. xi. 12. The copies of the Sept. now extant, all assert that Cainan was the son of Arphaxad, in all the places where they are mentioned, both in Gen. and Chronicles; and though some endeavour to prove that this is an interpolation, inserted by a later hand, it is certain it was found in the Sept. in the days of S. Luke, who confirms it by his authority, as all the copies both Greek and Latin, except a very faulty one which belonged to Beza, and is now at Cambridge, testify. Beza was so bold as to expunge the name. But before we allow of this freedom, we must be informed how S. Luke could adopt such an error, being, as he was, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost. See Salien, &c. H.—Mariana asserts, that the Hebrew copies have been vitiated.

VER. 29. Sons of Jectan; though not perhaps all born before the dispersion of nations, which may be said of some others, whom Moses here mentions, that he may not have to interrupt his narration. C.

CHAP. XI. VER. 1. Speech. Probably Hebrew; in which language, we have the most ancient book in the world, the work of Moses. This language has been preserved ever since, though with some alterations. Most of the oriental languages are but like dialects from it, as French, Italian, &c. are from Latin. The arguments which are brought to prove that other languages are more ancient,

2 And when they removed from the east, they found a plain in the land of Sennaar, and dwelt in it.

3 And each one said to his neighbour: Come let us make brick, and bake them with fire. And they had brick instead of stones, and slime instead of mortar:

4 And they said: Come, let us make a city and a tower, the top whereof may reach to heaven; and let us make our name famous before we be scattered abroad into all lands.

5 And the Lord came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of Adam were building.

6 And he said: Behold, it is one people, and all have one tongue: and they have begun to do this, neither will they leave off from their designs, till they accomplish them in deed.

7 Come ye, therefore, let us go down, and there confound their tongue, that they may not understand one another's speech.

8 And so the Lord scattered them from that place into all lands, and they ceased to build the city."

9 And therefore the name thereof was called Babel, because there the language of the whole earth was confounded: and from thence the Lord scattered them abroad upon the face of all countries.

10 These are the generations of Sem:^a Sem was a hundred years old when he begot Arphaxad, two years after the flood.

11 And Sem lived after he begot Arphaxad, five hundred years, and begot sons and daughters.

12 And Arphaxad lived thirty-five years, and begot Sale.

13 And Arphaxad lived after he begot Sale, three hundred and three years, and begot sons and daughters.

14 Sale also lived thirty years, and begot Heber.

15 And Sale lived after he begot Heber, four hundred and three years: and begot sons and daughters.

16 And Heber lived thirty-four years, and begot Phaleg.

because the names of men, &c. have a proper signification in them as well as in Hebrew, do not invalidate the right of the latter. The most respectable authors have, therefore, always declared for it. H.

VER. 2. The East: Armenia, which lies to the eastward of Babylonia, whither they directed their course in quest of provisions for themselves and cattle, being now grown pretty numerous. M.

VER. 3. Each one: not that every individual joined in this undertaking, considered, at least, as a rash and presumptuous attempt to save themselves from a second deluge. Some might innocently give in to it, meaning only to leave a monument of their common origin and friendship, before they separated into distant countries. Slime: literally bitumen. H.—The Hebrew, chomer, means also slime, or mortar. Stone is very scarce in that country, but the earth is fat, and very proper to make brick; it also abounds in naphtha, bitumen, &c.: hence the ancients notice the brick walls of Babylon. C.

VER. 4. Famous before; Heb. lest, &c.; as if they intended to prevent that event. H.—Their motive appears to have been pride, which raised the indignation of God. Nemrod, the chief instigator, might have designed the tower for a retreat, whence he might sally out and maintain his tyranny. M.

VER. 6. In deed. This seems to be spoken ironically; though the efforts of weak mortals, the sons of Adam, when pursued with vigour and unanimity, will produce great effects. These builders had conceived an idea of raising the tower as high as possible, hyperbolically, to touch heaven. H.

VER. 7. Come ye, &c. As men seemed bent on taking heaven by storm, like the ancient giants, God turns their expressions, as it were, against themselves, and shews them an example of humility, let us go down. He acts the part of a judge, and therefore will examine all with the utmost diligence, as he denotes by these expressions; being really incapable of moving from place to place, on account of his immensity. H.—He seems nearer to men, by the effects or punishments which he inflicted. The address which he here makes is directed, not to the angels, but to the other two co-equal powers of the Blessed Trinity. M.

VER. 9. Babel, that is, confusion. This is one of the greatest miracles recorded in the Old Testament; men forgot, in a moment, the language which they had hitherto spoken, and found themselves enabled to speak another known 17 And Heber lived after he begot Phaleg, four hundred and thirty years: and begot sons and daughters.

18 Phaleg also lived thirty years, and begot Reu.

19 *And Phaleg lived after he begot Reu, two hundred and nine years, and begot sons and daughters.

20 And Reu lived thirty-two years, and begot Sarug.

21 And Reu lived after he begot Sarug, two hundred and seven years, and begot sons and daughters.

22 And Sarug lived thirty years, and begot Nachor.

23 And Sarug lived after he begot Nachor, two hundred years, and begot sons and daughters.

24 And Nachor lived nine and twenty years, and begot Thare.

25 *And Nachor lived after he begot Thare, a hundred and nineteen years, and begot sons and daughters.

26 *And Thare lived seventy years, and begot Abram, and Nachor, and Aran.

27 And these are the generations of Thare: Thare begot Abram, Nachor, and Aran. And Aran begot Lot.

28 And Aran died before Thare his father, in the land of his nativity in Ur of the Chaldees.

29 And Abram and Nachor married wives: the name of Abram's wife was Sarai: and the name of Nachor's wife, Melcha, the daughter of Aran, father of Melcha and father of Jescha.

30 And Sarai was barren, and had no children.

31 *And Thare took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Aran, his son's son, and Sarai his daughter in law, the wife of Abram his son, and brought them out of Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Chanaan: and they came as far as Haran, and dwelt there.

32 And the days of Thare were two hundred and five years, and he died in Haran.

only to a few of the same family (C.); for we must not suppose, that there were as many new languages as there were men at Babel. M.—The precise number of original languages which were then heard, cannot be determined. The learned commonly acknowledge the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Teutonic, Slavonian, Tartarian, and Chinese languages, to be original. The rest are only dialects from these. English is chiefly taken from the Teutonic, (C.) with many words borrowed from the Greek and other languages. H.

VER. 12. Sale, or Cainan. See C. x. 24. Chron. i. 18 in the Septuagint. The variation in the years of the Patriarchs, between this ancient version and the Hebrew, is here again very considerable, and perhaps unaccountable. H.

VER. 20. Sarug: in whose days S. Epiphanius places the origin of idolatry; but Eusebius (Præp. i. v. & 9.) thinks it began in Egypt, among the posterity of Chana. C.

VER. 27. Abram, the youngest of the three, being born only in the 130th year of Thare. v. 32. and G. xii. 4. He is placed first, on account of his superior dignity in the church of God, in like manner as Sem, Moses, &c. In his youth, he is supposed to have followed the idolatrous worship of his fathers. S. Aug. de C. D. x. c. ult. Genebrard, A. M. 1949. C.—But being soon enlightened by God, he becomes a glorious witness of the truth, and, according to many, is preserved miraculously, when thrown into the fire by the Chaldees. v. 31. H.

VER. 29. Jescha, whom many confound with Sarai, as if both Nachor and Abram had married the daughters of their brother Aran. But why then does Moses mention Sarai before, and then call her Jescha in the same verse? It seems as if he intended to designate two different women. H.—In effect, Abram himself says, Sarai was truly his sister, born of the same father. G. xii. 13. See C. xx. 12, where we shall give the reasons which seem to prove that she was the daughter of Thare, and not of Aran. C.—Jescha does not accompany her grandfather, preferring, perhaps, to stay with Nachor, or to marry in her own country; if she were not already dead when Thare departed from Ur, a city of the Chaldees. H.—This city is probably Ura, in Mesopotamia, not far from Nisibis, which the Scripture often mentions as a part of Chaldaea. Acts vii. 2. &c. C.—It is not, however, certain that the rest of Thare's family remained behind; if father's house, and come into the land which I shall shew thee.

2 And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and magnify thy name, and thou shalt be blessed.

3 I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee, *and IN THEE shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

4 So Abram went out as the Lord had commanded him, and Lot went with him: Abram was seventy-five years old when he went forth from Haran.*

5 And he took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all the substance which they had gathered, and the souls which they had gotten in Haran: and they went out to go into the land of Chanaan. And when they were come into it,

6 Abram passed through the country unto the place of Sichem, as far as the noble vale: now the Chanaanite was at that time in the land.

7 And the Lord appeared to Abram, and said to him: *To thy seed will I give this land. And he built there an altar to the Lord, who had appeared to him.

8 And passing on from thence to a mountain, that was on the east side of Bethel, he there pitched his tent, having Bethel on the west, and Hai on the east: he built there also an altar to the Lord, and called upon his name.

9 And Abram went forward, going and proceeding on to the south.

10 And there came a famine in the country: *and Abram went down into Egypt, to sojourn there: for the famine was very grievous in the land.

11 And when he was near to enter into Egypt, he said to Sarai his wife: I know that thou art a beautiful woman:

12 And that when the Egyptians shall see thee, they will say: She is his wife: and they will kill me, and keep thee.

they did, they removed soon after into the country about Haran, or Charra, on the Chaboras. C. xxix. 4. Josep. Ant. 1. 6. II.

CHAP. XII. VER. 1. Said: not after his father's death, but before he left Ur; (M.) unless, perhaps, Abram received a second admonition at Haran, which from his dwelling there with his father, &c., is styled his country. He leaves his kindred, Nachor and his other relations, except Sarai and Lot, who go with him into Chanaan; and even his own house, or many of his domestics and effects, and full of faith, goes in quest of an unknown habitation. Heb. xi. 8. H.—S. Stephen clearly distinguishes these two calls of Abram. From the second, the 430 years of sojournment, mentioned Gal. 3. Ex. 12, must be dated. C.—This is the third grand epoch of the world, about 2083, when God chooses one family to maintain the one faith, which he had all along supported. See W. &c.

VER. 3. In thee, &c. or in the Messias, who will be one of thy descendants and the source of all the blessings to be conferred on any of the human race. Gal. iii. 16. Many of the foregoing promises regarded a future world, and Abram was by no means incredulous, when he found himself afflicted here below, as if God had forgot his promises. C.—He was truly blessed, in knowing how to live poor in spirit, even amid riches and honours; faithful in all tribulations and trials; following God in all things. v. 1.

VER. 5. Gotten, (fecerant): made or acquired, either by birth or purchase, &c. M.

VER. 6. Sichem. At the foot of M. Garizim, where Abram offered his first sacrifice in the land. Deut. xi. 30. Ken.—Noble; on account of the many tall and shady oaks, whence the Sept. have the high oak. Heb. Elon more, the plain of Moreh, or of ostension, because God shewed Abram from this place, situated about the middle of the promised land, what countries he would give to him in his posterity, after having exterminated the Chanaanites, who then occupied the land as their own. The mentioning of these idolatrous nations here, gives us reason to admire the faith and constancy of Abram, who neither doubted of the fulfilling of this promise, nor hesitated to adore the true God publicly. v. 7. Hence there is no reason for accounting this an interpolation. H.

VER. 8. Bethel, as it was called in the days of Moses, being the ancient Luz.

13 *Say, therefore, I pray thee, that thou art my sister: that I may be well used for thee, and that my soul may live for thy sake.

14 And when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians saw the woman that she was very beautiful.

15 And the princes told Pharaoh, and praised her before him: and the woman was taken into the house of Pharaoh.

16 And they used Abram well for her sake. And he had sheep and oxen and he asses, and men servants, and maid servants, and she asses, and camels.

17 But the Lord scourged Pharaoh and his house with most grievous stripes for Sarai, Abram's wife.

18 And Pharaoh called Abram, and said to him: What is this that thou hast done to me? Why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife?

19 For what cause didst thou say, she was thy sister, that I might take her to my wife? Now therefore there is thy wife, take her, and go thy way.

20 And Pharaoh gave his men orders concerning Abram: and they led him away and his wife, and all that he had.

CHAP. XIII.

Abram and Lot part from each other. God's promise to Abram.

AND Abram went up out of Egypt, he and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him into the south.

2 And he was very rich in possession of gold and silver.

3 And he returned by the way, that he came, from the south to Bethel, to the place where before he had pitched his tent between Bethel and Hai,

4 *In the place of the altar which he had made before, and there he called upon the name of the Lord.

5 But Lot also, who was with Abram, had flocks of sheep, and herds of beasts, and tents.

* Infra xx. 11.—Supra xii. 7.—Infra xxxvi. 7.

C. 28. On the west, Heb., towards the sea or Mediterranean, which lay west of Palestine. Bethel signifies the house of God, being honoured with two altars. H.

VER. 9. Proceeding to the south, Heb.: means also the desert, as the Sept. generally translate negeb: other interpreters agree with the Vulgate. C.

VER. 10. Down into Egypt, which lies lower than Judea: here the famine did not rage. God would not allow him to go back to his friends. M.

VER. 11. Beautiful: having yet had no children, though she must have been 65 years old. Abram acts with prudence, and does not tempt God: if he had made known that the woman was his wife, he would have exposed his life to imminent danger, amid a cruel and lascivious people; and being convinced of the chastity of Sarai, he did not, in the least, apprehend that she would consent to any violation of her conjugal engagements. He did not, therefore, expose her virtue as the Manichees pretended. S. Aug. c. Faust. xxi. 83 de C. D. xvi. 19. Ha. C.—The event proved the justice of Abram's suspicions, and God's interference shewed that He was not displeased with his concealing part of the truth. Who can be so simple as to suppose, that we are bound to explain all our concerns to a foe! Do not we every day act with the like caution as Abram did, when we have reason to fear danger! Do not we wish, when fleeing from an enemy's country, that he should conclude we were taking a walk of pleasure! H.

VER. 13. My sister. This was no lie; because she was his niece, being daughter to his brother Aran, and therefore, in the style of the Hebrews, she might truly be called his sister; as Lot is called Abraham's brother. Gen. xiv. 4. See Gen. xx. 12. Ch.—Others say, Sarai was the half-sister of Abraham, by another mother. H.

VER. 15. Pharaoh: the usual title of the kings of Egypt, in Ezechiel's time. C. 32. 2. Courtiers are often too ready to flatter the passions of the prince: these are punished along with Pharaoh (v. 17); whence we may conclude, that they concurred with him, to take Sarai against her will.

VER. 16. Well. Perhaps they made him some presents to gain his favour; (M.) or, at least, they suffered him to remain quietly among them.

VER. 17. Scourged Pharaoh with unusual pains, sterility, &c. that he might easily perceive that his taking Sarai was displeasing to God. H.—He did not intend to commit adultery indeed, but his conduct was tyrannical and oppressive to the stranger, whom God protects. Ps. 44. M.

6 Neither was the land able to bear them, that they might dwell together: * for their substance was great, and they could not dwell together.

7 Whereupon also there arose a strife between the herdsmen of Abram and of Lot. And at that time the Chanaanite and the Pherezite dwelled in that country.

8 Abram therefore said to Lot: Let there be no quarrel, I beseech thee, between me and thee, and between my herdsmen and thy herdsmen: for we are brethren.

9 Behold the whole land is before thee: depart from me, I pray thee: if thou wilt go to the left hand, I will take the right: if thou choose the right hand, I will pass to the left.

10 And Lot lifting up his eyes, saw all the country about the Jordan, which was watered throughout, before the Lord destroyed Sodom and Gomorrha, as the paradise of the Lord, and like Egypt as one comes to Segor.

11 And Lot chose to himself the country about the Jordan, and he departed from the east: and they were separated one brother from the other.

12 Abram dwelt in the land of Chanaan: and Lot abode in the towns, that were about the Jordan, and dwelt in Sodom.

13 And the men of Sodom were very wicked, and sinners before the face of the Lord beyond measure.

14 And the Lord said to Abram, after Lot was separated from him: *Lift up thy eyes, and look from the place wherein thou now art, to the north and to the south, to the east and to the west.

15 All the land which thou seest, I will give to thee, and to thy seed for ever.

16 And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: if any man be able to number the dust of the earth, he shall be able to number thy seed also.

* Supra xii. 7. Infra xv. 18. and xxvi. 4. Deut. xxxiv. 4.

VER. 20. Led him away: perhaps without allowing him time to vindicate his conduct, and with a degree of contumely, to shew the king's displeasure; who durst not, however, injure Abram in his effects, nor suffer any of his subjects to hurt him. The holy patriarch received his wife untouched, and departed with joy. H.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 1. South. With respect to Judea, which the sacred writers have always in view.

VER. 2. Rich in possession. Heb. may be "heavy laden with cattle, gold," &c. M.

VER. 6. To bear or feed their flocks, as well as those of the Chanaanites. C.

VER. 8. Abram therefore, for fear of raising a quarrel with the Pherezites also, who might complain that these strangers were eating up what they had before taken possession of, suggests to his nephew the propriety of their taking different courses. Being the older, he divides, and the younger chooses, according to an ancient and laudable custom. S. Aug. de C. D. xvi. 20.

VER. 11. From the east of Pentapolis to Sodom, (M.) or to the east of the place where Abram was, as Onkelos has it. The Heb. may signify either. Grotius.

VER. 13. Sinners before, &c. That is truly, without restraint or disguise. Lot might not have been acquainted with their dissolute morals, when he made this choice; in which however he consulted only his senses, and looked for temporal advantages, which ended in sorrow. This God permitted for a warning to us; and to restrain the Sodomites, by the example of Lot's justice, contrasted with their abominable lives. H.—Ezechiel xvi. 49. explains the causes of their wickedness.

VER. 15. And to: This is by way of explanation to the former words: (Ha.) for Abram never possessed a foot of this land by inheritance. Acts viii. 5. Even his posterity never enjoyed it, at least, for any long time. S. Augustine gives the reason; because the promise was conditional, and the Jews did not fulfil their part by obedience and fidelity. q. 31. in Gen. It is better, however, to understand these promises of another land, which the people, who imitate the faith of Abram, shall enjoy in the world to come. C. Rom. iv. 16.

VER. 16. As the dust, an hyperbole, to express a very numerous offspring which is more exact, if we take in the spiritual children of Abram. M.

VER. 17. Through Lot has chosen a part, I give the whole to thee. Thou mayest take possession of it, and go wherever thou hast a mind. C.

17 Arise and walk through the land in the length, and in the breadth thereof: for I will give it to thee.

18 So Abram removing his tent, came, and dwelt by the vale of Mambre, which is in Hebron: and he built there an altar to the Lord.

CHAP. XIV.

The expedition of the four kings: the victory of Abram: he is blessed by Melchisedech.

AND it came to pass at that time, that Amraphel, king of Sennaar, and Arioch, king of Pontus, and Chodorlahomor, king of the Elamites, and Thadal, king of nations,

2 Made war against Bara, king of Sodom, and against Bersa, king of Gomorrha, and against Sennaab, king of Adama, and against Semeber, king of Seboim, and against the king of Bala, which is Segor.

3 All these came together into the woodland vale, which now is the salt sea.*

4 For they had served Chodorlahomor twelve years, and in the thirteenth year they revolted from him.

5 And in the fourteenth year^b came Chodorlahomor, and the kings that were with him: and they smote the Raphaim in Astarothcarnaim, and the Zuzim with them, and the Emim in Save of Cariathaim.

6 And the Chorreens in the mountains of Seir, even to the plains of Pharan, which is in the wilderness.

7 And they returned, and came to the fountain of Mispbat, the same is Cades: and they smote all the country of the Amalecites, and the Amorrian that dwelt in Asasonthamar.

8 And the king of Sodom, and the king of Gomorrha, and the king of Adama, and the king of Seboim, and the king of Bala, which is Segor, went out: and they set themselves against them in battle array, in the woodland vale:

9 To wit, against Chodorlahomor king of the Elamites, and Thadal king of nations, and Amraphel king of Sennaar, and Arioch king of Pontus: four kings against five.

10 Now the woodland vale had many pits of slime. And the king of Sodom, and the king of Gomorrha turned their backs, and were overthrown there: and they that remained, fled to the mountain.

11 And they took all the substance of the Sodomites, and Gomorrhites, and all their victuals, and went their way:

12 And Lot also, the son of Abram's brother, who dwelt in Sodom, and his substance.

13 And behold one, that had escaped, told Abram the Hebrew, who dwelt in the vale of Mambre the Amorrite, the brother of Escol, and the brother of Aner: for these had made a league with Abram.

14 Which when Abram had heard, to wit, that his brother Lot was taken, he numbered of the servants born in his house, three hundred and eighteen, well appointed: and pursued them to Dan.

15 And dividing his company, he rushed upon them in the night, and defeated them: and pursued them as far as Hoba, which is on the left hand of Damascus.

16 And he brought back all the substance, and Lot his brother, with his substance, the women also, and the people.

17 And the king of Sodom went out to meet him, after he returned from the slaughter of Chodorlahomor, and of the kings that were with him in the vale of Save, which is the king's vale.

18 *But Melchisedech, the king of Salem, bringing forth bread and wine, for he was the priest of the most high God, 19 Blessed him, and said: Blessed be Abram by the most high God, who created heaven and earth.

20 And blessed be the most high God, by whose protection, the enemies are in thy hands. And he gave him the tithes of all.

VER. 18. Vale, or grove of oaks, where there was a famous one which was called the oak of Mambre, either from the neighbouring city, or from a man of that name. C. xiv. 13. M.—Hebron was on the hill above. C.

CHAP. XIV. VER. 1. Sennaar, or Babyion—Pontus, Heb. Ellasar, perhaps Thallasar, as Jonathan writes, not far from Eden—Elamites, or Persians—Nations in Galilee, east of the Jordan, whither the conquered kings directed their course. Josue xii. 23. mentions the king of the nations (foreigners) at Galgal. C.

VER. 3. Now, in the days of Moses.—Salt sea; called also the vale of salts, and the dead sea.

VER. 4. Served. Thus Noe's prediction began to be fulfilled, as Elam was the eldest son of Sem, to whose posterity Chanaan should be slaves. C. ix. 26.

VER. 5. Raphaim, Zuzim, and Emim, were all of the gigantic race, robbers, like the Arabs. D.—These dwelt in the land of Basan, or of giants. Deut. iii. 18.

VER. 6. Chorreans, or Horreans, who dwelt in one part of that extensive range of mountains, which took their name from Seir; perhaps about mount Hor, where Aaron died. C.—These also were auxiliaries of the five kings, and hence experienced the fury of the four confederates; who cut off all their opponents, before they made their grand attack upon Sodom. H.

VER. 7. Mispbat, or of judgment and contradiction, because there the Hebrews contended with Moses and Aaron: it was afterwards called Cadez. Num. xx. 11.—Amalecites, that is which they afterwards possessed; for as yet Amalec was unborn. C. xxxvi. 16. M.—Amorrhians, to the west of Sodom. C.

VER. 10. Of slime. Bituminis. This was a kind of pitch, which served for mortar in the building of Babel, Gen. xi. 3. and was used by Noe in pitching the ark. Ch.—Moses does not make this remark without reason. This bitumen would easily take fire, and contribute to the conflagration of Sodom. C.—Overthrown, not all slain, for the king of Sodom escaped. v. 17.

VER. 13. The Hebrew, or the traveller who came from beyond the Euphrates, C.) or who dwelt beyond the Jordan, with reference to the five kings. Diodorus.

VER. 14. Servants, fit for war. Hence we may form some judgment of the power and dignity of Abram, who was considered as a great prince in that country. C. xxiii. 6 He was assisted by Mambre, Escol, and Aner, with all the forces they could raise on such a short warning; and coming upon the four kings unawares, in four divisions, easily discomfited them, while they were busy plundering the cities, and pursuing them to Dan; which is either the city that went by that name afterwards, or more probably one of the sources of the Jordan, (H.) which the people of the country call Medan. Neither did he suffer them to repose, before he had retaken all the plunder at Hoba, or Abila, north of the road leading to Damascus. C.

VER. 18. Melchisedech was not Sem: for his genealogy is given in Scripture. Heb. vii. 6.; nor God the Son, for they are compared together; nor the Holy Ghost, as some have asserted, but a virtuous Gentile who adored the true God, and was king of Salem, or Jerusalem, and Priest of an order different from that of Aaron, offering in sacrifice bread and wine, a figure of Christ's sacrifice in the Mass; as the fathers constantly affirm. H.—See Pererius. S. Jerom. ep. ad Evagrium, says, "Melchisedech offered not bloody victims, but dedicated the sacrament of Christ in bread and wine . . . a pure sacrifice." See S. Cyp. ep. 63. ad Cæcil. S. Aug. de C. D. xvi. 22. &c. Many Protestants confess, that this renowned prince of Chanaan, was also a priest; but they will not allow that his sacrifices consisted of bread and wine. In what then? for a true priest must offer some real sacrifice. If Christ therefore, be a priest for ever according to the order of Melchisedech, whose sacrifice was not bloody, as those of Aaron were, what other sacrifice does he now offer, but that of his own body and blood in the holy Mass, by the ministry of his priests? for he was the priest: this is plainly referred to bringing forth, &c. which shews that word to be sacrificial, as in Judges vi. 18. The Hebrew may be ambiguous. But all know that vau means for as well as and. Thus the English Bible had it, 1552, "for he was the priest." W.—If Josephus take notice only of Melchisedech, offering Abram and his men corporal refreshment, we need not wonder; he was a Jewish priest, to whom the order of Melchisedech might not be agreeable. It is not indeed improbable, but Abram might partake of the meat, which had been offered in thanksgiving by Melchisedech; and in this sense his words are true. But there would be no need of observing, that he was a priest on this account; as this was a piece of civility expected from princes on similar occasions. Deut. xxxiii. 4. 2 K. xvii. 27. H.

VER. 19. Blessed him, as his inferior, and received tithes of him. Heb. iv. 7. This shews the antiquity of the practice of supporting God's priests by tithes 21 And the king of Sodom said to Abram: Give me the persons, and the rest take to thyself.

22 And he answered him: I lift up my hand to the Lord God the most high, the possessor of heaven and earth, 23 That from the very woof-thread unto the shoe latchet, I will not take of any things that are thine, lest thou say: I have enriched Abram.

24 Except such things as the young men have eaten, and the shares of the men that came with me, Aner, Escol, and Mambré: these shall take their shares.

CHAP. XV.

God promiseth seed to Abram. His faith, sacrifice, and vision.

NOW when these things were done, *the word of the Lord came to Abram by a vision, saying: Fear not, Abram, I am thy protector, and thy reward exceeding great.

2 And Abram said: Lord God, what wilt thou give me? I shall go without children: and the son of the steward of my house is this Damascus Eliezer.

3 And Abram added: But to me thou hast not given seed: and lo my servant born in my house, shall be my heir.

4 And immediately the word of the Lord came to him, saying: He shall not be thy heir: but he that shall come out of thy bowels, him shalt thou have for thy heir.

5 And he brought him forth abroad, and said to him: Look up to heaven and number the stars if thou canst. And he said to him: So shall thy seed be.

6 *Abram believed God, and it was reputed to him unto justice.

7 And he said to him: I am the Lord who brought thee out from Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land, and that thou mightest possess it.

VER. 21. The persons (animas) the souls subject to my dominion. H.

VER. 22. I lift up. This is the posture of one swearing solemnly, by which we testify our belief, that God dwells in the heavens, and governs the world. C.

VER. 23. Woof-thread. The first word is added by way of explanation. Abram declares he will not receive the smallest present for himself.

VER. 24. Their shares, due to them on account of the danger to which they had exposed themselves. The king of Sodom could not but accept these conditions with gratitude. In a just war, whatever is taken by the enemy, cannot be reclaimed by the original proprietor, if it be retaken. Grotius, iii. 6. de Jure.

CHAP. XV. VER. 1. Fear not. He might naturally be under some apprehensions, lest the four kings should attempt to be revenged upon him.—Reward, since thou hast so generously despised earthly riches. H.—Abram was not asleep, but saw a vision of exterior objects. v. 5.

VER. 2. I shall go. To what purpose should I heap up riches, since I have no son to inherit them? Abram knew that God had promised him a numerous posterity; but he was not apprized how this was to be verified, and whether he was to adopt some other for his son and heir. Therefore, he asks modestly, how he ought to understand the promise.—And the son, &c. Heb. is differently rendered, "and the steward of my house, this Eliezer of Damascus." We know not whether Eliezer or Damascus be the proper name. The Sept. have "the son of Mesach, my handmaid, this Eliezer of Damascus." Most people suppose, that Damascus was the son of Eliezer, the steward. The sentence is left unfinished, and must be supplied from the following verse, shall be my heir. The son of the steward, filius procuratoris, may mean the steward himself, as the son of perdition denotes the person lost. C.

VER. 6. Reputed by God, who cannot judge wrong; so that Abram increased in justice by this act of faith, believing that his wife, now advanced in years, would have a child; from whom others should spring, more numerous than the stars of heaven. H.—This faith was accompanied and followed by many other acts of virtue. S. Jam. ii. 22. W.

VER. 8. Whereby, &c. Thus the blessed Virgin asked, how shall this be done? Lu. i. 34. without the smallest degree of unbelief. Abram wished to know, by what signs he should be declared the lawful owner of the land. H.

VER. 9. Three years, when these animals have attained a perfect age.

VER. 12. A deep sleep, or ecstasy, like that of Adam. G. ii. 21, wherein God revealed to him the oppression of his posterity in Egypt, which filled him (30)

8 But he said: Lord God, whereby may I know that I shall possess it?

9 And the Lord answered, and said: Take me a cow of three years old, and a she-goat of three years, and a ram of three years, a turtle also, and a pigeon.

10 And he took all these, and divided them in the midst, and laid the two pieces of each one against the other: but the birds he divided not.

11 And the fowls came down upon the carcasses, and Abram drove them away.

12 And when the sun was setting, a deep sleep fell upon Abram, and a great and darksome horror seized upon him.

13 And it was said unto him: *Know thou beforehand that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land not their own, and they shall bring them under bondage, and afflict them four hundred years.

14 But I will judge the nation which they shall serve, and after this they shall come out with great substance.

15 And thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace, and be buried in a good old age.

16 But in the fourth generation they shall return hither: for as yet the iniquities of the Amorrites are not at the full until this present time.

17 And when the sun was set, there arose a dark mist, and there appeared a smoking furnace, and a lamp of fire passing between those divisions.

18 That day God made a covenant with Abram, saying: To thy seed will I give this land, from the river of Egypt even to the great river Euphrates.

19 The Cineans, and Cenezites, the Cedmonites,

20 And the Hethites, and the Pherezites, the Raphaim also, with such horror (M.) as we experience when something frightful comes upon us suddenly in the dark. This darkness represented the dismal situation of Joseph, confined in a dungeon; and of the Hebrews condemned to hard labour, in making bricks, and obliged to hide their male children, for fear of their being discovered, and slain. Before these unhappy days commenced, the posterity of Abram were exposed to great oppression among the Chanaanites, nor could they in any sense be said to possess the land of promise, for above 400 years after this prophetic sleep. H.

21 And the Amorrites, and the Chanaanites, and the Gergesites, and the Jebusites.

VER. 13. Strangers, and under bondage, &c. This prediction may be dated from the persecution of Isaac by Ismael, A. 2112, till the Jews left Egypt, 2518. In Exodus xii. and S. Paul, 430 years are mentioned; but they probably began when Abram went first into Egypt, 2084. Nicholas Abram and Tournemine say, the Hebrews remained in Egypt full 430 years, from the captivity of Joseph, and reject the addition of the Sept. which adds, "they and their fathers dwelt in Egypt, and in Chanaan." On these points, we may expect to find chronologists at variance.

VER. 14. Judge and punish the Egyptians, overwhelming them in the Red sea, &c. H.

VER. 16. Fourth, &c. after the 400 years are finished; during which period of time, God was pleased to bear with those wicked nations; whose iniquity chiefly consisted in idolatry, oppression of the poor and strangers, forbidden marriages of kindred, and abominable lusts. Levit. xviii. Deut. vi. and xii. M.

VER. 17. A lamp, or symbol of the Divinity, passing, as Abram also did, between the divided beasts, to ratify the covenant. See Jer. xxxiv. 18.

VER. 18. Of Egypt, a branch of the Nile, not far from Pelusium. This was to be the southern limit, and the Euphrates the northern; the two other boundaries are given, Num. xxxiv.—Perhaps Solomon's empire extended so far. At least, the Jews would have enjoyed these territories, if they had been faithful. M.

VER. 19. Cineans, in Arabia, of which nation was Jethro. They were permitted to dwell in the tribe of Juda, and served the Hebrews.—Cenezites, who probably inhabited the mountains of Juda.—Cedmonites, or eastern people, as their name shews. Cadmus was of this nation, of the race of the Heveans, dwelling in the environs of mount Hermon, whence his wife was called Hermione. He was, perhaps, one of those who fled at the approach of Josue; and was said to have sowed dragons' teeth, to people his city of Thebes in Beotia, from an allusion to

CHAP. XVI.

Abram marrieth Agar, who bringeth forth Ismael.

NOW Sarai, the wife of Abram, had brought forth no children: but having a handmaid, an Egyptian, named Agar,

2 She said to her husband: Behold, the Lord hath restrained me from bearing: go in unto my handmaid, it may be I may have children of her at least. And when he agreed to her request,

3 She took Agar the Egyptian her handmaid, *ten years after they first dwelt in the land of Chanaan, and gave her to her husband to wife.

4 And he went in to her. But she perceiving that she was with child, despised her mistress.

5 And Sarai said to Abram: Thou dost unjustly with me: I gave my handmaid into thy bosom, and she perceiving herself to be with child, despiseth me. The Lord judge between me and thee.

6 And Abram made answer, and said to her: Behold thy handmaid is in thy own hand, use her as it pleaseth thee. And when Sarai afflicted her, she ran away.

7 And the angel of the Lord having found her, by a fountain of water in the wilderness, which is in the way to Sur in the desert,

8 He said to her: Agar, handmaid of Sarai, whence comest thou? and whither goest thou? And she answered: I flee from the face of Sarai, my mistress.

9 And the angel of the Lord said to her: Return to thy mistress, and humble thyself under her hand.

10 And again he said: I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, and it shall not be numbered for multitude.

11 And again: Behold, said he, thou art with child, and thou shalt bring forth a son: and thou shalt call his name Ismael, because the Lord hath heard thy affliction.

12 He shall be a wild man: his hand will be against all men, and all men's hands against him: and he shall pitch his tents over against all his brethren.

13 And she called the name of the Lord that spoke unto her: Thou the God who hast seen me. For she

VER. 3. Ten years after she was 65; which shews that she might reasonably conclude she would now have no children herself; and as she knew God had promised Abram a son, she thought he might follow the custom of those times, and have him by a second wife. Abram shewed no eagerness on this matter, but only yielded to his wife's petition, deprecanti, being well aware of the inconveniences of polygamy, which Sarai had soon reason to observe. This is the first time we read of polygamy since the deluge; but it is not mentioned as any thing singular or unlawful. This was a matter in which God could dispense; but it was never left to the disposal of any man. Hence, when Luther and his associates ventured to dispense with the Landgrave of Hesse, to keep two wives at once, he required him to keep it a secret, being ashamed of his own conduct. He still maintained it was a thing indifferent, even in the law of grace, though Christ has so expressly condemned it. See præp. 62, 65. The practice, so common of late in this country, of marrying again after a bill of divorce has been passed, is no less contrary to the Catholic doctrine, which allows only a separation of the parties from bed and board, in cases of adultery; but never of a second marriage, while both the parties are living. 1 Cor. vii. S. Aug. de adult. conj. i. de C. D. xvi. 25, 38. and other fathers. H.—It was never lawful for one woman to have two husbands. W.—To wife. Plurality of wives, though contrary to the primitive institution of marriage, Gen. ii. 24. was by divine dispensation allowed to the patriarchs; which allowance seems to have continued during the time of the law of Moses. But Christ our Lord reduced marriage to its primitive institution. S. Matt. xix.

VER. 5. Despised. Few bear prosperity in a proper manner!—And thee. Sarai thinks it is the duty of her husband to restrain the insolence of Agar. She commits her cause to God, and does not seek revenge. M.

CHAP. XVII.

The Covenant of Circumcision.

AND after he began to be ninety and nine years old, the Lord appeared to him: and said unto him: I am the Almighty God: walk before me, and be perfect.

2 And I will make my covenant between me and thee: and I will multiply thee exceedingly.

3 Abram fell flat on his face.

4 And God said to him: I am, and my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations.

5 Neither shall thy name be called any more Abram: but thou shalt be called Abraham: because I have made thee a father of many nations.

6 And I will make thee increase exceedingly, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee.

7 And I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and between thy seed after thee in their generations, by a perpetual covenant: to be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee.

8 And I will give to thee, and to thy seed, the land of thy sojournment, all the land of Chanaan, for a perpetual possession, and I will be their God.

9 Again God said to Abraham: *And thou therefore shalt keep my covenant, and thy seed after thee in their generations.

10 This is my covenant which you shall observe between me and you, and thy seed after thee: All the male-kind of you shall be circumcised.

14 The male whose flesh of his foreskin shall not be circumcised, that soul shall be destroyed out of his people: because he hath broken my covenant.

16 And I will bless her, and of her I will give thee a son, whom I will bless, and he shall become nations, and kings of people shall spring from him.

17 Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, saying in his heart: Shall a son, thinkest thou, be born to him that is a hundred years old? and shall Sara that is ninety years old bring forth?

18 And he said to God: O that Ismael may live before thee.

19 And God said to Abraham: "Sara thy wife shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name Isaac, and I will establish my covenant with him for a perpetual covenant, and with his seed after him.

T.—God always appoints some sign of his covenants, as Jesus Christ instituted the holy sacrament of his body and blood, under exterior appearances, to assure us of his new alliance with Christians. C.—The sacraments of the old law caused grace, only by means of faith in the Redeemer, of which they were signs. S. Aug. de Nupt. i. c. ult. In this sense, the holy fathers assert, that circumcision remitted original sin to those who could receive it; though some think, it was only a bare sign or distinctive mark of the Jews. C.—It is far beneath our baptism, which is more easy, general and efficacious; as the Christian sacraments are not like those of Moses, weak and needy elements. Gal. iv. 9. S. Aug. ep. 158, ad Jan. Ps. 78, &c. W.

VER. 12. Days, when he will be able to bear the pain without danger. This might be deferred for a just reason, as it was in the desert. Jos. v. 6. In this case people might be saved, as younger children and all females might, by the application of the remedies used in the law of nature, sacrifice, the faith of parents, &c. M.—Of your stock, and, being arrived at years of discretion, is desirous of enjoying your privileges. Some think, that slaves had no choice left; but servants, and people who had a mind to live in the country, were not bound to submit to this rite against their will. It is even more probable, that none were under this obligation, except Abraham and his posterity by Isaac. His other children adopted it in part, but not with the exactitude of the Jews. C.

VER. 14. Circumcised. Sept. add "on the eighth day," with the Sam. and many Latin copies. C.—Destroyed, &c. lose the privileges of the Hebrews, or be put to death, when he grows up and does not supply this defect. S. Aug. reading on the eighth day, concluded that as a child of that age, could not, with reason, be put to death for an offence, in which he could have no share, the destruction here threatened is that of the soul, for transgressing, in Adam, the original covenant, and dying in that state unclean, must be excluded from heaven, as people are now who die unbaptized. This difficult passage may, however, be explained as if the threat regarded the negligent parents. "He who shall not circumcise . . . shall be destroyed." Syr. or, as the Heb. may be rendered, "the male that doth not," &c.; in which case, he becomes guilty of a transgression, when he is arrived at the years sufficient to understand his duty, and does not fulfil it. W.

22 And when he had left off speaking with him, God went up from Abraham.

23 And Abraham took Ismael his son, and all that were born in his house: and all whom he had bought, every male among the men of his house: and he circumcised the flesh of their foreskin forthwith the very same day, as God had commanded him.

24 Abraham was ninety and nine years old, when he circumcised the flesh of his foreskin.

25 And Ismael his son was full thirteen years old at the time of his circumcision.

26 The self-same day was Abraham circumcised and Ismael his son.

27 And all the men of his house, as well they that were born in his house, as the bought servants and strangers, were circumcised with him.

CHAP. XVIII.

Angels are entertained by Abraham. They foretell the birth of Isaac. Abraham's prayer for the men of Sodom.

AND the Lord appeared to him "in the vale of Mambre as he was sitting at the door of his tent, in the very heat of the day.

2 And when he had lifted up his eyes, there appeared to him three men standing near to him: and as soon as he saw them, he ran to meet them from the door of his tent, and adored down to the ground.

3 And he said: Lord, if I have found favour in thy sight, pass not away from thy servant.

4 But I will fetch a little water, and wash ye your feet, and rest ye under the tree.

5 And I will set a morsel of bread, and strengthen ye your heart, afterwards you shall pass on: for therefore are you come aside to your servant. And they said: Do as thou hast spoken.

VER. 18. Bless, and enable her to have a son, who shall also have many children.—Whom. This is referred to Sara, in Heb. and Chal.; but to Isaac, in the Syriac. The blessing, at any rate, reverts to the mother; who was a figure of the blessed Virgin, and of the Church; both persecuted with their children: both, in the end, triumphant. Gal. iv. 28. C.

CHAP. XVIII. VER. 1. Sitting, &c. that he might lose no opportunity of exercising hospitality.

VER. 2. Men in outward appearance, but angels indeed. Heb. xiii. 2. S. Aug. de C. D. xvi. c. 29. Some have supposed, that one of them was the Son of God, whom Abraham adored, and who bears throughout the chief authority. Tres vidit & unum adoravit. He saw three and adored one, as we read in the Church office. In the former supposition, which is generally adopted, this adoration was only a civil ceremony, if Abraham considered them as mere men; or it might be mixed with a degree of religious, though inferior veneration, if he imagined they were angels; or in fine, he adored God in his representatives. H.

VER. 4. Wash ye, or let your feet be washed by me, or by my servants laventur. M.

VER. 5. Therefore, Providence has directed you hither. Abraham promises but little, and gives much, in the true spirit of generous hospitality. C.

VER. 6. Measures, or one epha; that is, three pecks and three pints, English corn measure.—Flour, of the finest quality, simile.—Hearth, as being soonest ready

6 Abraham made haste into the tent to Sara, and said to her: Make haste, temper together three measures of flour, and make cakes upon the hearth.

7 And he himself ran to the herd, and took from thence a calf, very tender and very good, and gave it to a young man, who made haste and boiled it.

8 He took also butter and milk, and the calf which he had boiled, and set before them: but he stood by them under the tree.

9 And when they had eaten, they said to him: Where is Sara thy wife? He answered: Lo she is in the tent.

10 And he said to him: *I will return and come to thee at this time, life accompanying, and Sara, thy wife, shall have a son. Which when Sara heard, she laughed behind the door of the tent.

11 Now they were both old, and far advanced in years, and it had ceased to be with Sara after the manner of women.

12 And she laughed secretly, saying: After I am grown old, and my lord is an old man, shall I give myself to pleasure?

13 And the Lord said to Abraham: Why did Sara laugh, saying: Shall I, who am an old woman, bear a child indeed?

14 Is there any thing hard to God? According to appointment I will return to thee at this same time, life accompanying, and Sara shall have a son.

15 Sara denied, saying: I did not laugh: for she was afraid. But the Lord said: Nay; but thou didst laugh.

16 And when the men rose up from thence, they turned their eyes towards Sodom: and Abraham walked with them, bringing them on the way.

17 And the Lord said: Can I hide from Abraham what I am about to do:

18 *Seeing he shall become a great and mighty nation, and in him all the nations of the earth shall be blessed?

19 For I know that he will command his children, and his household after him, to keep the way of the Lord, and do judgment and justice: that for Abraham's sake, the Lord may bring to effect all the things he hath spoken unto him.

20 And the Lord said: The cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is multiplied, and their sin is become exceedingly grievous.

21 I will go down and see whether they have done according to the cry that is come to me; or whether it be not so, that I may know.

22 And they turned themselves from thence, and went their way to Sodom: but Abraham as yet stood before the Lord.

23 And drawing nigh, he said: Wilt thou destroy the just with the wicked?

24 If there be fifty just men in the city, shall they perish withal? and wilt thou not spare that place for the sake of the fifty just, if they be therein?

25 Far be it from thee to do this thing, and to slay the just with the wicked, and for the just to be in like case as the wicked; this is not beseeching thee: thou who judgest all the earth, wilt not make this judgment.

26 And the Lord said to him: If I find in Sodom fifty just within the city, I will spare the whole place for their sake.

27 And Abraham answered, and said: Seeing I have once begun, I will speak to my Lord, whereas I am dust and ashes.

28 What if there be five less than fifty just persons? wilt thou for five and forty destroy the whole city? And he said: I will not destroy it, if I find five and forty.

29 And again he said to him: But if forty be found there, what wilt thou do? He said: I will not destroy it for the sake of forty.

30 Lord, saith he, be not angry, I beseech thee, if I speak: What if thirty shall be found there? He answered: I will not do it, if I find thirty there.

31 Seeing, saith he, I have once begun, I will speak to my Lord: What if twenty be found there? He said: I will not destroy it for the sake of twenty.

32 I beseech thee, saith he, be not angry, Lord, if I speak yet once more: What if ten shall be found there? And he said: I will not destroy it for the sake of ten.

33 And the Lord departed, after he had left speaking to Abraham: and Abraham returned to his place.

CHAP. XIX.

Lot entertaining angels in his house, is delivered from Sodom, which is destroyed: his wife, for looking back, is turned into a statue of salt.

AND the two angels came to Sodom in the evening,^d and Lot was sitting in the gate of the city. And seeing them, he rose up and went to meet them: and worshipped prostrate to the ground.

2 And said: I beseech you, my lords, turn in to the house of your servant, and lodge there: wash your feet, and in the morning you shall go on your way. And they said: No, but we will abide in the street.

3 He pressed them very much to turn in unto him: and when they were come into his house, he made them a feast, and baked unleavened bread, and they ate:

VER. 13. Indeed. This was the import of Sara's words. By thus revealing what was secretly done in the tent, he shewed himself to be more than man.

VER. 14. Hard. So Gabriel says to the blessed Virgin: there is nothing impossible to God.

VER. 15. Afraid; which does not entirely clear her of sin: for though she might innocently laugh, if she thought the person who spoke was only a man, yet she ought not to have told an untruth; and if she reflected, that he had disclosed what she supposed no one knew, and thereby manifested his superiority over man, her denial was still more inexcusable. But she was taken, as it were, by surprise; and therefore the Lord reproves her very gently. H.

VER. 21. I will go down, &c. The Lord here accommodates his discourse to the way of speaking and acting amongst men: for he knoweth all things, and needeth not to go any where for information.—Note here, that two of the three angels went away immediately for Sodom; whilst the third, who represented the Lord, remained with Abraham.

VER. 25. With the wicked. God frequently suffers the just to be here the most afflicted; designing to reward them abundantly hereafter. But this was not so common in the days of Abraham and Job. C.

VER. 32. Ten. Abraham's chief solicitude was for Lot; though, out of modesty, he does not mention him; trusting, however, in the divine goodness, that he would be preserved, unless he had forfeited his justice, he proceeds no farther. God thus challenges Jerusalem to produce one virtuous man, and the city shall be saved for his sake. Jer. v. 1. H.

CHAP. XIX. VER. 1. Ground. Thus shewing himself a true relation and imitator of Abraham.

4 But before they went to bed, the men of the city beset the house, both young and old, all the people together.

5 And they called Lot, and said to him: Where are the men that came in to thee at night? bring them out hither, that we may know them:

6 Lot went out to them, and shut the door after him, and said:

7 Do not so, I beseech you, my brethren, do not commit this evil.

8 I have two daughters who, as yet, have not known man; I will bring them out to you, and abuse you them as it shall please you, so that you do no evil to these men, because they are come in under the shadow of my roof.

9 But they said: Get thee back thither. And again: Thou camest in, said they, as a stranger, was it to be a judge? therefore we will afflict thee more than them. And they pressed very violently upon Lot: and they were even at the point of breaking open the doors.

10 And behold the men put out their hand, and drew in Lot unto them, and shut the door.

11 And them, that were without, they struck with blindness from the least to the greatest, so that they could not find the door.

12 And they said to Lot: Hast thou here any of thine? son-in-law, or sons, or daughters, all that are thine bring them out of this city:

13 For we will destroy this place, because their cry is grown loud before the Lord, who hath sent us to destroy them.

14 So Lot went out, and spoke to his sons-in-law that were with him, and said: Arise: get you out of this place, because the Lord will destroy this city. And he seemed to them to speak as it were in jest.

15 And when it was morning, the angels pressed him, saying: Arise, take thy wife, and the two daughters that thou hast: lest thou also perish in the wickedness of the city.

16 And as he lingered, they took his hand, and the hand of his wife, and of his two daughters, because the Lord spared him.

17 And they brought him forth, and set him without the city: and there they spoke to him, saying: Save thy life: look not back, neither stay thou in all the country about: but save thyself in the mountain, lest thou be also consumed.

18 And Lot said to them: I beseech thee, my Lord,

19 Because thy servant hath found grace before thee, and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast shewn to me, in saving my life, and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil seize me, and I die.

20 There is this city here at hand, to which I may flee, it is a little one, and I shall be saved in it: is it not a little one, and my soul shall live?

21 And he said to him: Behold also in this, I have heard thy prayers, not to destroy the city for which thou hast spoken.

22 Make haste, and be saved there: because I cannot do any thing till thou go in thither. Therefore the name of that city was called Segor.

23 The sun was risen upon the earth, and Lot entered into Segor.

24 And the Lord rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven.

25 And he destroyed these cities, and all the country about, all the inhabitants of the cities, and all things that spring from the earth.

26 And his wife looking behind her, was turned into a statue of salt.

27 And Abraham got up early in the morning, and in the place where he had stood before with the Lord:

VER. 2. My lords. He took them to be men.—No. They refuse at first, that he may have the merit of pressing them to accept the invitation. H.

VER. 4. Together. The whole city was corrupt; even the children were taught iniquity, as soon as they came to the years of discretion. M.

VER. 5. Know them. They boldly proclaim their infamous design.

VER. 7. This evil, so contrary to the rights of hospitality, and the law of nature

VER. 8. Known man. They were neglected, while men were inflamed with desires of each other. See Rom. i. H.—Abuse. Lot tries by every means to divert them from their purpose; being well assured, that they would have nothing to do with his daughters, who were promised to some of the inhabitants. He endeavours to gain time, hoping perhaps that his guests would escape by some back way, while he is talking to the people. H.—Some allow that, under so great a perturbation of mind, he consented to an action which could never be allowed, though it was a less evil. M.

VER. 9. Thither; from whence thou camest, or into the house. Dost thou pretend to tell us what is wrong? We will treat thee more shamefully. M. While they are beginning to offer violence.

VER. 10. Behold, &c. the angels not only secure Lot, but strike the whole people with blindness, so that they could neither find Lot's door nor their own homes. Indeed, if they had been able to get back into their own houses, it would have been but a small consolation to them; since in a few minutes, the whole city was buried in sulphur and flame. Wisd. xix. 16.

VER. 14. Sons-in-law. Perhaps they also were among the crowd, (v. 4.) and therefore deserved to be abandoned to their incredulity; though, if they would have consented to follow Lot, the angels would have saved them for his sake.—In jest. So little did they suffer God's judgments to disturb them!

VER. 16. He lingered, intreating the Lord to save the city; and loath, perhaps to lose all his property, for the sake of which he had chosen that abode.—Spared him, and his wife and two daughters, for his sake. These four were all that were even tolerably just: for we find them all soon giving signs of their weakness, and of the danger to which even the best are exposed by evil communications. H.

VER. 17. Look not back. Flee with all expedition; let no marks of pity for the wretched Sodomites, nor of sorrow for the loss of your property, be seen.

VER. 18. My lord, addressing himself to the angel, who led him and his wife. M.

VER. 19. The mountain above Segor. He is faint-hearted, and does not comply with readiness and exactitude; though, when he had obtained leave to remain in Segor, he still fears, and flees to the mountain, v. 30, (H.) on the south-east of the dead sea. C.

VER. 22. Segor. That is, a little one. Ch.—In allusion to Lot's words, v. 20. As it was small, fewer sinners would of course be contained in it. God had resolved to spare it, and therefore inspired Lot to pray for its preservation. M.—Hence we may learn, how great a treasure and safeguard the just man is. H.

VER. 23. Risen. It was morning when he left Sodom; (v. 15.) so this city must not have been very distant. It was before called Bala, or scallowed up, and afterwards Salissa. Theodoret supposes it was destroyed as soon as Lot had left it; and it seems Lot's daughters thought so, since they concluded all men, except their father, had perished.

VER. 24. The Lord rained . . from the Lord, in a miraculous manner. Sodom and the other cities did not perish by earthquakes and other natural causes only, but by the divine wrath exerting itself in a visible manner. Here is an insinuation of a plurality of persons in God, as the C. of Sirmich declares, c. 14.—And Gomorrah, and the other towns which were not so large, nor perhaps so infamous.—Brimstone and fire; to denote the bad odour and violence of their disorders. M.

VER. 25. All the inhabitants, both body and soul, (Jude v. 7.); even the infants would probably die in original sin, as their parents were unbelievers, and careless of applying the proper remedies. H.—The women imitated the men in pride and dissolute morals, so that all deserved to perish. M.—All things; so that even now the environs are barren, and the lake dark and smoking. T.

VER. 26. And his wife. As a standing memorial to the servants of God to proceed in virtue, and not to look back to vice or its allurements. Ch.—His, Lot's wife. The two last verses might be within a parenthesis.—Remember Lot's wife, our Saviour admonishes us. Having begun a good work, let us not leave it imperfect, and lose our reward. Lu. xvii. Mat. xxiv.—A statue of durable metallic salt, petrified as it were, to be an eternal monument of an incredulous soul. Wisd. x. 7. Some say it still exists. H.—God may have inflicted this temporal punishment on her, and saved her soul. M.—She looked back, as if she distrusted the words of the angel; but her fault was venial. T.

28 He looked towards Sodom and Gomorrha, and the whole land of that country: and he saw the ashes rise up from the earth as the smoke of a furnace.

29 Now when God destroyed the cities of that country, remembering Abraham, he delivered Lot out of the destruction of the cities wherein he had dwelt.

30 And Lot went up out of Segor, and abode in the mountain, and his two daughters with him (for he was afraid to stay in Segor) and he dwelt in a cave, he and his two daughters with him.

31 And the elder said to the younger: Our father is old, and there is no man left on the earth, to come in unto us after the manner of the whole earth.

32 Come, let us make him drunk with wine, and let us lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father.

33 And they made their father drink wine that night: and the elder went in, and lay with her father: but he perceived not, neither when his daughter lay down, nor when she rose up.

34 And the next day the elder said to the younger: Behold I lay last night with my father, let us make him drink wine also to night, and thou shalt lie with him, that we may save seed of our father.

35 They made their father drink wine that night also, and the younger daughter went in, and lay with him: and neither then did he perceive when she lay down, nor when she rose up.

36 So the two daughters of Lot were with child by their father.

37 And the elder bore a son, and she called his name Moab: he is the father of the Moabites unto this day.

38 The younger also bore a son, and she called his name Ammon; that is, the son of my people: he is the father of the Ammonites unto this day.

CHAP. XX.

Abraham sojourneth in Gerara: Sara is taken into king Abimelech's house, but by God's commandment, is restored untouched.

ABRAM removed from thence* to the south country, and dwelt between Cades and Sur, and sojourned in Gerara.

* A. M. 2107.

VER. 29. Lot. Even he owed his safety to the merits of Abraham.
VER. 31. No man. If this had been true, Lot might have had children by them, without any fault. But they ought to have consulted him. H.

VER. 35. Rose up; being oppressed with grief and wine, which would not excuse him from sin, particularly this second time. M.

VER. 37. Elder. She first proposes: she is not ashamed to call her child Moab, "frota father." The younger is rather more modest, and calls her son Ammon, "my people," not born of the Sodomites. Many reasons might be alleged to extenuate, or even to excuse the conduct of Lot and his daughters, as many of the fathers have done. But the Scripture barely leaves it upon record, without either commendation or blame. H.

CHAP. XX. VER. 1. Gerara; at a greater distance from the devoted country of Sodom. H.

VER. 2. He said to the king, and to all others who made inquiry, as it was his custom, whenever he came into a strange land, v. 13. He was encouraged to do this, by the protection which God had shewn him in Egypt.—Took her, against her will, as Pharo had done. H.—Though she was ninety years old, and with child, her beauty was still extraordinary, the Rabbin think miraculous. At that time, people lived above 120 years; so that at the age of ninety, she would only be about as near the end of her life as our women are at forty; and we often see people sufficiently attracting at that age. C.

VER. 3. Abimelech. This was an usual title of kings in Chanaan, and a very good one, to remind them and their subjects, of their obligations, (H.) as it means "my father the king." The behaviour of this prince shews, that as yet all sense of duty and knowledge of the true God, was not banished from the country. C.—Shalt die, unless thou restore the woman, whom thou hast taken by force; on whose account, I have already afflicted thee, (v. 7. 17.) and thus prevented thee from touching her. This testimony was more requisite, that there might be no doubt respecting Isaac's legitimacy. H.

2 And he said of Sara his wife: She is my sister. So Abimelech the king of Gerara sent, and took her.

3 And God came to Abimelech in a dream by night, and he said to him: Lo thou shalt die for the woman that thou hast taken: for she hath a husband.

4 Now Abimelech had not touched her, and he said: Lord, wilt thou slay a nation that is ignorant and just?

5 Did not he say to me: She is my sister: and she say, He is my brother? in the simplicity of my heart, and cleanness of my hands have I done this.

6 And God said to him: And I know that thou didst it with a sincere heart: and therefore I withheld thee from sinning against me, and I suffered thee not to touch her.

7 Now therefore restore the man his wife, for he is a prophet: and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live: but if thou wilt not restore her, know that thou shalt surely die, thou and all that are thine.

8 And Abimelech forthwith rising up in the night, called all his servants: and spoke all these words in their hearing, and all the men were exceedingly afraid.

9 And Abimelech called also for Abraham, and said to him: What hast thou done to us? what have we offended thee in, that thou hast brought upon me and upon my kingdom a great sin? thou hast done to us what thou oughtest not to do.

10 And again he expostulated with him, and said: What sawest thou, that thou hast done this?

11 Abraham answered: I thought with myself, saying: Perhaps there is not the fear of God in this place: and they will kill me for the sake of my wife:

12 Howbeit, otherwise also she is truly my sister,* the daughter of my father, and not the daughter of my mother, and I took her to wife.

13 And after God brought me out of my father's house, I said to her: *Thou shalt do me this kindness: In every place, to which we shall come, thou shalt say that I am thy brother.

14 And Abimelech took sheep and oxen, and servants and handmaids, and gave to Abraham: and restored to him Sara his wife, VER. 5. He say, &c. The pronouns in Heb. are printed very incorrectly.—He is my sister; and she, even he, said. Ken.

VER. 6. Sincere heart, abhorring adultery, but not altogether innocent. M.

VER. 7. A prophet. One under my particular care, to whom I reveal many things.—He shall pray for thee. Behold, God will sometimes grant, at the request of his saints, what he would deny even such as Abimelech or the friends of Job. Is not this sufficient encouragement for us, to have recourse to the intercession of the saints? And can any one be so foolish as to pretend this is making gods of them, and shewing them an idolatrous worship? H.

VER. 8. In the night, (de nocte) or "as soon as it began to dawn." Sept.

VER. 9. Why, &c. He expostulates with him in a friendly but earnest manner.—A great sin, or punishment, (M.) v. 13, and exposed me to the danger of committing adultery. Abraham might have answered, this would have been his own fault, as he could not have done it without offering violence to Sara, in whose chastity he could confide. Having an opportunity here to vindicate himself, Abraham speaks freely, which he was not allowed to do in Egypt. G. xii. 20.

VER. 12. My sister, or niece, according to those who say she was daughter of Aran, who thus must have had a different mother from Abraham; (M.) or, as we rather think, Sara was truly his half-sister, born of Thare by another wife. His adding truly, seems to restrain it to this sense; and we know that in those countries, marriages of such near relations were allowed, though not when both had the same parents. Why should we not, therefore, believe Abraham, who certainly knew the real state of the question, and who would not tell a lie, rather than seek for improbable and far-fetched solutions! Said, who lived eight hundred years ago, mentions the name of Jona, Abraham's mother, as well as that of Tehevit, who bore Sara to Thare. The Hebrews in general, give this explanation. C.—By calling Sara his sister without any addition, Abraham intended that the people should conclude he was not married: therefore he did not say she was his half-sister, as this would have frustrated his design, if, as Clem.

15 And said: The land is before you, dwell where-soever it shall please thee.

16 And to Sara he said: Behold I have given thy brother a thousand pieces of silver, this shall serve thee for a covering of thy eyes to all that are with thee, and whithersoever thou shalt go: and remember thou wast taken.

17 And when Abraham prayed, God healed Abimelech and his wife, and his handmaids, and they bore children:

18 For the Lord had closed up every womb of the house of Abimelech, on account of Sara, Abraham's wife.

CHAP. XXI.

Isaac is born. Agar and Ismael are cast forth.

AND the Lord visited* Sara, as he had promised: and fulfilled what he had spoken.

2 And she conceived and bore a son in her old age, at the time that God had foretold her.

3 And Abraham called the name of his son, whom Sara bore him, Isaac.*

4 And he circumcised him the eighth day, as God had commanded him,

5 When he was a hundred years old: for at this age of his father, was Isaac born.

6 And Sara said: God hath made a laughter for me: whosoever shall hear of it will laugh with me.

7 And again she said: Who would believe that Abraham should hear that Sara gave suck to a son, whom she bore to him in his old age?

8 And the child grew, and was weaned: and Abraham made a great feast on the day of his weaning.

9 And when Sara had seen the son of Agar, the Egyptian, playing with Isaac, her son, she said to Abraham:

10 Cast out this bond-woman and her son; for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with my son Isaac.

11 Abraham took this grievously for his son.

12 And God said to him: Let it not seem grievous to thee for the boy, and for thy bond-woman: in all that Sara hath said to thee, hearken to her voice: for in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

13 But I will make the son also of the bond-woman a great nation, because he is thy seed.

14 So Abraham rose up in the morning, and taking bread and a bottle of water, put it upon her shoulder, and delivered the boy, and sent her away. And she departed, and wandered in the wilderness of Bersabee.

15 And when the water in the bottle was spent, she cast the boy under one of the trees that were there.

16 And she went her way, and sat over-against him a great way off, as far as a bow can carry, for she said: I will not see the boy die: and sitting over-against, she lifted up her voice and wept.

17 And God heard the voice of the boy: and an angel of God called to Agar from heaven, saying: What art thou doing, Agar? fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the boy, from the place wherein he is.

18 Arise, take up the boy, and hold him by the hand, for I will make him a great nation.

19 And God opened her eyes: and she saw a well of water, and went and filled the bottle, and gave the boy to drink.

20 And God was with him: and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderness, and became a young man, an archer.

21 And he dwelt in the wilderness of Pharan, and his mother took a wife for him out of the land of Egypt.

22 At the same time Abimelech, and Phicol the general of his army, said to Abraham: God is with thee in all that thou dost.

23 Swear therefore by God, that thou wilt not hurt me, nor my posterity, nor my stock: but according to the kindness that I have done to thee, thou shalt do to me, and to the land wherein thou hast lived a stranger.

24 And Abraham said: I will swear.

25 And he reproved Abimelech for a well of water, which his servants had taken away by force.

26 And Abimelech answered: I knew not who did

VER. 16. Thy brother, as thou hast agreed to call thy husband.—Pieces, or pieces of silver, worth a little above 2s. 3d. each; total, £113 sterling.—A covering, or veil, to shew thou art married, and prevent thee from being taken by any one hereafter. It was to be so rich, that all might know her quality. S. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 5. 15.) orders women to be covered. C.

VER. 17. Healed. It is not known how God afflicted Abimelech; but the women could not be delivered during the short time that Sara was detained: on her being set at liberty, they bore children. M.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. Visited, either by the angel, C. xviii. 10, or by enabling her to have what he had promised, at the return of the season.

VER. 3. Isaac. This word signifies laughter; (Ch.) or “he shall laugh,” and be the occasion of joy to many as S. John was. Luke i. 14; and thus Sara seems to explain it, v. 6.

VER. 7. Gave suck; a certain proof that the child was born of her. M.—His old age, when both the parents were far advanced in years, v. 2. The mother being ninety at this time, would render the event most surprising. H.

VER. 8. Weaned. S. Jerom says when he was five years old, though some said twelve.* The age of men being prolonged, their infancy continued longer. One of the Machabees suckled her child three years. 2 Mac. vii. 27. 2 Par. xxxi. 16. C.—Feast. The life of the child being now considered in less danger. From the time of conception till this took place, the husband kept at a distance from his wife. S. Clem. Strom. iii. Samuel's mother made a feast or present when she weaned him. 1 K. i. 24. M.

VER. 9. Playing, or persecuting, as S. Paul explains it. Gal. iv. 29. The play tended to pervert the morals of the young Isaac, whether we understand this term metachak, as implying idolatry, or obscene actions, or fighting; in all which senses it is used in Scripture. See Ex. xxxii. 6. G. xxvi. 8. 2 K. ii. 14. M.

Ismael was 13 years older than Isaac; and took occasion, perhaps, from the feast, and other signs of preference given by his parents to the latter, to hate and persecute him, which Sara soon perceiving, was forced to have recourse to the expedient apparently so harsh, of driving Ismael and his mother from the house, that they might have an establishment of their own, and not disturb Isaac in the inheritance after the death of Abraham. H.—In this she was guided by a divine light; (M.) and not by any female antipathy, v. 12. Many of the actions of worldlings, which at first sight may appear innocent, have a natural and fatal tendency to pervert the morals of the just; and therefore, we must keep as much as possible at a distance from their society.—With Isaac her son. Heb. has simply mocking, without mentioning what. But the sequel shews the true meaning; and this addition was found in some Bibles in the days of S. Jerom, as he testifies, and is expressed in the Sept. H.—Ismael was a figure of the synagogue, which persecuted the Church of Christ in her birth. D.

VER. 11. For his son. He does not express any concern for Agar. But we cannot doubt but he would feel to part with her also. It was prudent to let both go together: and the mother had perhaps encouraged Ismael, at least by neglecting to punish or to watch over him, and so deserved to share in his affliction.

VER. 14. Bread and water. This seems a very slender allowance to be given by a man of Abraham's riches. But he might intend her to go only into the neighbourhood, where he would take care to provide for her. She lost herself in the wilderness, and thus fell into imminent danger of perishing. H.—This divorce of Agar, and ejection of Ismael, prefigured the reprobation of the Jews.

VER. 17. Of the boy, who was 17 years old, and wept at the approach of death.—Fear not. You are under the protection of God, who will not abandon you, when all human succour fails; nor will he neglect his promises. G. 16. H.

VER. 20. Wilderness, in Arabia Petrea.—An archer, living on plunder. C.

VER. 22. Abimelech, king of Gerar, who knew that Abraham was a prophet, and a favourite of God. G. xx. 7. H.

VER. 23. Hurt me. Heb. “lie unto me,” or revolt and disturb the peace of my people.

VER. 24. I will swear. The matter was of sufficient importance, Abraham this thing: and thou didst not tell me, and I heard not of it till to-day.

27 Then Abraham took sheep and oxen, and gave them to Abimelech: and both of them made a league.

28 And Abraham set apart seven ewe-lambs of the flock.

29 And Abimelech said to him: What mean these seven ewe-lambs which thou hast set apart?

30 But he said: Thou shalt take seven ewe-lambs at my hand: that they may be a testimony for me, that I dug this well.

31 Therefore that place was called Bersabee; because there both of them did swear.

32 And they made a league for the well of oath.

33 And Abimelech and Phicol, the general of his army, arose and returned to the land of the Palestines. But Abraham planted a grove in Bersabee, and there called upon the name of the Lord God eternal.

34 And he was a sojourner in the land of the Palestines many days.

CHAP. XXII.

The faith and obedience of Abraham is proved, in his readiness to sacrifice his son Isaac. He is stayed from the act by an angel. Former promises are renewed to him. His brother Nachor's issue.

AFTER these things, ^aGod tempted Abraham, ^band said to him: Abraham, Abraham. And he answered: Here I am.

2 He said to him: Take thy only begotten son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and go into the land of vision; and there thou shalt offer him for an holocaust upon one of the mountains which I will shew thee.

3 So Abraham rising up in the night, saddled his ass, and took with him two young men, and Isaac his son: and when he had cut wood for the holocaust, he went his way to the place which God had commanded him.

4 And on the third day, lifting up his eyes, he saw the place afar off.

binds himself, but not his posterity, who by God's order fought against the descendants of this king.

VER. 27. Gave them; thus rendering good for evil. D.

VER. 31. Bersabee. That is, the well of oath; (Ch.) or "the well of the seven;" meaning the seven ewe-lambs set apart. M.—This precaution of Abraham, in giving seven lambs as a testimony that the well was dug by him, was not without reason. See G. xxvi. 16. C.

VER. 33. A grove: in the midst of which was an altar, dedicated to the Lord God eternal; to testify that he alone was incapable of change. Thither Abraham frequently repaired, to thank God for all his favours. Temples were not probably as yet known in any part of the world. The ancient saints, Abraham, Isaac, Josue, &c. were pleased to shew their respect for God, and their love of retirement, by planting groves, and consecrating altars to the supreme Deity. If this laudable custom was afterwards perverted by the idolaters, and hence forbidden to God's people, we need not wonder. The best things may be abused; and when they become a source of scandal, we must avoid them. H. Jos. xxix. 26. Deut. xvi. 23. Jud. vi. 25.

CHAP. XXII. VER. 1. God tempted, &c. God tempteth no man to evil, James i. 13. But by trial and experiment, maketh known to the world and to ourselves, what we are; as here by this trial the singular faith and obedience of Abraham was made manifest. Ch.

VER. 2. Thy only begotten, or thy most beloved, as if he had been an only child; in which sense the word is often taken, 1 Par. xxix. 1. Ismael was still living; but Isaac was the only son of Sara, the most dignified wife.—Lovest. Heb. "hast loved" hitherto; now thou must consider him as dead. He has been to thee a source of joy, but now he will be one of tears and mourning.—Of vision. Sept. "high," being situated on Mount Moria, by which name it was afterwards distinguished, v. 14. M.—Every word in this astonishing command, tended to cut Abraham to the heart; and hence we may the more admire the strength and disinterestedness of his faith. He could hope, in a manner, against hope, knowing in whom he had trusted, and convinced that God would not deceive him, though he was at a loss to explain in what manner Isaac should have children after he was sacrificed. H.

VER. 3. In the night: de nocte, Heb. "very early in the morning."—His son,

5 And he said to his young men: Stay you here with the ass; I and the boy will go with speed as far as yonder, and after we have worshipped, will return to you.

6 And he took the wood for the holocaust, and laid it upon Isaac his son; and he himself carried in his hands fire and a sword. And as they two went on together,

7 Isaac said to his father: My father. And he answered: What wilt thou, son? Behold, saith he, fire and wood: where is the victim for the holocaust?

8 And Abraham said: God will provide himself a victim for an holocaust, my son. So they went on together.

9 And they came to the place which God had shewn him, where he built an altar, and laid the wood in order upon it; and when he had bound Isaac his son, he laid him on the altar upon the pile of wood.

10 ^aAnd he put forth his hand, and took the sword, to sacrifice his son.

11 And behold, an angel of the Lord from heaven called to him, saying: Abraham, Abraham. And he answered: Here I am.

12 And he said to him: Lay not thy hand upon the boy, neither do thou any thing to him: now I know that thou fearest God, and hast not spared thy only begotten son for my sake.

13 Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw behind his back a ram, amongst the briers, sticking fast by the horns, which he took and offered for a holocaust instead of his son.

14 And he called the name of that place, The Lord seeth. Whereupon, even to this day, it is said: In the mountain the Lord will see.

15 And the angel of the Lord called to Abraham a second time from heaven, saying:

16 ^bBy my own self have I sworn, saith the Lord: because thou hast done this thing, and hast not spared thy only begotten son for my sake:

^a Ps. civ. 9. Eccli. xlv. 21. 1 Macab. ii. 52. Luke i. 73. Heb. vi. 18. and 17.

25 years old, without perhaps saying a word to Sara about the intended sacrifice; though some believe, he had too great an opinion of her faith and constancy, not to reveal to her the order of God. The Scripture is silent. C.

VER. 5. Will return. He hoped, perhaps, that God would restore Isaac to life: (Heb. xi. 19.) and he could not well express himself otherwise to the men, who were not acquainted with the divine decree. C.

VER. 7. Holocaust. These were probably the only sacrifices yet in use. C.—The conversation of Isaac could not fail to pierce the heart of his father. M.

VER. 9. The place. Mount Moria, on part of which the temple was built afterwards; and on another part, called Calvary, our Saviour was crucified, having carried his cross, as Isaac did the wood for sacrifice.—His son: having first explained to him the will of God, to which Isaac gave his free consent; otherwise, being in the vigour of his youth, he might easily have hindered his aged father, who was 125 years old, from binding him. But in this willingness to die, as in many other particulars, he was a noble figure of J. C., who was offered because it was His will. H.

VER. 10. To sacrifice; a thing hitherto unprecedented, and which God would never suffer to be done in his honour, though he was pleased to try the obedience of his servant so far. The pagans afterwards took occasion, perhaps, from this history, to suppose, that human victims would be the most agreeable to their false deities: (C.) but in this misconception they were inexcusable, since God prevented the sacrifice from being really offered to him, in the most earnest manner, saying, Abraham, Abraham, as if there were danger lest the holy man should not hear the first call. H.

VER. 12. Hast not spared. Thus the intentions of the heart become worthy of praise, or of blame, even when no exterior effect is perceived. H.

VER. 13. He took; God having given him the dominion over it. C.

VER. 14. Will see. This became a proverbial expression, used by people in distress, who, remembering how Abraham had been relieved, endeavoured to comfort themselves with hopes of relief. Some translate the Lord will be seen; which was verified when Christ was crucified. M.—Or he will provide, alluding to what was said, v. 8.

VER. 16. Own self as he could not swear by any one greater. Heb. vi. 13. Jer. xxii. 5.

17 I will bless thee, and I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand that is by the sea shore; thy seed shall possess the gates of their enemies.

18 *And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice.

19 Abraham returned to his young men, and they went to Bersabee together, and he dwelt there.

20 After these things, it was told Abraham, that Melcha also had borne children to Nachor his brother.

21 Hus, the first-born, and Buz, his brother, and Camuel the father of the Syrians,

22 And Cased, and Azau, and Pheldas, and Jedlaph, 23 And Bathuel, of whom was born Rebecca: these eight did Melcha bear to Nachor, Abraham's brother.

24 And his concubine, named Roma, bore Tabee, and Gaham, and Tahas, and Maacha.

CHAP. XXIII.

Sara's death, and burial in the field bought of Ephron.

AND Sara lived a hundred and twenty-seven years. 2 And she died^b in the city of Arbee which is Hebron, in the land of Chanaan: and Abraham came to mourn and weep for her.

3 And after he rose up from the funeral obsequies, he spoke to the children of Heth, saying:

4 I am a stranger and sojourner among you: give me the right of a burying place with you, that I may bury my dead.

5 The children of Heth answered, saying:

6 My lord, hear us, thou art a prince of God among us: bury thy dead in our principal sepulchres: and no man shall have power to hinder thee from burying thy dead in his sepulchre.

7 Abraham rose up, and bowed down to the people of the land, to wit, the children of Heth:

8 And said to them: If it please your soul that I should bury my dead, hear me, and intercede for me to Ephron the son of Seor.

9 That he may give me the double cave, which he hath in the end of his field: for as much money as it is worth he shall give it me before you, for a possession of a burying place.

VER. 20. Children. These are mentioned here, to explain the marriage of Isaac with Rebecca, the grand-daughter of Nachor and Melcha.

VER. 24. Concubine, or wife, secondary in privileges, love and dignity. Though Nachor did not, perhaps, imitate the faith and virtue of his brother Abraham, but mixed various superstitions with the knowledge of the true God; yet we need not condemn him, for having more wives than one. H.

CHAP. XXIII. VER. 1. Sara. She is the only woman whose age the Scripture specifies; a distinction which her exalted dignity and faith deserved. Gal. iv. 23. Heb. xi. 11. She was a figure of the Christian Church. C.

VER. 2. City. Heb. Cariath arbah. Jos. xiv. 15.—Which is Hebron. Serarius thinks it took its name from the society (clique) between Abraham and the princes of the city. Hebron the son of Caleb possessed it afterwards.—Came from Bersabee, (G. xxii. 19.) or to the place where the corpse lay, at Arbee, which signifies four; as Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with their four wives, reposed there. C.—And weep. In the middle of this word, in the printed Hebrew, there is left a small e; whence the Rabbins ridiculously infer, that Abraham wept but a short time. But the retaining of greater, less, suspended and inverted letters in the Hebrew Bible, can be attributed to no other cause than a scrupulous veneration even for the faults of transcribers. Kennicott.

VER. 3. Obsequies, or solemn mourning, accompanied with prayer. Act. viii. 2. Matt. xii. The Jews are still accustomed to say, when they bury their dead, (38)

10 Now Ephron dwelt in the midst of the children of Heth. And Ephron made answer to Abraham in the hearing of all that went in at the gate of the city, saying:

11 Let it not be so, my lord, but do thou rather hearken to what I say: The field I deliver to thee, and the cave that is therein; in the presence of the children of my people, bury thy dead.

12 Abraham bowed down before the people of the land.

13 And he spoke to Ephron, in the presence of the people: I beseech thee to hear me: I will give money for the field; take it, and so will I bury my dead in it.

14 And Ephron answered:

15 My lord, hear me. The ground which thou desirest, is worth four hundred sicles of silver: this is the price between me and thee: but what is this? bury thy dead.

16 And when Abraham had heard this, he weighed out the money that Ephron had asked, in the hearing of the children of Heth, four hundred sicles of silver, of common current money.

17 And the field that before was Ephron's, wherein was the double cave, looking towards Mambre, both it and the cave, and all the trees thereof, in all its limits round about, 18 Was made sure to Abraham for a possession, in the sight of the children of Heth, and of all that went in at the gate of his city.

19 And so Abraham buried Sara, his wife, in the double cave of the field, that looked towards Mambre,* this is Hebron in the land of Chanaan.

20 And the field was made sure to Abraham, and the cave that was in it, for a possession to bury in, by the children of Heth.

Abraham's servant sent by him into Mesopotamia; bringeth from thence Rebecca, who is married to Isaac.

NOW Abraham was old,^a and advanced in age; and the Lord had blessed him in all things.

"Ye fathers, who sleep in Hebron, open to him the gates of Eden;" herein agreeing with the Catholic doctrine, as they did in the days of Judas the Machabee. H.

VER. 6. Prince of God, powerful and holy, and worthy of respect. H.—A great prince. See Acts vii. 5. where S. Stephen says, that God did not give Abraham a foot of land, meaning as an inheritance; and that Abraham bought this double cave, for a sepulchre, of the sons of Hemor, the son of Sichem; (C.) from which latter he seems to derive the name of the place, which is here called Hebron. H.—Nothing is more common, than for men and places to have two names; though some think, the name of Abraham has been inserted in the Acts by a mistake of the copyists, when Jacob was meant. See G. xxxiii. 19. C.

VER. 7. Bowed down to the people. Adoravit, literally adored. But this word here, as well as in many other places in the Latin Scriptures, is used to signify only an inferior honour and reverence paid to men, expressed by a bowing down of the body.

VER. 16. Sicles. About £50. H.—It was no simony to buy land for a sepulchre, as it was not blessed. M.—Current money, was such as passed among merchants, though probably not yet coined in any part of the world; and therefore we find, that Abraham and others weigh the pieces of silver or gold. In this manner were bargains concluded before witnesses, who in those days supplied the want of writings and lawyers. C.

CHAP. XXIV. VER. 2. Servant. Eliezer, or Damascus, whom he had once intended for his heir. C. xv. 2. H.—Under, &c. either to shew their subjection, (Sa.) or their faith in Christ, who should be born of Abraham, (S. Jer. ep. 140) or to testify that their oath shall be no less binding than the covenant of circumcision. For this last reason, the Jews still observe the custom of sitting upon the hand of the person who takes an oath. M. See C. xlvii. 29. where Jacob imitates the action of his grand-father. These two patriarchs, progenitors of Christ, son, of the daughters of the Chanaanites, among whom I dwell:

4 But that thou go to my own country and kindred, and take a wife from thence for my son Isaac.

5 The servant answered: If the woman will not come with me into this land, must I bring thy son back again to the place from whence thou camest out?

6 And Abraham said: Beware thou never bring my son back again thither.

7 The Lord God of heaven, who took me out of my father's house, and out of my native country, who spoke to me, and swore to me, saying: "To thy seed will I give this land: he will send his angel before thee, and thou shalt take from thence a wife for my son."

8 But if the woman will not follow thee, thou shalt not be bound by the oath: only bring not my son back thither again.

9 The servant, therefore, put his hand under the thigh of Abraham, his lord, and swore to him upon this word.

10 And he took ten camels of his master's herd, and departed, carrying something of all his goods with him, and he set forward and went on to Mesopotamia, to the city of Nachor.

11 And when he had made the camels lie down without the town, near a well of water, in the evening, at the time when women are wont to come out to draw water, he said:

12 O Lord, the God of my master, Abraham, meet me, to-day, I beseech thee, and shew kindness to my master, Abraham.

13 Behold, I stand nigh the spring of water, and the daughters of the inhabitants of this city will come out to draw water:

14 Now, therefore, the maid to whom I shall say: Let down thy pitcher that I may drink: and she shall answer, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: let it be the same whom thou hast provided for thy servant Isaac: and by this, I shall understand that thou hast shewn kindness to my master.

15 He had not yet ended these words within himself, and behold Rebecca came out, the daughter of Bathuel, son of Melcha, wife to Nachor the brother of Abraham, having a pitcher on her shoulder:*

16 An exceeding comely maid, and a most beautiful virgin, and not known to man: and she went down to the spring, and filled her pitcher, and was coming back.

17 And the servant ran to meet her, and said: Give me a little water to drink of thy pitcher.

18 And she answered: Drink, my lord. And quickly she let down the pitcher upon her arm, and gave him drink.

are the only ones in Scripture whom we find practising it; whence S. Aug. and S. Ambrose conclude, that it had a reference to the mysterious birth of our Redeemer. Bouffere.

VER. 4. Country. Haran, where Abraham had dwelt with Thare, &c. There Nachor's family still resided, and had more respect for the true God than the Chanaanites, (H.) though they gave way to some sort of idolatry. M.—Hence Abraham was in hopes that a partner worthy of Isaac, might be found among his relations, better than among those devoted nations; and thus he has left an instruction to all parents, to be solicitous for the real welfare of their children; and to dissuade them earnestly from marrying with infidels; a thing which God forbade in the old law, as the Church still does in the new. H.

VER. 5. If the woman. Thus he shews his religious respect for an oath; and will not depend on his own explanation of the sense of it. C.

19 And when he had drunk, she said: I will draw water for thy camels also, till they all drink.

20 And pouring out the pitcher into the troughs, she ran back to the well to draw water; and having drawn, she gave to all the camels.

21 But he musing, beheld her with silence, desirous to know whether the Lord had made his journey prosperous or not.

22 And after that the camels had drunk, the man took out golden ear-rings, weighing two sicles; and as many bracelets, of ten sicles weight.

23 And he said to her: Whose daughter art thou? tell me: is there any place in thy father's house to lodge?

24 And she answered: I am the daughter of Bathuel, the son of Melcha, whom she bore to Nachor.

25 And she said, moreover, to him: We have good store of both straw and hay, and a large place to lodge in.

26 The man bowed himself down, and adored the Lord,

27 Saying: Blessed be the Lord God of my master Abraham, who hath not taken away his mercy and truth from my master, and hath brought me the straight way into the house of my master's brother.

28 Then the maid ran, and told in her mother's house all that she had heard.

29 And Rebecca had a brother, named Laban, who went out in haste to the man, to the well.

30 And when he had seen the ear-rings and bracelets in his sister's hands, and had heard all that she related, saying, Thus and thus the man spoke to me: he came to the man who stood by the camels, and near to the spring of water, 31 And said to him: Come in, thou blessed of the Lord; why standest thou without? I have prepared the house, and a place for the camels.

32 And he brought him into his lodging; and he unharnessed the camels, and gave straw and hay, and water to wash his feet, and the feet of the men that were come with him.

33 And bread was set before him. But he said: I will not eat, till I tell my message. He answered him: Speak.

34 And he said: I am the servant of Abraham:

35 And the Lord hath blessed my master wonderfully, and he is become great: and he hath given him sheep and oxen, silver and gold, men servants and women servants, camels and asses.

36 And Sara, my master's wife, hath borne my master a son in her old age, and he hath given him all that he had.

shalt not take a wife for my son of the Chanaanites, in whose land I dwell:

38 But thou shalt go to my father's house, and shalt take a wife of my own kindred for my son:

39 But I answered my master: What if the woman will not come with me?

40 The Lord, said he, in whose sight I walk, will send his angel with thee, and will direct thy way: and thou shalt take a wife for my son of my own kindred, and of my father's house.

41 But thou shalt be clear from my curse, when thou shalt come to my kindred, if they will not give thee one.

42 And I came to-day to the well of water, and said: O Lord God of my master, Abraham, if thou hast prospered my way, wherein I now walk,

43 Behold, I stand by the well of water, and the virgin, that shall come out to draw water, who shall hear me say: Give me a little water to drink of thy pitcher:

44 And shall say to me: Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy camels: let the same be the woman, whom the Lord hath prepared for my master's son.

45 And whilst I pondered these things secretly with myself, Rebecca appeared, coming with a pitcher, which she carried on her shoulder: and she went down to the well and drew water. And I said to her: Give me a little to drink.

46 And she speedily let down the pitcher from her shoulder, and said to me: Both drink thou, and to thy camels I will give drink. I drank, and she watered the camels.

47 And I asked her, and said: Whose daughter art thou? And she answered: I am the daughter of Bathuel, the son of Nachor, whom Melcha bore to him. So I put ear-rings on her to adorn her face, and I put bracelets on her hands.

48 And falling down, I adored the Lord, blessing the Lord God of my master, Abraham, who hath brought me the straight way to take the daughter of my master's brother for his son.

49 Wherefore, if you do according to mercy and truth with my master, tell me, but if it please you otherwise, tell me that also, that I may go to the right hand, or to the left.

50 And Laban and Bathuel answered: The word hath proceeded from the Lord: we cannot speak any other thing to thee but his pleasure.

VER. 41. Curse, which always attends the person who does not endeavour to comply with a lawful oath. H.—The Hebrews commonly added in this sense, May God do these things to me, and still more, if I prove false. M.—In this sense, Abraham's steward gives the meaning of his master, as he had hitherto repeated his very words at full length. This perfectly agrees with the style of the heroic ages; such as we find expressed in the poems of Homer, the most ancient work of any heathen author. The account which he gives of the noble simplicity of those ages, when the ladies went for water, and princes prepared the entertainments for their guests, cannot fail to strike us, when we compare the works of that admired author with the inspired writings. H.

VER. 49. Left, in quest of some other lady of my master's kindred; as some of Bathuel's brothers might also have children. He was the youngest. H.

VER. 50. Laban is placed before his father, having perhaps the administration of affairs in Bathuel's old age; and he had first introduced the stranger. M.

VER. 53. Present. Thus ratifying what he had already done (v. 22.) and obtaining full consent, both of the virgin, and of her father and brother.

VER. 54. Morning. He loses no time to afford comfort to his masters, and to give proof that he was not esteemed by them without reason.

VER. 57. Let us call the maid, and ask her will. Not as to her marriage, 51 Behold, Rebecca is before thee, take her and go thy way, and let her be the wife of thy master's son, as the Lord hath spoken.

52 Which when Abraham's servant heard, falling down to the ground, he adored the Lord.

53 And bringing forth vessels of silver and gold, and garments, he gave them to Rebecca, for a present. He offered gifts also to her brothers, and to her mother.

54 And a banquet was made, and they ate and drank together, and lodged there. And in the morning, the servant arose, and said: Let me depart, that I may go to my master.

55 And her brother and mother answered: Let the maid stay, at least, ten days with us, and afterwards she shall depart.

56 Stay me not, said he, because the Lord hath prospered my way: send me away, that I may go to my master.

57 And they said: Let us call the maid, and ask her will.

58 And they called her, and when she was come, they asked: Wilt thou go with this man? She said: I will go.

59 So they sent her away, and her nurse, and Abraham's servant, and his company.

60 Wishing prosperity to their sister, and saying: Thou art our sister, mayst thou increase to thousands of thousands; and may thy seed possess the gates of their enemies.

61 So Rebecca and her maids, being set upon camels, followed the man: who with speed returned to his master.

62 At the same time, Isaac was walking along the way to the well *which is called Of the living and the seeing: for he dwelt in the south country:

63 And he was gone forth to meditate in the field, the day being now well spent: and when he had lifted up his eyes, he saw camels coming afar off.

64 Rebecca also, when she saw Isaac, lighted off the camel,

65 And said to the servant: Who is that man who cometh towards us along the field? And he said to her: That man is my master. But she quickly took her cloak, and covered herself.

66 And the servant told Isaac all that he had done.

VER. 58. I will go, without delay, being well convinced that the good steward was directed by God. Hence, she was guilty of no imprudence or levity, in yielding herself up to the divine will, and consenting so readily to the proposed marriage.

VER. 62. The well of Agar, not far from Bersabee.

VER. 63. To meditate on the obligations of the state on which he was about to enter, and on other pious subjects, free from noise and distraction. He adorns her with the ear-rings of obedience, and the bracelets of good works. D.

Abraham's children by Cetura, his death and that of Ismael. Isaac hath Esau and Jacob twins. Esau selleth his first birth-right to Jacob.

AND Abraham married another wife named Cetura:^a 2 Who bore him Zamran, and Jecsan, and Madan, and Madian, and Jesboc, and Sue.

3 Jecsan also begot Saba, and Dadan. The children of Dadan were Assurim, and Latusim, and Loomim.

4 But of Madian was born Ephraim, and Opher, and Henoah, and Abida, and Eldaa: all these were the children of Cetura.

5 And Abraham gave all his possessions to Isaac:

6 And to the children of the concubines he gave gifts, and separated them from Isaac his son, while he yet lived, to the east country.

7 And the days of Abraham's life were a hundred and seventy-five years.

8 And decaying he died in a good old age,^b and having lived a long time, and being full of days: and was gathered to his people.

9 And Isaac and Ismael his sons buried him in the double cave, which was situated in the field of Ephron the son of Seor the Hethite, over against Mambré, 10 Which he had bought of the children of Heth: there was he buried, and Sara his wife.

11 And after his death, God blessed Isaac his son, who dwelt by the well named Of the living and seeing.

12 These are the generations of Ismael the son of Abraham, whom Agar the Egyptian, Sara's servant, bore unto him:

13 And these are the names of his children according to their calling and generations. ^cThe first-born of Ismael was Nabajoth, then Cedar, and Adbeel, and Mabsam,

14 And Masma, and Duma, and Massa,

CHAP. XXV. VER. 1. Cetura, his third wife; the former two being perhaps both dead. This Abraham did in his 137th year, that God might have witnesses also among the Gentiles. Cetura was before one of his handmaids. M.—God enabled him to have children at this advanced age; or perhaps, Moses may have related his marriage in this place, though it had taken place several years before. S. Aug. e. Jul. iii. C. This learned father, de C. D. xvi. 34. supposes that the reason why Cetura is styled a concubine, though she was a lawful and only wife, is because her children prefigured heretics, who do not belong to the kingdom of Christ. W.

VER. 6. Concubines. Agar and Cetura are here called concubines, (though they were lawful wives, and in other places are so called) because they were of an inferior degree; and such in Scripture are usually called concubines. Ch.—The solemnities of marriage were omitted on these occasions, and the children were not entitled to a share in the inheritance. Jacob's two wives consented that all his children, by their handmaids, should be placed on the same footing with their own. C.—Abraham contented himself with making suitable presents to the children, whom he had by these secondary wives, reserving the bulk of his property for Isaac. G. xxiv. 36. He also provided for their establishment himself, that there might be no contest after his departure.

VER. 8. Good old age. Because well spent: though he lived not so long as many of the wicked; decaying not by any violent disorder, but dropping off like a ripe apple.—Being full. The Heb. does not express of what: but the Sam. Chal. Sept. Syr. and Arab agree with the Vulgate. See C. xxxv. 29. H.—Days, not years, as Protestants wrongfully interpolate. 16 These are the sons of Ismael: and these are their names by their castles and towns, twelve princes of their tribes.^d

17 And the years of Ismael's life were a hundred and thirty-seven, and decaying he died, ^eand was gathered unto his people.

18 And he dwelt from Hevila as far as Sur, which looketh towards Egypt, to them that go towards the Assyrians. He died in the presence of all his brethren.

19 These also are the generations of Isaac the son of Abraham: Abraham begot Isaac:

20 Who when he was forty years old, ^ftook to wife Rebecca the daughter of Bathuel the Syrian of Mesopotamia, sister to Laban.

21 And Isaac besought the Lord for his wife, because she was barren: and he heard him, and made Rebecca to conceive.

22 But the children struggled in her womb, and she said: If it were to be so with me, what need was there to conceive? And she went to consult the Lord.

23 And he answering, said: ^gTwo nations are in thy womb, and two peoples shall be divided out of thy womb, and one people shall overcome the other, and the elder shall serve the younger.

24 And when her time was come to be delivered, behold twins were found in her womb.

25 ^hHe that came forth first was red, and hairy like a skin: and his name was called Esau. ⁱImmediately the other coming forth, held his brother's foot in his hand: and therefore he was called Jacob. ^j

26 Isaac was threescore years old when the children were born unto him.^k

27 And when they were grown up, Esau became a skilful hunter, and a husbandman: but Jacob, a plain man, dwelt in tents.

28 Isaac loved Esau, because he ate of his hunting: and Rebecca loved Jacob.

VER. 21. Barren. They had been married 20 years, (v. 26.) during which time, S. Chrysostom says, Isaac had earnestly besought the Lord, (M.) and obtained by prayer what God long before decreed. See S. Greg. Dial. i. 8. W.

VER. 22. To be so. That is, if I must die, and my children also. She feared the worst; and immediately had recourse to the Lord, either in her oratory, or at one of his altars erected by Abraham; and received a gracious answer from him by means of an angel. H.—Others think she consulted Melchisedech at Mount Moria. M.

VER. 23. The younger. The Idumeans shall be subdued by the arms of David: and the Jews themselves shall yield to the Christian Church. S. Aug. de C. D. xvi. 35. S. Paul, Rom. ix. draws another very important truth from this history, shewing the mercy of God to be gratuitous in choosing his saints. W.

VER. 25. Red. Hence he was called Edom, as well as from the red pottage, v. 30. H.—Hairy like a skin. On which account, Rebecca afterwards clothed Jacob's hands and neck with the skins of kids, to make him resemble Esau. Furry robes were not unusual among the Jews. Some imagine that the name of Sehar, was given to Esau, on account of his being hairy; but Esau was the title by which he was commonly known, and it means one made perfect; because he came into the world, "covered with hair like a man."—Jacob: "a supplanter, or wrestler." C.—From the birth of these twins, S. Gregory shews the folly of astrologers, who pretend that our actions are under the influence of the planets; and that two, born at the same moment, will have the same fate. How different were the lives of Jacob and Esau! H.

VER. 27. A husbandman: a rustic, both in profession and manners, like Cain; while Jacob was a shepherd, in imitation of Abel, plain and honest. H.

VER. 28. Loved Esau, as his first-born, who shewed him all attention, and whom he would naturally have appointed his heir, if the will of God had not afterwards been revealed to him. Rebecca, to whom this was already known, gave the preference in her love to Jacob. H.

29 And Jacob boiled pottage: to whom Esau, coming faint out of the field,

30 Said: Give me of this red pottage, for I am exceeding faint. For which reason his name was called Edom.^a 31 And Jacob said to him: Sell me thy first birth-right.

32 He answered: Lo I die, what will the first birth-right avail me?

33 Jacob said: Swear therefore to me. Esau swore to him, and sold his first birth-right.

34 And so taking bread and the pottage of lentils, he ate, and drank, and went his way; making little account of having sold his first birth-right.

CHAP. XXVI.

Isaac sojourneth in Gerara, where God reneweth to him the promise made to Abraham. King Abimelech maketh league with him.

AND when a famine came in the land,^b after that barrenness which had happened in the days of Abraham, Isaac went to Abimelech, king of the Palestines, to Gerara.

2 And the Lord appeared to him, and said: Go not down into Egypt, but stay in the land that I shall tell thee.

3 And sojourn in it, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee: for to thee and to thy seed I will give all these countries,^c to fulfil the oath which I swore to Abraham thy father.

4 And I will multiply thy seed like the stars of heaven: and I will give to thy posterity all these countries: and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.^d

5 Because Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my precepts and commandments, and observed my ceremonies and laws.

6 So Isaac abode in Gerara.

7 And when he was asked by the men of that place, concerning his wife, he answered: She is my sister: for he was afraid to confess that she was his wife, thinking lest perhaps they would kill him because of her beauty.

8 And when very many days were passed, and he abode there, Abimelech, king of the Palestines, looking out through a window, saw him playing with Rebecca, his wife.

9 And calling for him, he said: It is evident she is thy wife: why didst thou feign her to be thy sister? He answered: I feared lest I should die for her sake.

10 And Abimelech said: Why hast thou deceived us? Some man of the people might have lain with thy wife, and thou hadst brought upon us a great sin. And he commanded all the people, saying:

11 He that shall touch this man's wife, shall surely be put to death.

12 And Isaac sowed in that land, and he found that same year a hundred-fold: and the Lord blessed him.

13 And the man was enriched, and he went on prospering and increasing, till he became exceeding great.

14 And he had possessions of sheep and of herds, and a very great family. Wherefore the Palestines envying him,

15 Stopped up at that time all the wells, that the servants of his father, Abraham, had digged, filling them up with earth:

16 Inasmuch that Abimelech himself said to Isaac: Depart from us, for thou art become much mightier than we.

17 So he departed, and came to the torrent of Gerara, to dwell there:

18 And he digged again other wells, which the servants of his father, Abraham, had digged, and which, after his death, the Philistines had of old stopped up: and he called them by the same names, by which his father before had called them.

19 And they digged in the torrent, and found living water:

20 But there also the herdsmen of Gerara strove against the herdsmen of Isaac, saying: It is our water. Wherefore he called the name of the well, on occasion of that which had happened, Calumny.

21 And they digged also another; and for that they quarrelled likewise, and he called the name of it, Enmity.

22 Going forward from thence, he digged another well, for which they contended not; therefore he called the name thereof, Latitude, saying: Now hath the Lord given us room, and made us to increase upon the earth.^e

23 And he went up from that place to Bersabee,

24 Where the Lord appeared to him that same night, saying: I am the God of Abraham thy father, do not

VER. 30. Give me, &c. Heb. "make me devour this red;" which denotes, the very red quality of the pottage, and the greediness of Esau. C.

VER. 31. Sell me. He had been informed by his mother, that God had transferred the birth-right to him; and, therefore, he takes this opportunity to obtain the consent of Esau quietly. The latter, who knew nothing of God's decree, shewed his little regard for that privilege. H.—He perhaps intended to assert his claim by force, notwithstanding this agreement. M.—It is not probable that he could plead in earnest, that he was famishing in the midst of his father's house. D.—The birth-right was a temporal honour; though some assert, that the office of priesthood belonged also to it. This, however, does not seem to be certain; for we find Abel, Abraham, and other younger children offering sacrifice. The first-born were entitled to a double portion, Deut. xxi. 17. 1 Par. v. 2. 5. and to their father's peculiar blessing, Eccl. iii. 12. To despise such advantages, betrayed a bad disposition, for which Esau is condemned, Heb. xii. 16. Rom. ix. C.—Jacob's conduct was perfectly innocent, whether we consider this transaction as serious or not. Isaac never ratified the bargain; nor do we find that Jacob rested his claim on it. H.—But it is recorded by Moses, to shew the disposition of these two young men. C.

VER. 33. Swore; and still we find him enraged above measure, when Isaac had, by mistake ratified the transfer of the birth-right to Jacob; (G. xxvii. 41.) whence we may gather, that he did not intend to perform what he promised, even with the solemnity of an oath; which renders him still more deserving of the title profane, which S. Paul gives him. H.

Though lawful at that time, it was not very common for people to marry such near relations; and therefore Isaac, by saying Rebecca was his sister, wished the people of Gerara to be ignorant of her being his wife; being under the like apprehensions as his father had been twice before. He imitates his example, trusting in the protection of God, which had rescued Abraham from danger. C. xxi. H.

VER. 12. And the Lord. This is not mentioned as a miracle; for Egypt and many other countries produced 100 fold. Pliny xviii. 10. says, some parts of Africa rendered 150 times as much as was sowed. The famine had now ceased. C.

VER. 16. Depart. Instead of repressing the outrages of his subjects, the king enters into their jealousies, and banishes a wealthy person, (H.) as the Athenians so frequently did afterwards with respect to their best citizens. They were the daughters of princes of the Heathens, (Josephus) and being brought up in idolatry and pride, refused to give ear to the advice of Isaac, who never approved of the marriage of his son with them. 6 She said to her son Jacob: I heard thy father talking with Esau, thy brother, and saying to him:

7 Bring me of thy hunting, and make me meats that I may eat, and bless thee in the sight of the Lord, before I die.

8 Now therefore, my son, follow my counsel:

9 And go thy way to the flock, bring me two kids of the best, that I may make of them meat for thy father, such as he gladly eateth.

10 Which when thou hast brought in, and he hath eaten, he may bless thee before he die.

11 And he answered her: Thou knowest that Esau, my brother, is a hairy man, and I am smooth:

12 If my father should feel me, and perceive it, I fear lest he will think I would have mocked him, and I shall bring upon me a curse instead of a blessing.

13 And his mother said to him: Upon me be this curse, my son: only hear thou my voice, and go, fetch me the things which I have said.

14 He went, and brought, and gave them to his mother. She dressed meats, such as she knew his father liked.

15 And she put on him very good garments of Esau, which she had at home with her:

16 And the little skins of the kids she put about his hands, and covered the bare of his neck.

17 And she gave him the savoury meat, and delivered him bread that she had baked.

18 Which when he had carried in, he said: My father? But he answered: I hear. Who art thou, my son?

19 And Jacob said: I am Esau, thy first-born: I have done as thou didst command me: arise, sit and eat of my venison, that thy soul may bless me.

20 And Isaac said to his son: How couldst thou find it so quickly, my son? He answered: It was the will of God, that what I sought came quickly in my way:

21 And Isaac said: Come hither, that I may feel thee, my son, and may prove whether thou be my son Esau, or no.

22 He came near to his father, and when he had felt him, Isaac said: The voice indeed is the voice of Jacob; but the hands, are the hands of Esau.

23 And he knew him not, because his hairy hands made him like to the elder. Then blessing him, 24 He said: Art thou my son Esau? He answered: I am.

VER. 13. This curse. Rebecca had too much confidence in God's promises, to think that he would suffer them to be ineffectual. Hence, Onkelos makes her say, "I have learnt by revelation, that thou wilt receive no curse, but only blessing." The sequel shewed, that she was directed by God in this delicate business. Theod. q. 78. C.

VER. 15. Very good. Heb. desirable, kept among perfumes, v. 27. Such, the Hebrews say, were used by the first-born, when they offered sacrifice. S. Jer. q. Heb.

VER. 19. I am Esau, thy first-born. S. Augustine, (L. Contra Mendacium, c. x.) treating at large upon this place, excuseth Jacob from a lie, because this whole passage was mysterious, as relating to the preference which was afterwards to be given to the Gentiles before the carnal Jews, which Jacob by prophetic light might understand. So far is certain, that the first birth-right, both by divine election, and by Esau's free cession, belonged to Jacob: so that if there were any lie in the case, it could be no more than an officious and venial one. Ch.—Ignorance might also excuse them from any sin; as many good and learned men have thought an officious lie to be lawful. S. Chrys. hom. 52. Origen. Bonfrere. And even if we allow that they did wrong; the Scripture relates, but does not sanction what they did, Let him that thinks himself to stand take heed, lest he fall. 1 Cor. x. 12. C.—As our Saviour says of S. John, He is Elias, Matt. xi. 14, Jacob says, I am Esau, not in person, but in right of the first-born. W.

25 Then he said: Bring me the meats of thy hunting, my son, that my soul may bless thee. And when they were brought, and he had eaten, he offered him wine also, which after he had drunk, 26 He said to him: Come near me, and give me a kiss, my son.

27 He came near, and kissed him. And immediately as he smelled the fragrant smell of his garments, blessing him, he said: Behold, the smell of my son is as the smell of a plentiful field, which the Lord hath blessed.

28 God give thee of the dew of heaven, and of the fatness of the earth, abundance of corn and wine.

29 And let peoples serve thee, and tribes worship thee: be thou lord of thy brethren, and let thy mother's children bow down before thee. Cursed be he that curseth thee: and let him that blesseth thee be filled with blessings.

30 Isaac had scarce ended his words, when, Jacob being now gone out abroad, Esau came, 31 And brought in to his father meats, made of what he had taken in hunting, saying: Arise, my father, and eat of thy son's venison; that thy soul may bless me.

32 And Isaac said to him: Why! who art thou? He answered: I am thy first-born son, Esau.

33 Isaac was struck with fear, and astonished exceedingly; and wondering beyond what can be believed, said: Who is he then that even now brought me venison that he had taken, and I ate of all before thou camest? and I have blessed him, and he shall be blessed.

34 Esau having heard his father's words, roared out with a great cry; and, being in a consternation, said: Bless me also, my father.

35 And he said: Thy brother came deceitfully and got thy blessing.

36 But he said again: Rightly is his name called Jacob; for he hath supplanted me lo this second time:

VER. 22. Of Esau. Thus, too often our voice contradicts our hands or actions! Id.

VER. 27. Plentiful. A word retained by the Sam. and Sept. though lost in the Hebrew copies. Grotius.—Hath blessed with abundance of fruit and odoriferous herbs; such as had probably been shut up in the drawers with Esau's robes. M.

VER. 28. Wine. "By which Christ gathers together the multitude, in the Sacrament of his Body and Blood." S. Aug.

VER. 29. Worship thee, with civil respect, (H.) as the Idumeans, Philistines and Moabites did, with respect to David, Solomon, and the Machabees, acknowledging their dominion, though reluctantly.—With blessing. Thus Rebecca had not given her son a vain assurance. Isaac prays that God may ever be his protector, and avenge his cause. H.

VER. 30. Fear. Sept. "Isaac was wrapt into an ecstasy exceedingly great;" during which God explained to him the meaning of what had happened, that he might not think of revoking his blessing. S. Aug. q. 80. He permitted Isaac to be in darkness respecting this affair, that it might be more manifest, that the will of man had no part in preferring Jacob; (S. Chrys. hom. 53.) and that Esau might not direct his rage against his father. W.

VER. 33. Be blessed. Thus he confirms what he had done; and shews that he bore no resentment towards his younger son, nor esteemed himself to be mocked, v. 12. Id.

VER. 34. Roared, through savage fury and envy of his brother. Euseb. M.

VER. 35. Deceitfully. Heb. sily; directed by wisdom, as the Chal. has it. S. Chrysostom (de sacerdot.) praises the address of Jacob on this occasion. C.

VER. 36. Jacob. That is, a supplanter. Ch.—My blessing. Both Isaac and Esau speak of this blessing, according to the dictates of nature. But God had disposed of it otherwise. The profane and cruel manners of Esau rendered him unworthy of it; and he could not maintain his natural claim, after having freely resigned it even with an oath. He seems to distinguish the blessing from the birth-right, though one necessarily followed the other. H.

VER. 37. Brethren, or relations; (M.) for Isaac had no other children but these two. He never married any other woman but the beautiful and virtuous Rebecca. Id.

VER. 39. Moved; yet not so as to repent of what he had done; for Esau found no place of repentance in his father's breast, although with tears he had sought it, (44)

* My first birth-right he took away before, and now this second time he hath stolen away my blessing. And again he said to his father: Hast thou not reserved me also a blessing?

37 Isaac answered: I have appointed him thy lord, and have made all his brethren his servants: I have established him with corn and wine, and after this, what shall I do more for thee, my son?

38 And Esau said to him: Hast thou only one blessing, father? I beseech thee bless me also. And when he wept with a loud cry,

39 Isaac being moved, said to him: In the fat of the earth, and in the dew of heaven from above, 40 Shall thy blessing be. Thou shalt live by the sword, and shalt serve thy brother: and the time shall come, when thou shalt shake off and loose his yoke from thy neck.

41 Esau therefore always hated Jacob, for the blessing wherewith his father had blessed him; and he said in his heart: "The days will come of the mourning for my father, and I will kill my brother Jacob."

42 These things were told to Rebecca: and she sent and called Jacob, her son, and said to him: Behold Esau, thy brother, threateneth to kill thee.

43 Now therefore, my son, hear my voice, arise and flee to Laban, my brother, to Haran:

44 And thou shalt dwell with him a few days, till the wrath of thy brother be assuaged, 45 And his indignation cease, and he forget the things thou hast done to him: afterwards I will send, and bring thee from thence hither. Why shall I be deprived of both my sons in one day?

46 And Rebecca said to Isaac: "I am weary of my life, because of the daughters of Heth: if Jacob take a wife of the stock of this land, I choose not to live."

(Heb. xii. 17.) desiring to obtain the blessing of the first-born. Id.—In the fat, &c. Idumea was a barren country; and hence some would translate the Heb. "far from the fat . . . shall thy dwelling be; but thou shalt live by the sword."

Thus min often means from, as well as for in: my flesh is changed on account of the want of oil, Ps. cviii. 24. Heb. a pinguedine. C.—But all the ancient versions agree with the Vulg. So that we may say, the blessing of God made those barren regions supply the wants of the people abundantly; and as the Idumeans were to live by the sword, they would seize the rich habitations of their neighbours, (H.) and thus obtain a country rendered fertile without their labour. M.

VER. 40. Thy brother, in the reign of David, 2 K. viii. 14, and of the Machabees. Josep. Ant. xiii. 17.—Yoke. When the house of Juda shall rebel against the Lord, in the days of Joram, then the Idumeans shall regain their liberty for a time; (4 K. viii. 20.) to be subdued again after 800 years, by John Hyrcan, the high priest. Id.—All the blessing of Esau, tends to confirm that already given to his brother; so that the apostle seems to have considered it unworthy of notice. C.—Jacob, in the mean time, never asserted his dominion; but still called Esau his lord, (C. xxxii. 4.) and behaved to him with the greatest deference. Id.—Yet the Idumeans always hated the Jews, and assisted Titus to destroy Jerusalem. Joseph. J.

VER. 41. My father. He has no regard for his mother. M.—Her love for Jacob filled him with greater indignation; and he resolved to murder him, in order, perhaps, to revenge himself on both. Though this cruel resolution was taken in his heart, with full deliberation, he was not so careful to conceal his intentions; but his watchful mother discovered it, and by her prudence, preserved him from committing the external sin: and Jacob from falling a prey to this second Cain.

VER. 45. Both my sons. Esau would have forfeited his life for murder. C. ix. 6. H.—Perhaps she might also fear that Jacob, in his own defence, should, in the very agony of death, give the aggressor a mortal wound; or that Esau, at least, would be forced to flee his country. Indeed, she considered him already as a lost man, on account of his marriage with the two women of Chanaan, and his savage manners. C.

VER. 46. To live. Life will be a burden to me. M.—She does not mention the principal reason of her desiring Jacob to go to Haran, for fear of grieving the tender heart of her husband; who, it seems, knew not the temper of Esau so well as she did. C.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Jacob's journey to Mesopotamia: his vision and vow.

AND Isaac called Jacob, "and blessed him, and charged him, saying: Take not a wife of the stock of Chanaan:

2 But go, and take a journey to Mesopotamia of Syria, to the house of Bathuel, thy mother's father, and take thee a wife thence of the daughters of Laban, thy uncle.

3 And God almighty bless thee, and make thee to increase and multiply thee: that thou mayst be a multitude of people.

4 And give the blessings of Abraham to thee, and to thy seed after thee: that thou mayst possess the land of thy sojournment, which he promised to thy grandfather.

5 ^b And when Isaac had sent him away, he took his journey and went to Mesopotamia of Syria, to Laban, the son of Bathuel, the Syrian, brother to Rebecca, his mother.

6 And Esau seeing that his father had blessed Jacob, and had sent him into Mesopotamia of Syria, to marry a wife thence; and that after the blessing he had charged him, saying: Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Chanaan:

7 And that Jacob obeying his parents, was gone into Syria:

8 Experiencing also, that his father was not well pleased with the daughters of Chanaan:

9 He went to Ismael, and took to wife, besides them he had before, Maheth, the daughter of Ismael, Abraham's son, the sister of Nabajoth.

10 But Jacob being departed from Bersabee, went on to Haran.

11 And when he was come to a certain place, and would rest in it after sun-set, he took of the stones that lay there, and putting under his head, slept in the same place.

12 And he saw in his sleep a ladder standing upon

CHAP. XXVIII. VER. 2. Take. Sept. "flee;" as if Isaac began at last to be apprized of Esau's designs. Wisdom (x. 10.) conducted the just when he fled from his brother's wrath, &c.—Thy uncle. He points out the house, but leaves the woman to his choice.

VER. 4. Grandfather. Isaac, out of modesty, does not mention that the same promises had been made to himself. He determines the right over Chanaan to belong solely to Jacob, and to his posterity. H.

VER. 9. To Ismael's family; for he had been dead fourteen years. Esau asks no advice. It is doubtful whether he meant to appease or to irritate his parents, (M.) by this marriage with the daughter of Ismael. She lived with her brother, the head of the Nabuthians, and is called Basemath. C. xxxvi. 3. C.

VER. 11. Head for a pillow. Behold the austerity of the heir of all that country! H.—He departs from home in haste, with his staff only, that Esau might not know. W.

VER. 12. A ladder and angels, &c. This mysterious vision tended to comfort the patriarch, with the assurance that God would now take him under his more particular protection, when he was destitute of human aid. H.—The angels ascending, foretold that his journey would be prosperous; and descending, shewed that he would return with safety. M.—Or rather, the ladder represented the Incarnation of Jesus Christ, born of so many patriarchs from Adam, who was created by God, to the blessed Virgin. He is the way by which we must ascend, by observing the truth, till we obtain life eternal. H.—Mercy and truth are like the two sides; the virtues of Christ are signified by the steps. Angels descend to announce this joyful mystery to men; they ascend to convey the prayers and ardent desires of the ancient saints, to hasten their redemption. M.—Our Saviour seems to allude to this passage. Jo. i. 51. xiv. 6. The Providence of God watching over all things, appears here very conspicuous.

VER. 12. Thy father, or grandfather. God joins the dead with the living, to shew that all live to him, and that the soul is immortal. H.

VER. 16. Knew it not. Jacob was not ignorant that God fills all places. But he thought that he would not manifest himself thus in a land given to idolatry. He begins to suspect that the place had been formerly consecrated to the worship the earth, and the top thereof touching heaven: the angels also of God ascending and descending by it.

13 And the Lord leaning upon the ladder saying to him: "I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: The land, wherein thou sleepest, I will give to thee and to thy seed.

14 And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth:" thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and IN THEE and thy seed, all the tribes of the earth SHALL BE BLESSED.

15 And I will be thy keeper whithersoever thou goest, and will bring thee back into this land: neither will I leave thee, till I shall have accomplished all that I have said.

16 And when Jacob awaked out of sleep, he said: Indeed the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not.

17 And trembling, he said: How terrible is this place? this is no other but the house of God, and the gate of heaven.

18 And Jacob arising in the morning, took the stone which he had laid under his head, and set it up for a title, pouring oil upon the top of it."

19 And he called the name of the city Bethel, which before was called Luza.

20 And he made a vow, saying: If God shall be with me, and shall keep me in the way, by which I walk, and shall give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on,

21 And I shall return prosperously to my father's house: the Lord shall be my God:

22 And this stone, which I have set up for a title, shall be called the house of God: and of all things that thou shalt give to me, I will offer tithes to thee.

Jacob serveth Laban seven years for Rachel; but is deceived with Lia: he after wards marryeth Rachel.—Lia bears him four sons.

THEN Jacob went on in his journey, and came into the east country.

of the true God, (C.) as it probably had by Abraham, who dwelt near Bethel, (C. xii. 8.) and built an altar on Mount Moria, xxii. 14. Interpreters are not agreed on which of these places Jacob spent the night. S. Aug. q. 83, supposes it was on the latter, "where God appointed the tabernacle to remain." The Chaldean paraphrases it very well in this sense, v. 17. "How terrible is this place! It is not an ordinary place, but a place beloved by God, and over against this place is the door of heaven." H.

VER. 18. A title. That is, a pillar or monument. Ch.—Or an altar, consecrated by that rite to the service of the true God. This he did without any superstition; as the Catholic Church still pours oil or chrism upon her altars, in imitation of Jacob. Raban. Instit. i. 45. If pagans did the like, this is no reason why we should condemn the practice. They were blamable for designing thus to worship false gods. Clem. Strom. vii. Apul. Florid. i. &c. If Protestants pull down altars, under the plea of their being superstitious, we cannot but pity their ignorance or malice. W.

VER. 19. Bethel. This name signifies the house of God. Ch.—Bethel was the name which Jacob gave to the place; and the town, which was built after his return, was called by the same name. Hence those famous animated stones or idols, received their title (Bethules, Eus. prep. i. 10.) being consecrated to Saturn, the Sun, &c. Till the days of Mahomet, the Arabs adored a rough stone, taken from the temple of Mecca, which they pretended was built by Abraham. Chardin.—Luza, so called from the number of nut or almond trees. Here the golden calf was afterwards set up, on the confines of the tribes of Benjamin and of Ephraim, (C.) the southern limits of the kingdom of Jeroboam. H.

VER. 20. A vow; not simply that he would acknowledge one God, but that he would testify his peculiar veneration for him, by erecting an altar, at his return, and by giving voluntarily the tithes of all he had. W. C. xxxv. 7. How he gave these tithes, we do not read. Perhaps he might hereby engage his posterity to give them under the law of Moses. C.

sheep lying by it: for the beasts were watered out of it, and the mouth thereof was closed with a great stone.

3 And the custom was, when all the sheep were gathered together, to roll away the stone, and after the sheep were watered, to put it on the mouth of the well again.

4 And he said to the shepherds: Brethren, whence are you? They answered: Of Haran.

5 And he asked them, saying: Know you Laban, the son of Nachor? They said: We know him.

6 He said: Is he in health? He is in health, say they: and behold, Rachel, his daughter, cometh with his flock.

7 And Jacob said: There is yet much day remaining, neither is it time to bring the flocks into the folds again: first give the sheep drink, and so lead them back to feed.

8 They answered: We cannot, till all the cattle be gathered together, and we remove the stone from the well's mouth, that we may water the flocks.

9 They were yet speaking, and behold Rachel came with her father's sheep; for she fed the flock.

10 And when Jacob saw her, and knew her to be his cousin german, and that they were the sheep of Laban, his uncle: he removed the stone wherewith the well was closed.

11 And having watered the flock, he kissed her: and lifting up his voice wept.

12 And he told her that he was her father's brother, and the son of Rebecca: but she went in haste and told her father.

13 Who, when he heard that Jacob his sister's son was come, ran forth to meet him: and embracing him, and heartily kissing him, brought him into his house. And when he had heard the causes of his journey,

H.—In that age of simplicity, beautiful maids might converse with shepherds, without suspicion or danger. M.—Wept, through tenderness, and perhaps on account of his present inability to make her a suitable present. C.

VER. 12. Brother, or nephew. The name of brother, in Scripture, almost corresponds with the Consanguineus of the Latins, or our relation.

VER. 14. My flesh, entitled to my utmost protection and friendship. C.

VER. 17. Blear-eyed. Heb. racoth. Watery and tender, unable to look steadfastly at any object, but at the same time very beautiful. 16 Now he had two daughters, the name of the elder was Lia; and the younger was called Rachel.

17 But Lia was blear-eyed: Rachel was well favoured, and of a beautiful countenance.

18 And Jacob being in love with her, said: I will serve thee seven years for Rachel, thy younger daughter.

19 Laban answered: It is better that I give her to thee than to another man; stay with me.

20 So Jacob served seven years for Rachel: and they seemed but a few days, because of the greatness of his love.*

21 And he said to Laban: Give me my wife; for now the time is fulfilled, that I may go in unto her.

22 And he, having invited a great number of his friends to the feast, made the marriage.

23 And at night he brought in Lia, his daughter, to him,

24 Giving his daughter a handmaid, named Zelpha. Now when Jacob had gone in to her according to custom, when morning was come he saw it was Lia.

25 And he said to his father-in-law: What is it that thou didst mean to do? did not I serve thee for Rachel? why hast thou deceived me?

26 Laban answered: It is not the custom in this place, to give the younger in marriage first.

27 Make up the week of days of this match: and I will give thee her also, for the service that thou shalt render me other seven years.

28 He yielded to his pleasure: and after the week was past, he married Rachel:

29 To whom her father gave Bala, for her servant.

30 And having at length obtained the marriage he wished for, he preferred the love of the latter before the former, and served with him other seven years.

31 And the Lord seeing that he despised Lia, opened her womb, but her sister remained barren.

esteem Rachel, that he thought he had obtained her for just nothing, though delays naturally seem long to lovers. T.—Calmet supposes that he was married to her the second month after he arrived at Haran; and on this account, easily explains his words, as love made all labour tolerable, and even easy, in the enjoyment of the beautiful Rachel. Usher also places the birth of Ruben in the first year of Jacob's service. A. 2246. But Salien and the context decide, that he waited full seven years, and then obtained Lia, by fraud, of Laban; and, seven days after, Rachel. H.—He was then 84 years old! D.

VER. 21. Go in, &c. To consummate my marriage; (M.) as the time is expired. H.

VER. 22. Friends. Heb. Sept. and Chal. say, "all the men of that place." He was rich, and, though very greedy, could not well avoid conforming to the custom of making a splendid entertainment on such a joyful occasion. H.

VER. 24. A handmaid, by way of dowry, as he did afterwards to Rachel. Both sisters considered it so small, as to say they had nothing. C. xxxi. 14.—Lia, who committed a great sin of adultery, though she was more excusable than Laban; inasmuch, as she obeyed his order. M.—Jacob might justly have refused to marry her; and then what a dishonour would have been entailed upon her for life! In consequence of this imposition, the legitimacy of Ruben's conception was rendered doubtful. We may suppose, that shame hindered Lia from opening her mouth; so that Jacob had no means of discovering the cheat till day-break, having gone into the nuptial chamber after it was dark, according to custom, and the woman being also covered with a veil. Tob. viii. 1. Hence Jacob was guilty of no fault, as his mistake was involuntary. H.—He afterwards consented to marry her, (C.) probably on the second day of the feast. H.

VER. 26. Custom. This appears to be a false pretext: for all the people saw that Rachel was adorned like the intended bride, (H.) and were invited to her wedding. M.

VER. 28. Week. Seven days; not years, as Josephus would have it. The nuptial feast lasted a week. Jud. xiv. 15.

VER. 30. Latter. Jacob is the figure of Jesus Christ; who rejected the synagogue, and treated his Church, gathered from all nations, with the utmost affection. C.—Lia means "painful or laborious;" and Rachel a sheep; denoting, that a quiet contemplative life must be united with an active one; and that the Church must suffer here, and be crowned in heaven. Rachel being barren, delivereth her handmaid to Jacob: she beareth two sons. Lia causing to bear, giveth also her handmaid, and she beareth two more. Then Lia beareth two other sons and one daughter. Rachel beareth Joseph. Jacob, desirous to return home, is hired to stay for a certain part of the stock's increase, whereby he becometh exceeding rich.

AND Rachel seeing herself without children, envied her sister, and said to her husband: Give me children, otherwise I shall die.

2 And Jacob being angry with her, answered: Am I as God, who hath deprived thee of the fruit of thy womb?

3 But she said: I have here my servant Bala: go in unto her, that she may bear upon my knees, and I may have children by her.

4 And she gave him Bala in marriage: who,

5 When her husband had gone in unto her, conceived and bore a son.

6 And Rachel said: The Lord hath judged for me, and hath heard my voice, giving me a son; and therefore she called his name Dan.

7 And again Bala conceived, and bore another,

8 For whom Rachel said: God hath compared me with my sister, and I have prevailed: and she called him Nephthali.

9 Lia perceiving that she had left off bearing, gave Zelpha, her handmaid, to her husband.

10 And when she had conceived, and brought forth a son, 11 She said: Happily. And therefore called his name Gad.

12 Zelpha also bore another.

13 And Lia said: This is for my happiness: for women will call me blessed. Therefore she called him Aser.

14 And Ruben going out in the time of the wheat harvest into the field, found mandrakes: which he brought to his mother Lia. And Rachel said: Give me part of thy son's mandrakes.

15 She answered: Dost thou think it a small matter, that thou hast taken my husband from me, unless thou take also my son's mandrakes? Rachel said: He shall sleep with thee this night, for thy son's mandrakes.

16 And when Jacob returned at even from the field, Lia went out to meet him, and said: Thou shalt come in unto me, because I have hired thee for my son's mandrakes. And he slept with her that night.

17 And God heard her prayers; and she conceived: and bore the fifth son:

18 And said: God hath given me a reward, because I gave my handmaid to my husband. And she called his name Issachar.

19 And Lia conceived again, and bore the sixth son,

20 And said: God hath endowed me with a good dowry; this turn also my husband will be with me, because I have borne him six sons: and therefore she called his name Zabulon.

21 After whom she bore a daughter, named Dina.

22 The Lord also remembering Rachel, heard her, and opened her womb.

VER. 31. Despised, or loved less; so Christ orders us to hate father, &c. Matt. x. 17. C.

VER. 32. Ruben. "See the son, or the son of vision;" alluding perhaps distantly, to v. 24. He saw Lia. H.

VER. 33. Despised, or the hated wife, Deut. xxi. 15.—Simeon, "hearing or obedient."

VER. 34. Levi, "adhesion or union." My husband will now stick to me.

VER. 35. Juda, "praise or confession." C.—Left bearing for a time. H.—In the imposition of these names, Lia testified her gratitude to God. T.

CHAP. XXX. VER. 1. Envied, or desired to have children like her. Thus we may envy the virtues of the saints. C.—Give me, &c. These words seem to indicate a degree of impatience, at which we need not be surprised, when we reflect, that Rachel had been educated among idolaters. M.—Die of grief and shame. "I shall be considered as one dead." Jun. S. Chrysostom thinks she threatened to lay violent hands on herself, and through jealousy, spoke in a foolish manner. This passion is capable of the basest actions, (H.) and is almost unavoidable where polygamy reigns. C.

VER. 2. Angry at the rash and apparently blasphemous demand of Rachel. M.—As God, pro Deo. Am I to work a miracle in opposition to God, who has made thee barren? To him thou oughtest to address thyself. The Hebrews justly observe, that God has reserved to himself the four keys of nature. 1. Of generation. 2. Of sustenance, Ps. cxlv. 16. 3. Of rain, Deut. xxviii. 12. And, 4. Of the grave or resurrection, Ez. xxxvii. 12. T.

VER. 3. Servant, like a maid of honour. Josephus says she was not a slave, no more than Zelpha.—My knees, whom I may nurse with pleasure. It was an ancient custom to place the new-born infants upon the knees of some near relation, who gave them a name, and thus in a manner adopted them. C. l. 22. Job iii. 12. Ps. xxi. 11. Homer. C.

VER. 4. Marriage. The Manichees condemned Jacob for having four wives at once. But S. Aug. replied, it was not then unusual nor forbidden. He took the two last only at the pressing instigation of Rachel and Lia, and that only for the sake of children. Lia herself was forced upon him. c. Faust. xxii. 48.

VER. 6. Dan, means judgment. From the same root as Adonis; Adoni, my lord or judge, &c. Rachel's whole solicitude was for children. H.

VER. 8. Compared me, &c. As Lia treacherously got my husband, so I have craftily surmounted the difficulties of barrenness; I have struggled earnestly, and have got the victory. Patal, means to act with cunning. Ps. xvii. 27. C.—Naphthali, "a crafty wrestler." M.

VER. 11. Happily, fortunately.—Gad, or Bonaventure. H.—"Good-fortune," was acknowledged by the pagans for a divinity; (Is. lxx. 11.) perhaps for the Sun, or Oromagdes, the Gad of Aram. He was opposed to the wicked Arimenes in the Chaldean theology, by Zoroaster, (C.) the inventor of the Two Principles. Whether Lia intended to attribute this child to the influence of the planet Jupiter, the Sun, or some other tool, we cannot determine. H.—Her meaning may be simply; Behold I am now the mother of a troop, or little army, Gad; and to which (C. xlix. 19.) Jacob evidently alludes. C.

VER. 13. Aser: happy. My servant has now had as many sons as my sister (M.) and I have given them both names, indicating my great felicity and joy. H.

VER. 14. Ruben, now perhaps about four years old, playing in the fields, in the latter harvest time, (Ex. ix. 32.) found mandrakes of an extraordinary beauty and flavour, (Cant. vii. 13.) whether they were flowers, lilies, jasmine, &c. as some translate; or rather, fruits of the mandrake tree, according to all the ancient versions; or of the citron, lemon, or orange tree, if we believe Calmet. Dudaim designates two breasts, or something lovely and protuberant. The ancients have spoken with admiration, and have attributed wonderful effects to the mandrakes, which, though controverted by moderns, might suffice to make Rachel greatly desire to have them; at least, if she believed they would contribute to remove her sterility, as Pliny xxv. 15. Aristotle (de Gener. ii.) and other naturalists of eminence, have maintained they did. H.—The effect which she desired so much, was not, however, to be attributed to them, since she conceived only three years after, and that by the blessing of God. T.

VER. 15. From me. Lia was aware that Jacob's affection lay entirely to wards Rachel; particularly now as she had ceased to bear children herself. H.—This night, when it is my turn to have him. To prevent any jealousy, the husband visited his wives one after another, as was the case with Smerdis, the king of Persia. Herod. iii. 79. Exod. xxi. 10. C.

VER. 18. Issachar, "the reward of the man, or husband." C.—She might allude also to the reward she had obtained for her mandrakes. H.

VER. 20. Zabulon, "dwelling or cohabiting." Zobad (which resembles the sound of Zabal) means to endow, (C.) to which she seems also to refer; as if her marriage was renewed, and God had given her more children for a dowry. M.

VER. 21. Dina, "judgment," like Dan. God hath done me justice. The 23 And she conceived, and bore a son,* saying: God hath taken away my reproach.

24 And she called his name Joseph: saying: The Lord give me also another son.

25 And when Joseph was born, Jacob said to his father-in-law: Send me away, that I may return into my country, and to my land.

26 Give me my wives, and my children, for whom I have served thee, that I may depart: thou knowest the service that I have rendered thee.

27 Laban said to him: Let me find favour in thy sight: I have learned, by experience, that God hath blessed me for thy sake.

28 Appoint thy wages which I shall give thee.

29 But he answered: Thou knowest how I have served thee, and how great thy possession hath been in my hands.

30 Thou hadst but little before I came to thee, and now thou art become rich: and the Lord hath blessed thee at my coming. It is reasonable, therefore, that I should now provide also for my own house.

31 And Laban said: What shall I give thee? But he said: I require nothing; but if thou wilt do what I demand, I will feed and keep thy sheep again.

32 Go round through all thy flocks, and separate all the sheep of divers colours, and speckled; and all that is brown and spotted, and of divers colours, as well among the sheep as among the goats, shall be my wages.

33 And my justice shall answer for me to-morrow before thee, when the time of the bargain shall come; and all that is not of divers colours, and spotted, and brown, as well among the sheep as among the goats, shall accuse me of theft.

34 And Laban said: I like well what thou demandest.

35 And he separated the same day the she-goats, and the sheep, and the he-goats, and the rams of divers colours, and spotted; and all the flock of one colour, that is, of white and black fleece, he delivered into the hands of his sons.

36 And he set the space of three days journey betwixt himself and his son-in-law, who fed the rest of his flock.

37 And Jacob took green rods of poplar, and of almond, and of plane-trees, and piled them in part: so when the bark was taken off, in the parts that were piled, there appeared whiteness: but the parts that Hebrews assert that Dina was married to holy Job. She was born the same year as Joseph, the 91st of Jacob. Lia brought forth seven children in seven years.

VER. 24. Joseph. In imposing this name, Rachel looks both to the past and to the future; (thanking God for taking away (asop) her reproach, and begging that He would add (isop or Joseph) the blessing of another son, as he really did, though it occasioned her death: so little do we know what we ask for! Joseph means one "adding or increasing." C. xlix. 22. H.—He was born when the 14 years of service were over; being a most glorious figure of Jesus Christ, who came to redeem us from slavery. D.

VER. 28. Give thee. He wishes to engage him to continue in his service; being convinced, that a faithful and pious servant is a great treasure. Laban promises every thing, and performs little according to agreement. He never thinks of making Jacob any present for his extraordinary diligence.

VER. 31. Nothing. I am willing to depart with my family towards my father. But if I must stay, these are my terms. H.—I require no certain wages, committing myself entirely to what Providence shall send. Salien.

VER. 32. Speckled; from those which are all of one colour. Those which should be of the former description must belong to Jacob, while all the black and the white should be Laban's.—Brown, or of a dull mixture of white and black.—Spotted, having large patches of either colour.—Divers, little spots variegating the fleece. M.—The original is extremely obscure. Jacob asks only for the worst; the speckled sheep and goats, also the black sheep and the white goats, v. 35. Bochart. C.

VER. 33. Of theft, if they be found in my possession. I am so well convinced were whole, remained green: and by this means the colour was divers.

38 And he put them in the troughs, where the water was poured out; that when the flocks should come to drink, they might have the rods before their eyes, and in the sight of them might conceive.

39 And it came to pass, that in the very heat of coition, the sheep beheld the rods, and brought forth spotted, and of divers colours, and speckled.

40 And Jacob separated the flock, and put the rods in the troughs before the eyes of the rams; and all the white and the black were Laban's, and the rest were Jacob's, when the flocks were separated one from the other.

41 So when the ewes went first to ram, Jacob put the rods in the troughs of water before the eyes of the rams, and of the ewes, that they might conceive while they were looking upon them.

42 But when the later coming was, and the last conceiving, he did not put them. And those that were laterward, became Laban's; and they of the first time, Jacob's.

43 And the man was enriched exceedingly, and he had many flocks, maid-servants and men-servants, camels and asses.

CHAP. XXXI.

Jacob's departure: he is pursued and overtaken by Laban. They make a covenant.

BUT after that he had heard the words of the sons of Laban, saying: Jacob hath taken away all that was our father's, and being enriched by his substance is become great.

2 And perceiving also, that Laban's countenance was not towards him as yesterday and the other day.

3 Especially the Lord saying to him: Return into the land of thy fathers and to thy kindred, and I will be with thee.

4 He sent, ^band called Rachel and Lia into the field, where he fed the flocks,

5 And said to them: I see your father's countenance is not towards me as yesterday and the other day: but the God of my father hath been with me.

6 And you know that I have served your father to the uttermost of my power.

7 Yea your father hath also over-reached me, and hath changed my wages ten times: and yet God hath not suffered him to hurt me.

that God will reward my justice, that, even contrary to what might naturally be expected, he will enable me to have plenty of spotted sheep and goats, though their mothers be all of one colour. It is not certain, that Jacob agreed to have the flocks parted till the end of the year. M.

VER. 35. His sons. These continued to observe the conduct of Jacob, while Laban drove off all the flocks of divers colours to so great a distance, (v. 36.) that there was no danger of the sheep under Jacob's care getting to them. Thus Laban first began to violate the agreement; and the angel of the Lord suggested to Jacob, the plan by which he was preserved from serving a cruel and avaricious man without wages. C. xxxi. 12. M.

VER. 40. All the white, &c. Notwithstanding Jacob's stratagem, some had lambs all of a colour. The force of fancy is very surprising on such occasions. Oppian, Aristotle, and others, recommend Jacob's plan as consonant to nature. H.

VER. 42. Later-coming, in autumn, when the spring lambs were of an inferior value. These he was willing to abandon for the most part to Laban; and therefore did not use his rods. Pliny viii. 47. and Columella viii. 3. agree, that the lambs which are produced in spring, do not thrive so well as those of autumn, at least in Italy, and in those countries where sheep lamb twice a year. Bis gravida pecudes. Virg. C.—Many who have tried the same experiment as Jacob, have not experienced the same success; whence S. Chrysostom, and most of the Greek fathers, suppose that it was miraculous. T.

CHAP. XXXI. VER. 1. After that six years were expired, and calumnies and ill-will attended Jacob in Laban's family, God ordered him to retire. v. 8 H.

VER. 7. Ten times. Very often, or perhaps this exact number of times, v. 41

8 If at any time, he said: The speckled shall be thy wages: all the sheep brought forth speckled: but when he said on the contrary: Thou shalt take all the white ones for thy wages: all the flocks brought forth white ones.

9 And God hath taken your father's substance, and given it to me.

10 For after the time came of the ewes conceiving, I lifted up my eyes, and saw in my sleep, that the males which leaped upon the females were of divers colours, and spotted, and speckled.

11 And the angel of God said to me in my sleep: Jacob. And I answered: Here I am.

12 And he said: Lift up thy eyes, and see that all the males leaping upon the females, are of divers colours, spotted and speckled. For I have seen all that Laban hath done to thee.

13 I am the God of Bethel, ^awhere thou didst anoint the stone, and make a vow to me. Now therefore arise, and go out of this land, and return into thy native country.

14 And Rachel and Lia answered: Have we any thing left among the goods and inheritance of our father's house?

15 Hath he not counted us as strangers, and sold us, and eaten up the price of us?

16 But God hath taken our father's riches, and delivered them to us, and to our children: wherefore, do all that God hath commanded thee.

17 Then Jacob rose up, and having set his children and wives upon camels, went his way.

18 And he took all his substance, and flocks, and whatsoever he had gotten in Mesopotamia, and went forward to Isaac, his father, to the land of Chanaan.

19 At that time Laban was gone to shear his sheep, and Rachel stole away her father's idols.

20 And Jacob would not confess to his father-in-law that he was flying away.

21 And when he was gone, together with all that belonged to him, and having passed the river, was going on towards mount Galaad, 22 It was told Laban on the third day, that Jacob fled.

23 And he took his brethren with him, and pursued after him seven days; and overtook him in the mount of Galaad.

24 And he saw in a dream God, saying to him: Take heed thou speak not any thing harshly against Jacob.

25 Now Jacob had pitched his tent in the mountain: and when he, with his brethren, had overtaken him, he pitched his tent in the same mount of Galaad.

26 And he said to Jacob: Why hast thou done thus, to carry away, without my knowledge, my daughters, as captives taken with the sword?

27 Why wouldst thou run away privately, and not acquaint me, that I might have brought thee on the way with joy, and with songs, and with timbrels, and with harps?

28 Thou hast not suffered me to kiss my sons and daughters; thou hast done foolishly; and now indeed, 29 It is in my power to return thee evil; but the God of your father said to me yesterday: ^bTake heed thou speak not any thing harshly against Jacob.

30 Suppose thou didst desire to go to thy friends, and hadst a longing after thy father's house: why hast thou stolen away my gods?

31 Jacob answered: That I departed unknown to thee, it was for fear lest thou wouldst take away thy daughters by force.

32 But, whereas, thou chargest me with theft: with whomsoever thou shalt find thy gods, let him be slain before our brethren. Search, and if thou find any of thy things with me, take them away. Now when he said this, he knew not that Rachel had stolen the idols.

33 So Laban went into the tent of Jacob, and of Lia. and of both the handmaids, and found them not. And when he was entered into Rachel's tent,

34 She, in haste, hid the idols under the camel's furniture, and sat upon them: and when he had searched all the tent, and found nothing, 35 She said: Let not my lord be angry that I cannot rise up before thee, because it has now happened to me according to the custom of women. So his careful search was in vain.

36 And Jacob being angry, said in a chiding manner: For what fault of mine, and for what offence on my part hast thou so hotly pursued me,

VER. 8. All, or the far greatest part, so that I was exceedingly enriched. M.—The Sept. here agrees with the Vulg. But the Heb. and other versions, instead of white ones, read of divers colours, or ring-streaked, which takes away the intended opposition. C.

VER. 12. Are of divers colours. Their fancy was strongly impressed with these various colours, in consequence of the pilled rods, which they beheld: and which Jacob was directed by the angel to place in the troughs.—I have seen with displeasure, the injustice of Laban; (H.) and therefore, I, the Lord of all things, authorise thee to act in this manner. By this vision, the justice of Jacob would appear; and the authority for removing, given in a second vision, would suffice to induce the two principal wives of Jacob to give their consent to leave their father's house, and to begin a long journey. During the last six years, Providence had given no increase of family, that the little children might be no impediment to the removal. H.

VER. 15. Eaten up. Laban kept for himself the dowry paid by Jacob for his wives, though he ought to have allotted it to them, with the addition of something more, in proportion to his immense wealth. M.

VER. 18. Gotten. Heb. expresses over again, the cattle of his getting, &c. which is omitted in one MS. as well as in the Sept. Syr. and Arab. versions, though yet used in the Samarit. copy. Kennicott.—To Isaac, who was still living, though he had apprehended death was at hand 20 years before. He continued to live other 20 years after. Salien.—Jacob spent about 10 years at Sichem and at Bethel, before he went to dwell with Isaac. M.

VER. 19. Her father's idols. By this it appears, that Laban was an idolater: and some of the fathers are of opinion, that Rachel stole away these idols, to withdraw him from idolatry, by removing the occasion of his sin. Ch.—Others think she was herself infected with this superstition, till Jacob entirely banished it from his family in Chanaan. C. xxxv. 2. T.—The Heb. Teraphim, is translated images by the Protestants in this place, though it certainly denotes idols. But Ose. iii. 4, they leave it untranslated, lest they should be forced to allow that images pertain to religious service, as well as sacrifices, &c. which are mentioned together. (W.) though they now indeed leave images in the same verse of Osee for what the Vulgate renders altar. These teraphims are consequently taken in a good as well as in a bad sense. They were, perhaps, made of rich metal, and taken by Rachel and Lia to indemnify them for the want of a dowry. This, however, was wrong, and done without the participation of their husband. H.

VER. 20. Away. Heb. "Jacob stole the heart of Laban," concealing his flight from him. M.

VER. 21. The river Euphrates.—Galaad, as it was called afterwards, v. 48. M.

VER. 22. Third day. He was gone to shear his sheep, distant three days' journey.

VER. 24. Speak not. Laban did not comply exactly, but he used no violence. H.

VER. 32. Slain. Homer says, "the father judges his children and wives;" and thus Jacob pronounces sentence. The Rabbins pretend it had its effect soon after in the death of Rachel. C. xxxv. 18. C.

VER. 35. Vain. For who would imagine, that a woman should treat in this manner the objects of her father's adoration? C.—It would hence appear, that she did not herself adore them, unless fear overcame her religion. H.

VER. 36. Angry. He was extremely quiet. But patience abused, turns to fury. M.

37 And searched all my household stuff? What hast thou found of all the substance of thy house? lay it here before my brethren, and thy brethren, and let them judge between me and thee.

38 Have I, therefore, been with thee twenty years? thy ewes and goats were not barren, the rams of thy flocks I did not eat:

39 Neither did I shew thee that which the beast had torn; I made good all the damage: whatsoever was lost by theft, thou didst exact it of me:

40 Day and night was I parched with heat, and with frost, and sleep departed from my eyes.

41 And in this manner have I served thee in thy house twenty years, fourteen for thy daughters, and six for thy flocks: thou hast changed also my wages ten times.

42 Unless the God of my father, Abraham, and the fear of Isaac, had stood by me, peradventure now thou hadst sent me away naked: God beheld my affliction and the labour of my hands, and rebuked thee yesterday.

43 Laban answered him: The daughters are mine, and the children, and thy flocks, and all things that thou seest are mine: what can I do to my children, and grandchildren?

44 Come, therefore, let us enter into a league; that it may be for a testimony between me and thee.

45 And Jacob took a stone, and set it up for a title.

46 And he said to his brethren: Bring hither stones. And they, gathering stones together, made a heap, and they ate upon it.

47 And Laban called it, The witness heap; and Jacob, The hillock of testimony: each of them according to the propriety of his language.

48 And Laban said: This heap shall be a witness between me and thee this day, and therefore the name thereof was called Galaad, that is, The witness heap.

49 The Lord behold and judge between us, when we shall be gone one from the other.

50 If thou afflict my daughters, and if thou bring in other wives over them: none is witness of our speech but God, who is present and beholdeth.

51 And he said again to Jacob: Behold this heap, and the stone which I have set up between me and thee,

52 Shall be a witness: this heap, I say, and the stone, be they for a testimony, if either I shall pass beyond it going towards thee, or thou shalt pass beyond it thinking harm to me.

53 The God of Abraham, and the God of Nachor, the God of their father, judge between us. And Jacob swore by the fear of his father Isaac:

54 And after he had offered sacrifices in the mountain, he called his brethren to eat bread. And when they had eaten, they lodged there:

55 But Laban arose in the night, and kissed his sons and daughters, and blessed them: and returned to his place.

CHAP. XXXII.

Jacob's vision of angels: his message and presents to Esau: his wrestling with an angel.

JACOB^a also went on the journey he had begun: and the angels of God met him.^b

2 And when he saw them, he said: These are the camps of God, and he called the name of that place Mahanaim, that is, Camps.

3 And he sent messengers before him to Esau, his brother, to the land of Seir, to the country of Edom:

4 And he commanded them, saying: Thus shall ye speak to my lord Esau: Thus saith thy brother Jacob: I have sojourned with Laban, and have been with him until this day:

5 I have oxen, and asses, and sheep, and men-servants, and women-servants: and now I send a message to my lord, that I may find favour in thy sight.

6 And the messengers returned to Jacob, saying: We came to Esau, thy brother, and behold he cometh with speed to meet thee with four hundred men.

7 Then Jacob was greatly afraid; and in his fear divided the people that was with him, and the flocks, and the sheep, and the oxen, and the camels, into two companies,

8 Saying: If Esau come to one company, and destroy it, the other company that is left, shall escape.

9 And Jacob said: O God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac: O Lord who saidst to me, Return to thy land, and to the place of thy birth, and I will do well for thee.

10 I am not worthy of the least of all thy mercies, and of thy truth which thou hast fulfilled to thy servant. With my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I return with two companies.

11 Deliver me from the hand of my brother Esau,

VER. 6. Men. Jonathan has Polemarchoi; officers or warriors, either to punish Jacob, (Wisd. x. 12.) as the latter feared, v. 11; or to do him honour, as Esau protested. C. xxxiii. 15. C.

VER. 9. God of . . Isaac. It is not true, therefore, that God never has the title of the God of any man, while living, as some assert. C. xxxi. 42. Jacob addresses him by those very titles which he had assumed at Bethel. C. xxviii. 18. H.

VER. 10. Not worthy. Chal. “my merits are beneath all thy kindnesses” S. Aug. reads, with S. Cyril, idoneus es, &c. “thou art sufficient for me.”

VER. 11. The children; sparing neither sex nor age, but destroying all. C.—

for I am greatly afraid of him; lest perhaps he come, and kill the mother with the children.

12 Thou didst say, that thou wouldst do well by me, and multiply my seed like the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered for multitude.

13 And when he had slept there that night, he set apart, of the things which he had, presents for his brother Esau,

14 Two hundred she-goats, twenty he-goats, two hundred ewes, and twenty rams, 15 Thirty milch camels with their colts, forty kine, and twenty bulls, twenty she-asses, and ten of their foals.

16 And he sent them by the hands of his servants, every drove by itself, and he said to his servants: Go before me, and let there be a space between drove and drove.

17 And he commanded the first, saying: If thou meet my brother Esau, and he ask thee: Whose art thou? or whither goest thou? or whose are these before thee?

18 Thou shalt answer: Thy servant Jacob's: he hath sent them as a present to my lord Esau; and he cometh after us.

19 In like manner he commanded the second, and the third, and all that followed the droves, saying: Speak ye the same words to Esau, when ye find him.

20 And ye shall add: Thy servant Jacob himself also followeth after us; for he said: I will appease him with the presents that go before, and afterwards I will see him, perhaps he will be gracious to me.

21 So the presents went before him, but himself lodged that night in the camp.

22 And rising early, he took his two wives and his two handmaids, with his eleven sons, and passed over the ford of Jaboc.

23 And when all things were brought over that belonged to him,

24 He remained alone; and behold, a man wrestled with him till morning.

25 And when he saw that he could not overcome him, he touched the sinew of his thigh, and forthwith it shrank.

26 And he said to him: Let me go, for it is break of day. He answered: I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.

Jacob insists on the promises of God; yet fears lest he should, by some offence, have deserved to forfeit his protection; particularly, as he had been living 20 years among idolaters. He acts with all prudence. W.

VER. 15. Camels. The milk of these animals is most exquisite, being mixed with three parts water. Pliny xl. 41, who says, "They give milk till they be with young again." The Arabs feed chiefly on their milk and flesh. S. Jer. c. Jor. ii. The value of all these presents, may give us some idea of the prodigious wealth which God had heaped upon Jacob in the space of six years! H.

VER. 20. He said, &c. These words were not to be related to Esau; they are the words of the sacred historian. There were probably five droves of goats, sheep, camels, kine and asses; by the successive presenting of which, Esau might be appeased.

VER. 22. Sons, with Dina his daughter, and all his household.

VER. 23. All things. Grotius thinks this has been lost in the Heb. copies; as it occurs in the Sam. Sept. and Syriac.

VER. 24. A man, &c. This was an angel in human shape, as we learn from Osee xii. 4. He is called God, v. 28. and 30, because he represented the person of the Son of God. This wrestling, in which Jacob, assisted by God, was a match for an angel, was so ordered, (v. 28.) that he might learn by this experiment of the divine assistance, that neither Esau, nor any other man, should have power to hurt him. It was also spiritual, as appeareth by his earnest prayer, urging, and at last obtaining the angel's blessing. Ch.—The father will not refuse a good gift to those who ask him with fervour and humility. Jacob had before set us an excellent pattern how to pray, placing his confidence in God, and distrust himself, v. 9. &c. H.—It is not certain, whether Jacob remained alone on the northern or on the southern banks of Jaboc. C.

27 And he said: What is thy name? He answered: Jacob.

28 But he said: Thy name shall not be called Jacob, but Israel; for if thou hast been strong against God, how much more shalt thou prevail against men?

29 Jacob asked him: Tell me by what name art thou called? He answered: Why dost thou ask my name? And he blessed him in the same place.

30 And Jacob called the name of the place Phanuel, saying: I have seen God face to face, and my soul has been saved.

31 And immediately the sun rose upon him, after he was past Phanuel; but he halted on his foot.

32 Therefore the children of Israel, unto this day, eat not the sinew, that shrank in Jacob's thigh: because he touched the sinew of his thigh and it shrank.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Jacob and Esau meet: Jacob goeth to Salem, where he raiseth an altar.

AND Jacob lifting up his eyes," saw Esau coming, and with him four hundred men: and he divided the children of Lia and of Rachel, and of the two handmaids.

2 And he put both the handmaids and their children foremost: and Lia and her children in the second place: and Rachel and Joseph last.

3 And he went forward and bowed down with his face to the ground seven times, until his brother came near.

4 Then Esau ran to meet his brother, and embraced him: and clasping him fast about the neck, and kissing him, wept.

5 And lifting up his eyes, he saw the women and their children, and said: What mean these? And do they belong to thee? He answered: They are the children which God hath given to me, thy servant.

6 Then the handmaids and their children came near and bowed themselves.

7 Lia also, with her children, came near and bowed down in like manner; and last of all, Joseph and Rachel bowed down.

8 And Esau said: What are the droves that I met? He answered: That I might find favour before my lord.

VER. 25. Sinew, near the coxendix, or huckle-bone. D.—This was to convince Jacob, how easily he could have gained the victory over him; and to make him remember, that it was not simply a vision, but a real wrestling. T.

VER. 28. Israel. This name was more honourable, and that by which his posterity were afterwards known; being called Israelites, and not Jacobites. God ratifies the title. C. xxxv. 10. It means a prince of God. S. Jer. q. Heb. (C.) or one standing upright, and contending victoriously with God, rectus Dei, yisrael. H.—Many have expounded it, a man seeing God; si-s-rae-el. Philo; &c.

VER. 29. Why, &c. He represses Jacob's curiosity, (H.) perhaps because God did not as yet choose to reveal his name. Ex. vi. 3. Some Greek and Latin copies add, which is wonderful, taken from Jud. xiii. 6. 18. C.

VER. 30. Phanuel. This word signifies the face of God, or the sight, or seeing of God. Ch.—Heb. reads here Peniel, though it has Phanuel in the next verse. Jacob thus returns thanks to God for the preservation of his life, after having seen God or his angel in a corporeal form, and not in a dream only. C.

VER. 31. Halted, or was lame. Alulensis thinks the angel healed him very soon. M.

VER. 32. The sinew in beasts of any kind, corresponding with that part of Jacob's thigh. H.—Some refrain from the whole quarter, others extract the sinew. This they do, without any command, in memory of this transaction. C.

CHAP. XXXIII. VER. 3. Forward, before his family; like a good father, exposing himself to the greatest danger. M.—Seven times, to testify his great humility and respect for his brother. How, then, can any one find fault with Catholics, if they bow down before the cross thrice on Good Friday, to testify their great veneration for their expiring Lord?

VER. 8. Favour. Esau had already heard from the servants. But he asks (51)

9 But he said: I have plenty, my brother, keep what is thine for thyself.

10 And Jacob said: Do not so I beseech thee, but if I have found favour in thy eyes, receive a little present at my hands: for I have seen thy face, as if I should have seen the countenance of God: be gracious to me,

11 And take the blessing which I have brought thee, and which God hath given me, who giveth all things. He took it with much ado at his brother's earnest pressing him, 12 And said: Let us go on together, and I will accompany thee in thy journey.

13 And Jacob said: My lord, thou knowest that I have with me tender children, and sheep, and kine with young: which if I should cause to be over-driven, in one day all the flocks will die.

14 May it please my lord to go before his servant: and I will follow softly after him, as I shall see my children to be able, until I come to my lord in Seir.

15 Esau answered: I beseech thee, that some of the people, at least, who are with me, may stay to accompany thee in the way. And he said: There is no necessity: I want nothing else but only to find favour, my lord, in thy sight.

16 So Esau returned that day, the way that he came, to Seir.

17 And Jacob came to Socoth: where having built a house, and pitched tents, he called the name of the place Socoth, that is, Tents.

18 And he passed over to Salem, a city of the Schemites, which is in the land of Chanaan, after he returned from Mesopotamia of Syria: and he dwelt by the town.

19 And he bought that part of the field, in which he pitched his tents, of the children of Hemor, the father of Schem, for a hundred lambs.

20 And raising an altar there, he invoked upon it the most mighty God of Israel.

again, meaning to excuse himself from receiving them. H.—This civil and unexpected behaviour, filled the breast of Jacob with such gratitude and love, that he made use of an hyperbole, I have seen, &c. . . of God. Chal. "of a prince," Syr. "of an angel," Elohim. See 2 K. xix. 27. Est. xv. 16. C.—A little present. Heb. monce, or mincha, calculated to shew the subjection of the giver. M.

VER. 13. Young, boves fœtus, giving milk, having calved lately, Sept. Bochart. C.

VER. 14. In Seir; not immediately, but as soon as it might be convenient. This time perhaps never arrived. S. Aug. q. 106.

VER. 18. The town of Salem, which was the first town of Chanaan that he came near since his return. It was afterwards called Schem, and Sichar. J. iv. 5. and Naplosa. Salem, mentioned John iii. 23, was probably more to the east. Some translate, "He came quite sound to the city of Schem;" where, Demetrius says, he dwelt ten years. Eus. præp. ix. 21, having stopped at Socoth six months. C.—This seems very probable, as Dina met with her misfortune a little before he left the country; and as she was six years old when she came from Haran, she would be about 15 when she began to go a visiting, &c. C. xxxiv. 1. H.

VER. 19. Lamba. Heb. Kossite, or Kesita, a word which occurs also, Jos. xxvi. 32, and Job xlii. 11; and may signify lambs, or a species of money, marked perhaps with their figure. It may also denote pearls, coral, a vessel, or purse of good money. S. Stephen, Acts vii. 19, mentions the price of money. But he probably speaks of the bargain made by Abraham with Ephron, son of Heth, for which some have substituted Hemor, the son of Schem. Kista in the Chal. means a vessel or measure; and we learn from Herodotus iii. 130, that the Persians were accustomed to keep their money in this manner. In the Chal. Syr. and Arabic languages, there are words derived from the same root as Kesita, which mean purity, perfection; and thus what Jacob gave was good current money; (C.) or such things as were received among merchants.

VER. 20. The most, &c. El Elohe Yisrael. By this name he dignified the

2 And when Schem the son of Hemor the Hevite, the prince of that land, saw her, he was in love with her: and took her away, and lay with her, ravishing the virgin.

3 And his soul was fast knit unto her; and whereas she was sad, he comforted her with sweet words.

4 And going to Hemor his father, he said: Get me this damsel to wife.

5 But when Jacob had heard this, his sons being absent, and employed in feeding the cattle, he held his peace till they came back.

6 And when Hemor the father of Schem was come out to speak to Jacob,

7 Behold his sons came from the field: and hearing what had passed, they were exceeding angry, because he had done a foul thing in Israel, and committed an unlawful act, in ravishing Jacob's daughter.

8 And Hemor spoke to them: The soul of my son Schem has a longing for your daughter: give her him to wife:

9 And let us contract marriages one with another: give us your daughters, and take you our daughters.

10 And dwell with us: the land is at your command, till, trade, and possess it.

11 Schem also said to her father and to her brethren: Let me find favour in your sight; and whatsoever you shall appoint I will give:

12 Raise the dowry, and ask gifts, and I will gladly give what you shall demand: only give me this damsel to wife.

13 The sons of Jacob answered Schem and his father deceitfully, being enraged at the deflowering of their sister:

14 We cannot do what you demand, nor give our sister to one that is uncircumcised; which with us is unlawful and abominable.

15 But in this we may be allied with you, if you will be like us, and all the male sex among you be circumcised:

16 Then will we mutually give and take your daughters, and ours; and we will dwell with you, and will be one people:

CHAP. XXXIV. VER. 1. Country, when a great festival was celebrated. Josep. Ant. i. 18. Dina was urged by curiosity to see and to be seen. Let others take example from her, and beware of associating with infidels, and of opening their hearts to pleasure at fairs and nocturnal meetings.

VER. 2. Virgin. Heb. and Sept. "He humbled or afflicted the virgin." It is well if she made all the resistance she was able, and resented the indignity; as she seems to have done, though Schem tried all means to comfort her. H.

VER. 5. Heard this, perhaps, from Dina's companion. M.

VER. 7. In Israel, or against the honour and peace of their father and all his family.—An unlawful act, which some nevertheless commit without scruple, and even dare to represent as a matter of small consequence if they marry afterwards!

VER. 10. Command, or you are at liberty to purchase and fill it as you please. H.

VER. 12. Dowry for Dina.—Gifts for her parents and brothers. G. xxiv. 53. C.

VER. 13. Deceitfully. The sons of Jacob, on this occasion, were guilty of a grievous sin, as well by falsely pretending religion, as by excess of their revenge. Though, otherwise their zeal against so foul a crime was commendable. Ch.—In this light it is viewed by Judith ix. 2. Simeon and Levi spoke on this occasion. Sept. as they were afterwards the chief actors, v. 25. They were commissioned by their father to speak for him; but Jacob was ignorant of their deceit. H.

VER. 14. Abominable. To be uncircumcised, was a reproach among the Hebrews. Yet there was no law forbidding to marry such. Laban was of this description, and the Chanaanites also; whose daughters the sons of Jacob themselves espoused, at least Juda and this very Simeon, as the Scripture assures us.

17 But if you will not be circumcised, we will take our daughter and depart.

18 Their offer pleased Hemor, and Sichem, his son:

19 And the young man made no delay, but forthwith fulfilled what was required: for he loved the damsel exceedingly, and he was the greatest man in all his father's house.

20 And going into the gate of the city, they spoke to the people:

21 These men are peaceable, and are willing to dwell with us: let them trade in the land, and till it, which being large and wide wanteth men to till it: we shall take their daughters for wives, and we will give them ours.

22 One thing there is for which so great a good is deferred: We must circumcise every male among us, following the manner of the nation.

23 And their substance, and cattle, and all that they possess, shall be ours; only in this let us condescend, and by dwelling together, we shall make one people.

24 And they all agreed, and circumcised all the males.

25 And behold the third day, when the pain of the wound was greatest: two of the sons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, the brothers of Dina, taking their swords, entered boldly into the city, and slew all the men:*

26 And they killed also Hemor and Sichem, and took away their sister Dina out of Sichem's house.

27 And when they were gone out, the other sons of Jacob came upon the slain; and plundered the city in revenge of the rape.

28 And they took their sheep, and their herds, and their asses, wasting all they had in their houses and in their fields.

29 And their children and wives they took captive.

30 And when they had boldly perpetrated these things, Jacob said to Simeon and Levi: You have troubled me, and made me hateful to the Chanaanites and Pherezites, the inhabitants of this land. We are few: they will gather themselves together and kill me; and both I, and my house shall be destroyed.

31 They answered: Should they abuse our sister as a strumpet?

CHAP. XXXV.

Jacob purgeth his family from idols: goeth, by God's commandment, to Bethel, and there buildeth an altar. God appearing again to Jacob, blesseth him, and changeth his name into Israel. Rachel dieth in child-birth. Isaac also dieth.

IN the mean time God said to Jacob: ^b Arise and go up to Bethel, and dwell there, and make there an altar to God, ^c who appeared to thee when thou didst flee from Esau, thy brother.

2 And Jacob having called together all his household, said: Cast away the strange gods that are among you, and be cleansed, and change your garments.

3 Arise, and let us go up to Bethel, that we may make there an altar to God; who heard me in the day of my affliction, and accompanied me in my journey.

4 So they gave him all the strange gods they had, and the ear-rings which were in their ears: ^d and he buried them under the turpentine tree, that is behind the city of Sichem.

5 And when they were departed, the terror of God fell upon all the cities round about, and they durst not pursue after them as they went away.

6 And Jacob came to Luza, which is in the land of Chanaan, surnamed Bethel: he and all the people that were with him.

7 And he built there an altar, and called the name of that place, The house of God: ^e for there God appeared to him when he fled from his brother.

8 At the same time Debora, the nurse of Rebecca, died, and was buried at the foot of Bethel, under an oak, and the name of that place was called, The oak of weeping.

10 Saying: 'Thou shalt not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name. And he called him Israel.

Sicheim was the only one among the citizens really guilty, unless perhaps some of his servants might have given him assistance; and Hemor, the king, might contract some stain by not causing a better police to be observed, and by not punishing his son with greater severity, and not sending Dina home, &c. But why are the harmless citizens to be involved in ruin? unless Jerom translates it the spring, or the finest time of the earth. Others suppose it signifies the high road, (v. 19.) or horse-course, or a mile, &c. as if the place, where Rachel died, and not the season of the year, were designated. Calmet concludes, she died about the distance of 10 acres (sillon, furrow or ridge) from Ephrata. But there seems to be no reason why we should recede from the Vulgate. H.

2 Esau took wives of the daughters of Chanaan: Ada the daughter of Elon the Hethite, and Oolibama the daughter of Ana, the daughter of Sebeon the Hevite:

3 And Basemath, the daughter of Ismael, sister of Nabajoth.

4 *And Ada bore Eliphaz: Basemath bore Rahuel.

5 Oolibama bore Jehus, and Ihelon, and Core. These are the sons of Esau, that were born to him in the land of Chanaan.

6 And Esau took his wives, and his sons and daughters, and every soul of his house, and his substance, and cattle, and all that he was able to acquire in the land of Chanaan: and went into another country, and departed from his brother Jacob.

7 *For they were exceeding rich, and could not dwell together; neither was the land in which they sojourned, able to bear them, for the multitude of their flocks.

8 ^bAnd Esau dwelt in mount Seir: he is Edom.

viva sator. Hor. Sat. i. 1. He was one of the brightest figures of Jesus Christ, on account of his miraculous birth, name, willingness to be sacrificed, marriage with a woman sought at a great distance, &c. C.—Esau, who had always shewn a great regard for his father, joins his brother in rendering to him the last rites of burial. H.—Rebecca was probably dead. M.—The death of Isaac is mentioned out of its place, that the history of Joseph may not be interrupted, as it happened when Joseph was in prison, A. 2288. C.

CHAP. XXXVI. VER. 1. Edom. His genealogy extends as far as v. 20, where that of Seir, the Horrite, begins. The seven first verses specify Esau's sons, the twelve next his grandsons born in Seir. From the 15th to the 20th verse, we have the most ancient form of government in that nation under the Aluphins, or heads of families. To them succeed kings, (v. 31 to 44,) and then dukes to the end. Moses omits several generations of Oolibama's grand-children, as foreign to his purpose, which was to shew the Israelites whom they were not to molest. The kings, of whom he speaks, (v. 31,) might govern different parts of the country at the same time; and that before any form of government was established among the Hebrews, as it was under Moses, who is styled a king, (Deut. xxxiii. 5,) about 200 years after Esau had driven the Horrites from their mountains. C.—Among these nations several good men might exist, as Job, &c. But the true religion was preserved more fully among the 12 tribes. S. Aug. de C. D. xv. xvi. W.

VER. 2. Ada. These wives of Esau are called by other names, Gen. xxvi. But it was very common amongst the ancients for the same persons to have two names, as Esau himself was also called Edom. Ch.—Ana the daughter of Sebeon. It is not certain that Ana was a woman. The Sam. and Sept. make him son of Sebeon, both here and v. 14, (H.) as well as some Latin copies; and he is mentioned as such, v. 24. The daughter of Sebeon may, therefore, designate his grand-daughter, which is not unusual. Sebeon is called Hevite, Hethite, and Horrite, on account of his dwelling in different countries; though some think they were different persons. C.—This, and innumerable other difficulties, may convince Protestants that the Scriptures are not easy. W.

VER. 4. Eliphaz; perhaps the Themanite, and friend of Job, (S. Jer.) or his grandfather, by Theman; as Job was the grandson of Esau, and the second king, v. 33. T.

VER. 6. Jacob, by the divine Providence, as Chanaan was to be his inheritance. M.—He had returned from Seir about the same time as Jacob came home. S. Aug. q. 119.

9 And these are the generations of Esau, the father of Edom, in mount Seir.

10 And these the names of his sons: ^aEliphaz the son of Ada, the wife of Esau: and Rahuel, the son of Basemath, his wife.

11 And Eliphaz had sons: Theman, Omar, Sepho, and Gatham and Cenez.

12 And Thamna was the concubine of Eliphaz, the son of Esau: and she bore him Amalech. These are the sons of Ada, the wife of Esau.

13 And the sons of Rahuel: were Nahath and Zara, Samma and Meza. These were the sons of Basemath, the wife of Esau.

14 And these were the sons of Oolibama, the daughter of Ana, the daughter of Sebeon, the wife of Esau, whom she bore to him, Jehus, and Ihelon, and Core.

15 These were dukes of the sons of Esau: the sons of Eliphaz, the first-born of Esau: duke Theman, duke Omar, duke Sepho, duke Cenez, 16 Duke Core, duke Gatham, duke Amalech: these are the sons of Eliphaz, in the land of Edom, and these the sons of Ada.

17 And these were the sons of Rahuel, the son of Esau: duke Nahath, duke Zara, duke Samma, duke Meza. And these are the dukes of Rahuel, in the land of Edom: these the sons of Basemath, the wife of Esau.

18 And these the sons of Oolibama, the wife of Esau: duke Jehus, duke Ihelon, duke Core. These are the dukes of Oolibama, the daughter of Ana, and wife of Esau.

19 These are the sons of Esau, and these the dukes of them: the same is Edom.

20 ^bThese are the sons of Seir, the Horrite, the inhabitants of the land: Lotan, and Sobal, and Sebeon, and Ana, 21 And Dison, and Eser, and Disan. These are dukes of the Horrites, the sons of Seir, in the land of Edom.

22 And Lotan had sons: Hori and Heman. And the sister of Lotan was Thamna.

23 And these the sons of Sobal: Alvan, and Manahat, and Ebal, and Sepho, and Onam.

24 And these the sons of Sebeon: Aia and Ana. This is Ana that found the hot waters in the wilderness, when he fed the asses of Sebeon, his father:

25 And he had a son Dison, and a daughter Oolibama.

VER. 9. Of Edom, or of all the nations who inhabited Idumea, sprung from Esau's grand-children. C.

VER. 15. Heb. Aluph, prince of a tribe, or of a thousand; a Chiliarh. Zach. v. 2. The Rabbin assert they wore not a crown, as the kings did. C.—Both obtained their authority by election. An aristocracy prevailed under the dukes. M.

VER. 16. Duke Core, being the son of Esau, is omitted in the Sam. though found in all the versions and Heb. Ken.

VER. 24. Hot waters. Medicinal. (M.) like the springs at Bath, &c. H.—Heb. hayemin, a word which some translate mules; others, the nation of that name; or the giants, Eneans, with whom he had perhaps some engagement, as Adad (v. 35.) had with the Madianites, the particulars of which were then well known. The Sept. and ancient versions retain the original word. It is used for a body of water. C.

VER. 30. Seir, contemporary with the princes of Esau, in Seir town or region. C.

VER. 31. A king. See v. 1. Moses might also add this with reference to the times, when he knew the Hebrews would petition for a king, for whom he gave particular laws. M.—These kings were probably foreigners, who subdued the natives. They did not obtain the kingdom by succession. C.

VER. 33. Jobab. Most people suppose this is Job, the model of patience. M.—Bosra, or Bezer, was the capital of Idumea, in the tribe of Ruben. C.

VER. 37. River Rohoboth; or as it is expressed, 1 Par. i. 48. of Rohoboth, which is near the river Euphrates, below where the Chaboras empties itself.

26 And these were the sons of Dison: Hamdan, and Eseban, and Jethram, and Charan.

27 These also were the sons of Eser: Balaan, and Zavan, and Acan.

28 And Dison had sons: Hus and Aram.

29 These were dukes of the Horrites: duke Lotan, duke Sobal, duke Sebeon, duke Ana, 30 Duke Dison, duke Eser, duke Disan: these were dukes of the Horrites that ruled in the land of Seir.

31 And the kings that ruled in the land of Edom, before the children of Israel had a king, were these:

32 Bela the son of Beor, and the name of his city Denaba.

33 And Bela died, and Jobab, the son of Zara, of Bosra, reigned in his stead.

34 And when Jobab was dead, Husam, of the land of the Themanites, reigned in his stead.

35 And after his death, Adad, the son of Badad, reigned in his stead, who defeated the Madianites in the country of Moab; and the name of his city was Avith.

36 And when Adad was dead, there reigned in his stead, Semla, of Masreca.

37 And he being dead, Saul, of the river Rohoboth, reigned in his stead.

38 And when he also was dead, Balanan, the son of Achobor, succeeded to the kingdom.

39 This man also being dead, Adar reigned in his place; and the name of his city was Phau: and his wife was called Meetabel, the daughter of Matred, daughter of Mezaab.

40 And these are the names of the dukes of Esau in their kindreds, and places, and callings: duke Thamna, duke Alva, duke Jetheth,

41 Duke Oolibama, duke Ela, duke Phinon,

42 Duke Cenez, duke Theman, duke Mabsar,

43 Duke Magdiel, duke Hiram: these are the dukes of Edom dwelling in the land of their government; the same is Esau, the father of the Edomites.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Joseph's dreams: he is sold by his brethren, and carried into Egypt.

AND Jacob dwelt in the land of Chanaan, wherein his father sojourned.*

2 And these are his generations: ^aJoseph, when he was sixteen years old, was feeding the flock with his brethren, being but a boy: and he was with the sons of

VER. 39. Adar. Many confound him with the king, whom David overcame. —Daughter of Mezaab, or perhaps her grand-daughter, or adopted child.

VER. 40. Callings. They left their names to various places. They were in power when the Hebrews approached their respective territories, and threw them into dismay. Ex. xv. 15.—Alva. Sept. gola. C.

VER. 43. The same Edom is Esau. Moses seems particularly attentive to assert both titles for the same person, v. 8, &c. The time of Esau's death cannot be ascertained. There is reason to hope that he died penitent; though in the early part of his life, he gave way to his ferocious temper, and became a figure of the reprobate. He lived on terms of friendship with his brother, assisted him to bury his father, &c. C.—He was a hunter, indeed; which S. Jerom looks upon as a bad sign: "nunquam venatorem in bonam partem legi," in Mic. v. But this was also in his younger days. H.—I have hated Esau, Matt. i. refers to his irreligious posterity, and to his being deprived of temporal advantages, attending the birth-right. T. C.

CHAP. XXXVII. VER. 1. Sojourned at Hebron and the environs. H.

VER. 2. Generations. This connects his history with C. xxxv. What happened to Jacob and his sons, and particularly to Joseph, forms the subject of the remaining part of Genesis. H.—Old; complete, or beginning "his 17th year," as the Heb. Chal. and Sept. have it. "He was a son or boy of"—so many years always means the current year unfinished. Bochart 1. R. xlii. 1.—The sons. Perhaps these were not so much enraged against Joseph, till he told his father of their scandalous behaviour, in order that he might put a stop to it.—He accounted (55)

Bala and of Zelpha his father's wives: and he accused his brethren to his father of a most wicked crime.

3 Now Israel loved Joseph above all his sons, because he had him in his old age: and he made him a coat of divers colours.

4 And his brethren seeing that he was loved by his father, more than all his sons, hated him, and could not speak peaceably to him.

5 Now it fell out also that he told his brethren a dream, that he had dreamed: which occasioned them to hate him the more.

6 And he said to them: Hear my dream which I dreamed.

7 I thought we were binding sheaves in the field: and my sheaf arose as it were, and stood, and your sheaves standing about bowed down before my sheaf.

8 His brethren answered: Shalt thou be our king? or shall we be subject to thy dominion? Therefore this matter of his dreams and words ministered nourishment to their envy and hatred.

9 He dreamed also another dream, which he told his brethren, saying: I saw in a dream, as it were the sun, and the moon, and eleven stars worshipping me.

10 And when he had told this to his father, and brethren, his father rebuked him and said: What meaneth this dream that thou hast dreamed? shall I and thy mother, and thy brethren worship thee upon the earth?

11 His brethren therefore envied him: but his father considered the thing with himself.

12 And when his brethren abode in Sichem, feeding their father's flocks,

13 Israel said to him: Thy brethren feed the sheep in Sichem: come, I will send thee to them. And when he answered:

14 I am ready: he said to him: Go, and see if all things be well with thy brethren, and the cattle: and bring me word again what is doing. So being sent from the vale of Hebron, he came to Sichem:

15 And a man found him there wandering in the field, and asked what he sought.

* Infra xlii. 22.—b Wis. x. 13.

Some editions of the Sept. read, "they accused him," &c.; but all others confirm the Vulgate and Hebrew. C.—Crim.: perhaps of sodomy, or bestiality (S. Tho.); or of abusive language to Joseph himself. C.

VER. 3. Old age, and therefore expected to have no more children; but he loved him still more, on account of his innocent and sweet behaviour (M.): in which sense the Sam. Chal. &c. have, "because he was a wise and prudent boy."—Colours. The nations of the East delight in gaudy attire, "hanging down to the heels" as the original passim is sometimes expressed, talaris & polymita, v. 3. C.

VER. 4. Could not, through envy, which caused them to notice every little distinction shewn to Joseph. They perceived he was the most beloved. His accusing them, and insinuating by his mysterious dreams that he would be their lord, heightened their rage. H.

VER. 5. A dream. These dreams of Joseph were prophetical, and sent from God, as were also those which he interpreted, Gen. xl. and xli.; otherwise, generally speaking, the observing of dreams is condemned in the Scripture, as superstitious and sinful. See Deut. xviii. 10. and Eccl. xxxiv. 2. 3.

VER. 7. Sheaf. Joseph probably knew not what this portended, as the prophets were sometimes ignorant of the real purport of their visions. C.—But it admirably foretold the famine, which would bring his brethren to adore him in Egypt. M.

VER. 9. The sun. This second dream confirmed the truth of the former. Joseph relates it with simplicity, not suspecting the ill will of his brethren: but his father easily perceives what effect the narration would have, and desires him to be more cautious. He even points out the apparent incoherence of the dream, as Rachel, who seemed intended by the moon, was already dead; unless this dream happened before that event. S. Aug. (q. 128.) observes, this was never literally verified in Joseph, but it was in Jesus Christ, whom he prefigured. C.—Some think that Bala, the nurse of Joseph, was intended by the moon. T.

VER. 10. Worship. This word is not used here to signify divine worship, but 16 But he answered: I seek my brethren, tell me where they feed the flocks.

17 And the man said to him: They are departed from this place: for I heard them say: Let us go to Dothain. And Joseph went forward after his brethren, and found them in Dothain.

18 And when they saw him afar off, before he came nigh them, they thought to kill him:

19 And said one to another: Behold the dreamer cometh.

20 Come, let us kill him, and cast him into some old pit: and we will say: Some evil beast hath devoured him: and then it shall appear what his dreams avail him.

21 *And Ruben hearing this, endeavoured to deliver him out of their hands, and said:

22 Do not take away his life, nor shed his blood: but cast him into this pit, that is in the wilderness, and keep your hands harmless: now he said this, being desirous to deliver him out of their hands and to restore him to his father.

23 And as soon as he came to his brethren, they forthwith stript him of his outside coat, that was of divers colours:

24 And cast him into an old pit where there was no water.

25 And sitting down to eat bread, they saw some Ismaelites on their way coming from Galaad, with their camels, carrying spices, and balm, and myrrh to Egypt.

26 And Juda said to his brethren: What will it profit us to kill our brother, and conceal his blood?

27 It is better that he be sold to the Ismaelites, and that our hands be not defiled: for he is our brother and our flesh. His brethren agreed to his words.

28 And when the Madianite merchants passed by, they drew him out of the pit, and sold him to the Ismaelites, for twenty pieces of silver: and they led him into Egypt.

29 And Ruben returning to the pit, found not the boy:

an inferior veneration, expressed by the bowing of the body, and that, according to the manner of the eastern nations, down to the ground.

VER. 11. With himself: not doubting but it was prophetic. Thus acted the B. Virgin. C.

VER. 13. In Sichem. About ninety miles off. The town had not probably been as yet rebuilt. Jacob had a field there, and the country was free for any one to feed their flocks. It was customary to drive them to a distance. C.

VER. 14. Bring me. He was afraid of letting him remain with them, and retained him mostly at home for company, and to protect him from danger.

VER. 16. My brethren. The man was acquainted with Jacob's family, as he had dwelt in those parts for a long time. H.

VER. 17. Dothain: twelve miles to the north of Samaria. Ensel.

VER. 19. The dreamer. Heb. Bahal hachalomoth, "the lord of dreams," or the visionary lord (C.); or one who feigns dreams: so the Jews say of our Saviour, this seducer. H.

VER. 20. Pit: walled round to contain water: Heb. Bur. Bar means a well that has no walls. M.—Shall appear. They resolve to tell a lie, and easily believe that Joseph had been as bad as themselves in telling one first. If they had believed the dreams were from God, they would hardly have supposed that they could prevent them from having their effect. H.

VER. 22. His father. Ruben wished to regain his father's favour. C. xxxv. 22.

VER. 25. To eat bread. How could they do this while their innocent brother was praying and lamenting! C. xlii. 21. H.—Some: a caravan of merchants. D.—Balm, or rosin; "that of Syria resembles attic honey." Plin.—Myrrh, (staeten); Heb. Lot: "drops of myrrh or laudanum, or of the Lotus tree." C.

VER. 28. Of silver. Some have read, thirty pieces of gold or silver. S. Amb. c. 3.—The price was trifling: twenty sicles would be about £2 5s. 7½d. English. The Madianites and Ismaelites jointly purchased Joseph. H.

VER. 29. Ruben, who, in the mean time, had been absent while his brethren hearkened to the proposal of Juda only, and therefore consented to this evil. H.

30 And rending his garments he went to his brethren, and said: The boy doth not appear, and whither shall I go?

31 And they took his coat, and dipped it in the blood of a kid, which they had killed:

32 Sending some to carry it to their father, and to say: This we have found: see whether it be thy son's coat, or not.

33 And the father acknowledging it, said: It is my son's coat, an evil wild beast hath eaten him, a beast hath devoured Joseph.

34 And tearing his garments, he put on sackcloth, mourning for his son a long time.

35 And all his children being gathered together to comfort their father in his sorrow, he would not receive comfort, but said: I will go down to my son into hell, mourning. And whilst he continued weeping, 36 The Madianites sold Joseph in Egypt to Putiphar, an eunuch of Pharaoh, captain of the soldiers.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

The sons of Juda: the death of Her and Onan: the birth of Phares and Zara.

AT that time Juda went down from his brethren, and turned in to a certain Odollamite, named Hiras.

2 And he saw there the daughter of a man of Chanaan, called Sue: and taking her to wife, he went in unto her.

3 And she conceived, and bore a son, and called his name Her.

4 And conceiving again, she bore a son, and called him Onan.

5 She bore also a third: whom she called Sela. After whose birth, she ceased to bear any more.

6 And Juda took a wife for Her, his first born, whose name was Tamar.

* 1 Par. ii. 1.—b Num. xxvi. 19.

VER. 30. I go to seek for him. His brethren inform him of what they had done, and he consents to keep it a secret from his father. M.

VER. 33. A beast. So he might reasonably conclude from the blood, and from the insinuations of the messengers sent by his ten sons, (II.) whom he would not suspect of so heinous a crime. Wild beasts infested that country. M.

VER. 34. Sack-cloth, or hair-cloth, cilicio. These garments were made very close, like a sack, of the hair taken from the goats of Cilicia, which grew long, rough, and of a dark colour. The poorest people used them: Usan in Castrorum & miseris velanina nautis, (Virg. Geor. 3.); and the Ascetics, or monks, afterwards chose them for the sake of mortification and humility. C.—Jacob was the first, mentioned in Scripture, who put them on, and the Israelites imitated him in their mourning.—Long time; twenty-three years, till he heard of his son being still alive. M.

VER. 35. Into hell; that is, into limbo, the place where the souls of the just were received before the death of our Redeemer. For allowing that the word hell sometimes is taken for the grave, it cannot be so taken in this place; since Jacob did not believe his son to be in the grave, (whom he supposed to be devoured by a wild beast) and therefore could not mean to go down to him thither: but certainly meant the place of rest, where he believed his soul to be. Ch.—Soul, or sheol, to crave, denotes the receptacle of the dead, (Leigh) or a lower region; the grave for the body; limbo, or hell, when speaking of the soul. See Delrio, Adag. in 2 Kings, p. 209. H.—Protestants here translate it, "the grave," being unwilling to admit a third place in the other world for the soul. See the contrary in S. Aug. ep. 99. ad Evod. de C. D. xx. 15. W.

VER. 36. An eunuch. This word sometimes signifies a chamberlain, courtier, or officer of the king: and so it is taken in this place. Ch.—Soldiers cooks, or butchers. Heb. tabachim, executioners, mactantium. He might also be chief sacrificer, governor of the prisons, &c. all these employments were anciently very honourable. Dan. ii. 14. The providence of God never shines more brightly in any part of the Scripture, than in this history of Joseph, except in that of Jesus Christ, of whom Joseph was a beautiful figure. He was born when his father was grown old, as Jesus was in the last age of the world; he was a son increasing, as Jesus ward in age and grace before God and men; both were beloved by their father, both comely, &c. C.

CHAP. XXXVIII. VER. 1. At that time Juda, twenty years old, marries the daughter of Sue, and has three sons by her during the three following years. The first takes Tamar to wife, when he was seventeen. Onan marries her the next year: after which, she remains a widow about three years, when she bears twins to Juda. Phares goes down with him into Egypt, and has children there

7 And Her, the first born of Juda, was wicked in the sight of the Lord: and was slain by him.

8 Juda, therefore, said to Onan his son: Go in to thy brother's wife and marry her, that thou mayst raise seed to thy brother.

9 He knowing that the children should not be his, when he went in to his brother's wife, he spilled his seed upon the ground, lest children should be born in his brother's name.

10 And therefore the Lord slew him, because he did a detestable thing:

11 Wherefore Juda said to Tamar his daughter-in-law: Remain a widow in thy father's house, till Sela my son grow up: for he was afraid lest, he also might die, as his brethren did. She went her way, and dwelt in her father's house.

12 And after many days were past: the daughter of Sue the wife of Juda died: and when he had taken comfort after his mourning, he went up to Thamnass, to the shearers of his sheep, he and Hiras the Odollamite, the shepherd of his flock.

13 And it was told Tamar that her father-in-law was come up to Thamnass to shear his sheep.

14 And she put off the garments of her widowhood, and took a veil: and changing her dress, sat in the cross way, that leadeth to Thamnass: because Sela was grown up, and she had not been married to him.

15 When Juda saw her, he thought she was a harlot: for she had covered her face, lest she should be known.

16 And going to her, he said: Suffer me to lie with thee: for he knew her not to be his daughter-in-law. And she answered: What wilt thou give me to enjoy my company?

17 He said: I will send thee a kid out of the flock. And c Num. xxvi. 19.

during Jacob's life. On this account, they are numbered among those who went down with Jacob, (C. xvi. 12.) as the children of Benjamin seem to be likewise. Thus all these events might happen during the twenty-three years that Jacob dwelt in Chanaan, and the seventeen that he sojourned in Egypt. Some have thought the time too short, and have concluded that Juda had been married long before Joseph's slavery. He was, however, only four years older. C.

VER. 5. Sela. Juda gave the name of Her to his first born, as the Heb. shews. His wife gave names to the two latter.—Ceased; Heb. casbi: "she died in bearing him," as Aquila has it. Most commentators take the word for the name of a place mentioned, Jos. xv. 44. "He (Juda) was at Casbi when she bare him."

VER. 7. Wicked; without shame or remorse, sinning against nature, in order, if we may believe the Jews, that the beauty of his wife might not be impaired by having children. Onan was actuated by envy. M.

VER. 8. Wife. This was then customary among the Chanaanites, as Philo insinuates. It also continued to be practised in Egypt, till the year of Christ 491 at least, when the marriage had not been consummated. Moses established it as a law, when no issue had sprung from the deceased brother. C. Deut. xxv. 5. The eldest son bore his name; the rest were called after their own father. This law is now abrogated; and the prohibition, which has been issued by the Church, can be dispensed with only by herself, (W.) as was the case in the marriage of Henry VIII. with Catharine, the virgin relict of his brother Arthur. II.

VER. 10. Slew him, perhaps by the hand of evil angels, Ps. lxxvii. 49. Asmodeus &c. who slew the libidinous husbands of Sara. Tob. iii. 7. M.—If an exemplary vengeance were oftener taken of the perpetrators of such a detestable thing this abominable and unnatural vice would sooner perhaps be eradicated. H.

VER. 11. Till. Juda had no design to give her to Sela, as the custom of that age required. C.—She waited patiently for a time; when, perceiving that she was neglected, she devised a wicked scheme to punish Juda, even at the hazard of her own life. H.

VER. 14. Veil; (theristrum) a long robe, covering the whole body, except the eyes. Thus she was disguised; or, as it were, masked, as Aquila translates. Harlots herein imitated modest women. C. xxiv. 65.—Cross way. Heb. Hena-yin, which the Sept. and Syr. take for a proper name. Others translate "at the gate of the eyes," which means two roads, where a person must open his eyes to judge which is the right one—or "at the gate of the two fountains leading to Thamnass." Jud. xiv. 1. Prostitutes formerly infested the high roads. Jer. iii. 2. Ezec. xvi. 25. Chrysippus says, "at first harlots remained out of the city, and covered their faces but afterwards growing more hardened, they laid aside the mask," &c.

when she said again: I will suffer what thou wilt, if thou give me a pledge, till thou send what thou promisest.

18 Juda said: What wilt thou have for a pledge? She answered: Thy ring and bracelet, and the staff which thou holdest in thy hand. The woman therefore at one copulation conceived.

19 And she arose and went her way: and putting off the apparel which she had taken, put on the garments of her widowhood.

20 And Juda sent a kid by his shepherd, the Odolamite, that he might receive the pledge again, which he had given to the woman: but he, not finding her,

21 Asked the men of that place: Where is the woman that sat in the cross way? And when they all made answer: There was no harlot in this place, 22 He returned to Juda, and said to him: I have not found her; moreover, the men of that place said to me, that there never sat a harlot there.

23 Juda said: Let her take it to herself, surely she cannot charge us with a lie, I sent the kid which I promised: and thou didst not find her.

24 And behold, after three months, they told Juda, saying: Thamar, thy daughter-in-law, hath played the harlot, and she appeareth to have a big belly. And Juda said: Bring her out that she may be burnt.

25 But when she was led to execration, she sent to her father-in-law, saying: By the man, to whom these things belong, I am with child. See whose ring, and bracelet, and staff this is.

26 But he acknowledging the gifts, said: She is juster than I: because I did not give her to Sela, my son. However he knew her no more.

27 "And when she was ready to be brought to bed, there appeared twins in her womb: and in the very delivery of the infants, one put forth a hand, whereon the midwife tied a scarlet thread, saying:

28 This shall come forth the first.

29 But he drawing back his hand, the other came forth: and the woman said: Why is the partition divided for thee? and therefore called his name Phares.

30 "Afterwards his brother came out, on whose hand was the scarlet thread: and she called his name Zara.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Joseph hath charge of his master's house: rejecteth his mistress's solicitations; is falsely accused by her, and cast into prison, where he hath the charge of all the prisoners.

AND Joseph was brought into Egypt, and Putiphar, an eunuch of Pharaoh, chief captain of the army, an Egyptian, bought him of the Ismaelites, by whom he was brought.

2 And the Lord was with him, and he was a prosperous man in all things: and he dwelt in his master's house:

3 Who knew very well that the Lord was with him, and made all that he did to prosper in his hand.

4 And Joseph found favour in the sight of his master, and ministered to him: and being set over all by him, he governed the house committed to him, and all things that were delivered to him:

5 And the Lord blessed the house of the Egyptian for Joseph's sake, and multiplied all his substance, both at home, and in the fields.

6 Neither knew he any other thing, but the bread which he ate. And Joseph was of a beautiful countenance, and comely to behold.

7 "And after many days, his mistress cast her eyes on Joseph, and said: Lie with me.

8 But he in no wise consenting to that wicked act, said to her: Behold, my master hath delivered all things to me, and knoweth not what he hath in his own house:

9 Neither is there any thing which is not in my power, or that he hath not delivered to me, but thee, who art his wife; how then can I do this wicked thing, and sin against my God?

10 With such words as these day by day, both the woman was importunate with the young man, and he refused the adultery.

11 Now it happened on a certain day, that Joseph went into the house, and was doing some business, without any man with him:

12 And she catching the skirt of his garment, said:

VER. 18. Staff. These were all marks of dignity. "Kings made use of spears, or sceptres, before they wore a diadem." Trogn. 43. C.—Juda might blame himself for exposing these valuable things, and divesting himself of all his dignity, to gratify his unjustifiable passion. If some have excused both the parties concerned, the Scripture at least sufficiently shews in what light we ought to consider their conduct. Juda himself thought her worthy of death; though in some sense, she was juster than himself, v. 24. 26. H.—She was guilty of a sort of adultery, being engaged to Sela; and also of incest, &c. whereas the fault of Juda, through ignorance of her person, was simply fornication, which is, however, always contrary to the law of nature, as the pagans themselves confessed. Grot. in Matt. v. C.—From Christ's choosing to be born of such progenitors, we may learn to adore his humility and tender regard for sinners. H.

VER. 21. Harlot. Heb. Kedeshu a person consecrated to good or evil. Many nations esteemed prostitution, in honour of Venus, as a laudable action. 2 K. xvii. 30. C.

VER. 23. A lie. Heb. "lest we be exposed to shame," by making any farther search. M.

VER. 25. Execution. The Rabbin say she was to be marked with a hot iron. If she was to die, before she was delivered, God prevented the cruel sentence from taking effect. H.—Many nations have punished adultery with fire. Maerinus, the Roman emperor, ordered the culprits to be tied together and thrown into the flames. Capitolin.—Moses commanded the daughters of priests, who should be detected in this crime, to be given to the flames, (Lev. xxi. 9,) and others to be stoned; (Lev. xx. 10,) whence the Rabbin have concluded, that Thamar was a priest's daughter. C.

VER. 26. Juster. For Juda had been guilty of injustice; and had thus exposed her to the danger of following a life of lewdness. H.—She remained a widow afterwards, as she was now rendered unfit to be married either to Juda or Sela. The latter married another woman. Num. xxvi. 19. C.—While Juda was engaged in this unlawful commerce, and yielded to the temptation, Joseph was triumphing over a much greater temptation, in rejecting the solicitations of his master's wife. H.

VER. 29. Partition; the secundina. The midwife was apprehensive of danger. M.—Phares. That is, a breach or division. Ch.

VER. 30. Zara. "Orient, or rising;" in whose hand the red ribband denoted, that the blood of Christ is the source of all our merits and happiness. These two brothers were a type of the vocation of the Gentiles, and of the reprobation of the Jews, who lost the privileges to which they thought themselves entitled. S. Iron. iv. 42. S. Chrys. &c. C.—Phares was the ancestor of Jesus Christ. S. Matt. i. 3.

CHAP. XXXIX. VER. 1. Ismaelites. They are called Madianites. C. xxxvii. 36. H.

VER. 6. Bread. A proverbial expression, to shew how entirely he reposed in Joseph's fidelity and prudence. M.—He was so rich, that he knew not the extent of his wealth. So Petronius says, Nescit quid habeat, adeo Zaplulus est. It may also be understood as a commendation of Joseph's disinterestedness.

VER. 7. Many days. About 10 years; as Joseph was 30, three years after this. C.

VER. 9. His wife, and such things as could not be touched without sin; such as his daughter, if the woman, whom Joseph afterwards married, was the daughter of this man. C. xli. 45.—My God, Elohim; which might also be understood of his lord and master. The sin against the latter would be resented by God, who is offended by every transgression. H.

VER. 10. Both the woman was importunate, &c. Heb. does not express this so fully. D.

VER. 12. Out. He could easily have wrested it from her. But he would not do any thing that might seem disrespectful, nor claim what her impure hands had touched. M.

Lie with me. But he leaving the garment in her hand, fled, and went out.

13 And when the woman saw the garment in her hands, and herself disregarded,

14 She called to her the men of her house, and said to them: See, he hath brought in a Hebrew, to abuse us: he came in to me, to lie with me; and when I cried out, 15 And he heard my voice, he left the garment that I held, and got him out.

16 For a proof therefore of her fidelity, she kept the garment, and shewed it to her husband when he returned home:

17 And said: The Hebrew servant, whom thou hast brought, came to me to abuse me.

18 And when he heard me cry, he left the garment which I held, and fled out.

19 His master hearing these things, and giving too much credit to his wife's words, was very angry,

20 And cast Joseph into the prison, where the king's prisoners were kept, and he was there shut up.

21 But the Lord was with Joseph, and having mercy upon him gave him favour in the sight of the chief keeper of the prison:

22 Who delivered into his hand all the prisoners that were kept in custody: and whatsoever was done, was under him.

23 Neither did he himself know any thing, having committed all things to him: for the Lord was with him, and made all that he did to prosper.

CHAP. XL.

Joseph interpreteth the dreams of two of Pharaoh's servants in prison: the event declareth the interpretations to be true, but Joseph is forgotten.

AFTER this, it came to pass, that two eunuchs, the butler and the baker of the king of Egypt, offended their lord.

2 And Pharaoh being angry with them, (now the one was chief butler, the other chief baker,)

3 He sent them to the prison of the commander of the soldiers, in which Joseph also was prisoner.

4 But the keeper of the prison delivered them to

VER. 16. A proof of her fidelity, or an argument to gain credit, argumentum fidei. Ch.—Love neglected, turns to fury. She wishes to take away Joseph's life, according to the laws of Egypt against adulterers. Diodorus says Sesostris burnt some women taken in the crime; and we must attribute it to divine Providence, that the enraged husband did not inflict instant death upon his slave. Perhaps he did not altogether believe him guilty. H.

VER. 17. Thou hast, &c. As if her husband were guilty of an indiscretion. M.

VER. 19. Too much. The proof was of an ambiguous nature. But Putiphar perhaps thought it unbecoming to distrust his wife, or to interrogate his slave. H.

VER. 21. Keeper. Pelerius thinks this was the same Putiphar, who, recognizing the innocence of Joseph, allows him every indulgence in prison; but does not liberate him, for fear of the dishonour and resentment of his wife. C.—He had before put him in irona. Pa. civ. 18. Wis. x. 13. Joseph here exercises at once the four cardinal virtues. Prudence, in keeping out of the company of his mistress, as the Heb. express it, v. 10. "He yielded not to lie with her, or to be in her company." H.—Justice, in regard to his master. Fortitude, in bearing with all sorts of hardships, loss of character, &c. And Temperance, by refusing to gratify the most violent of all passions, at an age when it is the most insidious and ungovernable. This makes the fathers exclaim, We wonder more at the conduct of Joseph, than at the delivery of the three children from the Babylonian furnace. For like them, Joseph continues unhurt, and more shining, in the midst of the flames. S. Chrys. T.—The stories of Hippolitus, Bellerophon, &c. seem to be copied from this. C.

CHAP. XL. VER. 1. Two eunuchs; chief officers, and high in dignity, as the Heb. expresses it, v. 2. H.—Offended, perhaps, by stealing, or by some treasonable conspiracy. M.

VER. 2. And &c. Heb. "Pharaoh was enraged against two of his officers;

Joseph, and he served them. Some little time passed, and they were kept in custody.

5 And they both dreamed a dream the same night, according to the interpretation agreeing to themselves:

6 And when Joseph was come into them in the morning, and saw them sad,

7 He asked them, saying: Why is your countenance sadder to-day than usual?

8 They answered: We have dreamed a dream, and there is nobody to interpret it to us. And Joseph said to them: Doth not interpretation belong to God? Tell me what you have dreamed:

9 The chief butler first told his dream: I saw before me a vine,

10 On which were three branches, which by little and little sent out buds, and after the blossoms brought forth ripe grapes:

11 And the cup of Pharaoh was in my hand: and I took the grapes, and pressed them into the cup which I held, and I gave the cup to Pharaoh.

12 Joseph answered: This is the interpretation of the dream: The three branches, are yet three days:

13 After which Pharaoh will remember thy service, and will restore thee to thy former place: and thou shalt present him the cup according to thy office, as before thou wast wont to do.

14 Only remember me when it shall be well with thee, and do me this kindness: to put Pharaoh in mind to take me out of this prison:

15 For I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews, and here without any fault was cast into the dungeon.

16 The chief baker seeing that he had wisely interpreted the dream, said: I also dreamed a dream, That I had three baskets of meal upon my head:

17 And that in one basket which was uppermost, I carried all meats that are made by the art of baking, and that the birds ate out of it.

18 Joseph answered: This is the interpretation of the dream: The three baskets, are yet three days:

19 After which Pharaoh will take thy head from thee, against the chief of the butlers," &c. Mashkim. S. Jerom translates this word procurator domus, "steward of the house." C. xv. 2. No slave was entrusted with these high offices in the courts of Egypt and of Persia.

VER. 5. According to, &c. foreshewing what would happen to them, as Joseph afterwards interpreted the dreams. T.

VER. 8. Doth not interpretation belong to God? When dreams are from God, as these were, the interpretation of them is a gift of God. But the generality of dreams are not of this sort; but either proceed from the natural complexions and dispositions of persons, or the roving of their imaginations in the day on such objects as they are much affected with, or from their mind being disturbed with cares and troubles, and oppressed with bodily infirmities: or they are suggested by evil spirits, to flatter, or to terrify weak minds; in order to gain belief, and so draw them into error or superstition; or at least to trouble them in their sleep, whom they cannot move when they are awake: so that the general rule, with regard to dreams, is not to observe them, nor to give any credit to them. Ch.—Physicians indeed, sometimes form some judgment of the nature of a distemper from dreams; on which subject, Hippocrates and Galen have written. But to pretend to discover by them the future actions of free agents, would be superstitious. Deut. xviii. 10. T.—Justin (xxxvi. 2.) says, "Joseph was the first interpreter of dreams, and often gave proofs of his knowledge," &c.

VER. 19. From thee, by decapitation. This was customary, when a person's and hang thee on a cross, and the birds shall tear thy flesh.

20 The third day after this was the birth-day of Pharao: and he made a great feast for his servants, and at the banquet remembered the chief butler, and the chief baker.

21 And he restored the one to his place, to present him the cup:

22 The other he hanged on a gibbet, that the truth of the interpreter might be shewn.

23 But the chief butler, when things prospered with him, forgot his interpreter.

CHAP. XLI.

Joseph interpreteth the two dreams of Pharao: he is made ruler over all Egypt.

AFTER two years Pharao had a dream.* He thought he stood by the river,

2 Out of which came up seven kine, very beautiful and fat: and they fed in marshy places.

3 Other seven also came up out of the river, ill-favoured, and lean fleshed: and they fed on the very bank of the river, in green places:

4 And they devoured them, whose bodies were very beautiful and well conditioned. So Pharao awoke.

5 He slept again, and dreamed another dream: Seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk full and fair:

6 Then seven other ears sprung up thin and blasted,

7 And devoured all the beauty of the former. Pharao awaked after his rest:

8 And when morning was come, being struck with fear, he sent to all the interpreters of Egypt, and to all the wise men: and they being called for, he told them his dream, and there was not any one that could interpret it.

9 Then at length the chief butler remembering, said: I confess my sin:

10 The king being angry with his servants, commanded me and the chief baker to be cast into the prison of the captain of the soldiers:

11 Where in one night both of us dreamed a dream foreboding things to come.

12 There was there a young man a Hebrew, servant to the same captain of the soldiers: to whom we told our dreams,

13 And we heard what afterwards the event of the body was to be hung on the cross or gibbet. Deut. xxi. 22. Jos. x. 26. Lament. v. 12. 1 K. xxxi. 10.—Birds. So Horace says, pasces in cruce corvos.

VER. 20. Birth-day. This was a common practice among the pagans. S. Matt. xiv. 6. 2 Mac. vi. 7. C.

VER. 22. That, &c. Thus was verified the prediction of Joseph. M.

VER. 23. Forgot. A thing too common among those who enjoy prosperity! H.—God would not have his servants to trust in men. D.—The butler was a figure of the good thief, as the baker represented the impenitent one, between whom our Saviour hung on the cross. C.

CHAP. XLI. VER. 1. River; or the branch of the Nile which ran to Tanis, his capital. There were seven principal canals, and this was the most to the east, except that of Pelusium. C.

VER. 2. Marshy. Heb. Achu; a word which the Sept. and Siracides (Eccli. xl. 16,) retain. D.

VER. 3. Very bank; to shew that the Nile had not inundated far, and that consequently a great famine would prevail, as the fertility of Egypt depends greatly on the overflowing of the Nile. "When the river rises 12 cubits, sterility pervades Egypt; when 13, famine is still felt. Fourteen cubits bring joy, 15 security, 16 delight. It has never yet been known to rise above 18 cubits." Pliny v. 9. This successive depression of the waters was an effect of God's judgments, which no astrologers could foretel. T.

VER. 5. Another dream of the same import, (v. 25,) to convince Pharao that thing proved to be so. For I was restored to my office: and he was hanged upon a gibbet.

14 Forthwith at the king's command Joseph was brought out of the prison, and they shaved him: and changing his apparel brought him in to him.

15 And he said to him: I have dreamed dreams, and there is no one that can expound them: Now I have heard that thou art very wise at interpreting them:

16 Joseph answered: Without me, God shall give Pharao a prosperous answer.

17 So Pharao told what he had dreamed: Methought I stood upon the bank of the river, 18 And seven kine came up out of the river, exceeding beautiful and full of flesh: and they grazed on green places in a marshy pasture.

19 And behold, there followed these, other seven kine, so very ill-favoured and lean, that I never saw the like in the land of Egypt:

20 And they devoured and consumed the former,

21 And yet gave no mark of their being full: but were as lean and ill-favoured as before. I awoke, and then fell asleep again, 22 And dreamed a dream: Seven ears of corn-grew up upon one stalk, full and very fair.

23 Other seven also thin and blasted, sprung of the stalk:

24 And they devoured the beauty of the former: I told this dream to the conjecturers, and there is no man that can expound it.

25 Joseph answered: The king's dream is one: God hath shewn to Pharao what he is about to do.

26 The seven beautiful kine, and the seven full ears, are seven years of plenty: and both contain the same meaning of the dream.

27 And the seven lean and thin kine that came up after them, and the seven thin ears that were blasted with the burning wind, are seven years of famine to come:

28 Which shall be fulfilled in this order.

29 Behold, there shall come seven years of great plenty in the whole land of Egypt:

30 After which shall follow other seven years of so great scarcity, that all the abundance before shall be forgotten: for the famine shall consume all the land, 31 And the greatness of the scarcity shall destroy the greatness of the plenty.

the event would certainly take place, v. 32. Thus Daniel had a double vision, vii. 2. 3.—One stalk. It was of the species which Pliny (xviii. 10,) calls ramosum, branched. What would strike Pharao the most was, that the last ears should devour the former ones. C.

VER. 7. Rest. Heb. adds, "and behold a dream" sent by God, like Solomon's 3 K. iii. 15. The king's mind was quite full of what he had seen.

VER. 16. Without, &c. The interpretation does not proceed from any natural acquirement, but from God alone. Chal. T.—The Samaritan and Aquila read, "Without me God will not give," &c. See Matt. x. 20.

VER. 30. The land of Egypt, and the adjacent countries.

32 And for that thou didst see the second time a dream pertaining to the same thing: it is a token of the certainty, and that the word of God cometh to pass, and is fulfilled speedily.

33 Now therefore let the king provide a wise and industrious man, and make him ruler over the land of Egypt:

34 That he may appoint overseers over all the countries: and gather into barns the fifth part of the fruits, during the seven fruitful years,

35 That shall now presently ensue: and let all the corn be laid up, under Pharaoh's hands, and be reserved in the cities.

36 And let it be in readiness, against the famine of seven years to come, which shall oppress Egypt, and the land shall not be consumed with scarcity.

37 The counsel pleased Pharaoh, and all his servants.

38 And he said to them: Can we find such another man, that is full of the spirit of God?

39 He said therefore to Joseph: Seeing God hath shewn thee all that thou hast said, can I find one wiser and one like unto thee?

40 *Thou shalt be over my house, and at the commandment of thy mouth all the people shall obey: only in the kingly throne will I be above thee.

41 And again Pharaoh said to Joseph: Behold, I have appointed thee over the whole land of Egypt.

42 And he took his ring from his own hand, and gave it into his hand: and he put upon him a robe of silk, and put a chain of gold about his neck.

43 And he made him go up into his second chariot, the crier proclaiming that all should bow their knee before him, and that they should know he was made governor over the whole land of Egypt.

44 And the king said to Joseph: I am Pharaoh: without thy commandment no man shall move hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.

45 And he turned his name, and called him in the Egyptian tongue the saviour of the world. And he gave him to wife Aseneth, the daughter of Putiphare, priest of Heliopolis. Then Joseph went out to the land of Egypt.

46 (Now he was thirty years old when he stood before king Pharaoh), and he went round all the countries of Egypt.

47 And the fruitfulness of the seven years came: and the corn being bound up into sheaves, was gathered together into the barns of Egypt.

48 And all the abundance of grain was laid up in every city.

49 And there was so great abundance of wheat, that it was equal to the sand of the sea, and the plenty exceeded measure.

50 *And before the famine came, Joseph had two sons born: whom Aseneth, the daughter of Putiphare, priest of Heliopolis, bore unto him.

51 And he called the name of the first-born Manasses, saying: God hath made me to forget all my labours, and my father's house.

52 And he named the second Ephraim, saying: God hath made me to grow in the land of my poverty.

53 Now when the seven years of the plenty that had been in Egypt were passed:

54 *The seven years of scarcity, which Joseph had foretold, began to come: and the famine prevailed in the whole world, but there was bread in all the land of Egypt.

55 And when there also they began to be famished, the people cried to Pharaoh, for food. And he said to them: Go to Joseph: and do all that he shall say to you.

56 And the famine increased daily in all the land: and Joseph opened all the barns, and sold to the Egyptians: for the famine had oppressed them also.

57 And all provinces came into Egypt, to buy food, and to seek some relief of their want.

5 And they entered into the land of Egypt with others that went to buy. For the famine was in the land of Chanaan.

8 And though he knew his brethren, he was not known by them.

9 And remembering the dreams, which formerly he had dreamed, he said to them: You are spies: you are come to view the weaker parts of the land.

10 But they said: It is not so, my lord; but thy servants are come to buy food.

11 We are all the sons of one man: we are come as peaceable men, neither do thy servants go about any evil.

12 And he answered them: It is otherwise: you are come to consider the unfenced parts of this land.

13 But they said: We thy servants are twelve brethren, the sons of one man in the land of Chanaan: the youngest is with our father, the other is not living.

14 He saith, This is it that I said: You are spies.

15 I shall now presently try what you are: by the health of Pharaoh, you shall not depart hence, until your youngest brother come.

16 Send one of you to fetch him: and you shall be in prison, till what you have said be proved, whether it be true or false: or else by the health of Pharaoh you are spies.

17 So he put them in prison three days.

18 And the third day he brought them out of prison, and said: Do as I have said, and you shall live: for I fear God.

19 If you be peaceable men, let one of your brethren be bound in prison: and go ye your ways, and carry the corn that you have bought, unto your houses.

20 And bring your youngest brother to me, that I may find your words to be true, and you may not die. They did as he had said.

VER. 6. To him. Conformably to the prophetic dreams. C. xxxvii. 7. 9. M.—Joseph was like a prince or sultan, shallit, with sovereign authority. C.

VER. 8. By them. Years and change of situation, had made such an alteration in him. God was pleased that Jacob should remain so long ignorant of his son's fate, that, by sorrow, he might do penance, and purify himself from every stain; and that he might not attempt to redeem Joseph, whose slavery was to be the source of so much good to his family. M.—Joseph did not make himself known at first; in order to bring his brethren to a true sense of their duty, that they might obtain pardon for their sin. Thus pastors must sometimes treat their penitents with a degree of severity. S. Greg. hom. 22. Eze. S. Aug. ser. 82. de Tem. W.

VER. 9. You are spies. This he said by way of examining them, to see what they would answer. Ch.—Aquila translates "vagrants" going from place to place, as if to discover the weakest parts. Joseph was a person in authority. It was his duty to guard against invasion. He knew how his brethren had treated Simeon, and how they had behaved to himself; and though he might not suppose, that they had any evil design upon Egypt, yet he had a right to make them give an account of themselves. H.—He wished also to extort from them a true account respecting Jacob and Benjamin. M.

VER. 15. Health. This oath implies, that he is willing that even Pharaoh, whom he so much revered, should perish, if he did not execute what he said: (H.) or, as Pharaoh is now in health, so true it is you shall not all depart, till your youngest brother come. C.

21 And they talked one to another: We deserve to suffer these things, because we have sinned against our brother, seeing the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear: therefore is this affliction come upon us.

22 And Ruben, one of them, said: Did not I say to you: ^bDo not sin against the boy; and you would not hear me? Behold his blood is required.

23 And they knew not that Joseph understood, because he spoke to them by an interpreter.

24 And he turned himself away a little while, and wept: and returning, he spoke to them.

25 And taking Simeon, and binding him in their presence, he commanded his servants to fill their sacks with wheat, and to put every man's money again in their sacks, and to give them besides provisions for the way: and they did so.

26 But they having loaded their asses with the corn went their way.

27 And one of them opening his sack, to give his beast provender in the inn, saw the money in the sack's mouth, 28 And said to his brethren: My money is given me again; behold it is in the sack. And they were astonished, and troubled, and said to one another: What is this that God hath done unto us?

29 And they came to Jacob their father in the land of Chanaan, and they told him all things that had befallen them, saying:

30 The lord of the land spoke roughly to us, and took us to be spies of the country.

31 And we answered him: We are peaceable men, and we mean no plot.

32 We are twelve brethren born of one father: one is not living, the youngest is with our father in the land of Chanaan.

33 And he said to us: Hereby shall I know that you are peaceable men: Leave one of your brethren with me, and take ye necessary provision for your houses, and go your ways, 34 And bring your youngest brother to me, that I may know you are not spies: and you may receive this man again, that is kept in prison: and afterwards may have leave to buy what you will.

35 When they had told this, they poured out their

Joseph dealt in this manner with his brethren, to bring them by the means of affliction to a sense of their former sin, and a sincere repentance for it.

VER. 18. God. I shall do nothing contrary to justice or good faith, as I know I have a superior in heaven, to whom I must give an account. M.

VER. 25. Simeon. If he had joined himself to Ruben and Juda, who seemed inclined to protect Joseph, they might easily have prevented the cruel act, by overawing their younger brothers. Hence he was most guilty. M.—Presence. That they might learn to condole with an afflicted brother.

corn, and every man found his money tied in the mouth of his sack: and all being astonished together, 36 Their father Jacob said: You have made me to be without children: Joseph is not living, Simeon is kept in bonds, and Benjamin you will take away: all these evils are fallen upon me.

37 And Ruben answered him: Kill my two sons, if I bring him not again to thee: deliver him into my hand, and I will restore him to thee.

38 But he said: My son shall not go down with you: his brother is dead, and he is left alone: if any mischief befall him in the land to which you go, you will bring down my grey hairs with sorrow to hell.

CHAP. XLIII.

The sons of Jacob go again into Egypt with Benjamin. They are entertained by Joseph.

IN the mean time *the famine was heavy upon all the land.

2 And when they had eaten up all the corn, which they had brought out of Egypt, Jacob said to his sons: Go again, and buy us a little food.

3 Juda answered: The man declared unto us with the attestation of an oath, saying: You shall not see my face, unless you bring your youngest brother with you.

4 If therefore thou wilt send him with us, we will set out together, and will buy necessities for thee.

5 But if thou wilt not, we will not go: for the man, as we have often said, declared unto us, saying: ^bYou shall not see my face without your youngest brother.

6 Israel said to them: You have done this for my misery, in that you told him you had also another brother.

7 But they answered: The man asked us in order concerning our kindred: if our father lived: if we had a brother: and we answered him regularly, according to what he demanded: could we know that he would say: Bring hither your brother with you?

8 And Juda said to his father: Send the boy with me, that we may set forward, and may live: lest both we and our children perish.

9 ^aI take the boy upon me, require him at my hand: unless I bring him again, and restore him to thee, I will be guilty of sin against thee for ever.

* A. M. 2298, A. C. 1706.—^b Supra xlii. 20.

VER. 34. Without. Through excess of grief, Jacob speaks with a degree of exaggeration; or he thought his children were now taken from him so fast, that he would soon have none left.

VER. 37. Kill, &c. By this proposal, he meant to signify his utmost care and zeal to bring back young Benjamin safe to his father.

VER. 38. Alone: the son of my beloved Rachel. H.—To hell. That is, to that place where the souls then remained, as above, chap. xxxvii. ver. 35. (Ch.) though with respect to his grey hairs, and body, it may signify the grave. H.

CHAP. XLIII. VER. 5. My face, in peace. Joseph had told them they should be considered as spies, if they did not produce their youngest brother. M.

VER. 7. Asked us. This is perfectly consonant with what they say. C. xlii. 13. and C. xliv. 19. They mentioned their having a brother at home, without the smallest suspicion of doing wrong.

VER. 8. The boy; now 24 years old, (C.) and the father of a family. C. xli. 21. H.

VER. 9. For ever. Always lay the blame on me, and punish me as you think fit. M.

VER. 11. Best fruits: Heb. lit. "of the praise, or song of the earth;" or of those things for which the country is most renowned, and which are not found in Egypt. Origen.—Balm. Literally rosin, resinæ; but here by that name is meant balm. Ch. See C. xxxvii. 25.—Honey, or all sorts of sweet fruit.—Storax: Sept. "incense," or perfumes. It is like balm; thick, odoriferous, and medicinal.—Myrrh, (stactes); Heb. Lol. A liquor stamped from fresh myrrh pill'd, with a little water. Q.—Sometimes it is translated Gutta, a drop. Ps. xliv. 9. M.—Turpentine. S.

10 If delay had not been made, we had been here again the second time.

11 Then Israel said to them: If it must needs be so, do what you will: take of the best fruits of the land in your vessels, and carry down presents to the man, a little balm, and honey, and storax, myrrh, turpentine, and almonds.

12 And take with you double money, and carry back what you found in your sacks, lest perhaps it was done by mistake.

13 And take also your brother, and go to the man.

14 And may my almighty God make him favourable to you: and send back with you your brother, whom he keepeth, and this Benjamin: and as for me I shall be desolate without children.

15 So the men took the presents, and double money, and Benjamin: and went down into Egypt, and stood before Joseph.

16 And when he had seen them, and Benjamin with them, he commanded the steward of his house, saying: Bring in the men into the house, and kill victims, and prepare a feast: because they shall eat with me at noon.

17 He did as he was commanded, and brought the men into the house.

18 And they being much afraid, said there one to another: Because of the money, which we carried back the first time in our sacks, we are brought in: that he may bring upon us a false accusation, and by violence make slaves of us and our asses.

19 Wherefore, going up to the steward of the house, at the door,

20 They said: Sir, we desire thee to hear us. ^dWe came down once before to buy food:

21 And when we had bought, and were come to the inn, we opened our sacks, and found our money in the mouths of the sacks: which we have now brought again in the same weight.

22 And we have brought other money besides, to buy what we want: we cannot tell who put it in our bags.

23 But he answered: Peace be with you, fear not: your God, and the God of your father, hath given you treasure in your sacks. For the money, which you gave me, I have for good. And he brought Simeon out to them.

Jer. and the Sept. seem to have read Bothmin instead of the present Heb. Batman, which some translate, "nuts of the pistacium," (Bochart); which hang in clusters, and are of an oblong shape. Vitellius first brought them out of Syria. Plin. xv. 22. C.—Almonds; Sept. nuts, of which almonds are one species. M.

VER. 14. Desolate. Heb. and Sept. "Since I am deprived of my children, I am deprived of my children:" I must submit.

VER. 16. Victims: the blood of which was first offered to God, as he had appointed, (C. xviii. 1. Lev. xvii. 5.) and the flesh brought upon the table. If idolatry was then common in Egypt, as Calmet supposes, in opposition to Grotius, Joseph did not participate at least in that impiety.—At noon. This was the time for the chief meal in Egypt. The Hebrews generally took something at this time, and again in the evening. To eat before noon, was esteemed a mark of intemperance. Eccles. x. 16. Acts ii. 15. Plato thought the people of Italy, who eat two full meals in the day, would never be eminent for wisdom or for prudence. Athon. iv. 10. C.

VER. 21. We opened. C. xlii. 35. They seem to have discovered the whole of their money only when they were in the presence of Jacob; though they had already, perhaps, seen part of it at the inn, and left it in their sacks for the satisfaction of their father. H.

VER. 23. Your God. To Him we must always refer what advantage we derive from men. He inspired Joseph to give such orders to his stewards.—I have for good. I received it, and was satisfied that it was good: you need not be uneasy, you are not suspected of any fraud. H.—Heb. "Your money came into my hands." M.

24 And having brought them into the house, he fetched water, and they washed their feet, and he gave provender to their asses.

25 But they made ready the presents, against Joseph came at noon: for they had heard that they should eat bread there.

26 Then Joseph came in to his house, and they offered him the presents, holding them in their hands; and they bowed down with their face to the ground.

27 But he courteously saluting them again, asked them, saying: Is the old man your father in health, of whom you told me? Is he yet living?

28 And they answered: Thy servant our father, is in health; he is yet living. And bowing themselves, they made obeisance to him.

29 And Joseph lifting up his eyes, saw Benjamin, his brother by the same mother, and said: Is this your young brother, of whom you told me? And he said: God be gracious to thee, my son.

30 And he made haste, because his heart was moved upon his brother, and tears gushed out: and going into his chamber, he wept.

31 And when he had washed his face, coming out again, he refrained himself, and said: Set bread on the table.

32 And when it was set on, for Joseph apart, and for his brethren apart, for the Egyptians also that ate with him apart, (for it is unlawful for the Egyptians to eat with the Hebrews, and they think such a feast profane):

33 They sat before him, the first-born according to his birth-right, and the youngest according to his age. And they wondered very much;

34 Taking the messes which they received of him: and the greater mess came to Benjamin, so that it exceeded by five parts. And they drank, and were merry with him.

CHAP. XLIV.

Joseph's contrivance to stop his brethren. The humble supplication of Juda.

AND Joseph commanded the steward of his house, saying: Fill their sacks with corn, as much as they can hold: and put the money of every one in the top of his sack.

VER. 28. Living. The Sam. and Sept. add "Joseph replied, Blessed be he of God; and bowing themselves," &c. Thus all Joseph's brethren adore him. C. xxxvii. 7. H.

VER. 32. Hebrews. "They had the same aversion for all who did not adopt their superstition." Porphy. Abstin. iv. Herod. ii. 41. says, they would not use a knife which had been in the hands of a Greek, nor kiss him. This aversion arose, from their custom of abstaining from various meats which other nations eat. Chald. &c. They disliked the Hebrews, because they were also shepherds, C. xli. 34. (C.); and because they knew they were accustomed to eat goats, oxen, and sheep, the objects of adoration in Egypt, (Exod. viii. 26.); though they were not, probably, served upon Joseph's table. T.—They who dwell in the towns could not bear even the Egyptian shepherds, because they were of a more stirring and warlike temper. C. Ounæus.

VER. 33. They sat. This posture is more ancient than that of lying down at table. The Hebrews adopted the latter, from the Persians, during the captivity. Est. i. 6. vii. 8.—We have at least no earlier vestige of this custom in Scripture. C.—Very much: as they were placed in that order by the steward. They knew not how he could so exactly discover who was born first, as there was so short an interval between the births of many of them. H.

VER. 34. Of him. Joseph, the master of the feast, sends a portion to each of his guests, according to the ancient custom. Plut. Sympos. ii.—Five parts: in order to distinguish Benjamin the more. So Hector reproaches Diomed for fleeing before him, though he was placed in the highest place at table among the Greeks, and had the largest portion both of meat and drink.—Merry. Inebriated, sometimes means intoxicated: but it is not at all probable that Joseph's brethren would indulge in any such excess, while they knew him not, (C.) and were under the impressions of fear and wonder. They took what was sufficient, and even decently abundant, with thankfulness for so unexpected an honour. H.—The word is often taken in this sense, as at the feast of Cana, where Jesus

2 And in the mouth of the younger's sack put my silver cup, and the price which he gave for the wheat And it was so done.

3 And when the morning arose, they were sent away with their asses.

4 And when they were now departed out of the city, and had gone forward a little way: Joseph sending for the steward of his house, said: Arise, and pursue after the men: and when thou hast overtaken them, say to them: Why have you returned evil for good?

5 The cup which you have stolen, is that in which my lord drinketh, and in which he is wont to divine: you have done a very evil thing.

6 He did as he had commanded him. And having overtaken them, he spoke to them the same words.

7 And they answered: Why doth our lord speak so, as though thy servants had committed so heinous a fact?

8 The money, that we found in the top of our sacks, we brought back to thee from the land of Chanaan: how then should it be that we should steal out of thy lord's house, gold or silver?

9 With whomsoever of thy servants shall be found that which thou seekest, let him die, and we will be the bondmen of my lord.

10 And he said to them: Let it be according to your sentence: with whomsoever it shall be found, let him be my servant, and you shall be blameless.

11 Then they speedily took down their sacks to the ground, and every man opened his sack.

12 Which when he had searched, beginning at the eldest, and ending at the youngest, he found the cup in Benjamin's sack.

13 Then they rent their garments, and loading their asses again, returned into the town.

14 And Juda at the head of his brethren went in to Joseph (for he was not yet gone out of the place) and they all together fell down before him on the ground.

VER. 5. To divine. This was spoken by Joseph to his steward in jest; alluding to the notion of the people, who took him to be a diviner. Ch.—S. Tho. 2. 2. q. 195. a. 7. Heb. may be translated without attending to the points, "Is not this the cup, out of which my lord drinketh; and he has augured, or discovered, by it the evil which you have committed." Pliny (xxx. 2.) mentions a method of divining, by means of water in a basin. C.—The Egyptians probably supposed, that Joseph used some such means to disclose what was hidden; and he alludes, in jest, to their foolish notion. H.—He had a right to afflict his guilty brethren; and as for Benjamin, who was innocent, he made him ample recompense for this transitory terror. Some think that the steward said, in which he is wont to divine, unauthorized by his master. M.

VER. 10. Sentence. It is but just; yet I shall only insist on the detention of the culprit. C.—Joseph wished to see whether the marks of attention, which he had shewn to Benjamin, would have excited the envy of his brethren (M.); and whether they would be concerned for him: thus he would discover their present dispositions. He might wish also to keep his younger brother out of danger, in case they were inclined to persecute him. H.

16 And Juda said to him: What shall we answer my lord? or what shall we say, or be able justly to allege? God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants: behold, we are all bondmen to my lord, both we, and he with whom the cup was found.

17 Joseph answered: God forbid that I should do so: he that stole the cup, he shall be my bondman: and go you away free to your father.

18 Then Juda coming nearer, said boldly: I beseech thee, my lord, let thy servant speak a word in thy ears, and be not angry with thy servant: for after Pharaoh thou art.

19 My lord. *Thou didst ask thy servants the first time: Have you a father or a brother.

20 And we answered thee, my lord: We have a father an old man, and a young boy, that was born in his old age; whose brother by the mother is dead; and he alone is left of his mother, and his father loveth him tenderly.

21 And thou saidst to thy servants: Bring him hither to me, and I will set my eyes on him.

22 We suggested to my lord: The boy cannot leave his father: for if he leave him, he will die.

23 †And thou saidst to thy servants: Except your youngest brother come with you, you shall see my face no more.

24 Therefore when we were gone up to thy servant our father, we told him all that my lord had said.

25 And our father said: Go again, and buy us a little wheat.

26 And we said to him: We cannot go: if our youngest brother go down with us, we will set out together: otherwise, without him we dare not see the man's face.

27 Whereunto he answered: You know that my wife bore me two.

28 One went out, and you said: *A beast devoured him; and hitherto he appeareth not.

29 If you take this also, and any thing befall him in the way, you will bring down my grey hairs with sorrow unto hell.

30 Therefore, if I shall go to thy servant, our father, and the boy be wanting, (whereas his life dependeth upon the life of him)

31 And he shall see that he is not with us, he will die, and thy servants shall bring down his grey hairs with sorrow unto hell.

32 Let me be thy proper servant, who took him into my trust, and promised, saying: †If I bring him not again, I will be guilty of sin against my father for ever.

33 Therefore I, thy servant, will stay instead of the boy in the service of my lord, and let the boy go up with his brethren.

34 For I cannot return to my father without the boy, lest I be a witness of the calamity that will oppress my father.

CHAP. XLV.

Joseph maketh himself known to his brethren: and sendeth for his father.

JOSEPH could no longer refrain himself before many that stood by: whereupon he commanded that all should go out, and no stranger be present at their knowing one another.

2 And he lifted up his voice with weeping, which the Egyptians, and all the house of Pharaoh heard.

3 And he said to his brethren: I am Joseph: Is my father yet living? His brethren could not answer him, being struck with exceeding great fear.

4 And he said mildly to them: Come nearer to me. And when they were come near him, he said: *†I am Joseph, your brother, whom you sold into Egypt.

5 Be not afraid, and let it not seem to you a hard case that you sold me into these countries: †for God sent me before you into Egypt for your preservation.

6 For it is two years since the famine began to be upon the land, and five years more remain, wherein there can be neither ploughing nor reaping.

7 And God sent me before, that you may be preserved upon the earth, and may have food to live.

8 Not by your counsel was I sent hither, but by the will of God: who hath made me as it were a father to Pharaoh, and lord of his whole house, and governor in all the land of Egypt.

9 Make haste, and go ye up to my father, and say to him: Thus saith thy son Joseph: God hath made me lord of the whole land of Egypt; come down to me, linger not.

10 And thou shalt dwell in the land of Gessen: and thou shalt be near me, thou and thy sons, and thy sons'

VER. 16. Iniquity. He begins with the greatest humility, acknowledging that they were justly punished by God for some transgression, though they were, in his opinion, innocent of any theft. Which place, both in Scripture and in the creed, is named hell. Ch.—In this speech, we find many particulars not mentioned before; whence it appears, that the sacred historian does not always specify every circumstance. But, in relating the same speech, uses various expressions to the same purport. C.

VER. 34. My father; who will drop down dead, oppressed with grief. How eloquent and pathetic was this address! Joseph could bear no more.

VER. 4. Nearer; that no one might hear what he was going to say respecting their fault. M.—It is thus we ought to treat those who have injured us. He excuses his brethren as much as possible. H. See C. i. 20.

VER. 5. Hard. Heb. "Be not indignant in your eyes." Perhaps he was afraid, lest they should begin to accuse one another, as the authors of the deed, and thus disturb the harmony of this reconciliation. He perfectly understands the conduct of divine Providence, which can draw good out of evil, and cause even the malice of men to co-operate in the execution of his designs. 13 You shall tell my father of all my glory, and all things that you have seen in Egypt: make haste and bring him to me.

14 And falling upon the neck of his brother Benjamin, he embraced him and wept: and Benjamin in like manner wept also on his neck.

15 And Joseph kissed all his brethren, and wept upon every one of them: after which they were emboldened to speak to him.

16 And it was heard, and the fame was spread abroad in the king's court: The brethren of Joseph are come; and Pharaoh with all his family was glad.

17 And he spoke to Joseph that he should give orders to his brethren, saying: Load your beasts, and go into the land of Chanaan, 18 And bring away from thence your father and kindred, and come to me; and I will give you all the good things of Egypt, that you may eat the marrow of the land.

19 Give orders also that they take waggons out of the land of Egypt, for the carriage of their children and their wives; and say: Take up your father, and make haste to come with all speed:

20 And leave nothing of your household stuff; for all the riches of Egypt shall be yours.

21 And the sons of Israel did as they were bid. And Joseph gave them waggons according to Pharaoh's commandment: and provisions for the way.

22 He ordered also to be brought out for every one of them two robes: but to Benjamin he gave three hundred pieces of silver, with five robes of the best:

23 Sending to his father as much money and raiment; adding besides, ten he-asses, to carry off all the riches of Egypt, and as many she-asses, carrying wheat and bread for the journey.

24 So he sent away his brethren, and at their departing said to them: Be not angry in the way.

25 And they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Chanaan, to their father Jacob.

26 And they told him, saying: Joseph, thy son, is living; and he is ruler in all the land of Egypt. Which when Jacob heard, he awaked as it were out of a deep sleep, yet did not believe them.

27 They on the other side told the whole order of the thing. And when he saw the waggons, and all that he had sent, his spirit revived, 28 And he said: It is enough for me if Joseph, my son, be yet living: I will go and see him before I die.

CHAP. XLVI.

Israel warranted by a vision from God: goeth down into Egypt with all his family.

AND Israel taking his journey,* with all that he had, came to the well of the oath, and killing victims there to the God of his father Isaac,

2 He heard him, by a vision in the night, calling him, and saying to him: Jacob, Jacob. And he answered him: Lo, here I am.

3 God said to him: I am the most mighty God of thy father; fear not, go down into Egypt, for I will make a great nation of thee there.

4 I will go down with thee thither, and will bring thee back again from thence: Joseph also shall put his hands upon thy eyes.

5 And Jacob rose up from the well of the oath:† and his sons took him up, with their children and wives in the waggons, which Pharaoh had sent to carry the old man,

6 And all that he had in the land of Chanaan: and he came into Egypt with all his seed;‡

7 His sons, and grandsons, daughters, and all his offspring together.

8 And these are the names of the children of Israel, that entered into Egypt, he and his children. §His first-born Ruben, VER. 16. Family, and courtiers. They were all so enraptured with Joseph's conduct, that they rejoiced in whatever gave him pleasure. M.—They thought, perhaps, that his relations would resemble him, and be of service to Egypt. H.

VER. 18. Marrow; which is an emphatical expression to signify the best things of Egypt. Chal. Heb. "the fat, or the cream of the land." C.

VER. 20. Leave nothing. Heb. may have another meaning, which Calmet approves. "Let not your eye spare your furniture." Be not concerned to leave what may be useless, as most of the husbandry utensils would be in Egypt, "for all," &c.

VER. 22. Two robes (stolas) hanging down to the feet. These properly belong to women. But they are worn by men in the East. The Sept. has "of gold," as also C. xxxvii. 28.

VER. 23. As much . . . besides. This is omitted in Heb. or at least is left ambiguous. "He sent in like manner to his father ten," &c. But the Syr. and Sept. explain it like the Vulgate.—She-asses. Sept. "mules."—Bread. Heb. adds, "meat," or provisions. C.—These presents might convince Jacob that Joseph was still alive. H.

VER. 3. Fear not. He might be apprehensive, lest his children should be depraved, living among idolaters, or prefer Egypt before the promised land. He was also afraid to undertake this journey without consulting God. M.

VER. 4. Thence; in thy posterity. Sept. add at last, or after a long time. Jacob's bones were brought back and buried in Chanaan. C.—Eyes, as he is the most dear to thee. Parents closed the eyes of their children in death. The Romans opened them again when the corpse was upon the funeral pile; thinking it a mark of disrespect for the eyes to be shut to heaven; "ut neque ab homine supremum eos spectari fas sit, & celo non ostendi, nefas." Plin. xi. 37.

VER. 5. Daughters. Dina, and grand-daughters Sara, (v. 17,) and his sons wives, &c. C.—We may observe, that all here mentioned were not born at the time when Jacob went down into Egypt, but they were before he or Joseph died: that is, during the space of 17 or 71 years. See S. Aug. q. 151. 173. M.—The names in the Heb. and Sept. vary some little from the Vulgate, which may be attributed to the difference of pronunciation, or to the same person having many names. The number is also different in the Sept. as the authors of that version have, perhaps, inserted some names taken from other parts of Scripture, to remove any apparent contradiction. The genealogies of Juda, Joseph, and Benjamin, are carried farther than the rest, as those families were of greater consequence.

9 The sons of Ruben: Henech and Phallu, and Hesron and Charmi.

10 *The sons of Simeon: Jamuel and Jamin and Ahod, and Jachin and Sohar, and Saul, the son of a woman of Chanaan.

11 ^bThe sons of Levi: Gerson and Caath, and Merari.

12 *The sons of Juda: Her and Onan, and Sela, and Phares and Zara. And Her and Onan died in the land of Chanaan. And sons were born to Phares: Hesron and Hamul.

13 ^dThe sons of Issachar: Thola and Phua, and Job and Semron.

14 The sons of Zabulon: Sared, and Elon, and Jachelel.

15 These are the sons of Lia, whom she bore in Mesopotamia of Syria, with Dina, his daughter. All the souls of her sons and daughters, thirty-three.

16 The sons of Gad: Sephion and Haggi, and Suni and Esebon, and Heri and Arodi, and Areli.

17 *The sons of Aser: Jamne and Jesua, and Jessuri and Beria, and Sara their sister. The sons of Beria: Heber and Melchiel.

18 These are the sons of Zelpha, whom Laban gave to Lia, his daughter. And these she bore to Jacob, sixteen souls.

19 The sons of Rachel, Jacob's wife: Joseph and Benjamin.

20 ^cAnd sons were born to Joseph, in the land of Egypt, whom Aseneth, the daughter of Putiphare, priest of Heliopolis, bore him: Manasses and Ephraim.

21 The sons of Benjamin: *Bela and Bechor, and Asbel and Gera, and Naaman and Echi, and Ross and Mophim, and Ophim and Ared.

22 These are the sons of Rachel, whom she bore to Jacob: all the souls, fourteen.

23 The sons of Dan: Husim.

24 The sons of Nephthali: Jaziel and Guni, and Jeser and Sallem.

25 These are the sons of Bala, whom Laban gave to Rachel, his daughter: and these she bore to Jacob: all the souls, seven.

26 All the souls that went with Jacob into Egypt, and that came out of his thigh, besides his sons' wives, sixty-six.

27 And the sons of Joseph, that were born to him in the land of Egypt, two souls. ^bAll the souls of the house of Jacob, that entered into Egypt, were seventy.

28 And he sent Juda before him to Joseph, to tell him; and that he should meet him in Gessen.

29 And when he was come thither, Joseph made ready his chariot, and went up to meet his father in the same place: and seeing him, he fell upon his neck, and embracing him, wept.

30 And the father said to Joseph: Now shall I die with joy, because I have seen thy face, and leave thee alive.

31 And Joseph said to his brethren, and to all his father's house: I will go up, and will tell Pharaö, and will say to him: My brethren, and my father's house, that were in the land of Chanaan, are come to me:

32 And the men are shepherds, and their occupation is to feed cattle; their flocks, and herds, and all they have, they have brought with them.

33 And when he shall call you, and shall say: What is your occupation?

34 You shall answer: We, thy servants, are shepherds, from our infancy until now, both we and our fathers. And this you shall say, that you may dwell in the land of Gessen, because the Egyptians have all shepherds in abomination.

CHAP. XLVII.

Jacob and his sons are presented before Pharaö: he giveth them the land of Gessen. The famine forceth the Egyptians to sell all their possessions to the king.

THEN Joseph went in and told Pharaö, saying: My father and brethren, their sheep and their herds, and all that they possess, are come out of the land of Chanaan: and behold they stay in the land of Gessen.

2 Five men also, the last of his brethren, he presented before the king:

3 And he asked them: What is your occupation? They answered: We, thy servants, are shepherds, both we and our fathers.

4 We are come to sojourn in thy land, because there is no grass for the flocks of thy servants, the famine being very grievous in the land of Chanaan: and we pray thee to give orders that we thy servants may be in the land of Gessen.

5 The king therefore said to Joseph: Thy father and thy brethren are come to thee.

6 The land of Egypt is before thee: make them dwell in the best place, and give them the land of of them were not born during his life-time. He suspects some hidden mystery. W. See v. 7.—Some think S. Stephen excludes Jacob, Joseph, and his sons; and includes the 64 men, with 11 wives. D.

VER. 34. Abomination. See C. xliii. 32. The source of this hatred against foreign shepherds, was probably because, about 100 years before Abraham, the shepherd-kings, Hycussos, had got possession of a great part of Egypt, and were at last expelled by the kings of Thebais. See Manetho ap. Eus. præp. x. 18. Another reason why they hated foreigners was, because they slew and eat sheep, &c. which they themselves adored. The Egyptians kept sheep for this purpose, and for the benefits to be derived from their wool, &c. C. xlvii. 17. C.—Joseph took advantage of this disposition of the inhabitants, to keep his brethren at a distance from them, that they might not be perverted. He does not introduce them at court, that no jealousy might be excited. He shews that he is not ashamed of his extraction. M.

CHAP. XLVII. VER. 2. The last. Extremos. Some interpret this word of the chiefest, and most sightly: but Joseph seems rather to have chosen out such as had the meanest appearance, that Pharaö might not think of employing them at court, with danger of their morals and religion; (Ch.) or in the army, where they might be distracted with many cares, and be too much separated from one another. H.—He took such of his brethren as came first to hand. Vatabla.

Gessen. And if thou knowest that there are industrious men among them, make them rulers over my cattle.

7 After this Joseph brought in his father to the king, and presented him before him: and he blessed him.

8 And being asked by him: How many are the days of the years of thy life?

9 He answered: The days of my pilgrimage are a hundred and thirty years, few and evil, and they are not come up to the days of the pilgrimage of my fathers.

10 And blessing the king, he went out.

11 But Joseph gave a possession to his father and his brethren in Egypt, in the best place of the land, in Ramesses, as Pharaoh had commanded.

12 And he nourished them, and all his father's house, allowing food to every one.

13 For in the whole world there was want of bread, and a famine had oppressed the land, more especially of Egypt and Chanaan;

14 Out of which he gathered up all the money for the corn which they bought, and brought it in to the king's treasure.

15 And when the buyers wanted money, all Egypt came to Joseph, saying: "Give us bread: why should we die in thy presence, having now no money?"

16 And he answered them: Bring me your cattle, and for them I will give you food, if you have no money.

17 And when they had brought them, he gave them food in exchange for their horses, and sheep, and oxen, and asses: and he maintained them that year for the exchange of their cattle.

18 And they came the second year, and said to him: We will not hide from our lord, how that our money is spent, and our cattle also are gone: neither art thou ignorant that we have nothing now left but our bodies and our lands.

19 Why therefore shall we die before thy eyes? we will be thine, both we and our lands: buy us to be the king's servants, and give us seed, lest for want of tillers the land be turned into a wilderness.

VER. 7. Blessed him, Pharaoh; saying, perhaps, God save the king; or, O king live for ever: thus wishing that he might enjoy all sorts of blessings. M.—It is generally taken in this sense, when men bless one another; but when they bless God, they mean to praise, supplicate, or thank him. C.

VER. 9. Pilgrimage. He hardly deigns to style it life, as he was worn out with labour and sorrows, and was drawing fast to an end, so much sooner than his ancestors. Isaac had lived 180 years, and was only dead the year before Joseph was made ruler of Egypt. Some had lived above 900 years. H.

VER. 13. Chanaan. The whole world that was then inhabited, and known to the Hebrews, felt perhaps the effects of this raging famine; but the countries here mentioned were the most afflicted. H.

In that year, Joseph gave back the cattle, &c. to the Egyptians, on condition that they should ever after pay the fifth part of the products of the land to the king, the sole proprietor, who had thus full authority to send them to till any part of his dominions. C.

VER. 19. Servants. A person may part with his liberty, to preserve life. M. VER. 21. People, "he transplanted" from, &c. as the Heb. Arab. &c. now read, by the change of one letter. Herodotus, ii. 168, says, the same person has never a field there two years together. Diodorus I. also attests, that individuals have no property in Egypt, the land being divided among the priests, the king, and the military. Tradesmen always follow their father's profession, which makes them very skilful.

VER. 22. Priests. This was done by the king's direction, as they were probably idolaters. M.—The immunities of the sacred ministers have been respected both by Pagans, Jews, and Christians; by all who have had any sentiments of religion. Reason dictates that they should live by the altar. They have to 20 So Joseph bought all the land of Egypt, every man selling his possessions, because of the greatness of the famine. And he brought it into Pharaoh's hands:

21 And all its people from one end of the borders of Egypt, even to the other end thereof,

22 Except the land of the priests, which had been given them by the king: to whom also a certain allowance of food was given out of the public stores, and therefore they were not forced to sell their possessions.

23 Then Joseph said to the people: Behold, as you see, both you and your lands belong to Pharaoh; take seed and sow the fields, 24 That you may have corn. The fifth part you shall give to the king; the other four you shall have for seed, and for food for your families and children.

25 And they answered: Our life is in thy hand; only let my lord look favourably upon us, and we will gladly serve the king.

26 From that time unto this day, in the whole land of Egypt, the fifth part is paid to the kings, and it is become as a law, except the land of the priests, which was free from this covenant.

27 So Israel dwelt in Egypt, that is, in the land of Gessen, and possessed it; and grew, and was multiplied exceedingly.

28 And he lived in it seventeen years: and all the days of his life came to a hundred and forty-seven years.

29 ^bAnd when he saw that the day of his death drew nigh, he called his son Joseph, and said to him: If I have found favour in thy sight, put thy hand under my thigh; and thou shalt shew me this kindness and truth, not to bury me in Egypt.

30 But I will sleep with my fathers, and thou shalt take me away out of this land, and bury me in the burying-place of my ancestors. And Joseph answered him: I will do what thou hast commanded.

31 And he said: Swear then to me. And as he was swearing, Israel adored God, turning to the bed's head.

labour for the truest interests of the people, and consequently are worthy of their hire.—Which had been given, &c. Inasmuch as their wants were supplied, and the king forebore to claim their land. C. xxiii. 17. M.—He teaches us likewise, to be solicitous to obtain Christian burial. W.

VER. 31. To the bed's head. S. Paul, (Heb. xi. 21,) following the Greek translation of the Septuagint, reads adored the top of his rod. Where note, that the same word in the Hebrew, according to the different pointing of it, signifies both a bed and a rod. And to verify both these sentences, we must understand that Jacob, leaning on Joseph's rod, adored, turning towards the head of his bed; which adoration, inasmuch as it was referred to God, was an absolute, and sovereign worship: but inasmuch as it was referred to the rod of Joseph, as a figure of the sceptre, that is, of the royal dignity of Christ, was only an inferior and relative honour. Ch.—S. Aug. proposes another very probable explanation. He adored God, supporting himself on the top of his staff, or of Joseph's sceptre, q. 162. The Sept. and Syriac intimate, that Jacob bowed down respectfully towards the sceptre of his son, and thus complied with the explication which he had given to his dream. C. xxxvii. 10. Others, who understood the Hebrew Hamitta, in the sense given to it by S. Jerom, Aquila, and Symmachus, suppose that after he had given his last instructions to Joseph in a sitting posture growing weaker, he laid his head again upon his pillow. C.—God was pleased to have

2 And it was told the old man: Behold thy son Joseph cometh to thee. And being strengthened, he sat on his bed.

3 And when Joseph was come in to him, he said:† God almighty appeared to me at Luza, which is in the land of Chanaan, and he blessed me,

7 For, when I came out of Mesopotamia, †Rachel died from me in the land of Chanaan in the very journey, and it was spring time: and I was going to Ephrata, and I buried her near the way of Ephrata, which by another name is called Bethlehem.

8 Then seeing his sons, he said to him: Who are these?

9 He answered: They are my sons, whom God hath given me in this place. And he said: Bring them to me, that I may bless them.

10 For Israel's eyes were dim by reason of his great age, and he could not see clearly. And when they were brought to him, he kissed and embraced them, this recorded in a language subject to such various interpretations; as he, perhaps, would have us to understand, that Jacob literally bowed down both to the bed-head and to the top of the sceptre. For many believe, that the Scripture has often several literal meanings. T.—If the Massoretic points had been known to the Sept. we should not have had this variation. But the learned generally agree, that they are of human, and even of very modern invention.

CHAP. XLVIII. VER. 1. Sick. Worse than when he was with him before. H. VER. 2. Strengthened; with the thought of seeing this beloved son, and also with the prophetic spirit (M.) of God, which filled him with joy, &c. Gal. v. 22. H. VER. 4. Possession. He makes mention of this first vision of God to him, to shew that he had a right to Chanaan, and to adopt the two children of Joseph, who were each to have as much as his own children. H.—Jacob's posterity enjoyed that land till the Messias came, with some few interruptions. But his spiritual children inherit a much better country, (of which this was a figure) an eternal kingdom in heaven. C.

VER. 5. Mine, by adoption; and shall be heads of their respective tribes. M. VER. 6. Thine. They shall not claim the same prerogative: they shall live among their brethren, Ephraim and Manasses. We read not that Joseph had any other children besides these two. C.—The double portion, or birth-right, was thus transferred from Ruben to Joseph. D.

VER. 7. For when, &c. Heb. "as for me." Do not wonder that I should so earnestly desire to be laid in the tomb of Mambre, whereas your mother was buried at Ephrata. I was in a manner forced to bury her there, by the heat of the weather, (M.) and the confusion to which my family was then exposed, on account of the slaughter of the Sichemites. 13 And he set Ephraim on his right-hand, that is, towards the left-hand of Israel; but Manasses on his left-hand, to wit, towards his father's right-hand, and brought them near to him.

14 But he, stretching forth his right-hand, put it upon the head of Ephraim, the younger brother; and the left upon the head of Manasses, who was the elder, changing his hands.

18 And he said to his father: It should not be so, my father; for this is the first-born, put thy right-hand upon his head.

19 But he refusing, said: I know, my son, I know: and this also shall become a people, and shall be multiplied; but his younger brother shall be greater than he; and his seed shall grow into nations.

stand, by forming a cross with his extended hands, that he had some particular reason for so doing. H.—By the preference given to Ephraim, he foreshewed his royal dignity, in giving kings to the ten tribes, (Euseb.) and that his tribe would surpass that of his brother in glory and numbers; (v. 19,) and lastly, give birth to that great leader, Josue; who, as a figure of Christ, should introduce the Israelites into the promised land. Num. xxvii. 28. C.—The cross of Christ is the source of all our exaltation. † VER. 16. The angel guardian, who, by God's ordinance, has ever protected me, continue his kind attention towards these my grand-children. It is not probable that he, who was called God before, should now be styled an angel, as some Protestants would have us believe. H.—S. Basil c. Eunom. iii. and S. Chrysostom, with many others, allege this text, to prove that an angel is given to man for the direction of his life, and to protect him against the assaults of the rebel angels, as Calvin himself dares not deny.—Let my, &c. Let them partake of the blessings (promised by name to me, to Abraham, and to Isaac) among the other tribes; or, may God bless them, in consideration of his servants. Moses obtained pardon for the Hebrews, by reminding God of these his chosen friends. Ex. xxxii. W.

VER. 17. Displeased; (graniter accepit,) was grieved to see the elder son neglected; and thinking it might possibly proceed from a mistake, as his father's eyes were so dim that he did not know them, (v. 8,) he ventured to suggest his sentiments to his father; but acquiesced in his decision. H.—The greatest prophets are not always under actual inspiration. C.

VER. 19. A people, (in populos.) He shall be father of many peoples. The tribe of Manasses was divided, and had a large territory on either side of the Jordan, immediately north of that which fell to the lots of Ephraim and of Gad. H.—Grow. Heb. "shall be the fulness of nations;" or shall possess every thing that can make a nation great and enviable. The event justified this prediction. Ephraim was at the head of the ten tribes, most valiant and powerful. 3 K. xi. 26. C.

VER. 20. In thee, Joseph. Sept. "in you," Ephraim and Manasses. The Israelites shall wish the same happiness to their greatest friends, as that which you have enjoyed. M.

21 And he said to Joseph, his son: Behold I die, and God will be with you, and will bring you back into the land of your fathers.

22 *I give thee a portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorrite^b with my sword and bow.

CHAP. XLIX.

Jacob's prophetic blessings of his twelve sons. His death.

AND Jacob called his sons, and said to them: Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you the things that shall befall you in the last days.

2 Gather yourselves together, and hear, O ye sons of Jacob, hearken to Israel, your father:

3 Ruben, my first-born, thou art my strength, and the beginning of my sorrow; excelling in gifts, greater in command.

4 Thou art poured out as water, grow thou not; *be-

VER 22. Thee. In thy posterity; and particularly in Ephraim, to whose lot it shall fall, a portion. Heb. shecem; which the Sept. explain of the city, or field near it, which Jacob had formerly purchased; and which, being wrested from him after he had left that country, by the Amorrites, he recovered by the sword. Mæius.—The particulars of this transaction are not given in Scripture. M.—The children of Joseph buried their father in this field. Jos. xxiv. 32. There also was Jacob's well. John iv. 5. We have already observed, that Jacob restored whatever his sons had taken unjustly from the unhappy Schemites. C. xxxiv. 30.—Sword and bow, is understood by S. Jeron and Onkelos in a spiritual sense, to denote his justice and earnest prayer, by which he merited the divine protection; (C.) or it may mean the money, which he had procured with hard labour. S. Jer. q. Heb.

CHAP. XLIX. VER. 1. Last. Heb. "future days." It was an ancient and commendable custom, for parents to assemble their children in their last moments, to give them salutary instructions. They often also foretold to them what should happen. See Deut. xxxi. Jos. ult. 1 K. xii. Tob. iv. 8. 1 Mac. ii. Cyrus and Socrates both believed that they had then an insight into futurity. C.

VER. 3. My strength, &c. He calls him his strength, as being born whilst his father was in his full strength and vigour: he calls him the beginning of his sorrow, because cares and sorrows usually come on with the birth of children.—Excelling in gifts, &c. because the first-born had a title to a double portion, and to have the command over his brethren, which Ruben forfeited by his sin; being poured out as water; that is, spent and lost. Ch.—In command. He ought to have succeeded to his father in authority. But Joseph entered in upon his rejection, 1 Par. v. 1. The priesthood was given to Levi's descendants; and the regal power, partly to those of Joseph, who reigned over the ten tribes, for a long time; and partly to the posterity of Juda, who exercised dominion over all the people of Israel. Chaldee. W.

VER. 4. Grow thou not. This was not meant by way of a curse or imprecation; but by way of a prophecy, foretelling that the tribe of Ruben should not inherit the pre-eminences usually annexed to the first birth-right, viz. the double portion, the being prince or lord over the other brethren, and the priesthood: of which the double portion was given to Joseph, the princely office to Juda, and the priesthood to Levi. Ch.—Thou hast abandoned thyself to thy brutal passion; do so no more ne adificias. S. Jer. q. Heb. Let Ruben live, and die not; let him be small in number. Deut. xxxiii. 6. His tribe never became very considerable. C.—Couch. See C. xxxv. 22. Eternal infamy attends the name of Ruben. H.

VER. 5. Brethren. Born of the same parents; similar in disposition.—Vessels; instruments. Sept. and Chal. "they have completed wickedness," as they read calm, instead of the present Heb. cele, which is adopted by Aquila. C.

VER. 6. Slew a man, viz. Schem, the son of Hemor, with all his people, Gen. xxxiv. Mystically and prophetically it alludes to Christ; whom their posterity, viz. the priests and the scribes, put to death. Ch.—A wall, Schem, which they destroyed; or, according to the Sept. "they ham-strung" a bull, as the same Hebrew word signifies; both which may refer to the prince of the town, or to Joseph, (C.) in whose persecution these two were principally concerned. Jacob declares, he had no share in their attack upon the people of Schem: his soul or his glory, was not impaired by their misconduct. H.

VER. 7. Scatter them. Levi had no division allotted to him, but only some cities among the other tribes; and Simeon had only a part of Juda's lot, which was so small, that his descendants were forced to seek for a fresh establishment; some in Gader, others in Mount Seir, 1 Par. iv. 39. Jos. xix. 2. Simeon alone was not blessed by Moses. Deut. xxxiii. 6.—The Levites obtained a blessing, on account of their distinguished zeal; (Num. xxv.) while Zambri rivets, as it were, the curse upon the family of Simeon. M.

VER. 8. Praise. He alludes to his name, his martial prowess, and dominion over all his brethren, who should be all called Jews, and submit to his sway. Some explain all this of Jesus Christ; others refer the first part of the prophecy to Juda. H.

VER. 9. A lion's whelp, &c. This blessing of Juda foretelleth the strength of his tribe, the fertility of his inheritance, and principally that the sceptre, and legislative power, should not be utterly taken away from his race till about the time of the coming of Christ: as in effect it never was; which is a demonstration cause thou wentest up to thy father's bed, and didst defile his couch.

5 Simeon and Levi brethren: vessels of iniquity waging war.

6 Let not my soul go into their counsel, nor my glory be in their assembly: "because in their fury they slew a man, and in their self-will they undermined a wall.

7 Cursed be their fury, because it was stubborn: and their wrath, because it was cruel:" I will divide them in Jacob, and will scatter them in Israel.

8 Juda, thee shall thy brethren praise: thy hand shall be on the necks of thy enemies; the sons of thy father shall bow down to thee.

9 "Juda is a lion's whelp: to the prey, my son, thou art gone up: resting thou hast couched as a lion, and as a lioness, who shall rouse him?"

against the modern Jews, that the Messias is long since come; for the sceptre has long since been utterly taken away from Juda. Ch.—This none can deny. Juda is compared to a lion, which was the emblem of his royal dignity, and was borne in the standards of that tribe.—To the prey. Heb. "from the prey." He proceeds from victory to victory. He couches, ready to fall upon his prey; and, retiring to the mountains, is still eager to renew the attack. C.—Read the history of David and of Solomon, who, both in peace and war, were a terror to the surrounding nations.

VER. 10. The sceptre. Almost every word in this verse has been explained in a different manner. But all the ancient Jews agree with Christians, that it contains a prediction of the Messias, and points out the period of his coming. Whether this was verified when Herod, a foreigner, got possession of the throne, and was acknowledged by the Jews, just about the time of our Saviour's nativity, as most of the fathers suppose; or it only took its full effect when Agrippa II. lost all his power, the temple and city were laid in ruins, and the whole nation dispersed for ever, it is not perhaps so easy to determine. In either supposition, the Messias has long since come. Jacob foretels, either that Christ would make his appearance as soon as the Jews should fall under a foreign yoke, and in this sense he was born about the 37th year of Herod the great—or he should come just before the kingdom of Juda should have an end, which took place in the 70th year of the Christian era, or about 37 years after the public appearance and death of our Saviour. The sceptre shall not depart irrevocably from the Jews; over whom the tribe of Juda had always the greatest authority in appointing the princes, when they were not selected from the tribe itself, or from his thigh; till the Messias, who has been expected so long, shall come and gather all nations into his Church. Then the designs of Providence, in watching over the Jews, being accomplished, their republic shall be dissolved, because they have shed his blood, instead of acknowledging his celestial beauty, v. 12. The evident signs of decay in the kingdom of the Jews, were sufficient to excite the attention of all to look for the Messias; and we read, both in S. John iv. 25, in Tacitus, and Suetonius, that his appearance was fully expected about that time. The sceptre is the emblem of sovereign, though not always independent, power. Juda and his posterity were always at the head of their brethren. They marched first in the wilderness; two of the judges were of this tribe. But their chief glory began with David, whose posterity the whole nation obeyed, till Jeroboam tore away the ten tribes. Still the tribe of Benjamin and the Levites adhered to Juda. During the captivity, there were judges admitted to superintend over their brethren; and K. Joakim was raised to high authority. The rulers who came into power after the return of the Jews, were either of this tribe, at least by the mother's side, or were chosen and recognized by the tribe of Juda. Even Herod, in this sense might be considered as a Jewish king, though a foreigner, as well as a Thracian might be counted a Roman emperor, without any diminution of the imperial authority of Rome. Perhaps indeed he was an usurper, till the nation acknowledged his authority two years after the birth of Christ. Pablo de temp. ii. Joseph. Ant. xvii. 8. "Herod was the first foreign king admitted by the Jews." S. Aug. de C. D. xviii. 45. If, therefore, no stranger was to be acknowledged by the nation, till he came, who was to establish a spiritual and everlasting kingdom, the moment was arrived, when the Jews submitted to Herod, and Christ had actually been born two years.—From Juda, or from that tribe; for Jacob gave peculiar blessings to each; (v. 28.) and hence the fathers gather, that the Messias should spring from Juda.—Ruler from his thigh, lineally descended from him, or acknowledged at least by his posterity, as all the legal princes were till the coming of Christ.—Michobek might also signify a teacher or scribe expounding the law of Moses, which subsisted for the same period; but this is more probably a farther explication of the sceptre, &c. C.—Till had ci, which word is being joined together, are always taken in this sense. Helvius. Sent. Schilom. (or Solom) seems to have been in S. Jeron's copy, though we now read Shiloh (or Sole) "to whom" the authority belongs; Sept. "to whom all things are reserved; or till the things arrive, which are laid up for him. C.—Expectation, or congregation of nations, as Argens afterwards foretold, ii. 8. If we examine all the plausible explanations which have been given to this verse, we shall find that they all tend to convey the same truth. "The sceptre, (shebet, rod, crook, power or tribe) shall not depart (cease, be taken off) from Juda, (the tribe or the Jews) nor a leader nor a ruler from his thigh, till he come: it is to be sent, and he shall be the expectation of nations.

11 Tying his foal to the vineyard, and his ass, O my son, to the vine. He shall wash his robe in wine, and his garment in the blood of the grape.

12 His eyes are more beautiful than wine, and his teeth whiter than milk.

13 Zabulon shall dwell on the sea-shore, and in the road of ships, reaching as far as Sidon.

14 Issachar shall be a strong ass, lying down between the borders.

15 He saw rest that it was good: and the land that it was excellent: and he bowed his shoulder to carry, and became a servant under tribute.

16 Dan shall judge his people like another tribe in Israel.

(scribe, lawyer or legislator) from his thigh, (between his feet, or from his banners) till he, who shall be sent, (shio, the pacific, his son, to whom it is, or the things are, reserved) arrive; and Him shall the nations expect, (and obey) to Him they shall look up (and be gathered). Whom will the Jews point out to whom all these characters agree, except our divine Lord, whom they also must one day adore? H.

VER. 11. Foal. The nations, which had not been subjected to the yoke of the old law.—Vineyard; the house of Israel, the vineyard of the Lord of hosts. Isai. v. 7. Christ broke down the wall of separation, and made both one. Eph. ii. 14.—His ass, or the Jews.—O my son; Juda, the Saviour king, who shall be born of thee, shall tie both Jews and Gentiles to the vine, which is himself. Jo. xv. To the Jews he shall preach in person: but the Gentiles he shall call by his apostles, chosen out of the vineyard of the Jewish church. M.—He shall wash his robe, his flesh; and his garment, or all his disciples, in his own blood; adorning them with all graces by means of his death, which must be applied to their souls, in the holy sacraments devoutly received, and in the Mass, where his blood is offered under the appearance of wine. H. See S. Amb. &c. Tertullian, (ag. Mare, iv.) shewing that Christ fulfilled the figures of the old law, interprets the stole to mean his body, and wine his blood. W.—Jacob alludes also to fertility and abundance of vines, which should enrich the portion of Juda, particularly about Enzaddi. Cant. i. 13. C.

VER. 12. Beautiful. The eyes and teeth contribute much to the beauty of a face. Our Saviour, rising from the dead, filled the hearts of the beholders with joy, as wine exhilarates the heart of man. M.—The spouse in the Canticle (v. 12.) compares the eyes of the bridegroom to the shining reddish, or fiery ones of pigeons: chariti, beautiful, means shining red, &c. Jesus Christ seems to allude to this prophecy of Jacob, (Matt. xxi. 43. and Jo. x. 16,) telling the Jews, that the kingdom of God should be taken from them, and one fold should be established for all. God would then cease to distinguish the Jews by any other marks than those of his wrath. He would no longer be their king and shepherd. His sceptre, or pastoral crook, should be taken off the tribe of Juda, and it should be confounded with the rest, as it is at this day. C.

VER. 13. Road. The territory of Zabulon was famous for good harbours, being situated between the Mediterranean and the sea of Genezareth. M.—Jacob marks out the limits to be assigned his children, 200 years before Chanaan was conquered; and Moses wrote this before they possessed a foot of land in it. The reason why Zabulon is placed before his elder brother Issachar, is not known.—Sidon: not the city, but the territory of Sidon, or Phenicia. C.

VER. 14. Strong. Heb. "bony ass." Many of Jacob's children are compared to animals, which was customary in the eastern style. Homer compares Ajax with the ass, for his strength and patience. Iliad xii. Jacob thus indicates the laborious disposition of Issachar's tribe, which did not delight in war. Their country was the most fruitful of all Galilee. C.

VER. 16. Dan shall judge, &c. This was verified in Samson, who was of the tribe of Dan, and began to deliver Israel. Judges xiii. 5. But as this deliverance was but temporal and very imperfect, the holy patriarch (v. 18,) aspires after another kind of a deliverer, saying: I will look for thy salvation, O Lord. Ch.—Many have supposed, that Antichrist will be one of his descendants, which makes Jacob break out into this exclamation. H. See S. Iren. v. 30, &c. Samson exercised his ingenuity in discomfiting the Philistines. But Antichrist will be comely to behold: the daughters run to and fro upon the wall;

23 But they that held darts, provoked him, and quarrelled with him, and envied him.

24 His bow rested upon the strong, and the bands of his arms and his hands were loosed, by the hands of the mighty one of Jacob: thence he came forth a pastor, the stone of Israel.

25 The God of thy father shall be thy helper, and the Almighty shall bless thee with the blessings of heaven above, with the blessings of the deep that lieth beneath, with the blessings of the breasts and of the womb.

26 The blessings of thy father are strengthened with the blessings of his fathers: until the desire of the everlasting hills should come: may they be upon the head of Joseph, and upon the crown of the Nazarite among his brethren.

27 Benjamin a ravenous wolf, in the morning shall eat the prey, and in the evening shall divide the spoil.

28 All these are the twelve tribes of Israel: these things their father spoke to them, and he blessed every one with their proper blessings.

far more subtle in deluding the faithful. M.—The Danites took Laish, afterwards called Caesarea Philippi, by stratagem. Jud. xviii. T.

VER. 19. Gad being girded, &c. It seems to allude to the tribe of Gad; when after they had received for their lot the land of Galaad, they marched in arms before the rest of the Israelites, to the conquest of the land of Chanaan: from whence they afterwards returned loaded with spoils. See Josue i. and xxii. Ch.—He alludes continually to the name of Gad, which signifies one "girded, or a troop." See Osee vi. 8. Num. xxxii. 17. C.

VER. 20. Fat, delicious. This country was very luxuriant. Deut. xxxiii. 24. M.

VER. 21. A hart. Barach was of this tribe, and seemed rather timid, till he was encouraged by Deborah; and his victory gave occasion to that beautiful hymn, Jud. v. C.

VER. 22. Run to and fro, &c. To behold his beauty; whilst his envious brethren turned their darts against him, &c. Ch.—Joseph continued increasing, in spite of the envy of his brethren, and the calumny of Putiphar's wife, who was too much enamoured of his beauty. H.

VER. 24. His bow rested upon the strong, &c. That is, upon God, who was his strength: who also loosed his bands, and brought him out of prison to be the pastor, that is, the feeder and ruler of Egypt; and the stone, that is, the rock and support of Israel.

VER. 25. Blessings, &c. 1. Of rain; 2. of springs; 3. of milk, (uberum); and 4. (ulvæ) of children and cattle. M.

VER. 26. The blessings of thy father, &c. That is, thy father's blessings are made more prevalent and efficacious in thy regard, by the additional strength they receive from his inheriting the blessings of his progenitors Abraham and Isaac.—The desire of the everlasting hills, &c. These blessings all looked forward towards Christ, called the desire of the everlasting hills, as being longed for, as it were, by the whole creation. Mystically, the patriarchs and prophets are called the everlasting hills, by reason of the eminence of their wisdom and holiness.—The Nazarite. This word signifies one separated; and agrees to Joseph, as being separated from, and more eminent than, his brethren. As the ancient Nazarites were so called from their being set aside for God, and vowed to him. Ch.—Nazir denotes also one chosen or crowned, and is a title of one of the chief courtiers or ministers of the Persian kings. Such was Joseph. C.—These blessings were perhaps forfeited by the misconduct of his posterity, when Jeroboam set up the worship of the golden calves; though probably many would subsist of the tribes of Ephraim and Manasses till the coming of the Messiah. T.

VER. 27. Wolf; alluding to the wars in defence of the inhabitants of Gabaa, and those waged by Saul, Mardocheus, &c. M. Jud. xix. and xx. S. Paul was of this tribe; and, from a fiery zealot, became an eminent apostle. S. Aug. &c. T.

VER. 28. Proper blessings, or predictions; for Ruben received no blessing. H.

VER. 29. To be gathered to my people. That is, I am going to die, and so to follow my ancestors that are gone before me, and to join their company in another world. Ch.—Jacob's life was embittered with many afflictions, which he bore with admirable patience, and thus deserved to be considered as an excellent figure of Jesus Christ.—The man of sorrows. His faith in the promises of God, made him contemplate the land of Chanaan as his own, and parcel it out among his children. C.

The mourning for Jacob, and his interment. Joseph's kindness towards his brethren. His death.

AND when Joseph saw this, he fell upon his father's face, weeping and kissing him.

2 And he commanded his servants, the physicians, to embalm his father.

3 And while they were fulfilling his commands, there passed forty days: for this was the manner with bodies that were embalmed, and Egypt mourned for him seventy days.

4 And the time of the mourning being expired, Joseph spoke to the family of Pharaoh: If I have found favour in your sight, speak in the ears of Pharaoh:

5 For my father made me swear to him, saying: Behold I die; thou shalt bury me in my sepulchre^b which I have digged for myself in the land of Chanaan. So I will go up and bury my father, and return.

6 And Pharaoh said to him: Go up and bury thy father according as he made thee swear.

7 So he went up, and there went with him all the ancients of Pharaoh's house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt.

8 And the house of Joseph with his brethren, except their children, and their flocks and herds, which they left in the land of Gessen.

9 He had also in his train chariots and horsemen: and it was a great company.

10 And they came to the threshing floor of Atad, which is situated beyond the Jordan: where celebrating the exequies with a great and vehement lamentation, they spent full seven days.

11 And when the inhabitants of Chanaan saw this, they said: This is a great mourning to the Egyptians.

H.—The entrails are taken out, &c. by the embalmer during 30 days, and the body is left in salt and various drugs, for other 40, in all 70 days, as Herodotus informs us, (B. xi. 36,) and as Moses here insinuates, v. 3. This was an honour peculiar to the kings. Before any person was buried, his praises were rehearsed; and it was lawful on this occasion to declare, what evil even the kings themselves had done; which sometimes caused them to be deprived of funeral honours. We have several funeral antiques preserved in Scripture, 2 K. i. 18. iii. 33. 2 Par. xxxv. 25. C.—The Lamentations of Jeremias were perhaps of this nature, on the death of K. Josiah. 14 And Joseph returned into Egypt with his brethren, and all that were in his company, after he had buried his father.

15 Now he being dead, his brethren were afraid, and talked one with another: Lest perhaps he should remember the wrong he suffered, and requite us all the evil that we did to him.

16 And they sent a message to him, saying: Thy father commanded us before he died, 17 That we should say thus much to thee from him: I beseech thee to forget the wickedness of thy brethren, and the sin and malice they practised against thee: we also pray thee, to forgive the servants of the God of thy father this wickedness. And when Joseph heard this, he wept.

18 And his brethren came to him; and worshipping prostrate on the ground, they said: We are thy servants.

19 And he answered them: Fear not: can we resist the will of God?

20 ^dYou thought evil against me: but God turned it into good, that he might exalt me, as at present you see, and might save many people.

21 ^eFear not: I will feed you and your children. And he comforted them, and spoke gently and mildly.

VER. 25. Embalmed, like the Egyptian mummies, or mummies, which is a Persian word, signifying a dried corpse. Some of them are very magnificent, adorned with golden letters and hieroglyphics, various bandages, &c. They are laid in coffins. Some pretend that Joseph was afterwards adored in Egypt, under the names of Serapis and Osiris; but the grounds of this supposition, are only a few uncertain etymologies and emblems, which might agree with him as well as with those modern deities: (C.) at least it does not at all appear probable, that he was adored in Egypt before the departure of the Israelites, as the king who persecuted them did not know Joseph. Ex. i. 8. His greatest glory was, to have prefigured Jesus Christ in so wonderful a manner during the course of his life, and to have been replenished with all the graces which could form the character of a great man and a saint. Some think, that the history of Joseph has been imitated in the fable of Proteus, or Cetes, king of Egypt. See the True Hist. of Fabulous Times, by Juerin du Roche, a virtuous and learned ecclesiastic, who was put to death for his faith, at Paris, Sept. 8, 1792. See also Rollin's Abrégé.

THE BOOK OF EXODUS.

THE second Book of Moses is called Exodus from the Greek word ἔξοδος, which signifies going out; because it contains the history of the going out of the children of Israel out of Egypt. The Hebrews, from the words with which it begins, call it VEELLE SHEMOTH: These are the names. Ch.—It contains the space of 145 years, till the beginning of the second year after the liberation of the Israelites. T.—Their slavery is described in the first chapters; and is supposed to have continued ninety years. D.—The laws prescribed by God to his people, the sacrifices, tabernacle, &c. were all intended to prefigure the Christian dispensation. S. Aug. de C. D. vii. 31.—Moses himself was a type of Jesus Christ, who was rejected by the synagogue, and received by the Gentiles, as the Jewish Legislator was abandoned by his mother, and educated by the Egyptian princess. She delivers him back to his mother; and thus the Jews will, at last, acknowledge our Saviour. D.—God deigns to address his people in the character of a powerful Eastern monarch, and requires the like attention. He appoints his ministers, like guards, to attend before his tabernacle, &c. The laws which he enacts, are such as suited the Jewish people: they were not able to rise all at once to perfection; but these laws guide them, as it were, on the road. They are infinitely more perfect than those of the surrounding nations. C.

CHAP. I.

The Israelites are multiplied in Egypt. They are oppressed by a new king, who commandeth all their male children to be killed.

THESE are the names of the children of Israel, *that went into Egypt with Jacob: they went in every man with his household:

2 Ruben, Simeon, Levi, Juda,

3 Issachar, Zabulon, and Benjamin,

4 Dan, and Nephthali, Gad and Aser.

5 And all the souls that came out of Jacob's thigh, were seventy:^b but Joseph was in Egypt.

6 After he was dead, and all his brethren, and all that generation,

7 *The children of Israel increased, and sprung up into multitudes, and growing exceedingly strong they filled the land.

8 In the mean time there arose a new king over Egypt, that knew not Joseph:

9 And he said to his people: Behold the people of the children of Israel are numerous and stronger than we.

10 Come let us wisely oppress them, lest they multi-

CHAP. I. VER. 3. And Benjamin. He is mentioned here, because he was the son of Rachel, as the preceding were the children of Lia. The offspring of the handmaids follow. H.

VER. 5. Seventy: Sept. "75," including the offspring of Joseph. See Gen. c'vi. 26.

VER. 6. Generation, or race of mortals who had seen his wonderful works. The tyrant, who knew not Joseph, began his reign about 58 years after that patriarch's death. C.—His name was Pharaoh Amenophis, (Perer.) or Ramesses Miamum. Usher.

VER. 9. Numerous. Calvisius observes, that from Ephraim alone might have sprung 4,112,323,729 people. See S. Aug. q. 43, &c. H.—In the space of 215 years, 70 people may produce an immense multitude, as Bonfrere shews by an accurate calculation. God also was pleased to bless the Hebrews with fecundity, so that they sprung up (abundantly) like frogs or fishes, v. 7. In Egypt, the women had sometimes seven at a birth (Plin. vii. 3.) and Aristotle (Anim. vii. 4.) mentions one woman who had 20 children at four births. T.—Stronger. This might easily be true, if this king had only Thebais under his command. But if he was king of all Egypt, it seems an exaggeration. C.—Indeed, human policy often gives birth to all kinds of wickedness. The king justifies his cruelty on this pretext of self defence. He wishes to keep the Hebrews under; yet he is not willing to let them depart, as he knew they intended, according to Joseph's prediction. H.— ply: and if any war shall rise against us, join with our enemies, and having overcome us, depart out of the land.

11 Therefore he set over them masters of the works, to afflict them with burdens: and they built for Pharaoh cities of tabernacles, Phithom, and Ramesses.

12 But the more they oppressed them, the more they were multiplied and increased.

13 And the Egyptians hated the children of Israel, and afflicted them and mocked them:

14 And they made their life bitter with hard works in clay and brick, and with all manner of service, wherewith they were overcharged in the works of the earth.

15 And the king of Egypt spoke to the midwives of the Hebrews: of whom one was called Sephora, the other Phua, 16 Commanding them: When you shall do the office of midwives to the Hebrew women, and the time of delivery is come: if it be a man child, kill it: if a woman, keep it alive.

17 But the midwives feared God, and did not do as

^c Acts vii. 17.

God permitted this disposition, in order to punish his people for their idolatry, (Ezec. xxiii. 8.) to admonish them not to fix their abode in Egypt, and to manifest his power and glory in the destruction of the impious. M.

VER. 11. Masters. Cruel like himself, who not only made them build without proper materials, (v. 14. and C. v. 10. H.) but oppressed them with heavy burdens of brick and tile. Hence Aristophanes calls the Hebrews in derision Plinthophoroi. This servitude is styled the iron furnace of Egypt, Deut. iv. 20. Jer. xi. 4.—Of tabernacles, or of storehouses. Ch.—To keep his treasures, Chal. or "fortresses," Sept. It may also be the name of a city, Miscenoth. C. xii. 37.—Phithom, perhaps the same as the town of Heroum, where the Sept. say Joseph first met his father. Gen. xlii. 28. Ramesses was the capital, and situate in the Arabic nome. C.

VER. 14. Service. They were forced to till the land, reap, &c. M.

VER. 15. Midwives. Egyptian women, who assisted all of that district. Josephus xi. 5. There were others under them. Some think all these midwives were of Hebrew extraction, as their names are Hebrew, &c. C.

VER. 16. The time, &c. Heb. "and you shall see them upon the two stones." Abenaim. Jeremias (xviii. 3.) uses the same expression, speaking of a potter hard at work. C.—A woman, from whom nothing could be feared, to be reserved for service and for pleasure. M.—We must not obey princes in their unjust commands. Act. iv. and v. Matt. x. 23. W.

the king of Egypt had commanded, but saved the men children.

18 And the king called for them and said: What is it that you meant to do, that you would save the men children?

19 They answered: The Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women: for they themselves are skilful in the office of a midwife; and they are delivered before we come to them.

20 Therefore God dealt well with the midwives: and the people multiplied and grew exceedingly strong.

21 And because the midwives feared God, he built them houses.

22 Pharaoh therefore charged all his people, saying: Whatsoever shall be born of the male sex, ye shall cast into the river: whatsoever of the female, ye shall save alive.

CHAP. II.

Moses is born, and exposed on the bank of the river; where he is taken up by the daughter of Pharaoh, and adopted for her son. He killeth an Egyptian, and fleeth into Madian; where he marryeth a wife.

AFTER this there went a man of the house of Levi; and took a wife of his own kindred.

2 And she conceived, and bore a son: and seeing him a goodly child, hid him three months.

3 And when she could hide him no longer, she took a basket made of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and pitch: and put the little babe therein, and laid him in the sedges by the river's brink,

4 His sister standing afar off, and taking notice what would be done.

5 And behold the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself in the river: and her maids walked by

^a Infra vi. 20.—^b Heb. xi. 23.—^c A. M. 2433, A. C. 1571.

VER. 19. Skilful, &c. Heb. Caioth means midwives; or they are full of vigour, or bring forth alive, like brutes. By this allusion they not only excuse themselves, but seem also to enter into the king's sentiments of hatred and scorn for the Hebrews. M.—Women in Egypt, and in the eastern regions, are easily delivered, and hardly stand in need of any assistance. Ludolf 1 K. iv. 19. Perhaps, therefore, the midwives spoke truth, with regard to the generality of the Hebrew women. But they gave way to a lie of excuse, with regard to some, (v. 17.) which S. Augustine would not allow, even to save all the Hebrew children. e. Mend. 15. It was not so easy to discover this delusion, as women in that country seldom appear in public; and hence Jochabed was enabled to hide Moses so long. C.

VER. 21. Because the midwives feared God, &c. The midwives were rewarded, not for their lie, which was a venial sin; but for their fear of God, and their humanity; but this reward was only temporal, in building them houses; that is, in establishing and enriching their families. Ch.—This alone the Scripture specifies, though they might also be filled with heavenly graces. W.—Some conclude from this verse, that the midwives embraced the true religion. The Hebrew refers built them to the Hebrews, as if they multiplied in consequence of the humanity of these women; (C.) and the Vulgate may be explained in the same sense. H.—De Muis supposes, that Pharaoh ordered houses to be built for the midwives, where the Hebrew women were forced to appear when they were to be delivered, in the presence of commissaries.

VER. 22. The river Nile, where the persecuting successor of this king found his end. H.—It seems this inhuman decree was not published till after Aaren was born, and it was probably revoked soon after the birth of Moses; for if it had been rigorously put in execution, there would have been nothing but old men 80 years after, when Moses led the people out of Egypt. C.—But perhaps even the Egyptians abhorred and refused to execute this edict. M.

CHAP. II. VER. 1. After this. In process of time, without reference to what immediately precedes. The Heb. and Sept. omit these words. H.—The marriage of Amram, grandson of Levi, with his aunt or cousin, had taken place before the persecution. Tostat and others suppose, that people were not then forbidden to marry their aunts. But it is probable Jochabed was only the grand-daughter of Levi, and the daughter of one of Amram's brothers, as the Sept. insinuate. Otherwise their ages would have been very disproportionate. See C. vi. 20. C.

VER. 2. Goodly. Handsome, elegant. Heb. xi. 23; agreeable to God. Act. vii. 20. Josephus says, Amram had been assured by God that the child should be the deliverer of his people. Yet he neglects not to use every prudent precaution. W.—Month. Heb. moons; whence some erroneously infer, that the Hebrew year was not solar. C.

VER. 3. Bulrushes, or paper plant, growing on the banks of the Nile. Such (74) the river's brink. And when she saw the basket in the sedges, she sent one of her maids for it: and when it was brought,

6 She opened it, and seeing within it an infant crying, having compassion on it, she said: This is one of the babes of the Hebrews.

7 And the child's sister said to her: Shall I go, and call to thee a Hebrew woman, to nurse the babe?

8 She answered: Go. The maid went and called her mother.

9 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her: Take this child, and nurse him for me: I will give thee thy wages. The woman took and nursed the child: and when he was grown up, she delivered him to Pharaoh's daughter.

10 And she adopted him for a son, and called him Moses, saying: Because I took him out of the water.

11 In those days, after Moses was grown up, he went out to his brethren: and saw their affliction, and an Egyptian striking one of the Hebrews, his brethren.

12 And when he had looked about this way and that way, and saw no one there, he slew the Egyptian and hid him in the sand.

13 And going out the next day, he saw two Hebrews quarrelling: and he said to him that did the wrong: Why strikest thou thy neighbour?

14 But he answered: Who hath appointed thee prince and judge over us? wilt thou kill me, as thou didst yesterday kill the Egyptian? Moses feared, and said: How is this come to be known?

15 And Pharaoh heard of this word, and sought to kill Moses: but he fled from his sight, and abode in the land of Madian, and he sat down by a well.

16 And the priest of Madian had seven daughters, little vessels were used in Egypt in Lucan's time. Conseritit bibula Memphis cymba papyro. M.—Sedges, to prevent it from being carried away by the stream. Cajetan thinks the Hebrews did not drown their children; but by thus exposing them, abandoned them to the king's use. Act. vii. 19.

VER. 4. His sister, Mary, who was born at the beginning of this persecution, and was therefore called bitterness. H.—She was about 12 years old. M.

VER. 5. Daughter, and sole heiress. She is called Therinit by Josephus, and Meris by Artapanus. She was going to bathe, or to purify herself, according to the custom of the country; or perhaps she was going to wash linen, as Nausicrae, the daughter of Alcinous, was doing, when she met Ulysses. C.

VER. 6. Hebrews, against whom the persecution raged. She saw it had received circumcision. Theod. q. in Ex.

VER. 10. Moses, or Moyse, in the Egyptian tongue, signifies one taken or saved out of the water. Ch.—Mo, signifies water in the Egyptian tongue; Mosse, 'he drew out,' in Hebrew. Philo believes that the princess feigned him to be her own child. Moses denied that he was, and would not take advantage of this adoption, Heb. xi. 24. He was grown up, and had been well instructed by his parents, v. 9. He afterwards became well versed in all the sciences, (Act. vii. 22.) rejecting what was idle and superstitious. Josephus assures us he became a great conqueror. C.

VER. 12. He slew the Egyptian. This he did by a particular inspiration of God; as a prelude to his delivering the people from their oppression and bondage. He thought, says S. Stephen, (Acts vii. 25,) that his brethren understood that God by his hand would save them. But such particular and extraordinary examples are not to be imitated. Ch.—He was inspired, on this occasion, to stand up in defence of the innocent. M. S. Tho. ii. 2. q. 60.—The laws of Egypt required every person to protect the oppressed; or, if unable to do it, he was to call in the aid of the magistrate. Diod. i. C.—Moses looked round to see if there was any help near. He was 40 years old when he was forced to flee.

VER. 14. Feared. S. Paul, (Heb. xi. 27,) in speaking of his leaving Egypt, at the head of the people, when he says, not fearing the fierceness of the king. Without being dismayed on this occasion, by the unexpected discovery of what he had done, (which was perhaps undesignedly made public by the Hebrew whom he had rescued) he resolves not to tempt God. H.

VER. 15. Madian. A city and country of Arabia, which took its name from Madian the son of Abraham, by Ceturah, and was peopled by his posterity. Ch.—There were, perhaps, some of the descendants of Cham, by his son Chus, intermixed with them; (H.) and hence Aaron reproaches the wife of Moser for being a Chusite. Num. xii. 1. Jethro was a Cinean, descended from the same stock.

VER. 16. Priest. Heb. cohen, (or cen) means also a prince, as the Chal. has it. When put in this manner, with the name of a place, it is generally taken in this sense. But formerly kings were also priests. Jethro served the true God like who came to draw water: and when the troughs were filled, desired to water their father's flocks.

17 And the shepherds came and drove them away: and Moses arose, and defending the maids, watered their sheep.

18 And when they returned to Raguel their father, he said to them: Why are ye come sooner than usual?

19 They answered: A man of Egypt delivered us from the hands of the shepherds: and he drew water also with us, and gave the sheep to drink.

20 But he said: Where is he? why have you let the man go? call him that he may eat bread.

21 And Moses swore that he would dwell with him.^a And he took Sephora his daughter to wife:

22 And she bore him a son, whom he called Gersam, saying: I have been a stranger in a foreign country. And she bore another, whom he called Eliezer, saying: For the God of my father, my helper, hath delivered me out of the hand of Pharaoh.

23 Now after a long time the king of Egypt died: and the children of Israel groaning, cried out because of the works: and their cry went up unto God from the works.

24 And he heard their groaning, and remembered the covenant which he made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

25 And the Lord looked upon the children of Israel, and he knew them.

CHAP. III.

God appeareth to Moses in a bush, and sendeth him to deliver Israel.

NOW^b Moses fed the sheep of Jethro, his father-in-law, the priest of Madian: and he drove the flock to the inner parts of the desert, and came to the mountain of God, Horeb.

2 And the Lord appeared to him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush: and he saw that the bush was on fire, and was not burnt.

3 And Moses said: I will go, and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt.

VER. 21. Swore. Heb. Goel is rendered "was willing."—Sym. has "He conspired Moses," and Theod. "Moses began to dwell." The Sept. neglect the word entirely. "But Moses took up his abode."

VER. 22. Gersam, or Gershom. This name signifies, a stranger there: as Eliezer signifies the help of God. Ch.—And she, &c. is wanting both in Heb. and Chal. but found in the Complut. edit. of the Sept. It occurs (C. xviii. 4.) and we might naturally expect to find it in this place. C.

During which time, he composed the books of Genesis and Job, for the consolation of his countrymen; (M.) though others believe he wrote all the Pentateuch in the desert. It is watered with three fine springs; and the summit is a forest with fruit trees. C.

VER. 2. The Lord appeared. That is, an angel representing God, and speaking in his name. Ch. Act. vii. 30. Gal. iii. 19.—The apparitions of God to the patriarchs are generally understood in this sense. S. Aug. de Trin. 3. 11. W.—Yet many of the fathers suppose, that this angel was no other than the Son of God, the angel of the great council. (Mal. iii. 1.) and S. Aug. (q. 2. in Ex.) does not disapprove of this opinion. C.—Not burnt. Thus the Hebrews were afflicted, but not destroyed. M.—God is styled a consuming fire. Deut. iv. 24. He appeared in fire again. C. xxiv. 17. C.

VER. 5. Shoes. Juvenal, sat. 6, takes notice of this custom. Observant ubi

4 And when the Lord saw that he went forward to see, he called to him out of the midst of the bush, and said: Moses, Moses. And he answered: Here I am.

5 And he said: Come not nigh hither, put off the shoes from thy feet; for the place, whereon thou standest, is holy ground.

6 And he said: "I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Moses hid his face: for he durst not look at God.

7 And the Lord said to him: I have seen the affliction of my people in Egypt, and I have heard their cry because of the rigour of them that are over the works;

8 And knowing their sorrow, I am come down to deliver them out of the hands of the Egyptians, and to bring them out of that land into a good and spacious land, into a land that floweth with milk and honey, to the places of the Chanaanite, and Hethite, and Amorrite, and Pherezite, and Hevite, and Jebusite.

9 For the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: and I have seen their affliction, wherewith they are oppressed by the Egyptians.

10 But come, and I will send thee to Pharaoh, that thou mayst bring forth my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt.

11 And Moses said to God: Who am I that I should go to Pharaoh, and should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?

12 And he said to him: I will be with thee; and this thou shalt have for a sign that I have sent thee: When thou shalt have brought my people out of Egypt, thou shalt offer sacrifice to God upon this mountain.

13 Moses said to God: Lo I shall go to the children of Israel, and say to them: The God of your fathers hath sent me to you. If they shall say to me: What is his name? What shall I say to them?

14 God said to Moses: I AM WHO AM. He said: Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel: He who is, hath sent me to you.

vesta nullo pede sabbata reges. D.—The Ethiopian Christians and the Turks never enter their churches or mosques, without putting off their shoes. The priests did the like when they entered the temple of Jerusalem, and God ordered them moreover to wash their feet and hands. Ex. xxx. 19. C.—We observe the same ceremony, out of respect for Jesus Christ, when we go to kiss the cross. Pythagoras said, "Offer sacrifice and adoration barefoot." Jamblie. 24. On such occasions, we ought to have our hearts disengaged from the world. H. See Lev. ii. 25.

VER. 6. Hid, out of respect, and perhaps fearing lest he should die. Gen. xvi. 13. C.—God takes the title of these three patriarchs, because he had promised Chanaan to each of them, and because they were eminent for virtue. God is repeated thrice, to insinuate the mystery of the blessed Trinity, and to shew that the Lord watches over each individual, as if that one alone existed. M.

VER. 8. Spacious, compared with that of Gessen. Chanaan was not above 210 miles long, and 70 broad. Brocard. S. Jerom does not allow so much. Heautaus says the Jews had three million acres of excellent land.—Milk and honey are still very plentiful in Palestine, (C.) though the country has lost much of its ancient beauty and luxuriance, for want of cultivation. The Sam. and Sept. number the Gergesites among the rest of the Chanaanites.

VER. 12. A sign. Moses had modestly represented his own inability to perform so great a work, and such God generally selects. He encourages him therefore with a sign; to the splendour of which he was then a witness; and with another, which should appear in future, to convince him and all the world, that the undertaking was from God, when they should see him offering sacrifice in that place, out of the reach of Pharaoh. C. xxiv. 3. Thus a future event is assigned to Achaz and Ezechias, as a sign of something that was to happen first. Is. vii. 4 K. xix. 29. Perhaps the sign here appointed is the presence of God enabling Moses to work miracles. M.

VER. 13. His name. Many of them had embraced idolatry, and had forgotten God. Moses very properly begs to have his extraordinary mission sanctioned by miracles, without which he might well have been rejected, as heretics are. H.

VER. 14. I am who am. That is, I am being itself, eternal, self-existent, independent, infinite; without beginning, end or change; and the source of all other beings. Ch.—Heb. agrees with the Vulg. though it seems to read aeje, "I shall 15 And God said again to Moses: Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel: The Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob hath sent me to you; this is my name for ever, and this is my memorial unto all generations.

16 Go and gather together the ancients of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: The Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared to me, saying: Visiting I have visited you; and I have seen all that hath befallen you in Egypt.

17 And I have said the word to bring you forth out of the affliction of Egypt, into the land of the Chanaanite, and Hethite, and Amorrhite, and Pherezite, and Hevite, and Jebusite, to a land that floweth with milk and honey.

18 And they shall hear thy voice; and thou shalt go in, thou and the ancients of Israel, to the king of Egypt, and thou shalt say to him: The Lord God of the Hebrews hath called us; we will go three days' journey into the wilderness, to sacrifice unto the Lord our God.

19 But I know that the king of Egypt will not let you go, but by a mighty hand.

20 For I will stretch forth my hand, and will strike Egypt with all my wonders which I will do in the midst of them: after these he will let you go.

21 And I will give favour to this people, in the sight of the Egyptians: * and when you go forth, you shall not depart empty:

22 But every woman shall ask of her neighbour, and of her that is in her house, vessels of silver and of gold, and raiment: and you shall put them on your sons and daughters, and shall spoil Egypt.

CHAP. IV.

Cels. vi. C.—All other beings are just nothing, compared with God. He alone is self-existent and infinitely perfect. W.

VER. 15. Memorial. By this title he is still known among Christians. M. Mitherto God had generally been called Elohim. But now he assumes the incommunicable name (T.) consisting of four vowels, Jod, He, Vau, He, Jehovah, the essence, or QDN, a word which the Greek Scriptures leave undeclined, to denote the unchangeable nature of the Deity. The word has been pronounced Jehovah by the moderns, and by the ancients Jevo, Jao, Jave, &c. H.

VER. 16. Ancients. Perhaps there might be 72 magistrates already among the Hebrews, as there were afterwards in the desert (Grotius); or more probably they were only the chiefs of families, and leading men among their brethren, though without any public authority derived from the king of Egypt.—Visiting. So Joseph had foretold, Gen. i. 23. God examines before he punishes, Gen. xviii. 21. C.

VER. 18. Called. Sam. and Sept. "hath been invoked upon us." Heb. "hath occurred or appeared to us." II.—Journey, to Sinai, which was about this distance, to go straight. But the Israelites spent 48 days in arriving at it by a circuitous road. C.—In Heb. they ask, "Let us go, we beseech thee." They do not tell a lie, but withhold the truth. M.

VER. 22. Shall spoil, &c. That is, you shall strip, and take away the goods of the Egyptians. This was not authorizing theft or injustice: but was a just disposal made by him, who is the great Lord and master of all things; in order to pay the children of Israel some part of what was due to them from the Egyptians for their labours. Ch.—Wisdom (x. 17.) rendered to the just the wages of their labours: and (v. 19.) the just took the spoils of the wicked, in a just war. It is an ancient tradition of the Jews, that the Egyptians appealed to Alexander the Great for the recovery of these spoils; but when the Jews demanded their wages, they were willing to desist from their claims. Selden, de Ture vii. 8. Tert. c. Marcion ii. 20. C.—God had a mind to punish the extravagance of the Egyptians, while he enabled his people to appear with suitable presents before him.

2 Then he said to him: What is that thou holdest in thy hand? He answered: A rod.

3 And the Lord said: Cast it down upon the ground. He cast it down, and it was turned into a serpent, so that Moses fled from it.

4 And the Lord said: Put out thy hand, and take it by the tail. He put forth his hand, and took hold of it, and it was turned into a rod.

5 That they may believe, saith he, that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared to thee.

6 And the Lord said again: Put thy hand into thy bosom. And when he had put it into his bosom, he brought it forth leprous as snow.

7 And he said: Put back thy hand into thy bosom. He put it back, and brought it out again, and it was like the other flesh.

8 If they will not believe thee, saith he, nor hear the voice of the former sign, they will believe the word of the latter sign.

9 But if they will not even believe these two signs, nor hear thy voice: take of the river water, and pour it out upon the dry land, and whatsoever thou drawest out of the river, shall be turned into blood.

10 Moses said: I beseech thee, Lord, I am not eloquent from yesterday and the day before; and since thou hast spoken to thy servant, I have more impediment and slowness of tongue.

11 The Lord said to him: Who made man's mouth? or who made the dumb and the deaf, the seeing and the blind? did not I?

12 Go therefore, ^band I will be in thy mouth; and I will teach thee what thou shalt speak.

13 But he said: I beseech thee, Lord, send whom thou wilt send.

14 The Lord being angry at Moses, said: Aaron the Levite is thy brother, I know that he is eloquent:

CHAP. IV. VER. 1. They, &c. Many of the common people, not of the ancients. C. iii. 18. M.—He knew that all ought to bring credentials from God, when they come in his name to institute a new order of things. This Moses, Jesus Christ, and the apostles did. Nothing less than a miracle can suffice to guard against impostors, who will never be able to stand this test throughout, in such a manner, but that God will evidently confound their delusive signs, if they should even attempt to work miracles. H.—Believe the works. S. Jo. x. 15. Mar. xvi. W.

VER. 4. A rod. This alluded to the three states in which the Hebrews had lived in Egypt. 1. As holding the sceptre; 2. as persecuted in a crafty and cruel manner; and 3. as liberated by Moses. M.—The dragon was so terrible as to make even Moses flee. Philo.

VER. 7. Again. When Moses first appeared in defence of his brethren, Pharaoh afflicted them more grievously; but at last he was forced to let them go. M.

VER. 9. Blood. This third sign had the same tendency as the former. It shewed the cruel persecution inflicted upon the Hebrews, particularly in drowning their male infants; a cruelty which God would shortly revenge, by turning the waters of Egypt into blood, and by slaying the first-born and the army of the Egyptians. T.

VER. 10. Of tongue, being impressed with awe, at the divine presence. He feared, therefore, that he should not be able to deliver himself intelligibly at the court of Pharaoh, and might rather excite the disgust of that haughty tyrant. H.—He had been 40 years absent in the land of Midian, and might have forgotten both the Egyptian and Hebrew languages in some degree; in which sense slowness or heaviness of tongue is taken, (Ezek. iii. 5.) to express an unknown language. C.—God was thus pleased to shew, that all the glory arising from this enterprise belonged to himself; and he thus also gave occasion to Moses to humble himself, while he wrought miracles. M.

VER. 13. Send. Many of the fathers think Moses here prays for the coming of the Messiah, who was to be the deliverer of his people; (S. Justin, &c.) or he begs at least that one more proper than himself may be selected; in which some discover marks of pusillanimity, others of great and laudable modesty; so that the anger of God here only means an earnest expression of his will, that Moses should make no farther demur. Lyran supposes that Aaron was the person pointed at by Moses; and God grants his request. C.

behold he cometh forth to meet thee, and seeing thee, shall be glad at heart.

15 Speak to him, and put my words in his mouth: and I will be in thy mouth, and in his mouth, and will shew you what you must do.

16 He shall speak in thy stead to the people, and shall be thy mouth: but thou shalt be to him in those things that pertain to God.

17 And take this rod in thy hand, wherewith thou shalt do the signs.

18 Moses went his way, and returned to Jethro his father-in-law, and said to him; I will go and return to my brethren into Egypt, that I may see if they be yet alive. And Jethro said to him: Go in peace.

19 And the Lord said to Moses, in Madian: Go, and return into Egypt; for they are all dead that sought thy life.

20 Moses therefore took his wife, and his sons, and set them upon an ass; and returned into Egypt, carrying the rod of God in his hand.

21 And the Lord said to him as he was returning into Egypt: See that thou do all the wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thy hand: I shall harden his heart, and he will not let the people go.

22 And thou shalt say to him: Thus saith the Lord: Israel is my son, my first-born.

23 I have said to thee: Let my son go, that he may serve me, and thou wouldst not let him go: behold I will kill thy son, thy first-born.

24 And when he was in his journey, in the inn, the Lord met him, and would have killed him.

25 Immediately Sephora took a very sharp stone, and circumcised the foreskin of her son, and touched his feet, and said: A bloody spouse art thou to me.

26 And he let him go after she had said: A bloody spouse art thou to me, because of the circumcision.

27 And the Lord said to Aaron: Go into the desert to meet Moses. And he went forth to meet him in the mountain of God, and kissed him.

Ch.—Both his children were born about this time. But Eliezer, the younger, had not been circumcised; and therefore remained under the power of the destroying angel. Orig. c. Cels. v. Others think the angel was going to kill Moses. C.

28 And Moses told Aaron all the words of the Lord, by which he had sent him, and the signs that he had commanded.

29 And they came together, and they assembled all the ancients of the children of Israel.

30 And Aaron spoke all the words which the Lord had said to Moses: and he wrought the signs before the people.

31 And the people believed. And they heard that the Lord had visited the children of Israel, and that he had looked upon their affliction: and falling down they adored.

CHAP. V.

Pharao refuseth to let the people go. They are more oppressed.

AFTER these things, Moses and Aaron went in, and said to Pharaoh: Thus saith the Lord God of Israel: Let my people go, that they may sacrifice to me in the desert.

2 But he answered: Who is the Lord, that I should hear his voice, and let Israel go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go.

3 And they said: The God of the Hebrews hath called us, to go three days' journey into the wilderness, and to sacrifice to the Lord our God; lest a pestilence or the sword fall upon us.

4 The king of Egypt said to them: Why do you Moses and Aaron draw off the people from their works? Get you gone to your burdens.

5 And Pharaoh said: The people of the land are numerous; you see that the multitude is increased; how much more if you give them rest from their works?

6 Therefore he commanded the same day the overseers of the works, and the task-masters of the people, saying:

7 You shall give straw no more to the people to make brick, as before; but let them go and gather straw.

8 And you shall lay upon them the task of bricks, which they did before; neither shall you diminish any thing thereof, for they are idle, and therefore they cry, saying: Let us go and sacrifice to our God.

T.—Sponse. I have redeemed thee from destruction, by shedding the blood of my son; therefore, I will deem this a ratification of our marriage. Never forget our union, which costs me so much, and which has placed you in such imminent danger. The Hebrew mothers style their newly circumcised infants bloody spouses, in imitation of Sephora, who on this occasion perhaps addresses the words to Eliezer. The Sept. read, "Sephora . . . fell at his feet, and said, the blood of my son's circumcision has ceased to flow," &c. which is not very easy to understand.

12 And the people was scattered through all the land of Egypt to gather straw.

13 And the overseers of the works pressed them, saying: Fulfil your work every day, as before ye were wont to do, when straw was given you.

14 And they that were over the works of the children of Israel, were scourged by Pharaoh's task-masters, saying: Why have you not made up the task of bricks, both yesterday and to-day, as before?

15 And the officers of the children of Israel came, and cried out to Pharaoh, saying: Why dealest thou so with thy servants?

16 Straw is not given us, and bricks are required of us as before; behold we, thy servants, are beaten with whips, and thy people is unjustly dealt withal.

17 And he said: You are idle, and therefore you say: Let us go and sacrifice to the Lord.

18 Go therefore and work: straw shall not be given you, and you shall deliver the accustomed number of bricks.

19 And the officers of the children of Israel saw that they were in evil case, because it was said to them: There shall not a whit be diminished of the bricks for every day.

20 And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood over-against them as they came out from Pharaoh:

21 And they said to them: The Lord see and judge, because you have made our savour to stink before Pharaoh and his servants, and you have given him a sword, to kill us.

22 And Moses returned to the Lord, and said: Lord, why hast thou afflicted this people? wherefore hast thou sent me?

23 For since the time that I went in to Pharaoh to speak in thy name, he hath afflicted thy people: and thou hast not delivered them.

God reneweth his promise. The genealogies of Ruben, Simeon and Levi, down to Moses and Aaron

AND the Lord said to Moses: "Now thou shalt see what I will do to Pharaoh: for by a mighty hand shall he let them go, and with a strong hand shall he cast them out of his land.

2 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying: I am the Lord

3 That appeared to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, by the name of God Almighty: and my name ADONAI I did not shew them.

4 And I made a covenant with them, to give them the land of Chanaan, the land of their pilgrimage wherein they were strangers.

5 I have heard the groaning of the children of Israel, wherewith the Egyptians have oppressed them; and I have remembered my covenant.

6 Therefore say to the children of Israel: I am the Lord who will bring you out from the work-prison of the Egyptians, and will deliver you from bondage: and redeem you with a high arm, and great judgments.

7 And I will take you to myself for my people, I will be your God: and you shall know that I am the Lord your God, who brought you out from the work-prison of the Egyptians:

8 And brought you into the land, concerning which I lifted up my hand to give it to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: and I will give it you to possess: I am the Lord.

9 And Moses told all this to the children of Israel: but they did not hearken to him, for anguish of spirit, and most painful work.

10 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

11 Go in, and speak to Pharaoh king of Egypt, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land.

VER. 3. My name Adonai. The name which is in the Hebrew text, is that most proper name of God, which signifieth his eternal self-existing being, (Exod. iii. 14,) which the Jews, out of reverence, never pronounce; but instead of it, whenever it occurs in the Bible, they read Adonai, which signifies the Lord. and therefore they put the points or vowels, which belong to the name Adonai, to the four letters of that other ineffable name Jod, He, Vau, He. Hence some moderns have framed the name Jehovah: unknown to all the ancients, whether Jews or Christians: for the true pronunciation of the name, which is in the Hebrew text, by long disuse, is now quite lost. Ch.—This name was first clearly revealed to Moses, that he might have confidence in his special protection and love. M.—To know one by his name, is to treat him with familiarity and distinction. Ex. xxxiii. 17. The pronunciation of the name of God might be known to Abraham, &c. but it was not so fully explained, nor the power and excellence of it declared in such a stupendous manner, as it was to Moses. D.—Or perhaps Moses made use of this name in the history of the patriarchs, because he wrote his account of them after this revelation. C.—The Sept. always put Kurios, "the Lord," instead of the ineffable name; and our Saviour and his apostles, citing texts where it occurs, follow their example. Mat. iv. 7. 10. Rom. xv. 11. W.—Philo informs us, that it was death to pronounce it out of the temple; and since that was destroyed, it has never been heard. C.—Galatinus, who wrote in 1518, is supposed to have invented the word Jehovah, (see Amama Antih p. 319,) the year after the pretended reformation began. H.—S. 25 And seven days were fully ended, after that the Lord struck the river.

CHAP. VIII.

The second plague is of frogs. Pharaoh promiseth to let the Israelites go, but breaks his promise. The third plague is of scorpions. The fourth is of flies. Pharaoh again promiseth to dismiss the people, but doth it not.

AND the Lord said to Moses: Go in to Pharaoh, and thou shalt say to him: Thus saith the Lord: Let my people go to sacrifice to me.

* Infra xvii. 5. Ps. lxxvii. 41.

VER. 12. Devoured. Thus the superiority remained with Aaron. The rod was then restored to its pristine form, v. 15. H.

VER. 17. My hand. The rod was in the hand of Moses, but he was God's agent. M.

VER. 18. River. The Samaritan copy repeats here the very words of God to Pharaoh, as the other speeches are also twice put at length. "Moses and Aaron went to meet Pharaoh, and said to him, The Lord," &c. as v. 16. 18. See C. xi. 7. C.—This is very agreeable to the style of Homer; and Kennicott believes that the repetitions have been omitted in the Heb. for brevity's sake, (Dis. 1 Chron. p. 382,) and that before the Greek version had been made. H.

VER. 21. All the land, even in that of Gessen, which belonged to the Egyptians; while the Hebrews had good water. M.

VER. 22. Like. They got a small quantity of water, either from the sea, from Gessen, (Wis. xi. 5,) or by digging wells, v. 24. C.—This plague lasted a full week, v. 25. The water which they found in the mean time in the wells, was mixed with blood, Philo. S. Aug. in Ps. lxxvii. Wisd. xi. 7, thou gavest human blood to the unjust.

CHAP. VIII. VER. 3. Frogs, not by a new creation; but the spawn was miraculously brought to maturity. C.—Angels, or a divine instinct, brought them to infest all places; and thus they became a more grievous plague than that of blood. M.

2 But if thou wilt not let them go, behold I will strike all thy coasts with frogs.

3 And the river shall bring forth an abundance of frogs; which shall come up and enter into thy house, and thy bed-chamber, and upon thy bed, and into the houses of thy servants, and to thy people, and into thy ovens, and into the remains of thy meats:

4 And the frogs shall come in to thee, and to thy people, and to all thy servants.

5 And the Lord said to Moses: Say to Aaron: Stretch forth thy hand upon the streams, and upon the rivers and the pools, and bring forth frogs upon the land of Egypt.

6 And Aaron stretched forth his hand upon the waters of Egypt, and the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt.

7 And the magicians also, by their enchantments, did in like manner, and they brought forth frogs upon the land of Egypt.

8 But Pharaoh called Moses and Aaron, and said to them: Pray ye to the Lord to take away the frogs from me and from my people; and I will let the people go to sacrifice to the Lord.

9 And Moses said to Pharaoh: Set me a time when I shall pray for thee, and for thy servants, and for thy people, that the frogs may be driven away from thee and from thy house, and from thy servants, and from thy people; and may remain only in the river.

10 And he answered: To-morrow. But he said: I will do according to thy word; that thou mayest know that there is none like to the Lord our God.

11 And the frogs shall depart from thee, and from thy house, and from thy servants, and from thy people; and shall remain only in the river.

12 And Moses and Aaron went forth from Pharaoh: and Moses cried to the Lord for the promise, which he had made to Pharaoh concerning the frogs.

13 And the Lord did according to the word of Moses: and the frogs died out of the houses, and out of the villages, and out of the fields:

14 And they gathered them together into immense heaps, and the land was corrupted.

15 And Pharaoh seeing that rest was given, hardened his own heart, and did not hear them, as the Lord had commanded.

16 And the Lord said to Moses: Say to Aaron: Stretch

VER. 4. Servants. The Abderites and Dardanians were formerly obliged to abandon their country by such a plague. Orosius iii. 23. Plin. viii. 29. C.—Here the Samaritan copy adds, that Moses delivered this message to Pharaoh. H.

VER. 7. Frogs, few in number, and brought by the ministry of devils. M.

VER. 8. Pray ye to the Lord, &c. By this it appears, that though the magicians, by the help of the devil, could bring frogs, yet they could not take them away: God being pleased to abridge in this the power of Satan. So we see they could not afterwards produce the lesser insects; and in this restraint of the power of the devil, were forced to acknowledge the finger of God.

VER. 9. A time. Moses thus prevents the king from attributing their departure to natural causes. Pharaoh was perhaps inclined to suspect this would be the case, and therefore had a mind to wait till the morrow. M.

VER. 14. Corrupted. This helped to produce the ensuing plague of flies, &c. C.—The Egyptians might then recollect the putrid carcasses of the children, whom they had drowned. H.

VER. 15. Pharaoh hardened his own heart. By this we see that Pharaoh was himself the efficient cause of his heart being hardened, and not God. See the same repeated in ver. 32. Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time also; likewise chap. ix. 7. 35, and chap. xiii. 15. Ch.—This is the constant doctrine of the holy fathers. S. forth thy rod, and strike the dust of the earth; and may there be sciniphs in all the land of Egypt.

17 And they did so. And Aaron stretched forth his hand, holding the rod; and he struck the dust of the earth, and there came sciniphs on men and on beasts: all the dust of the earth was turned into sciniphs through all the land of Egypt.

18 And the magicians with their enchantments practised in like manner, to bring forth sciniphs, and they could not: and there were sciniphs as well on men as on beasts.

19 And the magicians said to Pharaο: This is the finger of God. And Pharaο's heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them, as the Lord had commanded.

20 The Lord also said to Moses: Arise early, and stand before Pharaο; for he will go forth to the waters: and thou shalt say to him: Thus saith the Lord: Let my people go to sacrifice to me.

21 But if thou wilt not let them go, behold I will send in upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy houses, all kind of flies: and the houses of the Egyptians shall be filled with flies of divers kinds, and the whole land wherein they shall be.

22 And I will make the land of Gessen wonderful in that day, so that flies shall not be there: and thou shalt know that I am the Lord in the midst of the earth.

23 And I will put a division between my people and thy people: to-morrow shall this sign be.

24 And the Lord did so.* And there came a very grievous swarm of flies into the houses of Pharaο and of his servants, and into all the land of Egypt: and the land was corrupted by this kind of flies.

25 And Pharaο called Moses and Aaron, and said to them: Go and sacrifice to your God in this land.

26 And Moses said: It cannot be so: for we shall sacrifice the abominations of the Egyptians to the Lord our God: now if we kill those things which the Egyptians worship, in their presence, they will stone us.

* Wisd. xvi. 9.

periar. 3. says, "The Scripture sheweth manifestly that Pharaο was hardened by his own will; for God said to him, thou wouldst not: if thou wilt not dismiss Israel. Even the priests of the Philistines were so well convinced of this, that they said, (1 K. vi. 6.) Why do you harden your hearts, as Egypt and Pharaο hardened their hearts? God therefore hardened them only by not absolutely hindering their wickedness, and by punishing them with less severity, as they did not deserve to be corrected like dear children, Heb. xii.—Perdition is from thyself. Ose. xiii. 9. As cold naturally congeals water, so we of ourselves run to evil. Thus God cast Pharaο into the sea, by permitting, not by forcing, him to enter. Ex. xv. 4. How shocking must then the blasphemous doctrine of Zuinglius, (ser. de provid. 5.) Calvin, (Instit. 3. 17.) &c. appear who attribute every wicked deed to God, though they pretend at the same time that he is not unjust, even when he commands and impels a man to commit murder or adultery. Idem facinus puta adulterium, quantum Dei est auctoris, motoris, impulsoris opus est, crimen non est; quantum hominis est, crimen ac scelus est. Zuing. sup. The light of reason may suffice to confute such absurdity. W.

VER. 16. Sciniphs, or Cinifs, Hebrew Cinnim, small flying insects, very troublesome both to men and beasts. Ch.—Like midges. Origin, hum. 4. Others think they were lice. Bochart. Pharaο is not forewarned of this plague.

VER. 18. Practised, fecerunt; the same expression as v. 7: whence some argue, that the former were delusions, not real changes. H.—God was pleased to shew here the vanity of their attempts, and the imbecility of the devil, who could not even bring a single animalcule or insect, though he had before appeared to work great wonders. T.

VER. 19. Finger, the spirit, (Lu. xi. 20. comp. Matt. xii. 28,) or power of God. Is. xl. 12. The magicians here confess, that Moses is something more than themselves. C.—Thus God interferes, whenever a contest of miracles, real or apparent, might lead any sincere seeker astray. He caused the priests of Baal to be confounded; (3 K. xix.) and Simon Magus flying in the air, was hurled down at the prayer of S. Peter. Hegeſip. Cyrola, the Arian patriarch, attempting to deceive the people, by giving sight to a man whom he bribed to feign himself blind; and Calvin, who wished to have the honour of raising a man to life, at Geneva, by the like imposition, were both deservedly covered with confusion;

27 We will go three days' journey into the wilder ness; and we will sacrifice to the Lord our God,^b as he hath commanded us.

28 And Pharaο said: I will let you go to sacrifice to the Lord your God in the wilderness but go no farther: pray for me.

29 And Moses said: I will go out from thee, and will pray to the Lord: and the flies shall depart from Pharaο, and from his servants, and from his people to-morrow: but do not deceive any more, in not letting the people go to sacrifice to the Lord.

30 So Moses went out from Pharaο, and prayed to the Lord.

31 And he did according to his word: and he took away the flies from Pharaο, and from his servants, and from his people: there was not left so much as one.

32 And Pharaο's heart was hardened, so that neither this time would he let the people go.

CHAP. IX.

The fifth plague is a murrain among the cattle. The sixth, of boils in men and beasts. The seventh, of hail. Pharaο promiseth again to let the people go, and breaketh his word.

AND the Lord said to Moses: Go in to Pharaο, and speak to him: Thus saith the Lord God of the Hebrews: Let my people go to sacrifice to me.

2 But if thou refuse, and withhold them still:

3 Behold my hand shall be upon thy fields; and a very grievous murrain upon thy horses, and asses, and camels, and oxen, and sheep.

4 And the Lord will make a wonderful difference between the possessions of Israel and the possessions of the Egyptians, that nothing at all shall die of those things that belong to the children of Israel.

5 And the Lord appointed a time, saying: To-morrow will the Lord do this thing in the land.

6 The Lord therefore did this thing the next day: and all the beasts of the Egyptians died, but of the beasts of the children of Israel there died not one.

VER. 26. The abominations, &c. That is, the things they worship for gods: oxen, rams, &c. It is the usual style of the Scriptures to call all idols and false gods, abominations; to signify how much the people of God ought to detest and abhor them. 7 And Pharaoh sent to see; and there was not any thing dead of that which Israel possessed. And Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

8 And the Lord said to Moses and Aaron: Take to you handfuls of ashes out of the chimney, and let Moses sprinkle it in the air in the presence of Pharaoh.

9 And be there dust upon all the land of Egypt: for there shall be boils and swelling blains both in men and beasts, in the whole land of Egypt.

10 And they took ashes out of the chimney, and stood before Pharaoh, and Moses sprinkled it in the air; and there came boils with swelling blains in men and beasts.

11 Neither could the magicians stand before Moses, for the boils that were upon them, and in all the land of Egypt.

12 And the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he hearkened not unto them, as the Lord had spoken to Moses.

13 And the Lord said to Moses: Arise in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh, and thou shalt say to him: Thus saith the Lord, the God of the Hebrews: Let my people go to sacrifice to me.

14 For I will at this time send all my plagues upon thy heart, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people; that thou mayst know that there is none like me in all the earth.

15 For now I will stretch out my hand to strike thee, and thy people, with pestilence, and thou shalt perish from the earth.

16 *And therefore have I raised thee, that I may shew my power in thee, and my name may be spoken of throughout all the earth.

17 Dost thou yet hold back my people; and wilt thou not let them go?

18 Behold I will cause it to rain to-morrow at this same hour, an exceeding great hail; such as hath not been in Egypt from the day that it was founded, until this present time.

19 Send therefore now presently, and gather together thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field; for men and beasts, and all things that shall be found abroad, and not gathered together out of the fields which the hail shall fall upon, shall die.

20 He that feared the word of the Lord among Pharaoh's servants, made his servants and his cattle flee into houses:

21 But he that regarded not the word of the Lord, left his servants, and his cattle in the fields.

22 And the Lord said to Moses: Stretch forth thy hand towards heaven, that there may be hail in the whole land of Egypt upon men, and upon beasts, and upon every herb of the field in the land of Egypt.

23 ^bAnd Moses stretched forth his rod towards heaven, and the Lord sent thunder and hail, and lightnings running along the ground: and the Lord rained hail upon the land of Egypt.

24 And the hail and fire mixt with it drove on together: and it was of so great bigness, as never before was seen in the whole land of Egypt since that nation was founded.

25 And the hail destroyed through all the land of Egypt all things that were in the fields, both man and beast: and the hail smote every herb of the field, and it broke every tree of the country.

26 Only in the land of Gessen, where the children of Israel were, the hail fell not.

27 And Pharaoh sent and called Moses and Aaron, saying to them: I have sinned this time also, the Lord is just: I and my people, are wicked.

28 Pray ye to the Lord that the thunderings of God and the hail may cease: that I may let you go, and that ye may stay here no longer.

29 Moses said: As soon as I am gone out of the city, I will stretch forth my hands to the Lord, and the thunders shall cease, and the hail shall be no more: that thou mayst know that the earth is the Lord's:

30 But I know that neither thou, nor thy servants do yet fear the Lord God.

31 The flax therefore, and the barley were hurt, because the barley was green, and the flax was now balled:

32 But the wheat, and other winter corn were not hurt, because they were lateward.

33 And when Moses was gone from Pharaoh out of the city, he stretched forth his hands to the Lord: and the thunders and the hail ceased, neither did there drop any more rain upon the earth.

34 And Pharaoh seeing that the rain, and the hail, and the thunders were ceased, increased his sin:

35 And his heart was hardened, and the heart of his servants, and it was made exceeding hard: neither did he let the children of Israel go, as the Lord had commanded by the hand of Moses.

2 And thou mayst tell in the ears of thy sons, and of thy grandsons, how often I have plagued the Egyptians, and wrought my signs amongst them: and you may know that I am the Lord.

3 Therefore Moses and Aaron went in to Pharaoh, and said to him: Thus saith the Lord God of the Hebrews: How long refusest thou to submit to me? let my people go, to sacrifice to me.

4 *But if thou resist, and wilt not let them go, behold I will bring in to-morrow the locusts into thy coasts;

5 To cover the face of the earth, that nothing thereof may appear, but that which the hail hath left may be eaten: for they shall feed upon all the trees that spring in the fields.

6 And they shall fill thy houses, and the houses of thy servants, and of all the Egyptians: such a number as thy fathers have not seen, nor thy grandfathers, from the time they were first upon the earth, until this present day. And he turned himself away, and went forth from Pharaoh.

7 And Pharaoh's servants said to him: How long shall we endure this scandal? let the men go to sacrifice to the Lord their God. Dost thou not see that Egypt is undone?

8 And they called back Moses, and Aaron, to Pharaoh; and he said to them: Go, sacrifice to the Lord your God: who are they that shall go?

9 Moses said: We will go with our young and old, with our sons and daughters, with our sheep and herds: for it is the solemnity of the Lord our God.

10 And Pharaoh answered: So be the Lord with you, as I shall let you and your children go: who can doubt but that you intend some great evil?

11 It shall not be so: but go ye men only, and sacrifice to the Lord: for this yourselves also desired. And immediately they were cast out from Pharaoh's presence.

12 And the Lord said to Moses: Stretch forth thy hand upon the land of Egypt unto the locust, that it come upon it, and devour every herb that is left after the hail.

13 And Moses stretched forth his rod upon the land of Egypt: and the Lord brought a burning wind all that day, and night; and when it was morning, the burning wind raised the locusts.

14 And they came up over the whole land of Egypt; and rested in all the coasts of the Egyptians, innumerable, the like as had not been before that time, nor shall be hereafter.

15 And they covered the whole face of the earth, wasting all things. And the grass of the earth was devoured, and what fruits soever were on the trees, which the hail had left; and there remained not any thing that was green on the trees, or in the herbs of the earth, in all Egypt.

16 Wherefore Pharaoh in haste called Moses and Aaron, and said to them: I have sinned against the Lord your God, and against you.

17 But now forgive me my sin this time also, and pray to the Lord your God, that he take away from me this death.

18 And Moses going forth from the presence of Pharaoh, prayed to the Lord:

19 And he made a very strong wind to blow from the west, and it took the locusts and cast them into the Red Sea: there remained not so much as one in all the coasts of Egypt.

20 And the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, neither did he let the children of Israel go.

21 And the Lord said to Moses: Stretch out thy hand towards heaven: and may there be darkness upon the land of Egypt so thick that it may be felt.

22 And Moses stretched forth his hand towards heaven: and there came horrible darkness in all the land of Egypt for three days.

23 *No man saw his brother, nor moved himself out of the place where he was: *but wheresoever the children of Israel dwelt, there was light.

24 And Pharaoh called Moses and Aaron, and said to them: Go, sacrifice to the Lord: let your sheep only, and herds remain, let your children go with you.

25 Moses said: Thou shalt give us also sacrifices and burnt-offerings, to the Lord our God.

26 All the flocks shall go with us; there shall not a hoof remain of them: for they are necessary for the service of the Lord our God: especially as we know not what must be offered, till we come to the very place.

27 And the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let them go.

28 And Pharaoh said to Moses: Get thee from me, and beware thou see not my face any more: in what day soever thou shalt come in my sight, thou shalt die.

29 Moses answered: So shall it be as thou hast spoken, I will not see thy face any more.

Pharao and his people are threatened with the death of their first-born.

AND the Lord said to Moses: Yet one plague more will I bring upon Pharao and Egypt, and after that he shall let you go, and thrust you out.

2 *Therefore thou shalt tell all the people, that every man ask of his friend, and every woman of her neighbour, vessels of silver, and of gold.

3 And the Lord will give favour to his people in the sight of the Egyptians. ^bAnd Moses was a very great man in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharao's servants, and of all the people.

6 And there shall be a great cry in all the land of Egypt, such as neither hath been before, nor shall be hereafter.

The Sam. and Sept. add "and raiment," which they also asked for, (C. xii. 35.) according to God's command. C. iii. 22. Kenn. 1. Dis. p. 391.

VER. 3. The Lord. The Sam. makes this a continuation of God's speech, "and I will give this people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they shall give them what they ask.—4. For, about midnight, I will go forth into the midst of the land of Egypt.—5. And every first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, &c. (as in our fifth verse).—6. And there, &c.—7. But against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue against man, nor even against beast, that thou mayest know that Jehovah doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel.—8. And thou also shalt be greatly honoured in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharao's servants, and in the sight of the people.—9. Then said Moses unto Pharao, Thus saith Jehovah: Israel is my son, my first-born; and I said unto thee, let my son go, that he may serve me.—10. But thou hast refused to let him go; behold! therefore Jehovah slayeth thy son, thy first-born."—11. And Moses said, (as above, v. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10.) The Jews have retained the parts of the 3d and 8th verses, which were honourable to their nation, but they have given them as an historical narration. The 9th and 10th verses in the Sam. copy, record what God had before commanded Moses to declare. C. iv. 22. 33. As, therefore, all had been once written in the Heb. text, the transcribers might probably think themselves dispensed from repeating the same things; and thus they might change some passages, and still repel the accusation of any wilful corruption, which seems to be the meaning of Ben Chaim's preface to Bomberg's Heb. Bible; where he acknowledges 13 such alterations made in the copies which were presented to King Ptolemy, and translated by the Sept. Ken. Dis. 2. p. 310.—Moses. This exaltation of Moses and the people, took place only after the slaughter of the first-born. C. xii. 36. Hence the Sept. observes here, the Egyptians gave or lent them (echresan) all. H.—The greatness and dignity of Moses, impressed the king with awe, and made the people more willing to assist the Hebrews. M.

VER. 4. I will enter, by means of a good angel, (Wisd. xviii. 14. S. Chrys.) or by evil angels. Ps. lxxvii. 49. S. Aug. ibid. C.—Moses spoke this on the morning of the 14th Nisan; and that same night, after the paschal lamb had been eaten, the dreadful carnage commenced. M.

VER. 5. Mill. The vilest slaves were thus employed in a sort of prison. C. xii. 21. God makes no distinction between the king and the beggar. Death levels all.

VER. 7. Dog. They shall enjoy a profound peace, (Judith xi. 5.) while Egypt is in tears. Calmet here inserts the speech from the Samaritan copy, "And the man Moses;" &c. (v. 3. and seq.) deeming it essential to the context, and very agreeable to the spirit of Moses, who has many repetitions. H. all the people that is under thee: after that we will go out.

9 And he went out from Pharao exceeding angry. But the Lord said to Moses: Pharao will not hear you, that many signs may be done in the land of Egypt.

10 And Moses and Aaron did all the wonders that are written, before Pharao. And the Lord hardened Pharao's heart, neither did he let the children of Israel go out of his land.

CHAP. XII.

The manner of preparing and eating the paschal lamb: the first-born of Egypt are all slain: the Israelites depart.

AND the Lord said to Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt:

2 This month shall be to you the beginning of months; it shall be the first in the months of the year.

3 Speak ye to the whole assembly of the children of Israel, and say to them: On the tenth day of this month let every man take a lamb by their families and houses.

4 But if the number be less than may suffice to eat the lamb, he shall take unto him his neighbour that joineth to his house, according to the number of souls which may be enough to eat the lamb.

5 And it shall be a lamb without blemish, a male, of one year; according to which rite also you shall take a kid.

6 And you shall keep it until the fourteenth day of VER. 9. Angry, at such obstinacy. M.

VER. 10. The Lord hardened, &c. See the annotations above, chap. iv. 21 and chap. vii. 3.

CHAP. XII. VER. 1. Said, some time before. Moses mentions all the plagues together. M.

VER. 2. Year, sacred or ecclesiastical, which is most commonly used in Scripture. The civil year commenced with Tisri, in September, and regulated the jubilee, contracts, &c. Lapid.—January was the first month to determine the age of trees, and August to decide when cattle became liable to be tithed. C. xxii. 29. Levit. xix. 23. C.—Before the captivity, the months were not styled Nisan, &c. but abib, (C. xiii. 4.) the first. . . But the 11th, (1 K. vi.) &c. Sa.

VER. 3. Children; a word which has been dropped in the printed Heb. and in the Chaldee, which has been assimilated to it, though found still in some MSS. and in the Sam. Sept. Syr. and Arab. versions. Ken.—Day. This regarded only the present occasion. Jonathan.—The Jews no longer eat the paschal lamb, as they are banished from Chanaan. C. Man, who has a family sufficient to eat a lamb; Heb. se, which means also a kid, (as either was lawful, v. 13.) and perhaps also a calf. Deut. xvi. 2.

VER. 4. Less. Moses does not specify the number. But it never comprised fewer than ten, nor more than twenty, in which number Menoch does not think women or children are comprised. The Jews satisfied the inquiry of Cestius, concerning the multitude which might be assembled at the paschal solemnity, by allowing ten for every victim; and finding that 250,600 victims had been sacrificed in the space of two hours, they concluded 2,700,000 people were collected at Jerusalem. Josep. Bel. vii. 16.

VER. 5. Lamb. Heb. se, which denotes the young of either sheep or goats. Kimchi. He who had not a lamb, was to sacrifice a kid. Theodore.—A kid. The Phase might be performed, either with a lamb or with a kid; and all the same rites and ceremonies were to be used with the one as with the other. Ch.—Many have asserted, that both were to be sacrificed. But custom decides against them. All was to be perfect, Monim, as even the pagans required; (Grotius) and God (Lev. xxii. 22.) orders the victims in general must have no fault. The Egyptians rejected them, if they were even spotted, or twins.—A male, as all holocausts were to be. Pagans gave the preference to females. C.—One year, not older, though it would do, if above eight days old. M.—The paschal lamb prefigured Jesus Christ, who has redeemed us by his death, being holy, set apart, and condescending to feed us with his sacred person, in the blessed Eucharist. Here we eat the lamb without breaking a bone, though we take the whole victim. Jo. xix. 36. 1 Cor. v. 7. C.—To fulfil this figure, Christ substituted his own body, and, making his apostles priests, ordered them to continue this sacrifice for ever. He came to Jerusalem on the 10th day of Nisan, on Sunday. He gave himself to his disciples on the evening of the 14th, and died at noon on the 15th. The unleavened bread, and the cup, (Lu. xxii. 17.) clearly denoted the blessed Sacrament, which was ordered to be eaten in the house or church of God. S. Cyp. Unit. See S. Greg. hom. 22. in Evang. Tert. c. Marc. iv. "The bread he made his own body." If, therefore, the truth must surpass the figure, surely the blessed Sacrament must be more than bread and wine; otherwise it would yield in excellence and signification to the paschal lamb. W.

VER. 6. Sacrifice, not simply kill, as the Protestants would have it. W.—

this month; and the whole multitude of the children of Israel shall sacrifice it in the evening.

7 And they shall take of the blood thereof, and put it upon both the side-posts, and on the upper door-posts of the houses, wherein they shall eat it.

8 And they shall eat the flesh that night roasted at the fire, and unleavened bread with wild lettuce.

9 You shall not eat thereof any thing raw, nor boiled in water, but only roasted at the fire; you shall eat the head with the feet and entrails thereof.

10 Neither shall there remain any thing of it until morning. "If there be any thing left, you shall burn it with fire.

11 And thus you shall eat it: you shall gird your reins, and you shall have shoes on your feet, holding staves in your hands, and you shall eat in haste; for it is the Phase (that is the Passage) of the Lord.

12 And I will pass through the land of Egypt that night, and will kill every first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast: and against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgments; I am the Lord.

13 And the blood shall be unto you for a sign in the houses where you shall be; and I shall see the blood, and shall pass over you; and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I shall strike the land of Egypt.

14 And this day shall be for a memorial to you; and you shall keep it a feast to the Lord in your generations, with an everlasting observance.

15 Seven days shall you eat unleavened bread: in the first day there shall be no leaven in your houses; whosoever shall eat any thing leavened, from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall perish out of Israel.

16 The first day shall be holy and solemn, and the seventh day shall be kept with the like solemnity: you shall do no work in them, except those things that belong to eating.

17 And you shall observe the feast of the unleavened bread: for in this same day I will bring forth your army out of the land of Egypt, and you shall keep this day in your generations by a perpetual observance.

18 The first month, the fourteenth day of the month, in the evening, you shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the same month, in the evening.

19 Seven days there shall not be found any leaven in your houses: he that shall eat leavened bread, his soul shall perish out of the assembly of Israel, whether he be a stranger or born in the land.

20 You shall not eat any thing leavened: in all your habitations you shall eat unleavened bread.

21 And Moses called all the ancients of the children of Israel, and said to them: Go take a lamb by your families, and sacrifice the Phase.

22 And dip a bunch of hyssop in the blood that is at the door, and sprinkle the transom of the door therewith, and both the door-cheeks: let none of you go out of the door of his house till morning.

23 For the Lord will pass through striking the Egyptians: and when he shall see the blood on the transom, and on both the posts, he will pass over the door of the house, and not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses and to hurt you.

24 Thou shalt keep this thing as a law for thee and thy children for ever.

25 And when you have entered into the land which the Lord will give you, as he hath promised, you shall observe these ceremonies.

26 And when your children shall say to you: What is the meaning of this service?

27 You shall say to them: It is the victim of the Evening. Heb. "between the two evenings," or "suns," according to the Chaldee, alluding to the sun when it declines and when it sets, including about the space of two hours. This time belonged to the evening of the 14th, at which time the lamb was to be sacrificed, though it was to be eaten in the night, which pertained to the 15th. M.—The Jews began the day at sun-set, and some began the first evening soon after mid-day. Matt. xiv. 15, and seq. C.

VER. 7. Houses. Those who joined their neighbours to eat the paschal lamb, were therefore to continue with them that night, if they would escape destruction. v. 23. M.

VER. 8. Unleavened, in testimony of innocence, 1 Cor. v. 7. The priests of Jupiter did the like. Servius.—Lettuce, or some "bitter herbs." Heb. and Sept. The Jews allow of five sorts.

VER. 9. Raw. Some nations delighted in raw flesh, in the feasts of Bacchus, who hence received the title of Omados. Porphyry de Abstin. 3. The Heb. term na, occurs nowhere else, and may perhaps signify half-roasted or boiled, semicooked. It cannot be inferred from this prohibition, that the Hebrews commonly lived on such food.—In water, as the other victims usually were, 1 K. ii. 13. 2 Par. xxxv. 13.—You shall eat, is not in the original, nor in the Sept. We may supply it, however, or "you shall roast all, head," &c. but in eating, you shall avoid breaking any bone, as the Sept. and Syr. express it, (v. 10,) and as we read, v. 46, and Num. ix. 12. These were to be burnt, that they might not be profaned. C.

VER. 11. Haste, as all the aforesaid prescriptions intimate. M.—Many of them regarded only this occasion, and were not required afterwards.—Phase, which the Chaldee writes Pascha, signifies the passing over (C.) of the destroying angel, when he spared those houses only which were marked with blood, to inculpate the necessity of faith in Christ's death. Some have derived the word from the Greek Pascho, "to suffer," on account of the similarity of sound. H.

VER. 12. First-born, often denotes the most beloved; or, when spoken of those under oppression, the most miserable. Ia. xiv. 30. Ps. lxxxvii. 27. Moses observes, (v. 30,) that every house had one dead, which would not probably be true of the first-born, taken in a literal sense; but where there was no child, there the most dear and honourable person was cut off. Hab. iii. 13. 14.—Gods, idols, whose statues some assert were overthrown; (S. Jer. ep. ad Fabiol. Euseb. præp. ix. ult.) or sacred animals which were adored by the Egyptians; (Origen) or the word may imply that the princes and judges of the land would be mostly destroyed. C.—Forbes observes, that by the destruction of the first-born, all the proper sacrifices, and priests of Egypt, were destroyed.

VER. 14. This day. The Jews assert, that as their fathers were delivered out of Egypt on the 15th of Nisan, so Israel will be redeemed on that day by the Messiah; which has been literally verified in Jesus Christ.—Everlasting. This is what will be done with respect to our Christian passover, (C.) of which the Jewish was a figure, designed to subsist as long as their republic. M.

VER. 15. Perish, either by sudden death, or by forfeiting all the prerogatives of God's people; (v. 19,) or his offence shall be deemed mortal. See Gen. xvii. 14. The punishment of Kerith, separation, among the Jews, bore some resemblance to our excommunication. These menaces presuppose, that the law is possible, and that the land of Chanaan be in the possession of the Jews. Thus, the people who were not circumcised during the 40 years' sojournment in the desert, were not liable to this punishment of separation, as they knew not when the cloud would move, and they would have to march.

VER. 16. Eating. On the sabbath, meat was not even to be prepared. C. xvi. 23. During the five intermediate days, any work might be done.

VER. 17. Bread. Heb. matsoth. But the Sam. and Sept. read Motus, precept, or ordinance. C.

VER. 18. Unleavened bread. By this it appears, that our Saviour made use of unleavened bread, in the institution of the blessed Sacrament, which was on the evening of the paschal solemnity, at which time there was no leavened bread to be found in Israel.

VER. 19. Stranger. Heb. ger, signifies also a proselyte. M. See v. 48.—Only those men who had been circumcised, were allowed to eat the Phase. Women, belonging to the Hebrews, might partake of it. The unclean were excluded. C.

VER. 22. Hyssop; Heb. ezob: which some translate rosemary. M.—Sprinkle, &c. This sprinkling the doors of the Israelites with the blood of the paschal lamb, in order to their being delivered from the sword of the destroying angel, was a lively figure of our redemption by the blood of Christ. Ch.—S. Jerom, in Is. lxvi. says the doors were to be sprinkled in the form of a cross.

VER. 24. Children; twelve years old. Lu. ii. 42. M.—Ever. Sam. adds, "in this month."

VER. 27. Victim, sacrificed upon the altar, in honour of the passage, &c. It was a true "sacrifice of propitiation," as the Arab. translates, and of thanksgiving. O passage of the Lord, when he passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, striking the Egyptians, and saving our houses. And the people bowing themselves, adored.

28 And the children of Israel going forth, did as the Lord had commanded Moses and Aaron.

29 And it came to pass at midnight, *the Lord slew every first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh, who sat on his throne, ^bunto the first-born of the captive woman that was in the prison, and all the first-born of cattle.

30 And Pharaoh arose in the night, and all his servants, and all Egypt: and there arose a great cry in Egypt; for there was not a house wherein there lay not one dead.

31 And Pharaoh calling Moses and Aaron, in the night, said: Arise and go forth from among my people, you and the children of Israel: go, sacrifice to the Lord as you say.

32 Your sheep and herds take along with you, as you demanded, and departing bless me.

33 And the Egyptians pressed the people to go forth out of the land speedily, saying: We shall all die.

34 The people therefore took dough before it was leavened; and tying it in their cloaks, put it on their shoulders.

35 *And the children of Israel did as Moses had commanded: and they asked of the Egyptians vessels of silver and gold, and very much raiment.

36 And the Lord gave favour to the people in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them: and they stripped the Egyptians.

37 ^aAnd the children of Israel set forward from Ramesse to Socoth, being about six hundred thousand men on foot, beside children.

38 And a mixed multitude, without number, went up also with them, sheep and herds, and beasts of divers kinds, exceeding many.

39 And they baked the meal, which a little before they had brought out of Egypt in dough: and they made hearth-cakes unleavened: for it could not be leavened, the Egyptians pressing them to depart, and not suffering them to make any stay; neither did they think of preparing any meat.

40 And the abode of the children of Israel that they made in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years.

41 Which being expired, the same day all the army of the Lord went forth out of the land of Egypt.

42 This is the observable night of the Lord, when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt: this night all the children of Israel must observe in their generations.

43 And the Lord said to Moses and Aaron: This is the service of the Phase; no foreigner shall eat of it.

44 But every bought servant shall be circumcised, and so shall eat.

45 The stranger and the hireling shall not eat thereof.

46 ^eIn one house shall it be eaten, neither shall you carry forth of the flesh thereof out of the house, neither shall you break a bone thereof.

47 All the assembly of the children of Israel shall keep it.

48 And if any stranger be willing to dwell among you, and to keep the Phase of the Lord, all his males shall first be circumcised, and then shall he celebrate it according to the manner: and he shall be as he that is born in the land: but if any man be uncircumcised, he shall not eat thereof.

49 The same law shall be to him that is born in the land, and to the proselyte that sojourneth with you.

50 And all the children of Israel did as the Lord had commanded Moses and Aaron.

51 And the same day the Lord brought forth the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their companies.

CHAP. XIII.

The paschal solemnity is to be observed; and the first-born are to be consecrated to God. The people are conducted through the desert by a pillar of fire in the night, and a cloud in the day.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 ^fSanctify unto me every first-born that openeth the womb among the children of Israel, as well of men as of beasts: for they are all mine.

3 And Moses said to the people: Remember this day in which you came forth out of Egypt, and out of the house of bondage, for with a strong hand hath the Lord brought you forth out of this place: that you eat no leavened bread.

4 This day you go forth in the month of new corn.

5 And when the Lord shall have brought thee into the land of the Chanaanite, and the Hethite, and the Amorrite, and the Hevite, and the Jebusite, which he

Moses does not speak with such precision, as after the people had been numbered, and were found, 18 months after, to be 603,550 men, without the Levites, or those under 20 years. C.—Women and old men, and Egyptians, who joined their company, might make them amount to three millions. M.

VER. 40. Egypt. Sam. and Sept. add "and in the land of Chanaan, they and their fathers," dating from the departure of Abraham from Haran in his 75th year; from which period, till Jacob's going into Egypt, 215 years elapsed. The Jews would not suffer any to dwell among them, who would not observe the seven precepts given to Noe. Gen. ix. But the proselytes of justice embraced the Jewish religion. C.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 2. Sanctify unto me every first-born. Sanctification in this place means, that the first-born males of the Hebrews should be deputed to the ministry in the divine worship: and the first-born of beasts to be given for a sacrifice. Ch.—Sanctify, set apart. M.—Openeth, the first male fruit of the womb. If a female was born the first, none of the children were to be redeemed. Lu. ii. 23. Jesus Christ submitted to this law; though many of the fathers have asserted that, on account of his miraculous conception and birth, he was not subjected to it; while others maintain the contrary. swore to thy fathers that he would give thee, a land that floweth with milk and honey, thou shalt celebrate this manner of sacred rites in this month.

6 Seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread: and on the seventh day shall be the solemnity of the Lord.

7 Unleavened bread shall you eat seven days: there shall not be seen any thing leavened with thee, nor in all thy coasts.

8 And thou shalt tell thy son in that day, saying: This is what the Lord did to me when I came forth out of Egypt.

9 And it shall be as a sign in thy hand, and as a memorial before thy eyes; and that the law of the Lord be always in thy mouth, for with a strong hand the Lord hath brought thee out of the land of Egypt.

10 Thou shalt keep this observance at the set time from days to days.

11 And when the Lord shall have brought thee into the land of the Chanaanite, as he swore to thee and thy fathers, and shall give it thee:

12 "Thou shalt set apart all that openeth the womb for the Lord, and all that is first brought forth of thy cattle: whatsoever thou shalt have of the male sex, thou shalt consecrate to the Lord.

13 The first-born of an ass thou shalt change for a sheep: and if thou do not redeem it, thou shalt kill it. And every first-born of men thou shalt redeem with a price.

14 And when thy son shall ask thee to-morrow, saying: What is this? thou shalt answer him: With a strong hand did the Lord bring us forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

15 For when Pharaoh was hardened, and would not let us go, the Lord slew every first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of man to the first-born of beasts: therefore I sacrifice to the Lord all that openeth the womb of the male sex, and all the first-born of my sons I redeem.

16 "And it shall be as a sign in thy hand, and as a thing hung between thy eyes, for a remembrance: because the Lord hath brought us forth out of Egypt by a strong hand.

VER. 9. And it, &c. The festivals appointed by God and his Church, naturally remind us of the favors which we have received, and help us to meditate on the law. H.—The Jews, understanding the precept literally, write verses taken from this chapter, and Deut. vi. and xi. upon parchment, and bind these tephylins, or phylacteries, on their forehead. But if these scrolls were requisite, why do they not also put them in their mouth and in their heart? Jesus Christ condemns the vanity of the Pharisees, who wore these bandages extremely large. 18 But he led them about by the way of the desert, which is by the Red Sea: and the children of Israel went up armed out of the land of Egypt.

19 And Moses took Joseph's bones with him: because he had adjured the children of Israel, saying: "God shall visit you, carry out my bones from hence with you.

20 And marching from Socoth, they encamped in Etham, in the utmost coasts of the wilderness.

CHAP. XIV.

Pharaoh pursueth the children of Israel. They murmur against Moses, but are encouraged by him, and pass through the Red Sea. Pharaoh and his army following them, are drowned.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel: Let them turn and encamp over-against Pihahiroth, which is between Magdal and the sea over-against Beelsephon: you shall encamp before it upon the sea.

3 And Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel: They are straitened in the land, the desert hath shut them in.

4 And I shall harden his heart, and he will pursue you: and I shall be glorified in Pharaoh, and in all his army: and the Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord. And they did so.

5 And it was told the king of the Egyptians that the people was fled: and the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was changed with regard to the people, and they said: What meant we to do, that we let Israel go from serving us?

talions. Jos. i. 14. Jud. viii. 11. C.—Calvin asks where the Hebrews could procure arms, as if to cavil with this translation. But surely they might get them in the same manner as the vessels of gold; and they undoubtedly were not destitute of arms when they encountered the Amalecites, v. 17. H.

VER. 19. Joseph's. This attention to the dead is commended. Heb. xi. W.—S. Stephen assures us, that the bones of the other patriarchs were deposited at Sichem; and we may conclude, that they were transported on this occasion by their respective families. Act. vii. 16.

VER. 20. Etham. A city on the banks of the Red Sea, giving its name to one of the gulphs, which the Greeks called after the city Heropolis. Plin. vi. 29. The Sept. translate, "They encamped at Othon, which is near the desert;" and (Num. xxxii. 6.) the Hebrews marched three days in the desert of Buthan, before they arrived at Mara.

VER. 22. Never. From the station of Etham; or, if we follow S. Jerom, from that of Socoth, or even from Rameses, according to Bonfrere, till the passage of the Jordan, when the ark supplied its want. Jos. iii. 11. This cloud assumed different appearances, as the exigencies of the Hebrews required. It was a figure of baptism; (1 Cor. x. 1.) the fire designated Jesus Christ, and the cloud the Holy Ghost. S. Amb. de sac. 6. C.

CHAP. XIV. VER. 1. Beelsephon, means "the lord of the watch-tower." Some think an idol was thus denominated, whose office it was to prevent people from quitting the country. How vain were his efforts against God's people!

VER. 3. In. Between craggy mountains and the Red Sea. H.

VER. 4. And he will. Protestants falsely translate "that he may," &c. contrary to the Heb. and other versions. W.

VER. 6. People, fit for war, who could be got ready on such short warning. Ezechiel (ap. Eus.) makes the number amount to a million.

7 And he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots that were in Egypt: and the captains of the whole army.

8 And the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and he pursued the children of Israel; but they were gone forth in a mighty hand.

9 And when the Egyptians followed the steps of them who were gone before, they found them encamped at the sea side: all Pharaoh's horse and chariots and the whole army were in Pihahiroth, before Beelsephon.

10 And when Pharaoh drew near, the children of Israel lifting up their eyes, saw the Egyptians behind them: and they feared exceedingly, and cried to the Lord.

11 And they said to Moses: Perhaps there were no graves in Egypt, therefore thou hast brought us to die in the wilderness: why wouldst thou do this, to lead us out of Egypt?

12 Is not this the word that we spoke to thee in Egypt, saying: Depart from us, that we may serve the Egyptians? for it was much better to serve them, than to die in the wilderness.

13 And Moses said to the people: Fear not: stand, and see the great wonders of the Lord, which he will do this day; for the Egyptians, whom you see now, you shall see no more for ever.

14 The Lord will fight for you, and you shall hold your peace.

15 And the Lord said to Moses: Why criest thou to me? Speak to the children of Israel to go forward.

16 But lift thou up thy rod, and stretch forth thy hand over the sea, and divide it: that the children of Israel may go through the midst of the sea on dry ground.

17 And I will harden the heart of the Egyptians to pursue you: and I will be glorified in Pharaoh, and in all his host, and in his chariots and in his horsemen.

18 And the Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall be glorified in Pharaoh, and in his chariots, and in his horsemen.

19 And the angel of God, who went before the camp of Israel, removing, went behind them: and together with him the pillar of the cloud, leaving the fore-part,

20 Stood behind, between the Egyptians' camp and the camp of Israel: and it was a dark cloud, and enlightening the night, so that they could not come at one another all the night.

21 And when Moses had stretched forth his hand over the sea, the Lord took it away by a strong and burning wind blowing all the night, and turned it into dry ground: and the water was divided.

22 And the children of Israel went in through the midst of the sea dried up; for the water was as a wall on their right-hand and on their left.

23 And the Egyptians pursuing went in after them, and all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots and horsemen, through the midst of the sea.

24 And now the morning watch was come, and behold the Lord looking upon the Egyptian army through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, slew their host.

25 And overthrew the wheels of the chariots, and they were carried into the deep. And the Egyptians said: Let us flee from Israel; for the Lord fighteth for them against us.

26 And the Lord said to Moses: Stretch forth thy hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots and horsemen.

27 And when Moses had stretched forth his hand towards the sea, it returned at the first break of day to the former place: and as the Egyptians were fleeing away, the waters came upon them, and the Lord shut them up in the middle of the waves.

28 And the waters returned, and covered the chariots and the horsemen of all the army of Pharaoh, who had come into the sea after them, neither did there so much as one of them remain.

29 But the children of Israel marched through the midst of the sea upon dry land, and the waters were to them as a wall on the right-hand and on the left:

30 And the Lord delivered Israel in that day out of the hands of the Egyptians.

31 And they saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea shore, and the mighty hand that the Lord had used against them: and the people feared the Lord, and they believed the Lord, and Moses his servant.

Three men rode on every chariot; which was armed with scythes, to cut down all that came within contact, the chief warrior, with his armour-bearer and charioteer. S. Greg. Nya. II.—Or these three captains may very probably be the three chief officers of state, (C.) or the generals of cavalry, and of infantry, and the chief treasurer, or receiver of taxes, principes equitum peditumque erant, & tributorum. S. VER. 8. Hand. Without any dread. Num. xv. 30. C.—All the army of Egypt could do nothing against them. Yet presently, at their approach, the Hebrews were suffered to fall into dismay, that they might learn not to confide in their multitudes, and might pray with greater earnestness for protection, v. 10.

VER. 12. Wilderness. This is the language of dastardly souls. They had begun to be almost in love with their chains. Every difficulty gives them occasion to repine at the gracious purposes of God, and the exertions of his servant Moses. But God bears patiently with the defects of a carnal and long oppressed nation. II. v. 13.—The wiser sort pray to God, while others thus upbraid Moses.

VER. 13. Ever. They saw their floating carcasses, the following morning. Heb. "you shall not see the Egyptians any more as you see them at present." They were not in the same condition.

VER. 15. Criest.—"A vehement desire is a cry, which reaches the ears of the Lord." S. Bern.

VER. 17. To pursue. God did not restrain the perverse will of the Egyptians; but suffered them to be guided by their blind passions, and to rush presumptuously into the bed of the sea. If the retiring of its waters had been owing to any natural cause, this wise nation could not be ignorant but that, at the stated time, the ebbing would cease, and consequently that they would be overtaken by the waters. But the waters stood up like walls on both sides, and they were so infatuated as to suppose that the miracle would be continued for their protection. H.

VER. 20. A dark cloud, and enlightening the night. It was a dark cloud to the Egyptians; but enlightened the night to the Israelites, by giving them a great light.

VER. 21. Wind. This served to dry up the sandy channel of the Red Sea, which was mixed with mud and weeds. It blew from the east, Kodin, or from Arabia.—Divided, some say into 12 parts or divisions, Ps. cxxxv. 18. But the words of the psalmist may be verified by the sea opening a spacious passage, such as was requisite for so many millions to travel through, (II.) e. g. a distance of perhaps 18 miles, in so short a space of time. Silara Adrichomius thinks the breadth of the division would not be less than nine miles.

VER. 24. Watch. About four o'clock. The Hebrews divided the night into three equal parts, (C.) or four, consisting each of three hours, (M.) which varied in length as the night was longer. CHAP. XV.

The canticle of Moses. The bitter waters of Mara are made sweet.

THEN *Moses and the children of Israel sung this canticle to the Lord, and said: Let us sing to the Lord: for he is gloriously magnified, the horse and the rider he hath thrown into the sea.

2 ^bThe Lord is my strength and my praise, and he is become salvation to me: he is my God, and I will glorify him: the God of my father, and I will exalt him.

3 The Lord is as a man of war, Almighty is his name.

4 Pharaoh's chariots and his army he hath cast into the sea: his chosen captains are drowned in the Red Sea.

5 The depths have covered them, they are sunk to the bottom like a stone.

6 Thy right-hand, O Lord, is magnified in strength: thy right-hand, O Lord, hath slain the enemy.

7 And in the multitude of thy glory thou hast put down thy adversaries: thou hast sent thy wrath, which hath devoured them like stubble.

8 And with the blast of thy anger the waters were gathered together: the flowing water stood, the depths were gathered together in the midst of the sea.

9 The enemy said: I will pursue and overtake, I will divide the spoils, my soul shall have its fill: I will draw my sword, my hand shall slay them.

10 Thy wind blew and the sea covered them: they sunk as lead in the mighty waters.

11 Who is like to thee, among the strong, O Lord? who is like to thee, glorious in holiness, terrible and praise-worthy, doing wonders?

12 Thou stretchedst forth thy hand, and the earth swallowed them.

* Wisd. x. 20.

CHAP. XV. VER. 1. Cantic. Origen reckons this to be the most ancient piece of poetry. It is truly sublime, and calculated to fill the souls of those, who saw their late cruel masters, now prostrate at their feet in death, with sentiments of the greatest gratitude and piety towards their almighty benefactor. H.—God miraculously gave utterance to the dumb on this occasion, (Wisd. x. ult.) and taught the whole congregation of Israel to join in harmonious concert. De Mirab. S. S. inter. op. S. Aug. This mode of perpetuating the memory of past benefits by canticles, is very common in Scripture. C.—Let us sing. So the Sept. The Heb. has "I will sing . . . for he hath triumphed gloriously." This canticle was composed by Moses about 1491 years B. C. H.

VER. 2. Praise. The printed Heb. is here irregular, but some MSS. agree with the Vulg. Chal. and Arab. Ken i. p. 400.—To him my praise is due on all titles. H.—God. Heb. el, "the strong one." M.

VER. 3. The Lord. Sept. "breaking wars in pieces," A MAN OF WAR, A CONQUEROR. C.—Almighty. Jehova, I am. This is the most awful and incommunicable name. H.

VER. 4. Captains. Lit. Princes. Heb. shalishim, chiefs. The three great officers C. xiv. 7. We find three were entrusted with the highest power in the empire of Chaldea, (Ezec xxiii 15. Dan. v. 7.) as well as at the court of David. 2 K. xxiii. 8. 1 Par. xi. 10. Hadino, Eleazar, and Semma, had various other princes under them. C.

VER. 5. Wrath. A tempest of lightning. See Isai. lxiii. 11. Habac. iii. 15.

VER. 6. Together. "Congealed on either side," as the Chal. and Sept. express it. C.

VER. 7. Enomy. Miracles make but small impression upon the wicked. They pursue their schemes of destruction, which end in their own ruin!—Slay. Heb. "despoil." Sept. "bring them into subjection." H.

VER. 8. Wind. Sept. "spirit," which S. Amb. and S. Aug. understand of the Holy Ghost. C.

VER. 9. Who . . . Lord. The initials of these four Hebrew letters, which the Macabees placed on their banners, (m c b i) probably gave that title, to those stout heroes, who rose up in defence of their religion. H.—Strong, may be applied either to men, or to the pretended gods of the Gentiles, which seems to agree best with the sequel. Sept. "among the gods . . . wonderful in praises."—Terrible and Heb. "terrible to praise," requiring that we should perform that duty with awe. C.

VER. 10. Earth. When their carcasses were corrupted, such as were not eaten by fishes, mixed with the earth at the bottom, or on the shore of the sea.

VER. 11. Hast been. This is a prophecy of what should happen to the Hebrews till they should be put in quiet possession of Chanaan, (C.) of which they had an earnest, in the protection which they had already experienced. H.—Holy, on 13 In thy mercy thou hast been a leader to the people which thou hast redeemed: and in thy strength thou hast carried them to thy holy habitation.

14 Nations rose up, and were angry: sorrows took hold on the inhabitants of Philisthiim.

15 Then were the princes of Edom troubled, trembling seized on the stout men of Moab: all the inhabitants of Chanaan became stiff.

16 Let fear and dread fall upon them, in the greatness of thy arm: let them become immoveable as a stone, until thy people, O Lord, pass by: until this thy people pass by, which thou hast possessed.

17 Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thy inheritance, in thy most firm habitation, which thou hast made, O Lord; thy sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established.

18 The Lord shall reign for ever and ever.

19 For Pharaoh went in on horseback with his chariots and horsemen into the sea: and the Lord brought back upon them the waters of the sea: but the children of Israel walked on dry ground in the midst thereof.

20 So Mary the prophetess, the sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand: and all the women went forth after her with timbrels and with dances.

21 And she began the song to them, saying: Let us sing to the Lord, for he is gloriously magnified, the horse and his rider he hath thrown into the sea.

22 And Moses brought Israel from the Red Sea, and they went forth into the wilderness of Sur: and they marched three days through the wilderness, and found no water.

23 And they came into Mara, and they could not

VER. 15. Stiff, with consternation. See Jos. ix. 9. The nations of Chanaan found auxiliaries even among the near relations of the Hebrews, the children of Esau, (who were now governed by princes, Alphon, as Gen. xxxvi.) and of Lot. We easily forget our relations, when our interest is at stake! Heb. instead of being stiff, says, they "melted away." Both words insinuate, that their heart was under such a violent struggle, that they could perform no duty.

VER. 16. In the, &c. When they shall behold thy wonders, wrought in our defence.—Let them cease to make opposition. Heb. "let them be silent as a stone." H.

VER. 17. Mountain. Chanaan was very mountainous, and different from Egypt. C.—Sion was the peculiar mountain of God, consecrated to his worship. M.

VER. 18. And ever. Lit. et ultra, "and beyond;" holam, which denotes a long duration, is often used to mean a time that will have an end. To add the greater emphasis to it, the latter term is sometimes used when eternity is meant. The Sept. "The Lord shall reign over this generation, or age of the Mosaic law, and over an age lasting from Christ to the end, and still." His kingdom shall extend over all eternity. C.

VER. 19. For, &c. He is not tired with repeating this wonderful judgment, which gave him reason to hope that God would complete his work; and at the same time, give a sanction to his mission. If the most potent of the monarchs of the earth could so little withstand his power, what had he to fear from a few jarring clans of barbarians and shepherds? H.

VER. 20. Mary, or Mariam, as it was formerly pronounced; though the Masorets now read Miriam: may signify one "exalted, lady, star, bitterness of the sea."—Prophetess; having revelations from God, (Num. xii. 1.) and singing his praises.—Of Aaron. Moses passes over himself out of modesty. She is known by this title, whence it is supposed she never married. S. Amb. C.—Timbrels, which were already used in solemn worship.—And dances. Chorus may mean companies of women, singing and dancing in honour of God. The men repeated what Moses had intoned, and the women did the same after Mary; unless, perhaps, the multitude of both sexes, respectively, repeated only the first verse by way of chorus; or Mary and her band took up each verse "in answer" to the men, as the Heb. intimates. This divine canticle will afford joy even to the elect. Apoc. xv. 3.

VER. 22. Sur, which is called Etham, "Pough," (Num. xxxiii. 7.) on which account both sides of the Red Sea are described by the same name; hence some have groundlessly asserted, that the Hebrews came out of the Red Sea by the same way they entered it. H.

VER. 23. Mara, about half-way between Suez and M. Sinal. The waters are said to be still potable, though of a disagreeable nitrous taste. C.

drink the waters of Mara, because they were bitter: whereupon he gave a name also agreeable to the place, calling it Mara, that is, bitterness.

24 And the people murmured against Moses, saying: What shall we drink?

25 But he cried to the Lord, and he shewed him a tree, *which when he had cast into the waters, they were turned into sweetness. There he appointed him ordinances, and judgments, and there he proved him, 26 Saying: If thou wilt hear the voice of the Lord thy God, and do what is right before him, and obey his commandments, and keep all his precepts, none of the evils that I laid upon Egypt, will I bring upon thee: for I am the Lord thy healer.

27 ^bAnd the children of Israel came into Elim, where there were twelve fountains of water, and seventy palm trees: and they encamped by the waters.

3 And the children of Israel said to them: Would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat over the fleshpots, and ate bread to the full: Why have you brought us into this desert, that you might destroy all the multitude with famine?

4 And the Lord said to Moses: Behold I will rain bread from heaven for you; let the people go forth, and gather what is sufficient for every day: that I may prove them whether they will walk in my law, or not.

5 But the sixth day let them provide for to bring in:

C.—We might here, (at the conclusion of the third age, according to those who call the deluge the first, and Abraham's call, the second,) pause, with Dr. Worthington, to take a view of the progress of the Church, and of the true doctrine, which has at all times been believed. But the attentive reader of the sacred text, and of these notes, will find this done to his hand almost in every page. Meditate upon these things. . . Take heed to thyself and to doctrine, be earnest in them. 1 Tim. iv. 15. 6 And Moses and Aaron said to the children of Israel: In the evening you shall know that the Lord hath brought you forth out of the land of Egypt:

7 And in the morning you shall see the glory of the Lord: for he hath heard your murmuring against the Lord: but as for us, what are we, that you mutter against us?

8 And Moses said: In the evening the Lord will give you flesh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full: for he hath heard your murmurings, with which you have murmured against him, for what are we? your murmuring is not against us, but against the Lord.

9 Moses also said to Aaron: Say to the whole congregation of the children of Israel: Come before the Lord; for he hath heard your murmuring.

10 And when Aaron spoke to all the assembly of the children of Israel, they looked towards the wilderness; *and behold the glory of the Lord appeared in a cloud.

11 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

12 I have heard the murmuring of the children of Israel, say to them: In the evening you shall eat flesh, and in the morning you shall have your fil^d of bread; and you shall know that I am the Lord your God.

13 So it came to pass in the evening, *that quails coming up, covered the camp: and in the morning a dew lay round about the camp.

14 And when it had covered the face of the earth, *it appeared in the wilderness small, and as it were beaten with a pestle, like unto the hoar-frost on the ground.

15 And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another: Manhu! which signifieth: What is this! for they knew not what it was. And Moses said to them: *This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat.

VER. 12. Say. Similar promises are often repeated, to appease the seditious mob. H.

VER. 13. Quails. All the Oriental languages express these birds by solaem, though some have asserted, that pheasants or locusts are here meant. Josephus (Ant. 3. 1.) informs us, that great flocks of quails are found about the gulph of Arabia. They return into Europe from the warmer regions, about the beginning of May, at which time God directed the course of vast multitudes to the camp of Israel. Hesychius says, the cheennon, a smaller species of quails, was salted and dried, as the Hebrews did theirs. Num. xi. 32. See Ps. lxxvii. 26. C.—Dew, upon which lay the miraculous bread, around the camp. None fell within, as the place was not sufficiently clean. M.

VER. 15. Manhu. S. Jerom adds the explanation, (D.) which is almost universally adopted, though some pretend that man, even in Chaldee, means who, and not what? Calmet refers them to Ps. lx. 7. for a proof of the contrary. Manna is found in various parts of the world, the best in Arabia. But this was of a different nature, and wholly miraculous, falling every day, except Saturday, throughout the 40 years that the Hebrews dwelt in the desert. It melted with the heat of the sun, (v. 21,) though it would bear the fire, and might be made into cakes, which cannot be done with the Arabian manna. It filled the mouth of God's servants with the most delightful tastes, (Wisd. xvi. 20,) while the wicked were disgusted with it. Num. xi. 6.—Our soul is dry, &c. It is called the bread of angels, being made or brought by their ministry, and of such a quality, that they would desire nothing better, if they stood in need of food. C.—Whatever a man gathered, he had only a gomor full, and this sufficed for young and old, sick and healthy; if any was kept over the night it became corrupt, except that which was reserved for Saturday, and that which was preserved in the ark for a memorial for several hundred years. W.—Yet this wonderful bread was only a figure of that which Jesus Christ promised to give, (S. John vi.) and as the figure 16 This is the word that the Lord hath commanded: Let every one gather of it as much as is enough to eat; a gomor for every man, according to the number of your souls that dwell in a tent, so shall you take of it.

17 And the children of Israel did so: and they gathered, one more, another less.

18 And they measured by the measure of a gomor; neither had he more that had gathered more; nor did he find less that had provided less: but every one had gathered, according to what they were able to eat.

19 And Moses said to them: Let no man leave thereof till the morning.

20 And they hearkened not to him, but some of them left until the morning, and it began to be full of worms, and it putrified, and Moses was angry with them.

21 Now every one of them gathered in the morning, as much as might suffice to eat: and after the sun grew hot, it melted.

22 But on the sixth day they gathered twice as much, that is, two gomors every man: and all the rulers of the multitude came, and told Moses.

23 And he said to them: This is what the Lord hath spoken: To-morrow is the rest of the sabbath sanctified to the Lord. Whatsoever work is to be done, do it; and the meats that are to be dressed, dress them; and whatsoever shall remain, lay it up until the morning.

24 And they did so as Moses had commanded, and it did not putrify, neither was there worm found in it.

25 And Moses said: Eat it to-day, because it is the sabbath of the Lord: to-day it shall not be found in the field.

26 Gather it six days; but on the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord, therefore it shall not be found.

27 And the seventh day came; and some of the people going forth to gather, found none.

28 And the Lord said to Moses: How long will you refuse to keep my commandments, and my law?

29 See that the Lord hath given you the sabbath, and for this reason on the sixth day he giveth you a double provision: let each man stay at home, and let none go forth out of his place the seventh day.

30 And the people kept the sabbath on the seventh day.

must come beneath the reality, (Col. ii.) what we receive in the blessed Eucharist, must undoubtedly be something better than manna. Would Zuinglius and Calvin attempt then to persuade us, that Christ appointed their mere sacramental bread, to supersede and excel the favour of manna granted to the fathers, who are dead? Mere bread cannot stand in competition with this miraculous food. But the truth which it foreshewed, according to all the doctors of the Church, I mean the body and blood, soul and divinity of Jesus Christ, in the blessed sacrament, under the appearance of bread and wine, are surely more excellent than manna itself. It is miraculously brought upon our altars by the words of Jesus Christ, spoken by his priests at Mass, and dispensed to infinite multitudes, in the most distant places from each other, and even in the smallest particle. H.—It giveth grace in this life, and glory in the next, and this in proportion to each one's disposition. To the wicked it may appear contemptible, but to the servants of God it is most delightful and supersubstantial. W.—Button allows that the Protestant version of this verse "seems to make Moses guilty of a contradiction. It is manna, for they wist not what it was." But the Sept. (he might add the Vulg. also) translate it according to the original." H.

VER. 18. Eat. Each one's provision was just enough to fill a gomor; (M.) or those who had collected more, gave to those who wanted. 2 Cor. viii. 15. Any one might take less. C.

VER. 20. Putrified. So God was pleased to punish their diffidence in Providence. H.

VER. 21. Morning. Wisd. xvi. 28, we find the reason of this ordinance, which enforces diligence, and was a constant admonition to bless God without delay. H.—It melted, that it might not be trodden under foot by the profane. M.

VER. 22. Told Moses, wishing to know why God had given this injunction.

VER. 29. Place. Onkelos allows a person to travel 2000 cubits on the sabbath.

31 And the house of Israel called the name thereof Manna: and it was like coriander seed, white, and the taste thereof like to flour with honey.

32 And Moses said: This is the word which the Lord hath commanded: Fill a gomor of it, and let it be kept unto generations to come hereafter; that they may know the bread, wherewith I fed you in the wilderness when you were brought forth out of the land of Egypt.

33 And Moses said to Aaron: Take a vessel, and put manna into it, as much as a gomor can hold; and lay it up before the Lord, to keep unto your generations, 34 As the Lord commanded Moses. And Aaron put it in the tabernacle to be kept.

35 And the children of Israel ate manna forty years, till they came to a habitable land: with this meat were they fed, until they reached the borders of the land of Chanaan.

36 Now a gomor is the tenth part of an ephi.

CHAP. XVII.

The people murmur again for want of drink: the Lord giveth them water out of a rock. Moses lifting up his hand in prayer, Amalec is overcome.

THEN all the multitude of the children of Israel setting forward from the desert of Sin, by their mansions, according to the word of the Lord, encamped in Raphidim, where there was no water for the people to drink.

2 And they chode with Moses, and said: Give us water, that we may drink. And Moses answered them: Why chide you with me? Wherefore do you tempt the Lord?

3 So the people were thirsty there for want of water, and murmured against Moses, saying: Why didst thou make us go forth out of Egypt, to kill us and our children, and our beasts with thirst?

4 And Moses cried to the Lord, saying: What shall I do to this people? Yet a little more and they will stone me.

5 And the Lord said to Moses: Go before the people, and take with thee of the ancients of Israel: and take in thy hand the rod wherewith thou didst strike the river, and go.

6 Behold I will stand there before thee, upon the

VER. 31. Manna. This miraculous food, with which the children of Israel were nourished and supported during their sojourning in the wilderness, was a figure of the bread of life, which we receive in the blessed sacrament, for the food and nourishment of our souls, during the time of our mortal pilgrimage, till we come to our eternal home, the true land of promise: where we shall keep an everlasting sabbath: and have no further need of sacraments. Ch.—Seed in size, but white; whereas the seed of coriander is black. M.—Sam. "like a grain of rice."—Honey, or oil. Num. xi. 8. C.—This was the usual taste. But if any one liked another better, the manna assumed it. Wisd. xvi. 20. M.

VER. 33. A vessel, "a golden urn," as the Sept. and S. Paul (Heb. ix. 4,) express it. This was placed in the tabernacle, where the Hebrews met to pray, till the ark was made. C.

VER. 35. Land. Manna was withdrawn as soon as usual food could be easily procured. H.—In this desert of the world, we are supported by the sacraments. As manna fell in the night, so the mysteries of faith are concealed from the curious researches of men. It melted with the sun beams; so mysteries confound the idle attempts of those who would fathom their impenetrable depth. Those who ate manna died, but the worthy receiver of the blessed sacrament will live for ever. C.

CHAP. XVII. VER. 1. Mansions, at Daphca, (Num. xxxiii. 12,) and perhaps at Aluz. C.—Raphidim, the 11th station mentioned by Moses, which was afterwards called Massa, "temptation," because the people murmured in this place. M.

rock Horeb; and thou shalt strike the rock, and water shall come out of it that the people may drink. Moses did so before the ancients of Israel:

7 And he called the name of that place Temptation, because of the chiding of the children of Israel, and for that they tempted the Lord, saying: Is the Lord amongst us or not?

8 *And Amalec came, and fought against Israel in Raphidim.

9 And Moses said to Josue: Choose out men; and go out and fight against Amalec: to-morrow I will stand on the top of the hill, having the rod of God in my hand.

10 Josue did as Moses had spoken, and he fought against Amalec; but Moses, and Aaron, and Hur, went up upon the top of the hill.

11 And when Moses lifted up his hands, Israel overcame; but if he let them down a little, Amalec overcame.

12 And Moses's hands were heavy: so they took a stone, and put under him, and he sat on it: and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands on both sides. And it came to pass, that his hands were not weary until sunset.

13 And Josue put Amalec and his people to flight, by the edge of the sword.

14 And the Lord said to Moses: Write this for a memorial in a book, and deliver it to the ears of Josue; for I will destroy the memory of Amalec from under heaven.

15 And Moses built an altar; and called the name thereof, The Lord, my exaltation, saying:

16 Because the hand of the throne of the Lord, and the war of the Lord shall be against Amalec, from generation to generation.

4 And the other Eliezer: For the God of my father, said he, is my helper, and hath delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh.

5 And Jethro, the kinsman of Moses, came with his sons, and his wife to Moses into the desert, where he was camped by the mountain of God.

6 And he sent word to Moses, saying: I Jethro, thy kinsman, come to thee, and thy wife, and thy two sons with her.

7 And he went out to meet his kinsman, and worshipped and kissed him: and they saluted one another with words of peace. And when he was come into the tent,

8 Moses told his kinsman all that the Lord had done to Pharaoh, and the Egyptians in favour of Israel: and all the labour which had befallen them in the journey, and that the Lord had delivered them.

9 And Jethro rejoiced for all the good things that the Lord had done to Israel, because he had delivered them out of the hands of the Egyptians.

10 And he said: Blessed is the Lord, who hath delivered his people out of the hand of Egypt.

11 Now I know, that the Lord is great above all gods; *because they dealt proudly against them.

12 So Jethro, the kinsman of Moses, offered holocausts and sacrifices to God: and Aaron and all the ancients of Israel came, to eat bread with him before God.

The Sept. have followed a different reading, "because with a secret hand the Lord will fight; and some suggest, that instead of ces, throne, we should read nos, signal, or standard." The authors of the Sept. and Syr. read behold, instead of I. "It was told Moses. Behold thy," &c. Kennicott observes, that five Samaritan copies retain ene, "behold," instead of ani, "I," and thus obviate the nonsense which disturbs the reader of the present Hebrew.

he did among the people, he said: What is it that thou dost among the people? Why sittest thou alone, and all the people wait from morning till night?

15 And Moses answered him: The people come to me to seek the judgment of God?

16 And when any controversy falleth out among them, they come to me to judge between them, and to shew the precepts of God, and his laws.

17 But he said: The thing thou dost is not good.

18 Thou art spent with foolish labour, both thou, and this people that is with thee; the business is above thy strength,* thou alone canst not bear it.

19 But hear my words and counsels, and God shall be with thee. Be thou to the people in those things that pertain to God, to bring their words to him:

20 And to shew the people the ceremonies, and the manner of worshipping, and the way wherein they ought to walk, and the work that they ought to do.

21 And provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, in whom there is truth, and that hate avarice, and appoint of them rulers of thousands, and of hundreds, and of fifties, and of tens, 22 Who may judge the people at all times: and when any great matter soever shall fall out, let them refer it to thee, and let them judge the lesser matters only: that so it may be lighter for thee, the burden being shared out unto others.

23 If thou dost this, thou shalt fulfil the commandment of God, and shalt be able to bear his precepts: and all this people shall return to their places with peace.

24 And when Moses heard this, he did all things that he had suggested unto him.

25 And choosing able men out of all Israel, he appointed them rulers of the people, rulers over thousands, and over hundreds, and over fifties, and over tens.

CHAP. XIX.

They come to Sinai: the people are commanded to be sanctified. The Lord coming in thunder and lightning, speaketh with Moses.

IN the third month of the departure of Israel out of the land of Egypt, on this day they came into the wilderness of Sinai:

2 For departing out of Raphidim, and coming to the desert of Sinai, they camped in the same place, and there Israel pitched their tents over-against the mountain.

3 And Moses went up to God; and the Lord called unto him from the mountain, and said: Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel.

4 You have seen what I have done to the Egyptians, how I have carried you upon the wings of eagles, and have taken you to myself.

5 If therefore you will hear my voice, and keep my covenant, you shall be my peculiar possession above all people: for all the earth is mine.

6 And you shall be to me a priestly kingdom, and a holy nation. These are the words thou shalt speak to the children of Israel.

7 Moses came; and calling together the elders of the people, he declared all the words which the Lord had commanded.

8 And all the people answered together: All that the Lord hath spoken, we will do. And when Moses had related the people's words to the Lord, 9 The Lord said to him: Lo now will I come to thee in the darkness of a cloud, that the people may hear me speaking to thee, and may believe thee for ever. And Moses told the words of the people to the Lord.

10 And he said to him: Go to the people, and sanctify them to-day, and to-morrow, and let them wash their garments.

11 And let them be ready against the third day; for on the third day the Lord will come down in the sight of all the people, upon Mount Sinai.

12 And thou shalt appoint certain limits to the people round about, and thou shalt say to them: Take heed ye go not up into the mount, and that ye touch

CHAP. XIX. VER. 1. This day. The same on which they departed from Raphidim, or on the third day of the third month; though S. Aug. understands the first of the month; (C.) on which last supposition, allowing 16 days of the month Nisan, 30 of Jiar, and 4 of Sivan, the law was given 50 days after the liberation of the Jews, as the new law was promulgated on Whit-Sunday, on the day of Pentecost. S. Aug. ep. 119. 16. W.

VER. 3. And Moses went up to God. Moses went up to Mount Sinai, where God spoke to him.

VER. 4. Eagles. Out of the reach of danger. As eagles carry their young upon their wings, so I have protected you from all your enemies. Deut. xxxii. 11. C.

VER. 5. Possession, (peculium.) Heb. segula, "a chosen portion or treasure." M.—Mine. I could have made choice of others. We cannot but admire the goodness of God, who asks for the free consent of the people. Hence they can have no pretence for breaking this solemn covenant. C. Theod. 9. 35.

VER. 6. Priestly kingdom. "Priests and kings." Chal. You shall rule over the Chanaanites, &c. and you shall offer sacrifice to me, at least, by slaying the paschal lamb. This kingdom shall not be merely of a civil nature; it shall be also sacred. The whole nation shall be holy, separated from the pagans, and consecrated to me. M.

VER. 8. Related, as a mediator acting between two parties, (H.) though God knew all before. Thus his servants cease not to lay before him their own and our wants. W.

VER. 9. Cloud, to veil his majesty, while he spoke to Moses in the hearing of all. H.—Then they began to place an entire confidence in their leader. Maimonides.

VER. 10. Garments, with their bodies, as the Jews understand by this expression. They were also to abstain from their wives, &c. By which exterior practices, they were admonished of the interior purity which God required. All nations seem to have adopted similar observances of continence, washing them-not the borders thereof: every one that toucheth the mount, dying he shall die.

13 No hands shall touch him, but he shall be stoned to death, or he shall be shot through with arrows: whether it be beast, or man, he shall not live. When the trumpet shall begin to sound, then let them go up into the mount.

14 And Moses came down from the mount to the people, and sanctified them. And when they had washed their garments, 15 He said to them: Be ready against the third day, and come not near your wives.

16 And now the third day was come, and the morning appeared: and behold thunders began to be heard, and lightning to flash, and a very thick cloud to cover the mount, and the noise of the trumpet sounded exceeding loud; and the people that was in the camp, feared.

17 And when Moses had brought them forth to meet God, from the place of the camp, they stood at the bottom of the mount.

18 "And all Mount Sinai was on a smoke: because the Lord was come down upon it in fire, and the smoke arose from it as out of a furnace: and all the mount was terrible.

19 And the sound of the trumpet grew by degrees louder and louder, and was drawn out to a greater length: Moses spoke, and God answered him.

selves, and putting on their best attire, when they appeared before God. See Herod. &c. C.

VER. 13. Him. In detestation of his impiety, which has made him unclean. H.—Go up into the precincts of the mountain, to which Moses conducted them; (v. 17. 21,) or they might ascend after the trumpet ceased, and the law was given. For some understand shall begin, in a contrary sense with the Roman Sept. "when the voices of thunder, and the trumpets, and the cloud shall be no more;" (apelite) so also the Chal. Syr. Vatable. The sound which was heard, resembled that of a horn. (Jobel.) See Levit. xxv. 10. C.

VER. 15. Wives. S. Paul recommends continence when people have to pray. 1 Cor. vii. On the pagan temple of Epidaurus, this inscription was placed, "Let those be chaste who enter here." Clem. Strom. 5.

VER. 18. Terrible, by the display of so many instruments of God's power; lightning, fire, a thick cloud, and various peals of thunder, and the sound of a trumpet; besides rain, and the company of millions of angels. Ps. lxxvii. 9. 18. How different was the appearance of Sion, when Jesus proclaimed his gospel! Heb. xii. 18.

VER. 19. Answered him, "in a speech," articulated and heard by all the people, as the Heb. Sept. Syr. &c. intimate. Many legislators have pretended that their laws came from heaven. But they had no witnesses. Moses does all openly. His laws are preceded, accompanied, and followed by prodigies.

VER. 22. Sanctified, in an extraordinary manner, above the rest. These priests, according to S. Aug. are the children of Aaron, and the whole race of Levi, who would shortly be selected by God. But others think, they are those who, by the law of nature, were accustomed to officiate. Or, as God had declared that they were all a priestly kingdom, some of the most comely and irreproachable youths of each family, had been chosen to present victims, when the covenant with God was to be ratified. C. xxiv. 15. C.

VER. 23. The people. Glassius understands this with an interrogation, "Can no one?" God exempts Aaron from the common law, v. 24. H.

VER. 24. Pass. Sept. "contend violently to pass." The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, Matt. xi. 12. M.—Moses was the mediator of this covenant, and Aaron his interpreter, to explain to the people the orders of Moses. C.—Thus we have seen the dreadful apparatus of the law of fear, with the preface to it, and the approbation of the people.

CHAP. XX. VER. 1. The Lord now, by his angel, delivers in an intelligible manner, the ten words, or commandments, which contain the sum of all the natural law, and may be reduced to the two precepts of charity, Matt. xxii. 40. Mar. xii. 31. How these commandments are to be divided into ten, the ancients are not perfectly agreed. We follow the authority of S. Augustine, (9. 71.) Clement, (strom. 6.) and others, in referring three of the precepts to God, and seven to our neighbour. Protestants adopt the Jewish method, of making four commandments of the first table, and six of the second, as they divide our first into two, and unite the 9th and 10th; though it surely must appear rational to admit a distinct precept, for an internal as well as for an external object; and the desires of committing adultery or theft, require a distinct prohibition no less the very top of the mount, and he called Moses unto the top thereof. And when he was gone up thither, 21 He said unto him: Go down, and charge the people; lest they should have a mind to pass the limits to see the Lord, and a very great multitude of them should perish.

22 The priests also that come to the Lord, let them be sanctified, lest he strike them.

23 And Moses said to the Lord: The people cannot come up to Mount Sinai: for thou didst charge, and command, saying: Set limits about the mount, and sanctify it.

24 And the Lord said to him: Go, get thee down; and thou shalt come up, thou and Aaron with thee: but let not the priests and the people pass the limits, nor come up to the Lord, lest he kill them.

25 And Moses went down to the people and told them all.

CHAP. XX.

The ten commandments.

AND the Lord spoke all these words: "I am the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

3 Thou shalt not have strange gods before me.

4 "Thou shalt not make to thyself a graven thing, nor the likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, nor of those things that are in the waters under the earth.

* Levit. xxvi. 1. Deut. iv. 15. Jos. xxiv. 14. Ps. xcvi. 7.

than the external actions. Whereas the forbidding to have strange gods, or to worship images, or creatures of any description, is exactly of the same tendency. For no one can worship an idol, without admitting a strange god. The latter part, therefore, of the first commandment, or the second of Protestants, is only a farther explanation of what had gone before, as Moses himself clearly insinuates, v. 23. You shall not make gods of silver, &c.

VER. 2. Thy God. By this endearing title, we are all required to consecrate our whole hearts and souls to our only Maker and Redeemer; and therefore we must love God sincerely, and comply with all his commandments. This preface to the Decalogue, enforces the acts of faith, hope, charity, religion, &c. H.

VER. 3. Before me, or in my presence. I shall not be content to be adored with idols. C.

VER. 4. A graven thing, nor the likeness of any thing, &c. All such images or likenesses, are forbidden by this commandment, as are made to be adored and served; according to that which immediately follows, thou shalt not adore them, nor serve them. That is, all such as are designed for idols or image gods, or are worshipped with divine honour. But otherwise images, pictures, or representations, even in the house of God, and in the very sanctuary, so far from being forbidden, are expressly authorized by the word of God. See Exodus xxv. 15, &c. chap. xxxviii. 7. Num. xxi. 8. 9. 1 Chron. xxviii. 18. 19. 2 Chron. iii. 10. Ch.—Protestants insidiously translate "any graven image," though pesel, eidolon, glupton, and sculptile, in the Heb. Gr. and Lat. denote a graven thing or idol. They will, however, hardly condemn his majesty for having his representation stamped upon the coin of the nation, nor so many of our wealthy noblemen, who adorn their rooms with the choicest efforts of painting and of sculpture. They know that the object of prohibition is the making and adoring of idols. But they probably wish to keep the ignorant under the stupid delusion of supposing, that Catholics are idolaters, because they have images, and that they themselves are not, though they have them likewise at home; and even in their churches admit the absurd figures of the lion and the unicorn, stretching their paws over the tables of the law, instead of the pious representations of Jesus expiring on the cross, &c. which were set up by their Catholic ancestors. Let them read, and adopt herein just weights and measures, proposed to them by Thorndike, one of their more discerning and moderate teachers. In the mean time, we will assure them, that we abhor all idols; both those made with hands, and those which are formed by the head of heretics, who set up their own fancies and delusions, to be adored instead of the true God. Our general councils of Nice and of Trent define what we ought to believe on this head; and the matter is so fully explained in our catechisms and books of instruction, as well as from our pulpits, that no person can well remain in ignorance. If we perform various actions of respect before pictures, which are also done in honour of God, can any man of sense infer, that we look upon both with equal respect? Do we not read of the people falling down to shew respect to the king, and supreme worship to God, by the same act of the body? H.—Altars and sacrifice we reserve solely for God, as S. Aug. (c. Faust. xx. 21.) well observes. Other indifferent practices must be determined by the intention.—Latria, or supreme worship, can be given to none but the Deity

5 Thou shalt not adore them, nor serve them: I am the Lord thy God, mighty, jealous, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me:

6 And shewing mercy unto thousands to them that love me, and keep my commandments.

7 *Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that shall take the name of the Lord his God in vain.

8 ^bRemember that thou keep holy the sabbath day.

9 Six days shalt thou labour, and shalt do all thy works.

10 But on the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: thou shalt do no work on it, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy beast, nor the stranger that is within thy gates.

11 *For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all things that are in them, and rested on the seventh day: therefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it.

But we shew our respect and veneration for his servants in glory, by an inferior service called Dulia, giving honour to whom honour is due. How profane and impious must the words of the first reformers appear, who, after saying most falsely, that "papists make the Virgin Mary a god, (Luther. postil.) and worship images in heathenish manner," (Melanct. Loc. com.) attribute various fictitious crimes to the blessed Virgin and other saints! Cent. Magd. Calvin, &c. They knew that all the saints abhorred their impiety; and therefore, in revenge, they vilify the saints, and condemn all the doctors and fathers of the Church, since the death of the apostles, as guilty of superstition and idolatry. H.—"By this occasion, dead creatures, and bloodless half worm-eaten bones, began to be honoured, invoked, and worshipped with divine honour. All which the doctors of the Church not only winked at, but also set forward." Cent. Magd. C. vi. What is then become of the promises of God, to teach all the truth by the mouths of his pastors! Matt. xxviii. &c. Let others judge, whether we ought to pay greater deference to Saints Jerom, Aug. Greg. &c. or to Luther, Calvin, and the Centuriators of Magdeburg. But some will even admit, that images were commanded by God. C. xxv. 18, &c. Hence they lay great stress upon the words to thyself; as if all images were forbidden that man should make, without the express sanction of God. So Parkhurst Lexic. But those who are conversant in Hebrew, know that these words have no such import; and if things were inseparable from idolatry, they could not be sanctioned by God. H.—No creature must be represented as a deity. But sovereign worship, both internal and external, must be given to the great Author of all good, while we abstain from every superstitious act, and from all dealings with the devil and false religions. C.—Protestants, therefore, who only forbid images, diminish God's law. Were not the idols of Chanaan, Chamos, &c. which represented nothing in nature, also condemned!

VER. 5. Adore. Protestants translate again, with the same view, as in the preceding verse, "thou shalt not bow down thyself to them," in condemnation of Catholics, who kneel before the cross. But do not they kneel, when they receive their sacramental bread, or when they ask for their parents' blessing! Did not S. John, and other saints, bow down out of respect to angels! And were these all idolaters! We are forbidden therefore, to shew any respect to strange gods. But we must honour the true God in his saints, referring all the glory to him. H.—Hate me. Those who do not imitate their wicked ancestors, need not fear being involved in their punishment. M. S. Aug. q. 42. S. Greg. mor. 15. 22. S. Jer. in Ezech. xviii.—Sometimes, indeed, God takes away the lives of children and of subjects, to punish the sins of parents and of kings; but this may be no real detriment to the deceased. H.—Grotius thinks, that this menace is directed against idolaters. Others believe, it may be placed at the conclusion of each of the commandments. C.

VER. 7. In vain. On trifling occasions, rashly, or falsely. "Those who swear often, diminish their credit among the wise." Philo.

VER. 8. Sabbath day, on which rest from servile work is prescribed, that we may worship God with greater fervour. Saturday was kept holy by the Jews, in honour of God's resting. The apostles have authorized us to keep Sunday instead, to commemorate the mysteries of Christ's resurrection, &c.

VER. 9. Six, &c. This must be understood if no festival of obligation occurred. For many were in force in the old law; such as the Passover, Encenia, Purim, &c. as there are still in the Church. H.

VER. 10. Stranger. Of some other nation. Good policy required, that all should conform to this regulation, whatever their religion might be. Grotius.—Maimonides says, without any probability, that "a Gentile obsewing the law, was guilty of death." C.

VER. 12. Honour. Love, respect, feed, if requisite; support the infirmities of parents. See Num. xxiv. 1. 1 Tim. v. 3. 17. They are ministers of God, in the production of children; and those who offer an affront to his minister, irritate God. Philo.—Land of Chanaan. The promises are of a temporal nature; but they should bring to our reflection the eternal rewards which attend the virtuous.

12 ^aHonour thy father and thy mother, that thou mayst be long-lived upon the land which the Lord thy God will give thee.

13 *Thou shalt not kill.

14 Thou shalt not commit adultery.

15 Thou shalt not steal.

16 Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

17 ^bThou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house; neither shalt thou desire his wife, nor his servant, nor his hand-maid, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is his.

18 And all the people saw the voices and the flames, and the sound of the trumpet, and the mount smoking; and being terrified and struck with fear, they stood afar off,

19 Saying to Moses: Speak thou to us, and we will hear: let not the Lord speak to us, lest we die.

20 And Moses said to the people: Fear not; for God is come to prove you, and that the dread of him might be in you, and you should not sin.

^d Deut. v. 16. Mat. xv. 4. Eph. vi. 2.—^e Mat. v. 21.—^f Rom. vii. 7. and xlii. 9.

The duties of parents are not specified, as nature would shew their extent, and as the obligations of parents and children are reciprocal. C.

VER. 13. Kill. These precepts are to be taken in their full extent, as prohibiting not only the ultimate act, but every thing which leads to it. Magistrates are authorized to inflict capital punishments. We are allowed also to defend ourselves against an unjust aggressor. But we must never intend to kill him. C.—The laws will not condemn us, perhaps, if we do; but God sees the heart, and judges. A night thief may be slain, because we know not how far our own lives may be endangered. C. xxii. 2. H.

VER. 14. Adultery. This precept is placed before the former one, in the Sept. S. Mark x. 19, and S. Luke xviii. 20. Adultery was punished with death, Lev. xx. 10. All civilized nations have held it in abhorrence, as destructive of all peace. Job. xxxi. 11. All other impure actions are forbidden, under different penalties.

VER. 15. Steal; by which name fraud of every description is condemned. Some have erroneously restrained this prohibition to the stealing of men for slaves. C. xxi. 16. C.

VER. 16. False. Calumniators were subjected to the law of retaliation, and were forced, by the Egyptians and others, to undergo the same punishment, which they would have inflicted upon others. This law is the guardian of good faith and honesty in all our dealings. It is explained more in detail. C. xxiii. 1. Lev. xix. 11.

VER. 17. House. Sept. place wife first, as all do. Deut. v. 21. The express prohibition of lustful and unjust desires, might suffice to have obviated the mistake of Josephus, and of the Jews, in our Saviour's time, who looked upon them as indifferent, provided they were not carried into effect. They render us guilty in the sight of God, (Matt. v. 28,) whenever we give consent to them, as even Ovid and the pagan philosophers acknowledged. Grotius.—At the conclusion of this 10th commandment, we find five verses in the Samaritan copy and version, as well as in the Arabic, and a sufficient vacant space is left in an ancient Syriac MS. translated from the Hebrew, which induce Kennicott (D. 2. p. 97,) to conclude that they are genuine; particularly as they explain what law was to be engraven on the two stones set up by Josue, which the Hebrew leaves ambiguous. They are as follows, repeated, for the most part, Deut. xvii. 2. "And it shall come to pass, when the Lord thy God shall bring thee into the land of the Chanaanites, whither thou goest to possess it, then thou shalt set thee up great stones; and thou shalt plaster them with plaster, and shalt write upon the stones all the words of this law.—And it shall come to pass, when ye are passed over the Jordan, ye shall put these stones, which I command you this day, upon Mount Gerizim.—And thou shalt build there an altar to the Lord thy God, an altar of stones; thou shalt not lift up any iron tool upon them.—Thou shalt build the altar of the Lord thy God of whole stones, and shalt offer thereon burnt-offerings to the Lord thy God, and shalt sacrifice peace-offerings; and thou shalt eat there, and rejoice before the Lord thy God.—That mountain is on the other side Jordan, by the way where the sun goeth down, in the land of the Chanaanites, which dwell in the flat country over-against Gilgal, beside the plain of Moreh, near Sichem." This particular designation of Gerizim, makes Calmet suspect, that it is an interpolation of the Samaritans. But Kennicott hesitates not to lay the blame of omission upon the Jews; as he endeavours to shew, that they have corrupted Deut. xxvii. 4, substituting Hebal, instead of Gerizim. "Certainly the Jews might omit, as easily as the Samaritans might insert." p. 100. H.

VER. 18. Saw. The Hebrews often substitute one organ of sense for another S. Aug. 9. 72. Jer. ii. 30.—The Samaritan reads, "the people heard the thunders and the sound of the trumpet, and beheld the lightning." Henceforward till C. xxiv. Moses and Aaron alone heard the voice of God; and the laws delivered, C. xxv. to xxxi. were revealed to Moses only.

VER. 19. Dis. The Sam. copy inserts here what we read, Deut. v. 24, 5, 6, 7 (95)

21 And the people stood afar off. *But Moses went to the dark cloud wherein God was.

22 And the Lord said to Moses: Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel: You have seen that I have spoken to you from heaven.

23 You shall not make gods of silver, nor shall you make to yourselves gods of gold.

24 ^bYou shall make an altar of earth unto me, and you shall offer upon it your holocausts and peace-offerings, your sheep and oxen, in every place where the memory of my name shall be: I will come to thee, and will bless thee.

25 *And if thou make an altar of stone unto me, thou shalt not build it of hewn stones; for if thou lift up a tool upon it, it shall be defiled.

26 Thou shalt not go up by steps unto my altar, lest thy nakedness be discovered.

CHAP. XXI.

Laws relating to justice.

THESE are the judgments which thou shalt set before them.

2 ^aIf thou buy a Hebrew servant, six years shall he serve thee; in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing.

3 With what raiment he came in, with the like let him go out: if having a wife, his wife also shall go out with him.

4 But if his master gave him a wife, and she hath borne sons and daughters; the woman and her children shall be her master's: but he himself shall go out with his raiment.

5 And if the servant shall say: I love my master and my wife and children, I will not go out free:

* Deut. xviii. 16. Heb. xii. 18.—^b Infra xxvii. 8. and xxxviii. 7.—^c Deut. xxvii. 5. Jos. viii. 31.—^d Deut. xv. 12. Jer. xxxiv. 14.

VER. 22. Seen: no visible form; (C.) but I have spoken from the top of Sinai. H.

VER. 23. Make. Heb. adds, "with me." v. 3. This people was prone to idolatry, and stood in need of having the first commandment often inculcated. M.

VER. 24. Earth, which may be destroyed with ease, to prevent any profanation.—Place. Where the tabernacle shall be fixed, you shall offer sacrifice, and I will hear you. The ark was afterwards deposited in the temple, where alone the Jews were, consequently, allowed to sacrifice. H.—Samuel offered victims at Mespha and Ramatha, by the dispensation of God. 1 K. vii. 9. 17. M.

VER. 25. Defiled; because done in opposition to God's order, who required, on this occasion, the utmost simplicity, to prevent any undue veneration. Iron was not used about the tabernacle or temple, as brass was more common. Altars raised in haste, like that, Deut. xxvii. Jos. viii. 30, and that which was designed for the ratification of the covenant, (C. xxiv. 4,) were required to be of this construction, unpolished and simple, as was the altar erected, 1 Mac. iv. 47. But other altars were not built after this model. C.

VER. 26. Steps. These were afterwards allowed in the temple. Eze. xlii. 17. The Egyptians made use of their pyramids for altars; and some suppose, that the high places of Jude were of a similar nature, and exposed the priests, who wore long robes without breeches, to the danger of being seen. C. xxviii. 42. *The steps allowed by God were therefore very low, and enclosed with boards, after the Greek fashion. Such were used by the priest and priestess of Jupiter. Serv. in Æneid iv. 648. Linen breeches, or girdles, were afterwards required. Lev. xxxix. 27. and Ex. xxviii. 42. C.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. Judgments, or laws directing the civil conduct of the Israelites. M.

VER. 2. Servant, or slave. A man might sell himself and his children. But if they were females, under age, God prescribes how they are to be treated. v. 7.—Six years: in case he were bought immediately after the expiration of the Sabbath law: none could be detained for a longer period. If a person lost his liberty in the fourth year after the general release, he would recover it in the space of two or three years at latest. H. Bonfrevre.

VER. 3. Raiment. Heb. Gaph may signify also the body. "If he come (with his body) alone, let him so depart." Sept. C.

VER. 6. To the gods: Elohim. That is, to the judges, or magistrates, authorized by God. Ch.—In a matter of such consequence, great deliberation was requisite.—Posts, of his own house. This ceremony tended to punish the slave for neglecting his liberty, and shewed, that he should not pass the threshold any more without his master's leave.—For ever; till the year of Jubilee, when all the Hebrews were to be set free. Lev. xxv. 40. M.

6 His master shall bring him to the gods, and he shall be set to the door and the posts, and he shall bore his ear through with an awl: and he shall be his servant for ever.

7 If any man sell his daughter to be a servant, she shall not go out as bond-women are wont to go out.

8 If she displease the eyes of her master to whom she was delivered, he shall let her go: but he shall have no power to sell her to a foreign nation, if he despise her.

9 But if he have betrothed her to his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters.

10 And if he take another wife for him, he shall provide her a marriage, and raiment, neither shall he refuse the price of her chastity.

11 If he do not these three things, she shall go out free without money.

12 *He that striketh a man with a will to kill him, shall be put to death.

13 But he that did not lie in wait for him, but God delivered him into his hands: 'I will appoint thee a place to which he must flee.

14 If a man kill his neighbour on set purpose, and by lying in wait for him: thou shalt take him away from my altar that he may die.

15 He that striketh his father or mother, shall be put to death.

16 He that shall steal a man, and sell him, being convicted of the guilt, shall be put to death.

17 *He that curseth his father or mother, shall die the death.

18 If men quarrel, and the one strike his neighbour

* Lev. xxiv. 17.—^a Deut. xix. 2.—^b Lev. xx. 9. Prov. xx. 20. Mat. xv. 4. Mark vii. 10.

VER. 7. Go out, to work in the fields, according to Grotius; or rather, to enjoy her liberty. A father who sold his daughter, always expected that she should be the wife of the purchaser, or of his son. If this did not take place, she was free after six years, or before, if her master died. Constantine sanctioned the power of the Romans to sell their children. The Phrygians and Thebans had the like custom. C.

VER. 9. Daughters. When she is old enough to be married, he shall give her a dowry like his own daughter, or like a free woman. H.

VER. 10. Marriage. This seems to insinuate that she was divorced: but the best commentators suppose, that the introduction of the second wife was not to infringe the rights of the first. Heb. "he shall not diminish her food, raiment, and dwelling," but treat her as his wife. The Athenians required husbands to visit their wives thrice a month.—Price, &c. A sufficient dowry, or the rights of marriage; "her company," (omilian.) Sept.

VER. 12. With a will. The Heb. and Sept. do not express this, but the context shews it to be necessary.—Death, by the sword, as people soliciting others to idolatry were also. Eighteen crimes were punished with lapidation, ten with fire, or melted lead poured down their throats, and six with strangling. The royal tribunals always commanded the criminal's head to be struck off. C.—When the punishment is not defined, stoning must be understood; (Rabbins and Selden, Syned ii. 13.) at least when it is said, his blood be upon him. But when it is only determined that he shall die, Grotius understands he must be strangled, with towels put round the malefactor's neck, while he stands up to the knees in a dunghill; (Drusius) as he does also when he is to be killed with melted lead. Murder was punished by the ancient Greeks with exile. Plato, &c. "At that time it was deemed unlawful to inflict a capital punishment upon any, who, however criminal, were still men." Lartant 2. But as these crimes became more frequent, God enacts this law of retaliation, blood for blood. Gen. ix. 6. Ten paces from the place of execution, the criminal Hebrew had to confess his sin. Maimon. C.

VER. 13. God. When a person was slain undesignedly, the Providence of God was to be adored in silence, as nothing happens without his permission. H. See Num. xxv. 6.

VER. 14. Avlar, if he should flee thither for safety. No asylum was allowed to such murderers. Thus Joab was slain by Solomon. 3 K. ii. 31. M.

VER. 15. Striketh, even though death should not ensue. But some require a grievous wound, and that the son should be twice admonished. Deut. xxi. 18. Parricide seemed a crime so shocking and unnatural, that neither Moses nor Solon made any express law against it.

VER. 17. Curseth, or speaketh injuriously. The Athenians put such in prison with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepeth his bed:

19 If he rise again and walk abroad upon his staff, he that struck him shall be quit, yet so that he make restitution for his work, and for his expenses upon the physicians.

20 He that striketh his bond-man, or bond-woman, with a rod, and they die under his hands, shall be guilty of the crime.

21 But if the party remain alive a day or two, he shall not be subject to the punishment, because it is his money.

22 If men quarrel, and one strike a woman with child, and she miscarry indeed, but live herself: he shall be answerable for so much damage as the woman's husband shall require, and as arbiters shall award.

23 But if her death ensue thereupon, he shall render life for life,

24 *Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot,

25 Burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.

26 If any man strike the eye of his man-servant or maid-servant, and leave them but one eye, he shall let them go free for the eye which he put out.

27 Also if he strike out a tooth of his man-servant or maid-servant, he shall in like manner make them free.

28 If an ox gore a man or a woman, and they die, he shall be stoned: and his flesh shall not be eaten, but the owner of the ox shall be quit.

29 But if the ox was wont to push with his horn yesterday, and the day before, and they warned his master, and he did not shut him up, and he shall kill a man or a woman: then the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death.

30 And if they set a price upon him, he shall give for his life whatsoever is laid upon him.

31 If he have gored a son, or a daughter, he shall fall under the like sentence.

32 If he assault a bond-man or bond-woman, he shall give thirty sicles of silver to their master, and the ox shall be stoned.

* Lev. xxiv. 20. Deut. xix. 21. Mat. v. 38.

VER. 19. Staff, as people in health do, or even as a convalescent. In the mean time the other person was confined, and subjected to the law of retaliation, if the sick man lost either limb or life, v. 24. C.

VER. 21. Money, which purchased the slave. Hence, as he will be punished in some degree, and it is not absolutely certain that the slave died of his wounds, his master shall not be put to death. "They are slaves, (says Seneca, ep. 47,) but they are our fellow-slaves." We have one common origin, and one master over us all. Job xxxi. 13. H.—Many nations tolerated the murder of slaves by their masters. But this was contrary to reason and humanity, (C.) and condemned by many of the Roman laws. Christen.

VER. 22. But live herself. So Josephus also reads, Ant. iv. 8. But Philo and the Sept. have, "of a child unborn;" and v. 23. "But if the child be formed, (ἐξεκονισμένην, animated and organized) he shall give soul for soul;" as if all were referred to the child, which the Vulg. explains of the mother. To destroy the life of either was punished with death. "She who first taught the art of expelling the tender fetus, deserved to perish by her own malice," Ovid. C.—The precise time when the soul begins to animate the body is so very uncertain, that, after conception, the person who should cause a miscarriage wilfully, would expose himself to incur the guilt of murder. Josephus, c. Ap. ii. shews how the Jews abhorred such wickedness. The Romans punished it with death. H.—Homicidii festinatio est prohibere nasci. Tert. apol. Onkelos says, that "if the mother should not die of the stroke, the offender was to satisfy the husband by paying a fine, to be awarded by the husband, or by the judges: but in case the mother died, he should render life for life:" (C.) in which decision he agrees with the Vulg. H.—The Heb. is ambiguous, "If death ensue not." C.

VER. 24. Eye. "This law tended to restrain, not to encourage, fury and revenge." S. Aug. c. Faust. xix. 25. Some explain it, as if a sum of money

33 If a man open a pit, and dig one, and cover it not, and an ox or an ass fall into it, 34 The owner of the pit shall pay the price of the beasts: and that which is dead shall be his own.

35 If one man's ox gore another man's ox, and he die: they shall sell the live ox, and shall divide the price, and the carcass of that which died they shall part between them:

36 But if he knew that his ox was wont to push yesterday, and the day before, and his master did not keep him in; he shall pay ox for ox, and shall take the whole carcass.

CHAP. XXII.

The punishment of theft and other trespasses. The law of lending without usury, of taking pledges, of reverence to superiors, and of paying tithes.

IF any man steal an ox or a sheep, and kill or sell it: he shall restore five oxen for one ox, ^b and four sheep for one sheep.

2 If a thief be found breaking open a house or undermining it, and be wounded so as to die: he that slew him shall not be guilty of blood.

3 But if he did this when the sun is risen, he hath committed murder, and he shall die. If he have not wherewith to make restitution for the theft, he shall be sold.

4 If that which he stole be found with him, alive, either ox, or ass, or sheep: he shall restore double.

5 If any man hurt a field or a vineyard, and put in his beast to feed upon that which is other men's: he shall restore the best of whatsoever he hath in his own field, or in his vineyard, according to the estimation of the damage.

6 If a fire breaking out light upon thorns, and catch stacks of corn, or corn standing in the fields, he that kindled the fire shall make good the loss.

7 If a man deliver money, or any vessel unto his friend to keep, and they be stolen away from him that received them: if the thief be found, he shall restore double:

8 If the thief be not known, the master of the house shall be brought to the gods, and shall swear that he did not lay his hand upon his neighbour's goods, could only be required, equivalent to the ransom of an eye, in case a person should be under a necessity of losing or of redeeming it. Muis. Jonathan.—Retaliation was not left to the injured party's discretion. The judge was to decide. Christ enjoins what is more perfect, ordering us to turn the left cheek, when we have received a blow on the right. The canon law inflicts the punishment of retaliation upon the calumniator. C.

VER. 28. Stoned, that he may do no more harm, and that the owner may be punished at least by this loss. H.—Sentence was passed by the 23 judges. E. The Roman law, the animal which struck a man was forfeited to him; (C.) and its master had to make good all damages. Justinian iv. 9.

VER. 32. Bondman, &c. of any of those uncircumcised nations, (Jonathan) whom it was lawful to put to death; and hence their life was esteemed of less value. H.—Sicles, Sept. "didrachmas." This was the price of a slave, for which our Saviour was sold: that of a free-man was double. C.

CHAP. XXII. VER. 1. Five oxen; because they are of greater value than sheep. Theodor.—As these things may easily be stolen, a heavier fine is imposed than on those who steal money. The Scythians punish theft with the utmost severity. Grot.—All these punishments, till the 25th chapter, were inflicted by the judge. T.

VER. 2. Blood. The reason is, because it could not easily be known whether the thief had not a design upon the life of the people in the house; and therefore, the law gave them authority to defend themselves. But they were not authorized to kill the thief designedly. The laws of Athens and of Rome, permitted nocturnal robbers to be slain, at least when they came armed. Plato de leg. ix. &c. To defend our goods or honour, by killing the aggressor, is contrary to justice and reason. C.

VER. 4. Double. This is an exception from the general law, v. 1, (C.) because he can more easily make restitution, as he has not sold or destroyed the thing. D.

VER. 8. Gods. "In the presence of the Lord." Sept.

9 To do any fraud, either in ox, or in ass, or sheep, or raiment, or any thing that may bring damage: the cause of both parties shall come to the gods: and if they give judgment, he shall restore double to his neighbour.

10 If a man deliver ass, ox, sheep, or any beast, to his neighbour's custody, and it die, or be hurt, or be taken by enemies, and no man saw it:

11 There shall be an oath between them, that he did not put forth his hand to his neighbour's goods: and the owner shall accept of the oath, and he shall not be compelled to make restitution.

12 ^aBut if it were taken away by stealth, he shall make the loss good to the owner.

13 If it were eaten by a beast, let him bring to him that which was slain, and he shall not make restitution.

14 If a man borrow of his neighbour any of these things, and it be hurt or die, the owner not being present, he shall be obliged to make restitution.

15 But if the owner be present, he shall not make restitution, especially if it were hired, and came for the hire of his work.

16 ^bIf a man seduce a virgin not yet espoused, and lie with her: he shall endow her, and have her to wife.

17 If the maid's father will not give her to him, he shall give money according to the dowry, which virgins are wont to receive.

18 Wizards thou shalt not suffer to live.

19 Whosoever copulateth with a beast, shall be put to death.

20 ^cHe that sacrificeth to gods, shall be put to death, save only to the Lord.

21 Thou shalt not molest a stranger, nor afflict him: for yourselves also were strangers in the land of Egypt.

22 ^dYou shall not hurt a widow or an orphan.

23 If you hurt them, they will cry out to me, and I will hear their cry:

24 And my rage shall be enkindled, and I will strike you with the sword, and your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless.

25 If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor, that dwelleth with thee, thou shalt not be hard upon them as an extortioner, nor oppress them with usuries.

26 ^eIf thou take of thy neighbour a garment in pledge, thou shalt give it him again before sun-set.

27 For that same is the only thing, wherewith he is covered, the clothing of his body, neither hath he any other to sleep in: if he cry to me, I will hear him, because I am compassionate.

28 Thou shalt not speak ill of the gods, and ^fthe prince of thy people thou shalt not curse.

29 Thou shalt not delay to pay thy tithes and thy first-fruits: ^gthou shalt give the first-born of thy sons to me.

30 Thou shalt do the same with the first-born of thy oxen also and sheep: seven days let it be with its dam: the eighth day thou shalt give it to me.

31 You shall be holy men to me: ^hthe flesh that beasts have tasted of before, you shall not eat, but shall cast it to the dogs.

CHAP. XXIII.

Laws for judges: the rest of the seventh year, and day: three principal feasts to be solemnized every year: the promise of an angel, to conduct and protect them: idols are to be destroyed.

THOU shalt not receive the voice of a lie: neither shalt thou join thy hand to bear false witness for a wicked person.

2 Thou shalt not follow the multitude to do evil: neither shalt thou yield in judgment, to the opinion of the most part, to stray from the truth.

3 Neither shalt thou favour a poor man in judgment.

4 ⁱIf thou meet thy enemy's ox or ass going astray, bring it back to him.

5 If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lie underneath his burden, thou shalt not pass by, but shalt lift him up with him.

6 Thou shalt not go aside in the poor man's judgment.

7 Thou shalt fly lying. ^kThe innocent and just person thou shalt not put to death: because I abhor the wicked.

8 ^lNeither shalt thou take bribes, which even blind the wise, and pervert the words of the just.

9 Thou shalt not molest a stranger, for you know the hearts of strangers: ^mfor you also were strangers in the land of Egypt.

VER. 9. Damage. Heb. "thing lost, which another challengeth . . . and whom the judges condemn, he," &c. If the person who had deposited a thing, pretended that the one produced was not the same, or not equally good, and failed in proving the charge, he was liable to pay double its value. C.

VER. 12. Stealth. of the person to whom it was entrusted, or by his connivance, as the Heb. manu, (de cum eo) "from with him," intimates. M.

VER. 13. Slain. Or any part of its mangled remains, in proof of his assertion. Syr.

VER. 14. Restitution. It is to be presumed he was guilty of some negligence. C.

VER. 15. Especially, &c. This is a third case, in which the person who lends, suffers all the loss, in consideration of the money which he had received. Others explain, "If he be a hired servant, he shall pay out of his wages." Syr. Grotius.

VER. 17. Money. Fifty sicles, as it is expressed, Deut. xxii. 29. If the maid were of high birth, the magistrates might inflict other punishments on the seducer.

VER. 18. Wizards. Heb. "a witch." Women are more given to such delusions, which imply an apostasy from God to serve the devil, and disturb the republic.

VER. 20. Death. Heb. "shall be anathema," (erom) which denoted utter destruction both of the person and of his goods. Jonat. 1 K. xv. 8.

VER. 21. Were strangers. The Celtes punished with death the murderer of a stranger, while they only banished him who had murdered a citizen. C.

VER. 24. Fatherless. Thus God will retaliate upon the oppressors of the poor. H.

VER. 25. Poor. Such are often most in want. Usury is not lawful, even with respect to the rich. The Heb. terms it a bita. M.—"What is usury, said Cato, but to kill a man." The Romans required thieves to restore double, but usurers were to render four times as much as they had taken. Varro Rustic. l.—Restitution is prescribed, 2 Esd. v. 11. Some Calvinists have stood up in its defence, in opposition to the Scripture, fathers, and Councils of the Catholic Church. Lend, hoping to gain nothing by it. Lu. vi. 35. "Let him who loves money, . . . lend (in the persons of the poor) to Him who says, Give, and it shall be given to you." S. Leo ser. The Jews themselves have reprobated usury in any use. C.

VER. 28. Gods. Judges, priests, &c. Josephus and Philo say, we must not speak ill of strange gods, lest the Gentiles should take occasion to blaspheme the true God, and that we may be farther removed from the danger of taking the name of God in vain, and losing that respect which we owe to it.

VER. 29. Tithes. Heb. "thy plenitude, (first-fruits and tithes) and thy tears;" (or liquors distilled from odoriferous trees) in a word, all that is most excellent. Censorinus (de die nat.) says, excellently well: "They who acknowledged that they had received food, a country, light, and even their very persons, from the bounty of the gods, failed not to consecrate a part of all to the gods, . . . to the temples and chapels, where they worshipped them." C.

VER. 31. Beasts. "Wild beasts." Sept.—This was to encourage humanity. Theodoret.

CHAP. XXIII. VER. 1. Lie, by countenancing calumny. Judges must never do any thing which they know to be unjust, whatever the witnesses may assert. The person who speaks against his neighbour, would injure him, if he had an opportunity. Quintel.—Heb. "Thou shalt not raise a false report." H.

VER. 3. Favour. Mercy would then be contrary to justice. Ps. lxxi. 2. S. Aug. q. 88.

VER. 8. Bribes, which naturally induce the receiver to shew favour, and therefore cannot be too carefully avoided. The Athenians put to death those who bribed the judges, and required the latter to restore ten-fold. C.

VER. 9. The hearts. You have experienced what sorrow and misery they feel. M

10 Six years thou shalt sow thy ground, and shalt gather the corn thereof.

11 "But the seventh year thou shalt let it alone, and suffer it to rest, that the poor of thy people may eat, and whatsoever shall be left, let the beasts of the field eat it: so shalt thou do with thy vineyard and thy oliveyard.

12 Six days thou shalt work: the seventh day thou shalt cease, that thy ox and thy ass may rest: and the son of thy handmaid and the stranger may be refreshed.

13 Keep all things that I have said to you. And by the name of strange gods you shall not swear, neither shall it be heard out of your mouth.

14 Three times every year you shall celebrate feasts to me.

15 Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread. "Seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee, in the time of the month of new corn, when thou didst come forth out of Egypt: "thou shalt not appear empty before me.

16 And the feast of the harvest of the first-fruits of thy work, whatsoever thou hast sown in the field. The feast also in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in all thy corn out of the field.

17 "Thrice a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God.

18 Thou shalt not sacrifice the blood of my victim upon heaven, neither shall the fat of my solemnity remain until the morning.

19 "Thou shalt carry the first-fruits of the corn of thy ground to the house of the Lord thy God. "Thou shalt not boil a kid in the milk of his dam.

20 Behold I will send my angel, who shall go before thee, and keep thee in thy journey, and bring thee into the place that I have prepared.

21 Take notice of him, and hear his voice, and do not think him one to be contemned: for he will not forgive when thou hast sinned, and my name is in him.

22 "But if thou wilt hear his voice, and do all that I speak, I will be an enemy to thy enemies, and will afflict them that afflict thee.

23 "And my angel shall go before thee, and shall bring thee in unto the Amorrite, and the Hethite, and the Pherezite, and the Chanaanite, and the Hevite, and the Jebuzite, whom I will destroy.

24 Thou shalt not adore their gods, nor serve them. Thou shalt not do their works, but shalt destroy them, and break their statues.

25 And you shall serve the Lord your God, that I may bless your bread and your waters, and may take away sickness from the midst of thee.

26 There shall not be one fruitless nor barren in thy land: I will fill the number of thy days.

27 I will send my fear before thee, and will destroy all the people to whom thou shalt come: and will turn the backs of all thy enemies before thee.

28 "Sending out hornets before, that shall drive away the Hevite, and the Chanaanite, and the Hethite, before thou come in.

29 I will not cast them out from thy face in one year; lest the land be brought into a wilderness, and the beasts multiply against thee.

30 By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, till thou be increased, and dost possess the land.

31 And I will set thy bounds from the Red Sea, to the sea of the Palestines, and from the desert to the river: I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hands, and will drive them out from before you.

32 "Thou shalt not enter into league with them, nor with their gods.

33 Let them not dwell in thy land, lest perhaps they make thee sin against me, if thou serve their gods; which, undoubtedly, will be a scandal to thee.

VER. 11. Year. Thus God was pleased to teach them to place entire confidence in him, and to compassionate the distress of the poor. Most people suppose, that the sabbatic year commenced in autumn; as otherwise the land would have remained without any harvest two years. This law began to be observed the 7th year after Josue crossed the Jordan. Jerusalem was thrice besieged during the sabbatic years. Jer. xxiv. 8. 1 Mac. vi. 51. See Josep. Ant. xii. 14. xiv. 28. God blessed the 6th year, so that it produced as much as three. Lev. xxv. 21. C.—On the feast of tabernacles, (in September) at the beginning of the 7th year, Deuteronomy was to be read aloud to all the people, the Hebrew slaves might obtain their liberty, and if a person could not restore what he had borrowed, it was to be remitted for ever. Deut. xv. and xxxi. 19. T.

VER. 13. Name. Hence it is supposed, the Jews have given abusive titles to the idols; as they call Beelzebub the god-fly, &c. No respect was to be shewn to them. C.

VER. 14. Three. Women are not here mentioned: but they are, Deut. xxxi. 12. Children under 13, were exempted from the obligation, according to the Caraites. Men from 20 to 60, not lawfully hindered, were bound to appear. Levit. xxvii. 3.

VER. 15. Empty. But shalt offer something in sacrifice, and for the support of the Levites, freely. Deut. xvi. 10. At the Passover, the first-fruits of barley were to be offered, as those of wheat would be ready at Pentecost. The third feast, was that of tabernacles, at the conclusion of the civil year. Presents were to be made to God, in testimony of their submission to him; as they were to the kings of the east, by their subjects. Tavernier, Perse, iv. 16. See 1 K. x. 27. 1 Par. xviii. 2.—A sixtieth part of the fruits, at least, was carried to the temple. They consisted of wheat, barley, grapes, figs, apricots, olives, and dates. The king himself carried his basket, and when the solemn procession arrived at the temple, the Levites began to sing the Ps. xxix. I will extol thee, O Lord, &c. After which, the people repeated the words of Deut. xxvi. 3.; and having given their baskets to the priests (v. 4.) recited parts of the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th verses. C.—God. Here the Sept. add, "For when I shall have cast the Gentiles from before thy face, and extended thy limits."

VER. 18. Thou, &c. This has a reference to the feast of the Passover, v. 15. (Onkelos) as well as the following verse. C.

VER. 19. Dam. The paschal victim must not be so young as to be still suckled. The Sam. subjoins, "Because that would be like immolating an animal found dead, and the God of Jacob hates it." C.—Some imagine that this law alludes to a superstitious custom of the pagans, (Spencer Rit. ii. 8.) or it forbids eating animals while they are, as it were, all milk, not eight days old. Rivet.

VER. 20. Angel; my only son. Philo.—S. Paul says, they tempted Jesus Christ, (1 Cor. x. 9.) who is styled, the angel of the covenant. Mal. iii. 1. Some apply this to Josue, others to S. Michael, who, from the cloud, conducted the army of Israel. C.

VER. 21. Forgive. Dimittet, as well as the Heb. and Sept., may signify, "he will not abandon." H.—My name. Moses, Josue, and still more our Saviour, acted in the name and by the authority of God the Father.

VER. 25. Waters, or all things necessary for your sustenance.

VER. 26. Fruitless. Heb. may also be, "miscarrying."—Days. An untimely death was a judgment of God on the wicked, though sometimes he chooses to draw his elect quickly out of this dangerous world. Wisd. iv. 11.

VER. 27. Destroy. Heb. "fill with consternation."

VER. 28. Hornets, or wasps. Wisd. xii. 8. Josue (xxiv. 12.) assures us this was verified. Thus scorpions forced the Ethiopians to abandon their country and flies and wasps drove away the Mysians and Phasclides. See Bochart iv. 18. The latter people were of Phœnician extraction, and probably fled before Josue. Most of the Chanaanites withdrew into Africa; some perhaps into America. C.

VER. 29. Beasts. Herod the great killed many in hunting. Josep. Bel. i. 16. Two bears rushed upon the children, 4 K. ii. 24. How much would they have increased in all the countries from the Euphrates to the Nile, had they been destitute of any other inhabitants but the Hebrews, (C.) many of whom perished in the desert!

VER. 33. Scandal. If you have any society with these nations, it will turn to your ruin, which was but too literally manifested afterwards.

CHAP. XXIV.

Moses writeth his law; and after offering sacrifices, sprinkleth the blood of the testament upon the people: then goeth up the mountain, which God covereth with a fiery cloud.

AND he said to Moses: Come up to the Lord, thou, and Aaron, Nadab and Abiu, and seventy of the ancients of Israel, and you shall adore afar off.

2 And Moses alone shall come up to the Lord, but they shall not come nigh; neither shall the people come up with him.

3 So Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice: We will do all the words of the Lord, which he hath spoken.

4 And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord: and rising in the morning, he built an altar at the foot of the mount, and twelve titles according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

5 And he sent young men of the children of Israel, and they offered holocausts, and sacrificed pacific victims of calves to the Lord.

6 Then Moses took half of the blood, and put it into bowls; and the rest he poured upon the altar.

7 And taking the book of the covenant, he read it in the hearing of the people: and they said: All things that the Lord hath spoken, we will do, we will be obedient.

8 And he took the blood and sprinkled it upon the people, and he said: "This is the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words.

9 Then Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abiu, and seventy of the ancients of Israel went up:

10 And they saw the God of Israel: and under his feet as it were a work of sapphire stone, and as the heaven, when clear.

11 Neither did he lay his hand upon those of the children of Israel, that retired afar off, and they saw God, and they did eat and drink.

12 And the Lord said to Moses: Come up to me into CHAP. XXIV. VER. 1. You, Aaron, &c. The people had heard the voice of the Lord, as it were the sound of thunder, giving the foregoing commands; which Moses explains to them distinctly (v. 3,) by the mouth of Aaron; and afterwards draws up a memorial of their solemn ratification. H.

VER. 4. Titles. That is, pillars; (Ch.) or altars, round that made of turf; (C. xl. 24,) which represented God. Part of the blood was poured upon this altar, and the rest upon the Hebrews, to remind them, that if they proved rebellious, their blood should be spilt. C.

VER. 5. Holocausts: whole burnt-offerings: in which the whole sacrifice was consumed with fire, upon the altar. Ch.—It is not said that these young men were to officiate as priests. Moses acted alone in this capacity, pouring the blood.—Calves, and he-goats also. Heb. ix. 19. This book was also sprinkled with the blood (C.) mixed with water; for which purpose scarlet wool and hyssop were employed, as S. Paul learnt from tradition, or by inspiration. H.

VER. 8. Covenant. Thus Christ confirmed the new covenant, by the effusion of his blood. T.—This is daily renewed upon our altars for ever. C.—Our Saviour alludes to this transaction in the consecration of the chalice. D.—If wine alone had been substituted instead of blood, the figure would have surpassed the reality. Ischius. W.

VER. 11. Saw God, under the appearance of a burning fire, v. 17. They beheld some rays of his glory, but no distinct similitude, (Deut. iv. 16,) though Cajetan thinks that God appeared in a human form. C.—Drink. They made a feast of thanksgiving for so great a favour, and for the preservation of their lives, after beholding such a glorious apparition. Vat.

VER. 14. Wait ye. They returned soon to the camp; and the people not perceiving Moses with them, and supposing he was dead, made the golden calf.

VER. 16. Called him, to come up still higher, while Josue remained there.

the mount, and be there; and I will give thee tables of stone, and the law, and the commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them.

13 Moses rose up, and his minister Josue: and Moses going up into the mount of God, 14 Said to the ancients: Wait ye here till we return to you. You have Aaron and Hur with you: if any question shall arise, you shall refer it to them.

15 And when Moses was gone up, a cloud covered the mount.

16 And the glory of the Lord dwelt upon Sinai, covering it with a cloud six days: and the seventh day he called him out of the midst of the cloud.

17 And the sight of the glory of the Lord, was like a burning fire upon the top of the mount, in the eyes of the children of Israel.

18 And Moses entering into the midst of the cloud, went up into the mountain: ^bAnd he was there forty days and forty nights.

CHAP. XXV.

Offerings prescribed for making the tabernacle, the ark, the candlestick, &c.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel,^a that they bring first-fruits to me: of every man that offereth of his own accord, you shall take them.

3 And these are the things you must take: Gold, and silver, and brass,

4 Violet and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine linen, and goats' hair,

5 And rams' skins dyed red, and violet skins, and setim-wood:

6 Oil to make lights: spices for ointment, and for sweet-smelling incense:

7 Onyx stones, and precious stones to adorn the ephod, and the rational.

8 And they shall make me a sanctuary, and I will dwell in the midst of them:

9 ^aAccording to all the likeness of the tabernacle which I will shew thee, and of all the vessels for the service thereof: and thus you shall make it:

^c Infra xxxv. 5.—^d Heb. ix. 2.

CHAP. XXV. VER. 2. First-fruits: offerings, of some of the best and choicest of their goods. Ch.—This was the first time such a voluntary offering was made by the Hebrews. M.—It is a lesson for Christians to be liberal for God's service. W.

VER. 4. Scarlet twice dyed. Aq. and Sym. have transparent. This colour is often confounded with purple, as our Saviour's robe is styled scarlet by S. Matt. xxvii. 28, and purple by S. John xix. 2. It was dyed with a worm called shani in Heb. S. Jer. ep. ad Fabiol.—Fine linen, byssus. Heb. shesh, "of six folds;" or it may mean cotton, which was highly esteemed by the ancients; (Arab. version. Herod.) and it is not probable that Moses would have passed over it unnoticed. C.

VER. 5. Setim-wood. The wood of a tree that grows in the wilderness, which is said to be incorruptible, (Ch.) as the Sept. intimate. It is perhaps the Acacia, which is very black and hard. S. Jer. in Joel iii. 18, says it resembles our white thorn.

VER. 7. Onyx, emeralds. C.—The ephod and the rational. The ephod was the high priest's upper vestment; and the rational his breast-plate, in which were twelve gems, &c. Ch.—Ephod means a kind of girdle or stole, peculiar to priests, or used by others only of the highest distinction, (C.) and in religious solemnities. S. Jer. ad Marcel. Josephus (Ant. ii. 8,) describes it as different from what it was in the days of Moses. Many other alterations had then taken place; the Urim and Thummim were disused, &c. The Pallium is in imitation of the high priest's ephod. The rational is so called, because by it the high priest was enabled to give his oracles. C. xxviii. 15. C.—The precise import of the Heb. cheshen, which Protestants render breast plate, is not known. It was certainly fastened on the ephod over the breast, and consisted of 12 stones, on which the names of the 12 patriarchs were engraven. H.

VER. 8. Sanctuary, or tabernacle, to serve as a portable temple. Such alone were probably used at that time. The high priest entered into this holy place once a year. C.

10 Frame an ark of setim-wood, the length whereof shall be of two cubits and a half; the breadth, a cubit and a half; the height, likewise, a cubit and a half.

11 And thou shalt overlay it with the purest gold, within and without; and over it thou shalt make a golden crown round about:

12 And four golden rings, which thou shalt put at the four corners of the ark: let two rings be on the one side, and two on the other.

13 Thou shalt make bars also of setim-wood, and shalt overlay them with gold.

14 And thou shalt put them in through the rings that are in the sides of the ark, that it may be carried on them:

15 And they shall be always in the rings, neither shall they at any time be drawn out of them.

16 And thou shalt put in the ark the testimony which I will give thee.

17 Thou shalt make also a propitiatory of the purest gold: the length thereof shall be two cubits and a half, and the breadth a cubit and a half.

18 Thou shalt make also two cherubims of beaten gold, on the two sides of the oracle.

19 Let one cherub be on the one side, and the other on the other

20 Let them cover both sides of the propitiatory, spreading their wings, and covering the oracle, and let them look one towards the other, their faces being turned towards the propitiatory wherewith the ark is to be covered.

21 In which thou shalt put the testimony that I will give thee.

22 Thence will I give orders, and will speak to thee over the propitiatory, and from the midst of the two cherubims, which shall be upon the ark of the testimony, all things which I will command the children of Israel by thee.

23 Thou shalt make a table also of setim-wood, of two cubits in length, and a cubit in breadth, and a cubit and a half in height.

24 And thou shalt overlay it with the purest gold: and thou shalt make to it a golden ledge round about.

25 And to the ledge itself a polished crown, four inches high; and over the same another little golden crown.

26 Thou shalt prepare also four golden rings, and shalt put them in the four corners of the same table, over each foot.

27 Under the crown shall the golden rings be, that the bars may be put through them, and the table may be carried.

28 The bars also themselves thou shalt make of setim-wood, and shalt overlay them with gold, to bear up the table.

29 Thou shalt prepare also dishes, and bowls, censers, and cups, wherein the libations are to be offered, of the purest gold.

30 And thou shalt set upon the table loaves of proposition in my sight always.

31 Thou shalt make also a candlestick of beaten work, of the finest gold, the shaft thereof, and the branches, the cups, and the bowls, and the lilies going forth from it.

32 Six branches shall come out of the sides, three out of one side, and three out of the other.

33 Three cups as it were nuts to every branch, and a bowl withal, and a lily: and three cups likewise of

VER. 10. Ark, to contain the tables of the law, as a constant memorial of the alliance made between God and his people, v. 16. In, or on the side of it, were also placed the rod of Aaron, (Num. xvii. 10.) and the golden urn, containing manna, Heb. ix. 3. Hence the pagans perhaps took occasion to keep their secret mysteries in an ark, cista secretorum. Apul. Met. 2. C.—The ark was three feet nine inches long, two feet three inches high, and as much in breadth. H.

VER. 11. Gold (aurum). Our method of gilding was not yet discovered.—Crown, or border, resembling "waves." (kumati) Sept.

VER. 14. Carried on them, when exposed in solemn processions. These were covered along with the ark: and other bars were used to remove the ark during the journeys in the desert. Num. iv. 6. C.

VER. 16. Testimony, the law which testifies the will of God to us. M.—An authentic record. Jeremias (xxxii. 11.) uses præceptum in the same sense. C.

VER. 17. A propitiatory: a covering for the ark; called a propitiatory, or mercy-seat, because the Lord, who was supposed to sit there upon the wings of the cherubims, with the ark for his footstool, from thence shewed mercy. It is also called the oracle, ver. 18 and 20, because, from thence, God gave his orders and his answers. Ch.—It was the lid or covering of the ark, from kapha, "to cover, efface," &c. C.—Here the hanan, or cloud representing God, rested, (Lev. xvi. 2.) and the divine oracles were addily given: for which reason, God is said to sit upon the cherubims, the mercy-seat being his footstool. Ps. lxxix. 2.

VER. 18. Cherubims, symbolic figures, which Moses does not perfectly describe, and therefore we cannot pretend to know their exact form. Some represent them as young men, with their wings joined over the propitiatory, in a contrary direction to those of birds, in order to form a throne for God, and bending towards Him, with profound respect. Others only admit their heads, with six wings: while many suppose, that they resembled those compounded figures mentioned, Ecce. i. 5. x. 20. They denote some extraordinary figure not found in nature. 3 K. vi. 29. An order of angels is known by this name. Yet the four animals, or cherubims, represent the saints. Apoc. v. 8. 10. The different forms under which they appear, set before us their various perfections. Their wings denote agility, &c. The Egyptians adored Anubis, under the form of a man, with a dog's head. Isis had the head of a cow, Apis that of a bull. They placed a sphinx at the entrance of their temples, to shew that their theology was enigmatical. God condescended perhaps to satisfy the inclinations of his people, by representing the mysteries of religion under similar forms. Wisd. xviii. 24. C.—Would he have allowed such things, if they were so dangerous, as to be inseparable from idolatry! H.

VER. 23. A table: on which were to be placed the twelve loaves of proposition; or, as they are called in the Hebrew, the face bread; because they were always to stand before the face of the Lord in his temple: as a figure of the eucharistic sacrifice and sacrament, in the church of Christ; (Ch.) which shews that Christ must be present in the eucharist. W.—By this bread, renewed at the public expense every sabbath-day, the Israelites made profession that they were indebted for their food to God's providence; and in gratitude, offered him this sacrifice, with incense and wine, v. 29. The priests alone were to eat these loaves (1 K. xxi.) at the expiration of the week. T.

VER. 25. Polished, (interrasilum, sculptured and plain, at equal distances). Heb. "Thou shalt make all round at the top, a ledge (border) of a hand's breadth," &c. The tabernacle was the tent of God, the king of Israel: and food and lights were on that account placed before him, (C.) though he stood not in need of them. The idolatrous priests set all sorts of meats before Bel. Dan. xiv. H.

VER. 29. Dishes, (acetabulum). Properly a vessel to hold vinegar, but used for various purposes.—Bowls, or vials full of wine. Tostat.—Censers, to contain incense, &c. C. xxxvii. 16. The first term kârûth, might also mean vessels to contain the flour and oil of which these loaves were made. Num. vii. 18. The Levites made the bread themselves, (1 Par. xxii. 29.) and even sowed the corn, and did every thing about it. S. Jer. in Mal. i. 7. The second term, coputh, may denote vessels to keep incense; the third, monkuth, instruments to clean either the flour or the table, &c. All these vessels seem intended to accompany the table of shew-bread.—Cups, used for libations (C. xxxvii. 16. Num. iv. 7.) of wine, on the sabbath. Kossuth signifies a porringer or dish, like the ancient patera. Whether wine was placed on this table, we cannot determine. But we read of salt, (C.) which was to accompany all God's sacrifices. Lev. ii. 13.

VER. 30. Loaves. There were 12, containing each six pints of flour, made up in a square form, without leaven. They were placed in two rows, one above the other, and were kept separate by plates of gold. C. See Levit. xxiv. 5.

VER. 31. A candlestick. This candlestick, with its seven lamps, which was always to give light in the house of God, was a figure of the light of the Holy Ghost, and his seven-fold grace, in the sanctuary of the church of Christ. Ch.—It contained a talent of gold, or above 113 lb.; worth 5476l. sterling, including the snuffers, &c. (v. 39.) and had seven branches, adorned alternately with cups, bowls, or knobs, and lilies; (H.) or with cups, pomegranates, and lilies. The shaft was adorned with 15, the branches with only 12 of these ornaments. All was of massive gold, mokssé.—Bowls, spherulas, globes, apples, &c. C.—Thou shalt make. The Heb. thiasse, has evidently the letter i redundant, and rejected by the best MSS. Ken. Dis. i. Houbigant.

VER. 33. Cups. Heb. "cups which produce almonds or nuts;" (that is, three buds of flowers, out of which comes the stalk, as fruit does from the flower. The Heb. Gr. and Lat. languages use the word chalice, or cup, for a flower full-blown. The height of this candlestick is undetermined; but it would not exceed five feet.

the fashion of nuts in the other branch, and a bowl withal, and a lily. Such shall be the work of the six branches, that are to come out from the shaft:

34 And in the candlestick itself shall be four cups in the manner of a nut, and at every one bowls and lilies.

35 Bowls under two branches in three places, which together make six, coming forth out of one shaft.

36 And both the bowls and the branches shall be of the same beaten work of the purest gold.

37 Thou shalt make also seven lamps, and shalt set them upon the candlestick, to give light over against.

38 The snuffers also, and where the snuffings shall be put out, shall be made of the purest gold.

39 The whole weight of the candlestick, with all the furniture thereof, shall be a talent of the purest gold.

40 *Look, and make it according to the pattern that was shewn thee in the mount.

CHAP. XXVI.

The form of the tabernacle, with its appurtenances.

AND thou shalt make the tabernacle in this manner: Thou shalt make ten curtains of fine twisted linen, and violet and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, diversified with embroidery.

2 The length of one curtain shall be twenty-eight cubits; the breadth shall be four cubits. All the curtains shall be of one measure.

3 Five curtains shall be joined one to another, and the other five shall be coupled together in like manner.

4 Thou shalt make loops of violet in the sides and tops of the curtains, that they may be joined one to another.

5 Every curtain shall have fifty loops on both sides, so set on, that one loop may be against another loop, and one may be fitted to the other.

6 Thou shalt make also fifty rings of gold, wherewith the veils of the curtains are to be joined, that it may be made one tabernacle.

7 Thou shalt make also eleven curtains of goats' hair, to cover the top of the tabernacle.

8 The length of one hair-curtain shall be thirty cubits; and the breadth, four: the measure of all the curtains shall be equal.

9 Five of which thou shalt couple by themselves, and the six others thou shalt couple one to another, so as to double the sixth curtain in the front of the roof.

10 Thou shalt make also fifty loops in the edge of one curtain, that it may be joined with the other: and fifty loops in the edge of the other curtain, that it may be coupled with its fellow.

11 Thou shalt make also fifty buckles of brass, wherewith the loops may be joined, that of all there may be made one covering.

12 And that which shall remain of the curtains, that are prepared for the roof, to wit, one curtain that is over and above, with the half thereof thou shalt cover the back parts of the tabernacle.

13 And there shall hang down a cubit on the one side, and another on the other side, which is over and above in the length of the curtains, fencing both sides of the tabernacle.

14 Thou shalt make also another cover to the roof of rams' skins dyed red: and over that again another cover of violet-coloured skins.

15 Thou shalt make also the boards of the tabernacle standing upright of setim-wood.

16 Let every one of them be ten cubits in length, and in breadth one cubit and a half.

17 In the sides of the boards shall be made two mortises, whereby one board may be joined to another board: and after this manner shall all the boards be prepared.

18 Of which twenty shall be in the south side southward.

19 For which thou shalt cast forty sockets of silver, that under every board may be put two sockets at the two corners.

20 In the second side also of the tabernacle that looketh to the north, there shall be twenty boards, 21 Having forty sockets of silver, two sockets shall be put under each board.

22 But on the west side of the tabernacle thou shalt make six boards.

23 And again other two which shall be erected in the corners at the back of the tabernacle.

24 And they shall be joined together from beneath unto the top, and one joint shall hold them all. The like joining shall be observed for the two boards also that are to be put in the corners.

25 And they shall be in all eight boards, and their silver sockets sixteen, reckoning two sockets for each board.

26 Thou shalt make also five bars of setim-wood, to hold together the boards on one side of the tabernacle.

27 And five others on the other side, and as many at the west side:

* Heb. viii. 5. Acts vii. 44.

VER. 37. Against. The table of proposition on the north, and that of perfumes in the middle, before the veil. T.—The lamps might be detached from the rest, (C.) and were trimmed every evening to burn all night; but, in the day, four were extinguished. Bonfrere.

VER. 28. Put out, with the oil, &c. Nothing was to be treated with disrespect that had been dedicated to God's service. H.—Alexander adorned the temple of Apollo with a grand candlestick, resembling a tree laden with fruit; (Plin. xxxiv. 8.) and Dionysius the younger made a present of one to the prytaneum of Athens, which had 365 lamps upon it. They stood on the ground, and burnt oil, being the more necessary, as the ancient temples had generally no windows. The Egyptians, according to S. Clem. (strom. 1.) were the first who introduced them into their temples. C.—Solomon set up ten candlesticks, five on the north, and five on the south of the holy place. 3 K. vii. 49.

CHAP. XXVI. VER. 1. Twisted, for greater strength, with double threads. D.—Diversified, &c. Heb. "cherubim wrought by a skilful workman." A cherub work is one extremely diversified, and wonderful; representing birds, flowers, monsters; either in gold, wood, painting, or tapestry. When it is done with a needle, it is styled rokom, "feathers," (phanarium opus.) But when the variety of colours is done with the loom, being more ingenious, the Heb. call it esob "of an inventor." Such were these curtains.

VER. 3. Five curtains, which would cover half the tabernacle, or 20 cubits. C.—Being joined together, they remind us of fraternal charity and union; which ought to adorn the members of the church. W.

VER. 6. Rings. Hooks or taches, v. 11.

VER. 13. A cubit. As these curtains were two cubits longer, and four broader, than those more precious ones below, they hung down to the ground. Joseph. iii. 5.

VER. 14. Skins. These two were probably as large as the last, to keep out rain; (M.) though the text only specifies the roof.

VER. 17. Mortises, (incastraturæ). Heb. "tenons," which corresponded with the former. C.

VER. 19. Corners. Heb. tenons, lit. "hands," which has the same meaning as the Vulg. Some think, the sockets or bases rested on the ground, and had a point which entered into the boards, to keep them in their places. Lyrar.—The ornaments on the north and south were the same. C.

VER. 22. Six, at the western end, with two other strong boards, or pillars, to connect the whole, as they were placed at the two corners, and were half a cubit each. M.

VER. 26. Bars, 30 cubits long, on two sides, and ten on the western end, to fasten the boards.

28 And they shall be put along by the midst of the boards, from one end to the other.

29 The boards also themselves thou shalt overlay with gold, and shalt cast rings of gold to be set upon them, for places for the bars to hold together the board-work: which bars thou shalt cover with plates of gold.

30 And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle according to the pattern that was shewn thee in the mount.

31 Thou shalt make also a veil of violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine twisted linen, wrought with embroidered work and goodly variety:

32 And thou shalt hang it up before four pillars of setim-wood, which themselves also shall be overlaid with gold, and shall have heads of gold, but sockets of silver.

33 And the veil shall be hanged on with rings, and within it thou shalt put the ark of the testimony, and the sanctuary and the holy of the holies shall be divided with it.

34 And thou shalt set the propitiatory upon the ark of the testimony, in the holy of holies.

35 And the table without the veil, and over-against the table the candlestick in the south side of the tabernacle: for the table shall stand in the north side.

36 Thou shalt make also a hanging in the entrance of the tabernacle of violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine twisted linen with embroidered work.

37 And thou shalt overlay with gold five pillars of setim-wood, before which the hanging shall be drawn: their heads shall be of gold, and the sockets of brass.

CHAP. XXVII.

The altar: and the court of the tabernacle, with its hangings and pillars. Provision of oil for lamps.

THOU shalt make also an altar of setim-wood, which shall be five cubits long,^a and as many broad, that is four square, and three cubits high.

2 And there shall be horns at the four corners of the same: and thou shalt cover it with brass.

3 And thou shalt make for the uses thereof pans to receive the ashes, and tongs and flesh-hooks, and fire-pans: all its vessels thou shalt make of brass.

4 And a grate of brass in manner of a net; at the four corners of which, shall be four rings of brass,

^a Supra xxv. 40.—^b Infra xxxviii. 6.

VER. 31. A veil, to hang before the entrance of the tabernacle, at the east side, which had no boards. Within was the ark, v. 33. H.

VER. 32. Heads. Chaptrels of setim-wood, overlaid with gold,—(Vovim), not little hooks for the curtains. C.

VER. 33. The sanctuary, &c. That part of the tabernacle, which was without the veil, into which the priests daily entered, is here called the sanctuary, or holy place; that part which was within the veil, into which no one but the high priest ever went in, and he but once a year, is called the holy of holies, (literally, the sanctuaries of the sanctuary) as being the most holy of all holy places. Ch.—It occupied only one-third of the tabernacle. M.

VER. 36. Hanging, or veil, suspended on five pillars, before the sanctuary. H.—It was the other veil, which was rent at the death of Christ. Baronius observes, that Christian temples were formerly built in imitation of the Jewish tabernacle. It was a figure of the Catholic church. 1 Tim. iii. 15.

CHAP. XXVII. VER. 1. Altar, of holocausts, in the open air, before the tabernacle. T.—Four square, or five cubits in length and breadth, and three in height, which the Rabbins measure from the grate, (v. 5.) or middle of the altar's height. So high the altar was sunk in the earth, (C.) or was built of unhewn stone, on which the wood of the altar rested, being secured by plates of brass above, from the heat of the fire. It was hollow within, and had neither top nor bottom fixed to it. M.

VER. 2. H. The altar, wood. The horns were for ornament, and were made of brass. Upon them also they might hang the grate, and instruments for sacrifice. C.—Some of the pagan altars consisted of the horns of animals. (Ovid) and were designed to shew what a number of victims had been offered in their temples. Their gods had frequently horns on their heads. Spencer Rit. iii. 4.

VER. 3. Pans, &c. The Sept. have "a crown or border, for the altar, and its 5 Which thou shalt put under the hearth of the altar: and the grate shall be even to the midst of the altar.

6 Thou shalt make also two bars for the altar, of setim-wood, which thou shalt cover with plates of brass:

7 And thou shalt draw them through rings, and they shall be on both sides of the altar to carry it.

8 *Thou shalt not make it solid, but empty and hollow in the inside, as it was shewn thee in the mount.

9 Thou shalt make also the court of the tabernacle, in the south side whereof southward there shall be hangings of fine twisted linen of a hundred cubits long for one side.

10 And twenty pillars with as many sockets of brass, the heads of which, with their engraving, shall be of silver.

11 In like manner also on the north side there shall be hangings of a hundred cubits long, twenty pillars, and as many sockets of brass, and their heads with their engraving of silver.

12 But in the breadth of the court, that looketh to the west, there shall be hangings of fifty cubits, and ten pillars, and as many sockets.

13 In that breadth also of the court, which looketh to the east, there shall be fifty cubits.

14 In which there shall be for one side, hangings of fifteen cubits, and three pillars, and as many sockets.

15 And in the other side, there shall be hangings of fifteen cubits, with three pillars, and as many sockets.

16 And in the entrance of the court there shall be made a hanging of twenty cubits of violet and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine twisted linen, with embroidered work: it shall have four pillars, with as many sockets.

17 All the pillars of the court round about shall be garnished with plates of silver, silver heads, and sockets of brass.

18 In length the court shall take up a hundred cubits, in breadth fifty, the height shall be of five cubits, and it shall be made of fine twisted linen, and shall have sockets of brass.

19 All the vessels of the tabernacle for all uses and covering, and its cups, and flesh-hooks, and fire-place, or pan." Heb. also has five terms; which Calmet renders, 1. a small kettle to receive the ashes under the grate; 2. fire-shovels; 3. bowls to receive blood, (mazrokh), which term the Vulg. does not perhaps notice); 4. flesh-hooks; 5. chafing-dishes. The Protestant version has also the basins or broad cups, phulas, of the Sept. H.

VER. 5. Midst. Hanging down half way. On this, the wood designed to consume the victim, was placed. The Sept. and Vulg. refer which to the rings, and the present Heb. refers to the grate, or net. But it seems to be inaccurate. The rings were fixed about the middle of the altar's height, to the same holes, through which the bars intended for its removal were put. The altar stood upon feet, which took up half the height, and let in air below the grate, to fan the fire, and to prevent the brass from melting. All the altars described in the table of Isai, are of this nature. C.—The Sept. do not distinguish the grate from the hearth, or little altar, (arula) as they use the word hearth, escharabuth, (v. 4. and 5.) and place it about the middle of the altar, or where the feet supported the box or frame of the altar, which was almost a yard high. The hearth was therefore denote the bottom of the frame, where the grate was suspended by four rings.

VER. 9. Court. This inclosed the tabernacle, and the altar of holocausts, being 50 yards long and 25 broad. At the bottom or western end, there were ten pillars, and on the north and south 20, ornamented in the same manner, and supporting curtains of cotton. But on the eastern side, 10 yards were left, with four pillars in the middle, for an entrance, supporting a richer veil, and on either side three pillars of brass, adorned with circles of silver, as all the rest were. H.

VER. 10. Engraving. Heb. and Chal. "circles," adorning the chaptrels, (M. v. 17.) or rather the body of the pillars. The chaptrels were covered with plates of silver.

VER. 19. Tabernacle, with respect to this court; for surely the utensils pro-ceremonies, and the pins both of it and of the court, thou shalt make of brass.

20 Command the children of Israel that they bring thee the purest oil of the olives, and beaten with a pestle: that a lamp may burn always, 21 In the tabernacle of the testimony, without the veil that hangs before the testimony. And Aaron and his sons shall order it, that it may give light before the Lord until the morning. It shall be a perpetual observance throughout their successions among the children of Israel.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The holy vestments for Aaron and his sons.

TAKE unto thee also Aaron thy brother with his sons, from among the children of Israel, that they may minister to me in the priest's office: Aaron, Nadab, and Abiu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

2 And thou shalt make a holy vesture for Aaron, thy brother, for glory and for beauty.

3 And thou shalt speak to all the wise of heart, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's vestments, in which he being consecrated, may minister to me.

4 And these shall be the vestments that they shall make: A rational and an ephod, a tunic and a strait linen garment, a mitre and a girdle. They shall make the holy vestments for thy brother Aaron and his sons, that they may do the office of priesthood unto me.

5 And they shall take gold, and violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine linen.

6 And they shall make the ephod of gold, and violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine twisted linen, embroidered with divers colours.

scribed in the former chapter, were to be of gold. The Sept. do not mention the tabernacle. C.

VER. 20. Pestle. That it may be as free from dregs as possible; quasi luxurians defuizerit. Colum. xii. 50. The Heb. and Sept. are silent about the pestle. The olives must, however, be a little bruised, before they will yield their oil. H.—Always: four of the seven lamps were extinguished every morning. Josep. iii. 9. 1 K. iii. 8. Hecateus (ap. Ens. præp. ix. 4.) assures us, that a light was kept always burning in the tabernacle. The temple of Hercules, at the Struits, its priests and ceremonies, bore some resemblance with the tabernacle and usages prescribed by Moses. It was probably erected by the Phenicians. C.—“The wood seemed to be incorruptible. Women and swine are kept at a distance. White linen covers the priests at the altar; that which adorns their head is most beautiful, and brought from Pelusium. Et Pelusiaco præfulget stamine vertex. They offer incense in long ungirded robes, but the vestment in which they sacrifice, is distinguished with a Latus clavus, or with broad studs of purple, (like the Roman senators.) They go barefoot, their hair is shaved, and they observe continency, castumque cubile. They keep a perpetual fire burning on the altars. But no images or statues of the gods have filled the place with majesty and sacred fear.”

Sed nulla effigies, simulacraque nota Deorum, Majestatem locum & sacro implevere timore. Sil. Italic. iii.

VER. 21. Aaron. Here God declares that the sons of Aaron are chosen by him to perform this office. They were not anointed priests till C. xxix. 11.—Light. Thus God admonishes us to let our good works always shine before men. Bede Taber. iii. 1.

CHAP. XXVIII. VER. 1. Take, &c. Priests must be called by God, as Aaron was. Heb. v. W.

VER. 2. And beauty, that all may be filled with awe, and adore the majesty of God. C.—Our priestly vestments, which are objects of derision to the ignorant, are made so rich and beautiful for the same purpose. They have the sanction of God, by a parity of reason; and the authority of his church. H.

VER. 3. Heart. The Hebrews generally attributed to the heart, what we give to the head.—Wisdom. All good, both in the order of grace and of nature, proceeds from God.—Consecrated, as if they imparted a sort of virtue. C.

VER. 4. Rational and ephod. See C. xxv. 7.—Tunic, long robe or cloak of blue wool.—Garment, next the body, and woven very close and thick.—Mitre, like a tiara or turban of linen, or rather of byssus, or fine cotton. This was never laid aside in the temple; as, to appear uncovered was then esteemed a mark of insolence. Eneas introduced the Phrygian custom into Italy, of sacrificing with a cap on the head.—Girdle, for his under-garment, besides that which formed a part of the ephod. C.—By these vestments, we are admonished to exercise the virtues of discretion, &c. S. Jer. ep. ad Fab.

7 It shall have the two edges joined in the top on both sides, that they may be closed together.

8 The very workmanship also, and all the variety of the work, shall be of gold, and violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine twisted linen.

9 And thou shalt take two onyx stones, and shalt grave on them the names of the children of Israel:

10 Six names on one stone, and the other six on the other, according to the order of their birth.

11 With the work of an engraver, and the graving of a jeweller, thou shalt engrave them with the names of the children of Israel, set in gold and compassed about:

12 And thou shalt put them in both sides of the ephod, a memorial for the children of Israel. And Aaron shall bear their names before the Lord upon both shoulders, for a remembrance.

13 Thou shalt make also hooks of gold.

14 And two little chains of the purest gold, linked one to another, which thou shalt put into the hooks.

15 And thou shalt make the rational of judgment with embroidered work of divers colours, according to the workmanship of the ephod, of gold, violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine twisted linen.

16 It shall be four square and doubled: it shall be the measure of a span both in length and in breadth.

17 And thou shalt set in it four rows of stones: In the first row shall be a sardius stone, and a topaz, and an emerald:

18 In the second a carbuncle, a sapphire, and a jasper:

19 In the third a ligurius, an agate, and an amethyst:

20 In the fourth a chrysolite, an onyx, and a beryl. They shall be set in gold by their rows.

VER. 6. Ephod, (superhumerales.) That of the other priests was made of linen; and such were worn by Samuel, and by David, when he danced before the ark. M.

VER. 7. Together, by the hooks, under the two precious stones. Josep. "

VER. 8. Work. Heb. "all the work, and the girdle, shall be of the same" materials, and not sewed on afterwards. C.

VER. 9. Onyx. Sept. emerald. C.—Heb. shoham which the Protestants render onyx-stone. H.

VER. 10. Birth. On the right shoulder were engraven Ruben, Simeon, Juda, Dan, Nephtali, and Gad. On the left, Aser, Issachar, Zabulon, Ephraim, Manasses, and Benjamin. The high priest himself represented the tribe of Levi. M.

VER. 12. Remembrance, for both, v. 29. The sins or burdens of the people, were thus to be borne by the high priest, and he was to make intercession for them. T.

VER. 13. Hooks. Sept. aspidiscas, "imitating the form or biting of an asp." C.—Gold, on the ephod, by which the rational was suspended from the shoulders. H.

VER. 14. Linked, &c. The present Heb. has "at the ends," migbaloth. But the Vulg. seems to have read more properly k instead of g, as in C. xxvi. 4. C.

VER. 15. The rational of judgment. This part of the high priest's attire, which he wore at his breast, was called the rational of judgment; partly because it admonished both priest and people of their duty to God; by carrying the names of all their tribes in his presence; and by the Urim and Thummim, that is, doctrine and truth, which were written upon it: and partly because it gave divine answers and oracles, as if it were rational and endowed with judgment.

VER. 16. Span, or half a cubit, (Ezec. xliii. 13. 17.) formed like a purse, in which the Rabbins say the Urim and Thummim were placed. C.

VER. 17. Stones. It is difficult to ascertain the true names of these stones, interpreters are so much at variance; as they are also respecting the names of the 12 patriarchs, which were engraven upon each. They probably stood according to the order of their birth, v. 10. 21. Thus Ruben, Simeon, and Levi, would occupy the first places, upon the sardius, topaz, and emerald. See on these stones, Plin. xxvii. 5. xxxviii. 8.

VER. 18. The carbuncle, (ruby) sapphire, and jasper, (or diamond) had on them Juda, Dan, and Nephtali.

VER. 19. Ligurius, agate, and amethyst, (or eumeces, Plin. xxxvii. 7.) had Gad, Aser, and Issachar.

VER. 20. Chrysolite, (beryl or opale) onyx, (Sept. beryl; Chal. or emerald, C.) beryl, (Heb. jasper; Sept. &c. onyx) were inscribed with the names of Zabulon, Joseph, and Benjamin. In Ezec. xxviii. 13, the jasper stone comes in the sixth place, as it does in the Vulg. here. C.—The mystical interpretation of these stones, may be seen in A. Lapide. S. Epiphanius has written a learned work of the 12 precious stones. H.

21 And they shall have the names of the children of Israel: with twelve names shall they be engraved, each stone with the name of one according to the twelve tribes.

22 And thou shalt make on the rational chains, linked one to another, of the purest gold:

23 And two rings of gold, which thou shalt put in the two ends at the top of the rational.

24 And the golden chains thou shalt join to the rings, that are in the ends thereof.

25 And the ends of the chains themselves, thou shalt join together with two hooks, on both sides of the ephod, which is towards the rational.

26 Thou shalt make also two rings of gold, which thou shalt put in the top parts of the rational, in the borders that are over-against the ephod, and look towards the back parts thereof.

27 Moreover also other two rings of gold, which are to be set on each side of the ephod beneath, that looketh towards the nether joining, that the rational may be fitted with the ephod,

28 And may be fastened by the rings thereof unto the rings of the ephod with a violet fillet, that the joining artificially wrought may continue, and the rational and the ephod may not be loosed one from the other.

29 And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel in the rational of judgment upon his breast, when he shall enter into the sanctuary, a memorial before the Lord for ever.

30 And thou shalt put in the rational of judgment, Doctrine and Truth, which shall be on Aaron's breast, when he shall go in before the Lord: and he shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel on his breast, in the sight of the Lord always.

31 And thou shalt make the tunic of the ephod all of violet, 32 In the midst whereof above shall be a hole for the head, and a border round about it woven, as is wont to be made in the outmost parts of garments, that it may not easily be broken.

33 And beneath at the feet of the same tunic, round about, thou shalt make as it were pomegranates, of violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, with little bells set between:

34 So that there shall be a golden bell and a pomegranate, and again another golden bell and a pomegranate.

35 And Aaron shall be vested with it in the office of his ministry, that the sound may be heard, when he goeth in and cometh out of the sanctuary, in the sight of the Lord, and that he may not die.

36 Thou shalt make also a plate of the purest gold: wherein thou shalt grave with engraver's work, Holy to the Lord.

37 And thou shalt tie it with a violet fillet, and it shall be upon the mitre, 38 Hanging over the forehead of the high priest. And Aaron shall bear the iniquities of those things, which the children of Israel have offered and sanctified, in all their gifts and offerings. And the plate shall be always on his forehead, that the Lord may be well pleased with them.

39 And thou shalt gird the tunic with fine linen, and thou shalt make a fine linen mitre, and a girdle of embroidered work.

40 Moreover, for the sons of Aaron thou shalt prepare linen tunics, and girdles and mitres for glory and beauty:

41 And with all these things thou shalt vest Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him. And thou shalt consecrate the hands of them all, and shalt sanctify them, that they may do the office of priesthood unto me.

42 Thou shalt make also linen breeches, to cover the flesh of their nakedness, from the reins to the thighs:

43 And Aaron and his sons shall use them when they shall go into the tabernacle of the testimony, or when they approach to the altar to minister in the sanctuary, lest being guilty of iniquity they die. It shall be a law for ever to Aaron, and to his seed after him.

* Eccl. xlv. 11.

VER. 28. Another. Hence the ephod, rational, urim, &c. are used to denote the same thing. See 1 K. xxx. 7. C.

VER. 30. Doctrine and truth. Heb. Urim and Thummim: illuminations and perfections. These words, written on the rational, seem to signify the light of doctrine, and the integrity of life, with which the priests of God ought to approach to him. C.—Aurim means things brilliant, "declarations," Sept. and thomin, "perfections," or "truths." Some imagine, that God required the stones of the rational to be of the utmost brilliancy and perfection; Oleaster and Josephus (Ant. iii. 8.) say, it was by the appearance of those stones that the high priest was enlightened, when he consulted God. If God approved of what was in agitation, they assumed a surprising brightness, as well as those on the high priest's shoulders. But this had not happened for 200 years before he began his history. The Urim and Thummim were not in the second temple, 1 Esd. ii. 63. Some think these words were engraven on stones in the rational. Whether God explained his will by articulate sounds, as (Matt. iii. 17.) this is my beloved son, or internally instructed the high priest, when he was consulted, cannot be determined. C.—S. Chrysostom is of the former opinion. "If any thing was to be known, a voice came from between the cherubim, from the propitiatory, to declare what would happen." As the Jews lost the propitiatory, when they were led captives to Babylon, it seems they never afterwards obtained this privilege of having an oracle. God sometimes instructed them by his prophets. But, for a long time, none had appeared; that all might attend more earnestly to the voice of the Messiah. T.—Judgment. He shall be the supreme judge in religious matters, and must strive to pass sentence according to the dictates of my law, with truth. H.—The chief judge in Egypt wore a golden chain, hanging from the neck on the breast, to which was attached the image of Truth, on a sapphire stone. Olian (Var. Hist. xxxiv. 14.) also observes, that this office was always held by a venerable and honest priest.

VER. 33. Bells, to denote the harmony of the universe, (Philo) and that all the actions of a priest ought to give edification. S. Jerom.

VER. 35. Die, for coming in disrespectfully, without giving notice. See Judith xiv. 8.

VER. 36. Plate: reaching from ear to ear, two fingers' breadth, tied behind like a diadem. Wisd. xviii. 24.—Holy, or "sanctity, belonging to the Lord," and all who approach to Him, ought to be holy. C.—Josphus represents the ornaments of the high priest's head, like the triple crown of the pope. Ant. iii. 8.

VER. 38. Iniquities. This means, perhaps, that he shall wear these grand vestments and crown only on the solemn day of expiation, when he makes atonement for all the sins of the people, as a figure of Jesus Christ. Josephus tells us, that on other occasions, he wore a less costly attire. De Bel. v. 6. or 16. C.—By bearing on his forehead kodesh la Yehovah, "Holiness to the Lord," he confessed that all mankind were sinners, and stood in need of pardon. H.

VER. 40. Linen. In Ezechiel (xlv. 17.) woollen garments are forbidden to be worn by priests. Many of the pagans required their priests to be clothed in white linen. All these prescriptions of God, which seem to us so minute, had a more sublime and mysterious meaning. For in the priestly robe, was the whole world, by the colours denoting the air, light, earth, and water: the two stones on the shoulders, signified the sun and moon, as the 12 did the signs of the zodiac, or the glory of the fathers; and thy majesty was written upon the diadem of his head. Wisd. xviii. 24. Thus the priest was a mediator between God and his people, and was to be solicitous for the welfare of all. S. Tho. 1. 2. q. 102. a. 5. S. Aug. S. Jer. &c.

VER. 41. Consecrate. Heb. and Sept. "thou shalt anoint and fill their hands" with oil, and the instruments of their office.

VER. 42. Linen breeches, descending as far as the knees. S. Jer. In the C. xxxix. 29, they seem to have been made of byssus, or cotton. But as linen is prescribed in all other places, perhaps a word has crept in there, by mistake of the transcribers. They were intended to remind the priests of superior modesty, as they were not commonly worn. Homer never mentions them. Virgil only specifies the cloak and tunic of Evander. Augustus wore breeches and stockings in winter. Sueton.—But the ancient breeches were not like ours, but resembled rather an apron or girdle, enveloping both thighs, and hanging from the waist. C.

CHAP. XXIX.

The manner of consecrating Aaron and other priests: the institution of the daily sacrifice of two lambs, one in the morning, the other at evening.

AND thou shalt also do this, that they may be consecrated to me in priesthood. *Take a calf from the herd, and two rams without blemish,

2 And unleavened bread, and a cake without leaven, tempered with oil, wafers also unleavened, anointed with oil: thou shalt make them all of wheaten flour.

3 And thou shalt put them in a basket, and offer them: and the calf and the two rams.

4 And thou shalt bring Aaron and his sons to the door of the tabernacle of the testimony. And when thou hast washed the father and his sons with water,

5 Thou shalt clothe Aaron with his vestments, that is, with the linen garment and the tunic, and the ephod and the rational, which thou shalt gird with the girdle.

6 And thou shalt put the mitre upon his head, and the holy plate upon the mitre,

7 And thou shalt pour the oil of unction upon his head: and by this rite shall he be consecrated.

8 Thou shalt bring his sons also, and shalt put on them the linen tunics, and gird them with a girdle:

9 To wit, Aaron and his children, and thou shalt put mitres upon them; and they shall be priests to me by a perpetual ordinance. After thou shalt have consecrated their hands,

10 ^bThou shalt present also the calf before the tabernacle of the testimony. And Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands upon his head, 11 And thou shalt kill him in the sight of the Lord, beside the door of the tabernacle of the testimony.

12 And taking some of the blood of the calf, thou shalt put it upon the horns of the altar with thy finger, and the rest of the blood thou shalt pour at the bottom thereof.

13 ^cThou shalt take also all the fat that covereth the entrails, and the caul of the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and shalt offer a burnt-offering upon the altar:

14 But the flesh of the calf, and the hide and the dung, thou shalt burn abroad, without the camp, because it is for sin.

* Lev. ix. 2.—^b Lev. i. 8.

CHAP. XXIX. VER. 2. Wafers, (lagana.) They knead them with water, and afterwards fry or bake them with oil. S. Isid. Such wafers are very common in Italy. C.

VER. 4. Washed. The pagans never approached their mysteries, without divers purifications and washing. S. Clem. Strom. 5. Exterior cleanliness was designed to signify the purity of the heart, with which we must appear before God. C.—It is for this reason we take holy-water, when we go into our chapels, and we wash our fingers before and during Mass. II.

VER. 5. Vestments. No mention is made of breeches, because they had them on, while they were washing. V. Bede.—Belt. Sept. have read esson, instead of chesheb. "Thou shalt tie the rational to the ephod." C.

VER. 7. Pour, in the form of a cross or T, according to many of the Rabbins, &c. The inferior priests were anointed only on the hands. The Levites were sprinkled with oil, mixed with the blood of the victims. The custom of anointing prophets, priests, and kings, was peculiar to the Jews; as if to prefigure Christ, the great anointed of the Lord. S. Aug. Ps. xlv. Dan. ix. 24.

VER. 10. Head. Confessing that they are sinners, and deserve to die. Thus they shall substitute the victim instead of themselves, and obtain pardon. In the holocaust, (v. 15,) and the peace-offering, (v. 19,) they impose their hands, laying first washed them) and pronounce some prayer. C.

VER. 11. Beside. Al, is now wanting in the printed Heb. and Sam. though expressed by the Protestant translators, (who often help their text) and by all the ancient versions. Kennicott mentions one MS. which retains it very properly. H.—The victim was offered on the altar of holocausts, before the tabernacle, the seat of God's majesty. C.—Moses was the priest on this occasion. M. Ps. xlviii. 6.

15 Thou shalt take also one ram, upon the head whereof Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands.

16 And when thou hast killed him, thou shalt sake of the blood thereof, and pour round about the altar.

17 And thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and having washed his entrails and feet, thou shalt put them upon the flesh that is cut in pieces, and upon his head.

18 And thou shalt offer the whole ram for a burnt-offering upon the altar: it is an oblation to the Lord, a most sweet savour of the victim of the Lord.

19 Thou shalt take also the other ram, upon whose head Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands.

20 And when thou hast sacrificed him, thou shalt take of his blood, and put upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron and of his sons, and upon the thumbs and great toes of their right-hand and foot, and thou shalt pour the blood upon the altar round about.

21 And when thou hast taken of the blood that is upon the altar, and of the oil of unction, thou shalt sprinkle Aaron and his vesture, his sons and their vestments. And after they and their vestments are consecrated,

22 Thou shalt take the fat of the ram, and the rumh, and the fat that covereth the lungs, and the caul of the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and the right shoulder, because it is the ram of consecration:

23 And one roll of bread, a cake tempered with oil, a wafer out of the basket of unleavened bread, which is set in the sight of the Lord:

24 And thou shalt put all upon the hands of Aaron and of his sons, and shalt sanctify them elevating before the Lord.

25 And thou shalt take all from their hands; and shalt burn them upon the altar for a holocaust, a most sweet savour in the sight of the Lord, because it is his oblation.

26 Thou shalt take also the breast of the ram, where-with Aaron was consecrated, and elevating it thou shalt sanctify it before the Lord, and it shall fall to thy share.

27 And thou shalt sanctify both the consecrated breast, and the shoulder that thou didst separate of the ram,

28 Wherewith Aaron was consecrated and his sons,

VER. 12. Horns. This was done in all the sacrifices of expiation. After Aaron was ordained, he carried the blood into the sanctuary, for the sins of all. C.

VER. 13. Burnt-offering, (incensum.) To evaporate like incense. M.—God requires what is most fit and delicious. C.—The Persians never reserved any of the victims for their idols, except the caul. Strabo xv.

VER. 14. Sin of the high priest and people. In the other sin offerings, this was not done. M.

VER. 16. About, upon the altar, and at the foot of it. So the pagans did. Euseb. præp. iv. 9.

VER. 18. Victim. Heb. ishē, means a whole burnt-offering.

VER. 20. Tip, or "softer part." Sept. This ceremony insinuated, that the priests ought to be all attentive, and perform their office with diligence. Philo. Vit. Mos. 3.

VER. 22. Rump, or tail, for which the sheep of Arabia were famed; some having tails three yards long, others a yard thick. Herodot. iii. 113. They weighed from 12 to 30 pounds, and were almost all fat. C.

VER. 23. Roll. (torta) Heb. kikkar "a loaf" Sept. "a loaf or cake of oil." H.

VER. 24. Elevating, and then letting them descend towards the earth. After which, Moses lifted the victims towards the east and west, and from north to south, to shew that God is the Sovereign of the world. R. Solomon.—Cato (Rustic. 34.) mentions a similar custom, of agitating or waving bread, in honour of Janus and of Jupiter. C.

VER. 28. Israel. As these parts have been offered by Aaron to the Lord, so the Israelites shall present them to him and his sons, when they offer sacrifice. M.—All the different kinds of victims were immolated on this occasion, because the priests were consecrated to offer them all. D.

and they shall fall to Aaron's share, and his sons', by a perpetual right from the children of Israel: because they are the choicest and the beginnings of their peace-victims which they offer to the Lord.

29 And the holy vesture, which Aaron shall use, his sons shall have after him, that they may be anointed, and their hands consecrated in it.

30 He of his sons that shall be appointed high priest in his stead, and that shall enter into the tabernacle of the testimony to minister in the sanctuary, shall wear it seven days.

31 And thou shalt take the ram of the consecration, and shalt boil the flesh thereof in the holy place:

32 And Aaron and his sons shall eat it. *The loaves also, that are in the basket, they shall eat in the entry of the tabernacle of the testimony, 13 That it may be an atoning sacrifice, and the hands of the offerers may be sanctified. A stranger shall not eat of them, because they are holy.

14 And if there remain of the consecrated flesh, or of the bread, till the morning, thou shalt burn the remainder with fire: they shall not be eaten, because they are sanctified.

35 All that I have commanded thee, thou shalt do unto Aaron and his sons. Seven days shalt thou consecrate their hands:

36 And thou shalt offer a calf for sin every day for expiation. And thou shalt cleanse the altar when thou hast offered the victim of expiation, and shalt anoint it to sanctify it.

37 Seven days shalt thou expiate the altar and sanctify it, and it shall be most holy. Every one, that shall touch it, shall be holy.

38 This is what thou shalt sacrifice upon the altar: Two lambs of a year old every day continually, 39 One lamb in the morning, and another in the evening.

40 With one lamb a tenth part of flour tempered with beaten oil, of the fourth part of a hin, and wine for libation of the same measure.

41 And the other lamb thou shalt offer in the evening, according to the rite of the morning oblation, and

VER. 30. Days. During which he could not leave the sanctuary. Levit. viii. 33. On each day, the aforesaid ceremonies were to be repeated, v. 35.

VER. 31. Holy place. The court of the tabernacle, where a constant fire was kept, to prepare the food of the priests, and sometimes of others, who wished to eat their share of the victims in the presence of the Lord.

VER. 33. Stranger. The Levites themselves could not partake of these things.

VER. 37. Seven. This number is frequently prescribed in Scripture. Balaam required seven altars, (Num. xxiii.) and the Egyptians never spent less than seven days in their expiations. Porphy. Abstin. 4. C.—Shall be holy, consecrated according to this rite, (M.) or defiled; for sacred things purify those who approach in a proper manner, while they defile, or increase the guilt of the unworthy. C.—By the unleavened bread, (v. 23,) we are reminded of the blessed eucharist; and by oil, of the grace of the spirit. D.

VER. 39. Morning. About sun-rise.—Evening, or between the two vespers. Ex. xii. 6. The lambs were provided by the people; flour, wine, and oil, by the priests. Philo.—The wine was poured at the foot of the altar, the flour and oil were burnt upon it, and not placed on the head of the victim, as was customary among the pagans, frontique invertegit vina sacerdos. Virg. vi. Maimon.—By these sacrifices, God was to be adored as the author both of day and night; (M.) and we are admonished of our duty of praying to him, particularly at those times. according to what we have said, for a savour of sweetness:

42 It is a sacrifice to the Lord, by perpetual oblation unto your generations, at the door of the tabernacle of the testimony before the Lord, where I will appoint to speak unto thee.

43 And there will I command the children of Israel, and the altar shall be sanctified by my glory.

44 I will sanctify also the tabernacle of the testimony with the altar, and Aaron with his sons, to do the office of priesthood unto me.

45 And I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel, and will be their God:

46 And they shall know that I am the Lord their God, who have brought them out of the land of Egypt, that I might abide among them, I the Lord their God.

CHAP. XXX.

The altar of incense: money to be gathered for the use of the tabernacle: the brazen laver: the holy oil of unction, and the composition of the perfume.

THOU shalt make also an altar to burn incense, of setim-wood.

2 It shall be a cubit in length, and another in breadth, that is, four square, and two in height. Horns shall go out of the same.

3 And thou shalt overlay it with the purest gold, as well the grate thereof, as the walls round about, and the horns. And thou shalt make to it a crown of gold round about,

4 And two golden rings under the crown on either side, that the bars may be put into them, and the altar be carried.

5 And thou shalt make the bars also of setim-wood, and shalt overlay them with gold.

6 And thou shalt set the altar over-against the veil, that hangeth before the ark of the testimony before the propitiatory wherewith the testimony is covered, where I will speak to thee.

7 And Aaron shall burn sweet smelling incense upon it in the morning. When he shall dress the lamps, he shall burn it:

8 And when he shall place them in the evening, he shall burn an everlasting incense before the Lord throughout your generations.

9 You shall not offer upon it incense of another com-

VER. 43. Glory, or presence, or by the flame which shall come down from heaven to consume the victim. Lev. ix. 24. C.

CHAP. XXX. VER. 1. An altar to burn incense. This burning of incense was an emblem of prayer, ascending to God from an inflamed heart. See Ps. cxi. 2. Apocal. v. 8. and viii. 4. Ch.—Nothing but incense was daily offered by the high priest upon this altar. On the day of expiation, he touched the four corners with blood. It stood over-against the bread of proposition.

VER. 2. Height. Ezechiel (xli. 22,) describes his altar of incense, a cubit higher.

VER. 3. Grate, or covering. Some think the fire and incense were placed on this grate, and the ashes fell under the altar. But fire was taken hence, and put in the thuribles; (Num. xvi. 17. C.) or a brazen thurible was placed on the fire. Lev. x. 1. M.—Walls, or sides, of setim-wood.—Crown, cornice or moulding. See C. xxv. 25.

VER. 6. Where, &c. Hence some infer, that its situation was in the most holy place. But God spoke also to Moses at the door of the sanctuary; (C. xxix. 42. H.) and most people suppose, that it was placed out of the holy of holies, beside the veil. The golden censer, which S. Paul (Heb. ix. 4,) tells us was within, might be that of Aaron, which was placed there after the sedition of Core, (Num. xvi.) or one that might be left smoking before the ark, on the day of expiation. C.—S. Augustine, &c. believe, however, that it was in the holy of holies. q. 133. Orig. hom. 19. S. Greg. I K. xiv. &c.

position, nor oblation, and victim, neither shall you offer libations.

10 And Aaron shall pray upon the horns thereof once a year, with the blood of that which was offered for sin; and shall make atonement upon it in your generations. It shall be most holy to the Lord.

11 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

12 "When thou shalt take the sum of the children of Israel, according to their number, every one of them shall give a price for their souls to the Lord, and there shall be no scourge among them, when they shall be reckoned.

13 And this shall every one give that passeth at the naming, half a sicle according to the standard of the temple. ^aA sicle hath twenty obols. Half a sicle shall be offered to the Lord.

14 He that is counted in the number from twenty years and upwards, shall give the price.

15 The rich man shall not add to half a sicle, and the poor man shall diminish nothing.

16 And the money received, which was contributed by the children of Israel, thou shalt deliver unto the uses of the tabernacle of the testimony, that it may be a memorial of them before the Lord, and he may be merciful to their souls.

17 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

18 Thou shalt make also a brazen laver with its foot, to wash in: and thou shalt set it between the tabernacle of the testimony and the altar. And water being put into it:

19 Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and feet in it:

20 When they are going into the tabernacle of the testimony, and when they are to come to the altar, to offer on it incense to the Lord, 21 Lest perhaps they die. It shall be an everlasting law to him, and to his seed by successions.

^a Num. i. 8.

VER. 10. It. This altar, or this rite; all deserve a singular respect.

VER. 12. Sum. David perhaps neglected this injunction. 2 K. xxiv. Josep. Ant. vii. 10. Yet we do not read that Moses took the half sicle when he numbered the people. Num. i. Whence others gather, that this sum was to be paid every year, as it was done in our Saviour's time, for the support of the temple. Matt. xvii. 23. Vespasian ordered the Jews to pay the same money for the capitol. Josep. Bel. vii. 13. After the captivity, the third part of a sicle was demanded. 2 Esd. x. 32. C.

VER. 13. Half a sicle. A sicle or shekel of silver, (which was also called a stater) according to the standard or weight of the sanctuary, which was the most just and exact, was half an ounce of silver; that is, about half a crown of English money. The obol or gerah, was about three halfpence. Ch.—A priest kept the weights and measures. 1 Par. xxiii. 29. The Egyptians and Romans took the like precaution to prevent any fraud; and Justinian required that such things should be kept in churches. Some have supposed, that the royal or common sicle was less than that of the sanctuary. But Moses admits of no distinction. Lev. xxvii. 25. Ezec. xlv. 12. Perhaps the weights of the Egyptians, &c. might differ from this, which Moses therefore particularizes so well. C.—Arbutnot makes the weight of the sicle equal to 9 dwt. 2.57 gr. English Troy weight; and he values that of silver at 2s. 3.375d. sterling. H.

VER. 15. Rich. The life of every man is equal in the sight of God, and He will not give the rich occasion to despise his poor neighbour. Thus also the number of the people would be ascertained. M.

VER. 18. Its foot also of brass, made of mirrors which the women gave. C. xxxviii. 8. It was double; one vessel being shallower, to wash the feet, &c. and the other containing a quantity of water, which was let out by pipes. The pa- as had lavers also; and our holy-water vessels should remind us of that purity and holiness which become the house of God. H.

VER. 19. Feet. The priests went barefoot in the tabernacle. In the Misna we find the same law binds laymen. None were allowed to enter the temple of Diana, in Crete, with shoes on; and the Roman ladies followed the same custom, when they came down to the temple of Vesta. Huc pede matronam nudo descenderet vidit. Ovid. Fast. 6. C.—The priest is ordered to put off his shoes on Good Friday, out of respect for Jesus Christ, who suffered on the cross. H.

22 And the Lord spoke to Moses,

23 Saying: Take spices, of principal and chosen myrrh five hundred sicles, and of cinnamon half so much; that is, two hundred and fifty sicles, of calamus in like manner two hundred and fifty,

24 And of cassia five hundred sicles by the weight of the sanctuary, of oil of olives the measure hin:

29 And thou shalt sanctify all, and they shall be most holy: he that shall touch them shall be sanctified.

30 Thou shalt anoint Aaron and his sons, and shalt sanctify them, that they may do the office of priesthood unto me.

31 And thou shalt say to the children of Israel: This oil of unction shall be holy unto me throughout your generations.

32 The flesh of man shall not be anointed therewith, and you shall make none other of the same composition, because it is sanctified, and shall be holy unto you.

33 What man soever shall compound such, and shall give thereof to a stranger, he shall be cut off from his people.

34 And the Lord said to Moses: Take unto thee spices, stacte, and onycha, galbanum of sweet savour, and the clearest frankincense, all shall be of equal weight.

35 And thou shalt make incense compounded by the work of the perfumer, well tempered together, and pure, and most worthy of sanctification.

CHAP. XXXI.

Beseleel and Ooliab are appointed by the Lord to make the tabernacle, and the things belonging thereto. The observation of the sabbath day is again commanded. And the Lord delivereth to Moses two tables written with the finger of God

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Behold, I have called by name Beseleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Juda,

3 And I have filled him with the spirit of God, with wisdom and understanding, and knowledge in all manner of work,

4 To devise whatsoever may be artificially made of gold, and silver, and brass,

5 Of marble, and precious stones, and variety of wood.

6 And I have given him for his companion Ooliab, the son of Achisamech, of the tribe of Dan. And I have put wisdom in the heart of every skilful man, that they may make all things which I have commanded thee,

7 The tabernacle of the covenant, and the ark of the testimony, and the propitiatory, that is over it, and all the vessels of the tabernacle,

8 And the table and the vessels thereof, the most pure candlestick with the vessels thereof, and the altars of incense,

9 And of holocaust, and all their vessels, the laver with its foot,

10 The holy vestments in the ministry for Aaron the priest, and for his sons, that they may execute their office, about the sacred things:

11 The oil of unction, and the incense of spices in the sanctuary, all things which I have commanded thee, shall they make.

12 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

CHAP. XXXI. VER. 2. By name. I have fixed upon and taken into my service, as Is. xlii. 1.

VER. 3. Spirit. "God, our master, causeth our genius to shew itself." Senec. Ben. iv. 4.

VER. 4. Brass. Sept. add, "and violet, and purple, and scarlet spun, and hyssus twisted."

VER. 5. Marble and (or) precious stones. Marble was not used in the tabernacle. C.

VER. 6. Wisdom. Good artists deserve this title, provided they make things of real use. Orig. hom. 22. Num.

VER. 7. Vessels. Tables, curtains, &c. C.

VER. 8. Table and (all) the. The Sam. copy retains the word col, "all," as well as the Sam. Sept. Syr. and Arab. versions, and one Heb. MS. though the printed editions have rejected it. In a Chaldaic MS. it is also found. The omission, probably was occasioned by the custom of the Jews, who always fill up their line with the initial letters of the next line; and as colui followed, the transcriber supposed that col was in that predicament. Ken. dis. 2.—Most pure gold, always giving light, or kept clean. C. xxxix. 37.

VER. 13. Sabbath. Let not the workmen do any thing for the tabernacle on that day. M.—God reiterates and insists particularly on this commandment, which begins with the word remember; because men are so apt to forget, or to transgress a precept, which seems to interfere with those worldly concerns and profits, which they love more than God and their own souls. H.

VER. 18. Testimony, to inform men of their duty.—Written, not by Moses, or by any man, but by God himself, or by an angel. C. xxxiv. 1. Gal. iii. 19. C.

CHAP. XXXII. VER. 1. Delayed. They waited perhaps about a month, with some patience; and then, becoming seditious, assembled against Aaron, and extorted from him a compliance with their impious request. He was thus guilty

13 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: "See that you keep my sabbath; because it is a sign between me and you in your generations: that you may know that I am the Lord, who sanctify you."

14 Keep you my sabbath: for it is holy unto you: he that shall profane it, shall be put to death: he that shall do any work in it, his soul shall perish out of the midst of his people.

15 Six days shall you do work: in the seventh day is the sabbath, the rest holy to the Lord. Every one that shall do any work on this day, shall die.

16 Let the children of Israel keep the sabbath, and celebrate it in their generations. It is an everlasting covenant

17 Between me and the children of Israel, and a perpetual sign. ^b For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and in the seventh he ceased from work.

18 And the Lord, when he had ended these words in Mount Sinai, ^c gave to Moses two stone tables of testimony, written with the finger of God.

CHAP. XXXII.

The people fall into idolatry. Moses prayeth for them. He breaketh the tables: destroyeth the idol: blameth Aaron, and causeth many of the idolaters to be slain.

AND the people seeing ^a that Moses delayed to come down from the mount, gathering together against Aaron, said: "Arise, make us gods, that may go before us: For as to this Moses, the man that brought us out of the land of Egypt, we know not what has befallen him."

2 And Aaron said to them: Take the golden ear-rings from the ears of your wives, and your sons and daughters, and bring them to me.

3 And the people did what he had commanded, bringing the ear-rings to Aaron.

4 And when he had received them, he fashioned them by founders' work, and made of them a molten calf. And they said: These are thy gods, O Israel, that have brought thee out of the land of Egypt.

5 And when Aaron saw this, he built an altar before of a grievous crime, though the violence might extenuate it in some degree. Salien.—He was not yet ordained high priest. C. xl. 12. H.—Gods. Aaron gratified their request by the golden calf. They had the pillar to conduct them, but they wanted something new. They speak with contempt of Moses. M.

VER. 2. And your sons. The Sept. omit this. But in the East, it was fashionable for men also to wear ear-rings. Plin. xi. 37. Judg. viii. 24. Ezeo. vii. 20. Aaron hoped the people would relent at this proposal. S. Aug. q. 141.

VER. 4. Received them, "in a purse, (as Gideon did afterwards, Judg. viii. 25,) he made a molten calf." Jonath.—Perhaps he engraved on it the peculiar marks of the Egyptian idol, Apis; a square white spot on the forehead, and a crescent upon the side. For it is generally believed, that this calf was designed to imitate that object of worship, to which the Hebrews had been too much accustomed. Acts vii. 39. 41. S. Jer. in Ose. iv. The Egyptians adored not only the living ox, but also its image, which they kept in their temple. Porphy. Abst. ii. Mela. i. 8. Some of the fathers think, that the head of a calf only appeared. S. Amb. Lactant. &c. The rest of the figure was perhaps human, as Osiris was represented with the head of an ox, as well as Astarte and Serapis. Monceau pretends that Aaron represented the true God, under the form of a cherub, in which he falsely asserts he had appeared on Mount Sinai, and that his fault consisted only in giving occasion of superstition to the people. But his opinion (though adopted by many Protestants, who excuse all from the guilt of idolatry, but papists. H.) has been condemned at Rome, and refuted by Visorius, &c.—Thy gods, &c. Thus spoke the infatuated ringleaders. C.—And they changed their glory, the true God, into the likeness of a calf that eateth grass. Ps. cv. 19.—They forgot God, who saved them, ib. (v. 21), and forsook Him, (Deut. xxxii. 18), to adore the calf. W.

VER. 5. The Lord. The most sacred name of God is prostituted, (Judg. xvii. and xviii. Wisd. xiv. 21,) and an altar is erected to this idol; though some pretend, that Aaron meant God to be adored under this similitude. His weakness it, and made proclamation by a crier's voice, saying: To-morrow is the solemnity of the Lord.

6 And rising in the morning, they offered holocausts, and peace-victims, *and the people sat down to eat and drink, and they rose up to play.

7 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying: *Go, got thee down: thy people, which thou hast brought out of the land of Egypt, hath sinned.

8 They have quickly strayed from the way which thou didst shew them: and they have made to themselves a molten calf, and have adored it, and sacrificing victims to it, have said: *These are thy gods, O Israel, that have brought thee out of the land of Egypt.

9 And again the Lord said to Moses: *I see that this people is stiff-necked:

10 Let me alone, that my wrath may be kindled against them, and that I may destroy them, and I will make of thee a great nation.

11 But Moses besought the Lord his God, saying: *Why, O Lord, is thy indignation enkindled against thy people, whom thou hast brought out of the land of Egypt, with great power, and with a mighty hand?

12 Let not the Egyptians say, I beseech thee: He craftily brought them out, that he might kill them in the mountains, and destroy them from the earth: let thy anger cease, and be appeased upon the wickedness of thy people.

13 Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou sworest by thy own self, saying: *I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven: and this whole land that I have spoken of, I will give to your seed, and you shall possess it for ever.

was unaccountable, and God would have slain him, had not Moses interceded. Deut. ix. 20. Those who undertake to justify him, enter not into the sentiments of God; and the offender himself pleads no excuse, but the violence of the people, v. 28. Salien.—To-morrow, when the 40 days expired, and Moses returned arrayed in terrors. H.

VER. 6. They offered, by the hands of Aaron, to whom the Sept. refer all this. "He offered," &c. appearing at the head of the idolaters. A Lapidé insinuates, that he wished to supplant his brother in the supreme command; and after a faint resistance, became the promoter of idolatry, to ingratiate himself with the people. The Scripture lays not this, however, to his charge. C.—To eat of the victims.—To play, dancing and singing in honour of their idol, probably with many indecent gestures, as was customary on such occasions among the nations of Chanaan. H.—Tertullian (de jejunio) understands impure play. The word means also to dance, and to play on instruments of music. Ludere quæ vellem calamo permisit agresti. Virg. Ec. i. C.—Sulpitius says, the people abandoned themselves to drunkenness and gluttony, or debauchery, vinoque se & ventri dedisset. H.—They might get wine from Midian. Salien.—Foolish mirth is the daughter of gluttony, and the mother of idolatry. S. Greg. Mor. xxxi. 81. W.

VER. 7. Thy people. They are not worthy to be styled my people; and thou didst ratify the covenant with me, in their name, and as their interpreter. They have sinned, giving way to idolatry in thought, word, and deed.

VER. 9. And again. The Sept. omit this verse. Moses, at the first intimation of the people's sin, fell prostrate before the Lord, to sue for pardon, and pleaded the natural weakness of an ungovernable multitude, in order to extenuate their fault. This God admits.—I see, &c. But while he seems bent on punishing them, to try his servant, he encourages him inwardly to pray with fervour. Salien.

VER. 10. Alone. One fully determined on revenge will bear with no expostulation; whence S. Greg. (Mor. ix. 11.) and Theodoret (q. 67.) look upon this as an incitement to pray more earnestly, seeing God's servants have such influence over Him. The mercy of God struggled with his justice, and stopped its effects.—Nation, as I promised to Abraham; or I will make thee ruler over a nation greater than this, as Moses explains it, (Deut. ix. 14.) and as the like offer is made, Num. xiv. 12. The Sam. subjoins here, "And God was likewise much irritated against Aaron, and would have destroyed him; but Moses prayed for him:" which we are assured was the case. Deut. ix. 20. C.

VER. 11. Why, &c. Calvin here accuses Moses of arrogance, in prescribing laws to God's justice. But S. Jerom (ep. ad Gaud.) commends his charity and "prayer, which hindered God's power." W.

VER. 12. Craftily. Heb. "with a malicious design." Moses insinuates, that the glory of God is interested not to punish the Hebrews, lest the Gentiles should 14 And the Lord was appeased from doing the evil which he had spoken against his people.

15 And Moses returned from the mount, carrying the two tables of the testimony in his hand, written on both sides, 16 And made by the work of God; the writing also of God was graven in the tables.

17 And Josue hearing the noise of the people shouting, said to Moses: The noise of battle is heard in the camp.

18 But he answered: It is not the cry of men encouraging to fight, nor the shout of men compelling to flee: but I hear the voice of singers.

19 And when he came nigh to the camp, he saw the calf, and the dances: and being very angry, he threw the tables out of his hand, and broke them at the foot of the mount:

20 And laying hold of the calf which they had made, he burnt it, *and beat it to powder, which he strewed into water, and gave thereof to the children of Israel to drink.

21 And he said to Aaron: What has this people done to thee, that thou shouldst bring upon them a most heinous sin?

22 And he answered him: Let not my lord be offended; for thou knowest this people, *that they are prone to evil.

23 They said to me: Make us gods, that may go before us; for as to this Moses, who brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, we know not what is befallen him.

24 And I said to them: Which of you hath any plasphe, particularly as the land of Chanaan seemed to be promised unconditionally to the posterity of Abraham, who were now, all but one, to be exterminated. H.

VER. 13. Thy servants. Thus God honours his friends, and rewards their merits, which are the effects of his grace. W.

VER. 14. Appeased. Yet of this Moses was not fully assured, and in effect only those who had been less guilty, were reprieved to be punished afterwards, v. 30. 35. H.

VER. 15. Both sides. The ten commandments were written twice over, or on both sides, that all who stood round Moses, might be able to read them. M.—On one side, appeared the laws regarding God; on the other, those which relate to man. H.—They were like two originals. The common way of writing was only on one side. C.

VER. 17. Josue, who was waiting for Moses lower down on the mountain. C. xxiv. 13.

VER. 18. Cry, &c. Heb. "the cry answering strength . . . or . . . weakness," which the Vulgate elucidates.—Singers. Sept. "I hear the cry of those who contend for pre-eminence in wine," or over their cups. H.

VER. 19. Mount. "Finding the people abandoned to luxury and sacrilege, he broke the tables, deeming it a nation unworthy to be entrusted with the law of God." Sulpit. i. 38. By this action, Moses foreshewed the dissolution of the covenant with the Jews, that the new covenant might take place. S. Aug. q. 144. The Jews kept the 17th of the fourth month as a fast, in memory of this event. S. Jer. in Zac. viii.

VER. 20. Calf. Having manifested his disapprobation of the people's conduct, in the most signal manner, by breaking the two tables; Moses proceeds to convince them of their stupidity, in adoring what he, in a few minutes, reduces to powder. H.—He breaks the calf in pieces, after burning it, and then grinds it to dust in a mill, with files; as the Heb. Chal. and Sept. intimate. He throws it, with contempt, into the torrent, which supplied the camp with water, and thus caused the idolaters to swallow their gods. T.—Sa assures us, that he saw an alchemist pulverize gold, which Abenezra says is done by means of some herbs which turn the gold quite black, when it is melted. C.—Some use aquafortis for this purpose. T.—But from the account of Moses, (Deut. ix. 21.) it seems fire and the mill, or file, reduced the gold into the smallest particles, so as to be even potable. Josephus (viii. 2.) mentions the gold dust used by the courtiers of Solomon. C.

VER. 22. Evil. Aaron answers his younger brother with humility, being now touched with repentance; on which account, God still grants him the high priesthood. H.

VER. 24. Came out. The Rabbins pretend alive, and able to walk. Hence gold? and they took and brought it to me; and I cast it into fire, and this calf came out.

25 And when Moses saw that the people were naked, (for Aaron had stripped them by occasion of the shame of the filth, and had set them naked among their enemies)

26 Then standing in the gate of the camp, he said: If any man be on the Lord's side, let him join with me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him:

27 And he said to them: Thus saith the Lord God of Israel: Put every man his sword upon his thigh: go, and return from gate to gate through the midst of the camp, and let every man kill his brother, and friend, and neighbour.

28 And the sons of Levi did according to the words of Moses, and there were slain that day about three and twenty thousand men.

29 And Moses said: You have consecrated your hands this day to the Lord, every man in his son and in his brother, that a blessing may be given to you.

10 And when the next day was come, Moses spoke to the people: You have sinned a very great sin: I will go up to the Lord, if by any means I may be able to entreat him for your crime.

31 And returning to the Lord, he said: I beseech thee: this people hath sinned a heinous sin, and they have made to themselves gods of gold: either forgive them this trespass, 32 Or if thou do not, strike me out of the book that thou hast written.

they say Aaron was filled with astonishment, and induced to erect the altar in its honour. R. Salomo and Burgens. But these are Jewish fables, injurious to God, and invented to hide, in some degree, the shame of their ancestors. For the same reason, Josephus passes over the whole in silence, and Philo throws the blame on a few Egyptian converts. They might very probably be the ringleaders, as Num. xi. 4. But the Hebrews in general readily gave in to the delusion. 1 Cor. x. 7. H.

VER. 25. Naked. Having lost not only their gold, and their honour, but what was worst of all, being stripped also of the grace of God, and having lost him.—The shame of the filth. That is, of the idol, which they had taken for their god. It is the usual phrase of the Scripture to call idols filth, and abominations. Ch.—Of the filth, is not in Heb. But it serves to explain how the Hebrews came to be so unprotected and disconcerted. See 2 Par. xxviii. 19.

VER. 26. All the sons; that is, the great majority of them; for some were probably slain, v. 29.

VER. 28. About, &c. The Heb. letter c means about, and stands also for twenty. All the versions, and some copies of the Vulg. retain the first signification; but our edition gives also the second. Sixtus V. and the Louvain Bible have about 33,000. H.—S. Paul (1 Cor. x. 7. 8.) mentions, that three and twenty thousand perished, in punishment of their fornication, (with the Moabites) which some explain of the adoration of the calf, and say that Moses only specifies those slain by the Levites; while S. Paul gives the number of all those who perished by the hand of God on this occasion, v. 35. C.—S. Cyril, Alex. chap. 2. Sulpit. and many other fathers, agree with the Vulgate. The fornication with the Moabites, was followed by the death of 24,000. Num. xxv. 9. So that S. Paul cannot refer to it, unless he only mention those who perished in one day; and Moses expresses the total amount of the slain during the whole affair. H.

VER. 29. To you. Thus they merited the priesthood, and a blessing; (Deut. xxxiii. 9. M.) having been the ministers of God's just indignation, without sparing any of the most guilty. With these they could not be unacquainted. No external signs on their bodies were requisite to make the delinquents known. They had appeared too publicly. H.—The Levites acted with due authority and order, which their father, Levi, had neglected. Gen. xxxiv. W.

VER. 30. You. Many who had not been slain, had followed the bad example, and Aaron, in particular, had brought upon them a most heinous sin. v. 21. Yet on account of their repentance, they were not subjected to immediate punishment; but they were visited afterwards, v. 34. Though God was appeased, (v. 14), so as not to destroy the whole multitude, Moses thought it a very arduous task to obtain a full reconciliation, notwithstanding the exemplary vengeance he had taken of the ringleaders. Hence he addresses himself to God with the greatest humility, and with such earnestness as scarcely seems justifiable, if we understand that he put his own eternal salvation at stake. But he makes an impossible supposition, or proposal, which he knew God would not admit, to 33 And the Lord answered him: He that hath sinned against me, him will I strike out of my book.

34 But go thou, and lead this people whither I have told thee: my angel shall go before thee. And I in the day of revenge will visit this sin also of theirs.

35 The Lord therefore struck the people for the guilt, on occasion of the calf which Aaron had made.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The people mourn for their sin. Moses pitcheth the tabernacle without the camp. He converseth familiarly with God. Desireth to see his glory.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying: Go, get thee up from this place, thou and thy people which thou hast brought out of the land of Egypt, into the land concerning which I swore to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, saying: ^bTo thy seed I will give it:

2 ^cAnd I will send an angel before thee, that I may cast out the ^dChanaanite, and the Amorrrhite, and the Hethite, and the Pherezite, and the Hevite, and the Jebusite,

3 That thou mayst enter into the land that floweth with milk^e and honey. For I will not go up with thee, ^ebecause thou art a stiff-necked people; lest I destroy thee in the way.

4 And the people hearing these very bad tidings, mourned: and no man put on his ornaments according to custom.

5 And the Lord said to Moses: Say to the children of Israel: Thou art a stiff-necked people, once I shall come up in the midst of thee, and shall destroy thee. Now presently lay aside thy ornaments, that I may know what to do to thee.

extort as it were the requested favour. As he is willing to die for his people, God pardons them for his sake. S. Aug. q. 147, &c. H.

VER. 32. The book of the predestination. S. Paul uses a similar expression, Rom. ix. 3. Neither could he really desire or consent to be accursed, even for a time. Hence their words can be understood only as an hyperbole, to denote the excess of their love for their brethren, as if a child should say to his father, pardon my brother, or kill me. T.—Some explain this book, of the law or covenant, by which Moses was appointed the prince of the Hebrews, which title he is willing to forego, with pleasure, to obtain their pardon. C.—Others understand the book, or register of the living. He is willing to die for his people. See Num. xi. 15. S. Greg. Mor. x. 7. S. Jer. ad Algas.—This sense is very good, and sufficiently expresses the fervour of Moses. Greater love than this no man hath. Jo. xv. 13.

VER. 33. Book: him will I slay; and, if he die impenitent, I will punish him for ever. H.

VER. 35. Struck, with some judgment not specified; (Lyran.) or perhaps, the various punishments which were inflicted on the Hebrews in the wilderness, were all partly designed to chastise this first act of idolatry. Calmet explains this of the devastation caused by the Levites, as he supposes the narration of Moses does not observe the order of time. He thinks Moses expostulated with the people, and was then sent by God to punish them; and while they were unarmed, (C. xxxiii. 5,) the Levites fell upon them. Then Moses removed the tabernacle out of the camp, and obtained of God that he would go before them, and not an angel only, v. 34. C. xxxiii. 17. Moses continued full forty days, standing or lying prostrate on the mount, before the Lord, to obtain the pardon of his people. Deut. ix. 25. x. 10. At the expiration of which term he returned, with an order to prepare two other tables of stone, on which, after a supplication of the same length of time, he obtained the law to be again engraven. C. xxxiv. 28. The favour cost him therefore 120 days' earnest prayer; and yet how little are we touched with God's mercy, in giving us his law! H.

CHAP. XXXIII. VER. 1. This place, Mount Sinai, (M.) or the tabernacle. v. 7. C.

VER. 3. I will not go: "in majesty" (Chal.) and "brightness," Arab. The angel shall go in his own name, and shall not perform such great miracles. My tabernacle shall be removed to a respectful distance, lest, not being able to endure the barefaced impiety of the people, I slay you in my fury. God addresses Moses, as the representative of the nation, (M.) and adopts the language of men, appearing as a king, who cannot bear to be insulted to his face. H.

VER. 4. Ornaments. Chal. and Syr. "arms." They had brought jewels, &c. out of Egypt. M.

VER. 5. Once, &c. "In a moment." Pagnin.—Shall destroy, if you prove rebellious any more, as I foresee you will.—Lay aside, as you have done.—Th thee, according to the measure of your repentance or negligence. M.

6 So the children of Israel laid aside their ornaments by Mount Horeb.

7 Moses also taking the tabernacle, pitched it without the camp afar off, and called the name thereof, The tabernacle of the covenant. And all the people, that had any question, went forth to the tabernacle of the covenant, without the camp.

8 And when Moses went forth to the tabernacle, all the people rose up, and every one stood in the door of his pavilion, and they beheld the back of Moses, till he went into the tabernacle.

9 And when he was gone into the tabernacle of the covenant, the pillar of the cloud came down, and stood at the door, and he spoke with Moses.

10 And all saw that the pillar of the cloud stood at the door of the tabernacle. And they stood and worshipped at the doors of their tents.

11 And the Lord spoke to Moses face to face, as a man is wont to speak to his friend. And when he returned into the camp, his servant Josue, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not from the tabernacle.

12 And Moses said to the Lord: Thou commandest me to lead forth this people; and thou dost not let me know whom thou wilt send with me, especially whereas thou hast said: I know thee by name, and thou hast found favour in my sight.

13 If therefore I have found favour in thy sight, shew me thy face, that I may know thee, and may find grace before thy eyes: look upon thy people this nation.

14 And the Lord said: My face shall go before thee, and I will give thee rest.

VER. 6. By Horeb, or at the foot of the mount. Some think they put them on no more in the wilderness; (C.) or at least till they had obtained the tables of the law again, in testimony of God's reconciliation with them. Salien.

VER. 7. Tabernacle: not that which God had described, which was set up later, (C. xl.) but one destined for public and private prayer. M.—Afar, a thousand yards. Thalmud and Villet.—Covenant; or alliance, which God had entered into with the people. T.—The Heb. may signify, "of the assembly or congregation," because there the people met to hear the divine doctrine explained, and to offer up their prayers.—Camp. Thus were the people reminded of their excommunication, or separation, from the God whom they had so wantonly abandoned, and whose protection and presence were their only support and comfort. H.—The record of the covenant was also probably torn, as Moses was ordered to write it again. C. xxxiv. 27. T.

VER. 8. Rose up, out of respect to their prince, who was now their mediator also. H.

VER. 9. He spoke. The angel, conducting the pillar, spoke in God's name. M.

VER. 10. And worshipped. This the Sam. copy omits. The people bowed towards Moses and the angel. C.

VER. 11. Face to face. That is, in a most familiar manner. Though, as we learn from this very chapter, Moses could not see the face of the Lord. Ch.—The angel assumed a human form, (M.) which Moses knew could not fully display the majesty of God; and hence he begs to see his face, or his glory, (v. 13. 18,) which God declares is impossible for any mortal to do, v. 20. H.—He addresses him, however, with unusual condescension, and speaks to him without any ambiguity, "without any medium," as the Arab. expresses it. Other prophets were instructed by visions, and were filled with terror. Dan. x. 8.—Young man, though 50 years old, and the general who defeated the Amalecites. C. xvii. 18. Puer means a servant also, in which capacity Josue waited on Moses, and was alone allowed to be present with him in the tabernacle. He did not sleep there, (C.) but guarded it from all profanation. Some say he was still called young, because he was unmarried; in which sense the Chal. styles him kullema, which corresponds with the Heb. halma, a virgin. Serarius. T.

VER. 12. To the Lord. This conversation probably took place on Mount Horeb, (v. 22,) after God had threatened that he would not go up with the people. C. xxxii. 34. And here (v. 3.) Moses, considering that God would thus withdraw his special providence from his people, begins to expostulate with him; and first, having mentioned with gratitude, the repeated kindnesses of God towards himself, he begs to be informed what angel shall accompany him, and then proceeds to beg that God would still shew his wonted favour to the penitent Hebrews, and conduct them himself, as he had done before the transgression. We do not read before, that God said to Moses, I know thee by name; (S. Aug. q. 193.) but he had used that expression in some conversation with him, as he did afterwards, v. 17. H.

15 And Moses said: If thou thyself dost not go before, bring us not out of this place.

16 For how shall we be able to know, I and thy people, that we have found grace in thy sight, unless thou walk with us, that we may be glorified by all people that dwell upon the earth?

17 And the Lord said to Moses: This word also, which thou hast spoken, will I do; for thou hast found grace before me, and thee I have known by name.

18 And he said: Shew me thy glory.

19 He answered: I will shew thee all good, and I will proclaim in the name of the Lord before thee: "and I will have mercy on whom I will, and I will be merciful to whom it shall please me."

20 And again he said: Thou canst not see my face: for man shall not see me, and live.

21 And again he said: Behold there is a place with me, and thou shalt stand upon the rock.

22 And when my glory shall pass, I will set thee in a hole of the rock, and protect thee with my right-hand till I pass:

23 And I will take away my hand, and thou shalt see my back parts: but my face thou canst not see.

CHAP. XXXIV.

The tables are renewed: all society with the Chanaanites is forbid: some precepts concerning the first-born, the sabbath, and other feasts. After forty days fast, Moses returneth to the people with the commandments, and his face appearing horned with rays of light, he covereth it, whensoever he speaketh to the people.

AND after this he said: "Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the former, and I will write upon them the words, which were in the tables, which thou brokest."

VER. 23. See my back parts. The Lord, by his angel, usually spoke to Moses in the pillar of the cloud, so that he could not see the glory of Him that spoke familiarly with him. In the vision here mentioned, he was allowed to see something of Him, in an assumed corporeal form: not in the face, the rays of which were too bright for mortal eye to bear, but to view Him as it were behind, when his face was turned from him. CHAP. XXXIV. VER. 1. Former. Deut. x. 1, adds, and come up to me into the mount, and I, &c. Here.

2 Be ready in the morning, that thou mayst forth-with go up into Mount Sinai, and thou shalt stand with me upon the top of the mount.

3 Let no man go up with thee, and let not any man be seen throughout all the mount; neither let the oxen nor the sheep feed over-against it.

4 Then he cut out two tables of stone, such as had been before; and rising very early he went up into the Mount Sinai, as the Lord had commanded him, carrying with him the tables.

5 And when the Lord was come down in a cloud, Moses stood with him, calling upon the name of the Lord.

6 And when he passed before him, he said: O the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, patient and of much compassion, and true,

7 "Who keepest mercy unto thousands: who takest away iniquity, and wickedness, and sin, and no man of himself is innocent before thee. "Who renderest the iniquity of the fathers to the children, and to the grand-children unto the third and fourth generation.

8 And Moses making haste, bowed down prostrate unto the earth, and adoring, 9 Said: If I have found grace in thy sight, O Lord, I beseech thee that thou wilt go with us, (for it is a stiff-necked people) and take away our iniquities and sin, and possess us.

10 The Lord answered: "I will make a covenant in the sight of all, I will do signs such as were never seen upon the earth, nor in any nations; that this people, in the midst of whom thou art, may see the terrible work of the Lord which I will do.

11 Observe all things which this day I command thee: I myself will drive out before thy face the Amorrite, and the Chanaanite, and the Hethite, and the Pherezite, and the Hevite, and the Jebusite.

12 Beware thou never join in friendship with the inhabitants of that land, which may be thy ruin:

13 But destroy their altars, break their statues, and cut down their groves:

14 Adore not any strange god. The Lord his name is Jealous, he is a jealous God.

15 "Make no covenant with the men of those countries; lest, when they have committed fornication with their gods, and have adored their idols, some one call thee to eat of the things sacrificed.

16 "Neither shalt thou take of their daughters a wife for thy son, lest after they themselves have committed fornication, they make thy sons also to commit fornication with their gods.

17 Thou shalt not make to thyself any molten gods.

18 Thou shalt keep the feast of the unleavened bread. Seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee in the time of the month of the new corn. for in the month of the spring time thou camest out from Egypt.

19 "All of the male kind that openeth the womb, shall be mine. Of all beasts, both of oxen and of sheep, it shall be mine.

20 The firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a sheep: but if thou wilt not give a price for it, it shall be slain. The first-born of thy sons thou shalt redeem: neither shalt thou appear before me empty.

21 Six days shalt thou work, the seventh day thou shalt cease to plough and to reap.

22 "Thou shalt keep the feast of weeks with the first-fruits of the corn of thy wheat harvest, and the feast when the time of the year returneth that all things are laid in.

23 "Three times in the year all thy males shall appear in the sight of the almighty Lord the God of Israel.

24 For when I shall have taken away the nations from thy face, and shall have enlarged thy borders, no man shall lie in wait against thy land when thou shalt go up, and appear in the sight of the Lord thy God thrice in a year.

VER. 3. Let no, &c. This was to impress all with sentiments of reverence.

VER. 6. He said. Some refer this to Moses; others, more probably, to God, who had promised, by this signal of the name of the Lord, to testify his presence. Yet even in justice, he will remember mercy, and will stop at the third and fourth generation, (C.) when the influence of the progenitors' example can have but small influence upon their descendants. If, however, they prove guilty, they must expect chastisement. Ex. xx. 5.

VER. 15. Covenant. The same word occurs here, as (v. 12.) in Heb. and Sept. H.—It relates chiefly to contracts of marriage, which God forbids the faithful to enter into with the Chanaanites, and with other idolatrous nations, lest they should follow their example. Solomon is reprehended for transgressing this law, (3 K. xi. 1.) and such marriages are called abominations. 1 Esd. ix. 1. x. 2. 10. Joseph.—But if any of those people became converts, the reason of the prohibition ceased. Hence a captive woman might be married, (Deut. xxi. 11.) and Salmon took Rahab to wife. If Samson and Esther married with heathens, it might be done by God's dispensation, for weighty reasons. VER. 16. Son. The Chal. and Sept. add, "nor give any of thy daughters to their sons;" or, joining this verse with the 15th, the Sept. say, "make no covenant . . . lest they commit fornication after their gods. . . and call thee and thou eat. . . and thou take of their daughters wives for thy sons, and thou wilt give some of thy daughters to their sons, and thy daughters shall go fornicating after their gods." The most imminent dangers attend those women, who have infidel husbands. H.—The intention of Moses, and the custom of the Hebrews, justly reprobated such marriages. C.

25 *Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice upon heaven; neither shall there remain in the morning any thing of the victim of the solemnity of the Phase.

26 The first of the fruits of thy ground thou shalt offer in the house of the Lord thy God. ^bThou shalt not boil a kid in the milk of his dam.

27 And the Lord said to Moses: Write thee these words, by which I have made a covenant both with thee and with Israel.

28 And he was there with the Lord ^cforty days and forty nights: he neither ate bread nor drank water, and he wrote upon the tables ^dthe ten words of the covenant.

29 And when Moses came down from the Mount Sinai, he held the two tables of the testimony, and he knew not that his face was horned from the conversation of the Lord.

30 And Aaron and the children of Israel seeing the face of Moses horned, were afraid to come near.

31 And being called by him, they returned, both Aaron and the rulers of the congregation. And after that he spoke to them, 32 And all the children of Israel came to him: and he gave them in commandment all that he had heard of the Lord on Mount Sinai.

33 And having done speaking, ^ehe put a veil upon his face.

34 But when he went in to the Lord, and spoke with him, he took it away until he came forth, and then he spoke to the children of Israel all things that had been commanded him.

35 And they saw that the face of Moses when he came out was horned, but he covered his face again, if at any time he spoke to them.

VER. 28. Wrote. God wrote on the tables, as he had promised, v. 1. C.—Moses recorded all in this book, as he was ordered, v. 27. S. Cyprian (de Sp. 8.) and S. Augustine (q. 186.) infer, however, from this text, that the second tables had not the same honour as the first. The contrary appears from Deut. x. 4. He (God) wrote . . . as before. Estius, Calmet, and Menoch. think the forty days here mentioned, were those which Moses spent with God to obtain the people's pardon, and the law, at the same time. See C. xxxii. 35. He continued all that time without meat or sleep, by the power of God; who supports Enoch and Elias in the vigour of health without corporal sustenance. Salien. A. 2544, in which year of the world he fixes the death of Job, the great prophet of the Gentiles.

VER. 29. Horned. That is, shining, and sending forth rays of light like horns. Ch.—Sept. "encircled with glory." S. Paul (2 Cor. iii. 7.) says, the Hebrews could not look steadfastly at the face of Moses, on account of the glory of his countenance. Hence, he was forced to have a veil, which the apostle observes, was not taken off from the old law till Christ appeared. The Jews and heretics still read the law and the gospel with a veil over their eyes and heart, without understanding them, as they are hidden to those who perish, 2 Cor. iv. 3. The Jews are much enraged at some Christians, who have represented Moses with horns, as if, they say, he were a devil, or his wife an adulteress. Staechus and Drusius.—Heb. "his skin was radiant" all over his face. These rays commanded respect and awe from the people, who had before said contemptuously, Moses—the man, (C. xxxii. 1.) as they shewed that God was with him. They had not appeared before, though he had often conversed with the Lord: but now, having seen the glorious vision, they adhered to him during the remainder of his life, particularly when he enforced the obligations of the law to the people. H.—The Arabs make their hair stand up like little horns, when they are about 40 years old. Patric. ii. 4. Navig. Homer mentions the like custom, and Diomed laughs at Paris calling him the pretty-horned. Diad. xi. Many of the ancient heroes and gods are represented with horns, particularly Bacchus, whose history reminds us the things which the Lord hath commanded to be done:

2 Six days you shall do work; the seventh day shall be holy unto you, the sabbath and the rest of the Lord: he that shall do any work on it, shall be put to death.

3 You shall kindle no fire in any of your habitations on the sabbath day.

4 And Moses said to all the assembly of the children of Israel: This is the word the Lord hath commanded, saying:

5 Set aside with you first-fruits to the Lord. ^aLet every one that is willing and hath a ready heart, offer them to the Lord: gold, and silver, and brass,

6 Violet and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine linen, goats' hair,

7 And rams' skins dyed red, and violet-coloured skins, setim-wood,

8 And oil to maintain lights, and to make ointment, and most sweet incense, 9 Onyx-stones, and precious stones, for the adorning of the ephod and the rational.

10 Whosoever of you is wise, let him come, and make that which the Lord hath commanded:

11 To wit, the tabernacle, and the roof thereof, and the cover, the rings, and the board-work with the bars, the pillars and the sockets:

12 The ark and the staves, the propitiatory, and the veil that is drawn before it:

13 The table with the bars and the vessels, and the loaves of proposition:

14 The candlestick to bear up the lights, the vessels thereof and the lamps, and the oil for the nourishing of fires:

15 The altar of incense, and the bars, and the oil of unction, and the incense of spices: the hanging at the door of the tabernacle:

16 The altar of holocaust, and its grate of brass, with the bars and vessels thereof: the laver and its foot:

of many particulars, which belong to Moses. He was born or educated in the confines of Egypt, was exposed on the waters, in a box; had two mothers, and was very beautiful. While his army enjoyed the light, the Indians were in darkness. He was preceded by a pillar, had women in his train, dried up rivers with his thyrsus or wand, which had crawled, like a serpent, &c. Huet &c. S. Epiphanius (her. 55.) says the Idumeans adored Moses. Their idol is called Choe by Josephus, (Ant. xviii. 11.) which may be derived from Chus, the ancestor of Sephora, as Bacchus and Inachus may denote "the son Bar, or the god Chus," Jah-Chus, who was adored in Arabia; so that Moses, Choe, and Bacchus, probably mean the same person. Chus peopled that part of Arabia where the Hebrews sojourned. Num. xii. 1. C.

VER. 33. And having, &c. At first, he spoke uncovered. M.—The Protestants insert the word till in Italics, to insinuate that Moses spoke with a veil on, as S. Paul mentions; (H.) and Calmet would translate, "for Moses had ceased to address the people, and had put a veil upon his face," as soon as he perceived that they could not bear the blaze of his countenance. This he did out of modesty, that they might not be afraid of coming to speak freely to him, (Jansenius) though it was also mysterious, as S. Paul remarks. For even until this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart, (2 Cor. iii. 15.) as it is upon that of heretics, who cannot see the church. S. Aug. in Ps. xxx. W.

CHAP. XXXV. VER. 2. Sabbath. The frequent repetition of this precept, cannot escape the notice of the attentive reader. The sabbath was a distinctive mark of the Jews, and was generally observed by them with the utmost care, and even with scrupulosity. H.—They were not allowed to do on it any thing that had the appearance of servility, if it could be avoided without serious inconveniences. But in any urgent necessity of the sick, &c. they might provide meat, and do other work, that could not be done before. They might also repel an enemy, water cattle, &c. Though a mere rest be positively ordered, the design of it shewed that the day was to be spent in religious duties, reading the Bible, &c. Josephus assures us, many were so diligent herein, as to know almost the whole law by heart. T.

VER. 3. No fire, to dress meat. The Rabbins say it is lawful to light a fire, to warm oneself, or for light. But they generally employ some other to do it for 18 The pins of the tabernacle, and of the court, with their little cords:

19 The vestments that are to be used in the ministry of the sanctuary, the vesture of Aaron the high priest, and of his sons, to do the office of priesthood to me.

20 And all the multitude of the children of Israel going out from the presence of Moses,

21 Offered first-fruits to the Lord with a most ready and devout mind, to make the work of the tabernacle of the testimony. Whatsoever was necessary to the service and to the holy vestments, 22 Both men and women gave bracelets and earrings, rings and tablets: every vessel of gold was set aside to be offered to the Lord.

23 If any man had violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, fine linen and goats' hair, ramskins dyed red, and violet-coloured skins, 24 Metal of silver and brass, they offered it to the Lord, and setim-wood for divers uses.

25 The skilful women also gave such things as they had spun, violet, purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, 26 And goats' hair, giving all of their own accord.

27 But the princes offered onyx stones, and precious stones, for the ephod and the rational,

28 And spices and oil for the lights, and for the preparing of ointment, and to make the incense of most sweet savour.

29 All, both men and women, with devout mind offered gifts, that the works might be done which the Lord had commanded by the hand of Moses. All the children of Israel dedicated voluntary offerings to the Lord.

30 And Moses said to the children of Israel: "Behold, the Lord hath called by name Beseleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Juda,

31 And hath filled him with the spirit of God, with wisdom and understanding, and knowledge, and all learning,

33 And in engraving stones, and in carpenters' work. Whatsoever can be devised artificially, 35 Both of them hath he instructed with wisdom, to do carpenters' work, and tapestry, and embroidery in blue and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine linen, and to weave all things, and to invent all new things.

CHAP. XXXVI.

The offerings are delivered to the workmen: the curtains, coverings, boards, bars, veil, pillars, and hanging are made.

BESELEEL therefore, and Ooliab, and every wise man, to whom the Lord gave wisdom and understanding, to know how to work artificially, made "the things that are necessary for the uses of the sanctuary, and which the Lord commanded.

2 "And when Moses had called them, and every skilful man, to whom the Lord had given wisdom, and such as of their own accord had offered themselves to the making of the work,

3 He delivered all the offerings of the children of Israel unto them. And while they were earnest about the work, the people daily in the morning offered their vows.

4 Whereupon the workmen being constrained to come,

5 Said to Moses: The people offereth more than is necessary.

6 Moses therefore commanded proclamation to be made by the crier's voice: Let neither man nor woman offer any more for the work of the sanctuary. And so they ceased from offering gifts,

7 Because the things that were offered did suffice, and were too much.

8 And all the men that were wise of heart, to accomplish the work of the tabernacle, made ten curtains of twisted fine linen, and violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, with varied work, and the art of embroidering:

9 The length of one curtain was twenty-eight cubits, and the breadth four: all the curtains were of the same size.

10 And he joined five curtains, one to another, and the other five he coupled one to another.

11 He made also loops of violet in the edge of one curtain on both sides, and in the edge of the other curtain in like manner, 12 That the loops might meet one against another, and might be joined each with the other.

13 Whereupon also he cast fifty rings of gold, that might catch the loops of the curtains, and they might be made one tabernacle.

14 He made also eleven curtains of goats' hair, to cover the roof of the tabernacle:

15 One curtain was thirty cubits long, and four cubits broad: all the curtains were of one measure.

16 Five of which he joined apart, and the other six apart.

17 And he made fifty loops in the edge of one curtain, and fifty in the edge of another curtain, that they might be joined one to another.

18 And fifty buckles of brass wherewith the roof might be knit together, that of all the curtains there might be made one covering.

19 He made also a cover for the tabernacle of ram skins dyed red; and another cover over that of violet skins.

20 He made also the boards of the tabernacle of setim-wood standing.

CHAP. XXXVI. VER. 3. Vows, or voluntary oblations to Moses, according to the Heb. C.—These donations are called first-fruits, because they were the best of all things, and the first offerings that were made by the people, in the desert. T.—They shew great alacrity in performing this action, as it was to make some atonement for their liberality in honour of the golden calf. H.—But as matter alone will not suffice, unless it be properly managed, so neither will the 21 The length of one board was ten cubits; and the breadth was one cubit and a half.

22 There were two mortises throughout every board, that one might be joined to the other. And in this manner he made for all the boards of the tabernacle.

23 Of which twenty were at the south side southward,

24 With forty sockets of silver, two sockets were put under one board on the two sides of the corners, where the mortises of the sides end in the corners.

25 At that side also of the tabernacle, that looketh towards the north, he made twenty boards, 26 With forty sockets of silver, two sockets for every board.

27 But against the west, to wit, at that side of the tabernacle, which looketh to the sea, he made six boards,

28 And two others at each corner of the tabernacle behind:

29 Which were also joined from beneath unto the top, and went together into one joint. Thus he did on both sides at the corners:

30 So there were in all eight boards, and they had sixteen sockets of silver, to wit, two sockets under every board.

31 He made also bars of setim-wood, five to hold together the boards of one side of the tabernacle, 32 And five others to join together the boards of the other side; and besides these, five other bars at the west side of the tabernacle towards the sea.

33 He made also another bar, that might come by the midst of the boards from corner to corner.

34 And the boards themselves he overlaid with gold, casting for them sockets of silver. And their rings he made of gold, through which the bars might be drawn: and he covered the bars themselves with plates of gold.

35 He made also a veil of violet, and purple, scarlet, and fine twisted linen, varied and distinguished with embroidery:

36 And four pillars of setim-wood, which with their heads he overlaid with gold, casting for them sockets of silver.

37 He made also a hanging in the entry of the tabernacle of violet, purple, scarlet, and fine twisted linen, with the work of an embroiderer.

38 And five pillars with their heads, which he covered with gold, and their sockets he cast of brass.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Beseleel maketh the ark: the propitiatory, and cherubims, the table, the candlestick, the lamps, and the altar of incense, and compoundeth the incense.

AND Beseleel made also, the ark of setim-wood: it was two cubits and a half in length, and a cubit and a half in breadth, and the height was of one cubit and a half: and he overlaid it with the purest gold within and without.

letter of the Scripture instruct us, unless God teach us, by his pastors. Ephes. iv. 11. W.—From this place to the end, the Roman edition of the Sept. is very confused. That of Alcala agrees better with the Vulgate than the Alexandrian or Aldine. See Grabe. Almost all the three following chapters might be compressed in these words. The workmen did all according to God's prescription. Moses perhaps gave them plans of what each was to execute; and hence Calmet accounts for these repetitions. H.

VER. 38. Bar, not mentioned, (C. xxvi. 28,) but specified by Josephus, (iii. 5.) at the west end of the tabernacle, going across the breadth of the planks. Tostat.

2 And he made to it a crown of gold round about,
3 Casting four rings of gold at the four corners thereof: two rings in one side, and two in the other.

4 And he made bars of setim-wood, which he overlaid with gold,

5 And he put them into the rings that were at the sides of the ark to carry it.

6 He made also the propitiatory, that is, the oracle, of the purest gold, two cubits and a half in length, and a cubit and a half in breadth.

7 Two cherubims also of beaten gold, which he set on the two sides of the propitiatory:

8 One cherub in the top of one side, and the other cherub in the top of the other side: two cherubims at the two ends of the propitiatory,

9 Spreading their wings, and covering the propitiatory, and looking one towards the other, and towards it.

10 He made also the table of setim-wood, in length two cubits, and in breadth one cubit, and in height it was a cubit and a half.

11 And he overlaid it with the finest gold, and he made to it a golden ledge round about,

12 And to the ledge itself he made a polished crown of gold, of four fingers breadth, and upon the same another golden crown.

13 And he cast four rings of gold, which he put in the four corners at each foot of the table, 14 Over-against the crown: and he put the bars into them, that the table might be carried.

15 The bars also themselves he made of setim-wood, and overlaid them with gold.

16 And the vessels for the divers uses of the table, dishes, bowls, and cups, and censers of pure gold, wherein the libations are to be offered.

17 He made also the candlestick of beaten work of the finest gold. From the shaft whereof its branches, its cups, and bowls, and lilies came out:

18 Six on the two sides: three branches on one side, and three on the other.

19 Three cups in manner of a nut on each branch, and bowls withal and lilies: and three cups of the fashion of a nut in another branch, and bowls withal and lilies. The work of the six branches, that went out from the shaft of the candlestick was equal.

20 And in the shaft itself were four cups after the manner of a nut, and bowls withal at every one, and lilies:

21 And bowls under two branches in three places, which together made six branches going out from one shaft.

22 So both the bowls, and the branches were of the same, all beaten work of the purest gold.

23 He made also the seven lamps with their snuffers, and the vessels where the snuffings were to be put out, of the purest gold.

VER. 16. Censers. Heb. Kapoth, means broad deep dishes or bowls. C—Wherein, meaning the golden vessels aforesaid. H.

24 The candlestick with all the vessels thereof weighed a talent of gold.

25 He made also the altar of incense of setim-wood, being a cubit on every side four-square, and in height two cubits: from the corners of which went out horns.

26 And he overlaid it with the purest gold, with its grate, and the sides, and the horns.

27 And he made to it a crown of gold round about, and two golden rings under the crown at each side, that the bars might be put into them, and the altar be carried.

28 And the bars themselves he made also of setim-wood, and overlaid them with plates of gold.

29 He compounded also the oil for the ointment of sanctification, and incense of the purest spices, according to the work of a perfumer.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

He maketh the altar of holocaust. The brazen laver. The court with its pillars and hangings. The sum of what the people offered.

HE made^a also the altar^b of holocaust of setim-wood, five cubits square, and three in height:

2 The horns whereof went out from the corners, and he overlaid it with plates of brass.

3 And for the uses thereof, he prepared divers vessels of brass, cauldrons, tongs, flesh-hooks, pot-hooks, and fire-pans.

4 And he made the grate thereof of brass, in manner of a net, and under it in the midst of the altar a hearth,

5 Casting four rings at the four ends of the net at the top, to put in bars to carry it:

6 And he made the bars of setim-wood, and overlaid them with plates of brass:

7 And he drew them through the rings that stood out in the sides of the altar.* And the altar itself was not solid, but hollow, of boards, and empty within.

8 He made also the laver of brass, with the foot thereof, of the mirrors of the women that watched at the door of the tabernacle.

9 He made also the court, in the south side whereof were hangings of fine twisted linen of a hundred cubits.

10 Twenty pillars of brass with their sockets, the heads of the pillars, and the whole graving of the work, of silver.

11 In like manner at the north side the hangings, the pillars, and the sockets and heads of the pillars were of the same measure, and work and metal.

12 But on that side that looketh to the west, there were hangings of fifty cubits, ten pillars of brass with their sockets, and the heads of the pillars, and all the graving of the work, of silver.

* A. M. 2514.—b 2 Par. i. 5.

CHAP. XXXVIII. VER. 8. Mirrors. Formerly all sorts of metal, silver, copper, tin, &c. were used for mirrors, till the Europeans began to make them of glass. The best were made of a mixture of copper and tin. Plin. xxxiii. 9.—Watched. Heb. served like soldiers: fasting and praying, according to the Sept. and Chal. These devout women came thither with great alacrity, to shew their affection towards God, and to consecrate to his service what had hitherto served to nourish vanity. Such were the virgins, mentioned 2 Mac. iii. 19, and those who were abused by the sons of Heli. 1 K. ii. 22. Ann, the prophetess, and our blessed Lady, were thus also employed in the temple. Luke ii. 37. Women kept watch, singing and dancing before the palace of the Persian kings. C.—When the tabernacle was fixed at Silo, small apartments were probably built for the convenience of these pious women. T.

VER. 10. Brass. The Heb. does not say the pillars were of brass, but only the bases. The body was of wood, encircled with silver, v. 12. See C. xxvii. 10. C.

VER. 17. The, &c. Some render the Heb. "The bases of the pillars were of brass, the hooks of the pillars and the circles were of silver, their chaprels

13 Moreover, towards the east he prepared hangings of fifty cubits:

14 Fifteen cubits of which, were on one side with three pillars, and their sockets:

15 And on the other side (for between the two he made the entry of the tabernacle) there were hangings equally of fifteen cubits, and three pillars, and as many sockets.

16 All the hangings of the court were woven with twisted linen.

17 The sockets of the pillars were of brass, and their heads with all their gravings of silver: and he overlaid the pillars of the court also with silver.

18 And he made in the entry thereof an embroidered hanging of violet, purple scarlet, and fine twisted linen, that was twenty cubits long, and five cubits high, according to the measure of all the hangings of the court.

19 And the pillars in the entry were four, with sockets of brass, and their heads and gravings of silver.

20 The pins also of the tabernacle and of the court round about he made of brass.

21 These are the instruments of the tabernacle of the testimony, which were counted according to the commandment of Moses, in the ceremonies of the Levites, by the hand of Ithamar, son of Aaron the priest:

22 Which Beseleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur of the tribe of Juda, had made, as the Lord commanded by Moses.

23 Having for his companion Ooliab, the son of Achisamech, of the tribe of Dan: who also was an excellent artificer in wood, and worker in tapestry and embroidery in violet, purple, scarlet, and fine linen.

24 All the gold that was spent in the work of the sanctuary, and that was offered in gifts, was nine and twenty talents, and seven hundred and thirty sicles according to the standard of the sanctuary.

25 And it was offered by them that went to be numbered, from twenty years old and upwards, of six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty men able to bear arms.

26 There were moreover a hundred talents of silver, whereof were cast the sockets of the sanctuary, and of the entry where the veil hangeth.

27 A hundred sockets were made of a hundred talents, one talent being reckoned for every socket.

28 And of the thousand seven hundred and seventy-five he made the heads of the pillars, which also he overlaid with silver.

* Supra xxvii. 8.

were covered with silver." Bonfrere supposes that the pillars were of the Ionic order, and that the chaprels here designate the summit or abacus; while the hooks (yuin) mean the voluta, (M.) or bolster, representing the head-dress of virgins in their long hair. Vitruvius. H.

VER. 21. Ithamar, some time after this, (Num. i. 50,) was appointed to deliver the necessary vessels to the Levites; part of whose duty it was to take down the tabernacle and set it up again, and to keep an account of all things. M.

VER. 24. Gifts, voluntarily. The following verse mentions what arose from the tax of half a sicle per head. C. xxx. 13.

VER. 25. And it, &c. Heb. is rather more express, "And the silver given by those who were numbered, was a hundred talents, 1775 sicles of the weight of the sanctuary, v. 26. They gave each half a sicle, paid by all those who were 20 years old and upwards, amounting to 603,550 men." Hence the talent would weigh exactly 3000 sicles, (C.) or 12,000 drachmas. Some say that the common talent weighed 100 pounds, and that of the sanctuary 120, each pound containing 25 sicles. D.

29 And there were offered of brass also seventy-two thousand talents, and four hundred sicles besides,

30 Of which were cast the sockets in the entry of the tabernacle of the testimony, and the altar of brass with the grate thereof, and all the vessels that belong to the use thereof.

31 And the sockets of the court as well round about as in the entry thereof, and the pins of the tabernacle, and of the court round about.

CHAP. XXXIX.

All the ornaments of Aaron and his sons are made. And the whole work of the tabernacle is finished.

AND he made, " of violet and purple, scarlet and fine linen, the vestments^b for Aaron to wear when he ministered in the holy places, as the Lord commanded Moses.

2 So he made an ephod of gold, violet, and purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine twisted linen,

3 With embroidered work, and he cut thin plates of gold, and drew them small into threads, that they might be twisted with the woof of the foresaid colours,

4 And two borders coupled one to the other in the top on either side,

5 And a girdle of the same colours, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

6 He prepared also two onyx stones, fast set and closed in gold, and graven, by the art of a lapidary, with the names of the children of Israel:

7 And he set them in the sides of the ephod, for a memorial of the children of Israel, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

8 He made also a rational with embroidered work, according to the work of the ephod, of gold, violet, purple, and scarlet twice dyed, and fine twisted linen:

9 Four-square, double, of the measure of a span.

10 And he set four rows of precious stones in it. In the first row was a sardius, a topaz, an emerald.

11 In the second, a carbuncle, a sapphire, and a jasper.

12 In the third, a ligurius, an agate, and an amethyst.

13 In the fourth, a chrysolite, an onyx, and a beryl, set and enclosed in gold by their rows.

14 And the twelve stones, were engraved with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, each one with its several name.

15 They made also in the rational little chains, linked one to another, of the purest gold,

16 And two hooks, and as many rings of gold. And they set the rings on either side of the rational, 17 On which rings the two golden chains should hang, which they put into the hooks that stood out in the corners of the ephod.

18 These both before and behind so answered one another, that the ephod and the rational were bound together,

19 Being fastened to the girdle, and strongly coupled with rings, which a violet fillet joined, lest they should flag loose, and be moved one from the other, as the Lord commanded Moses.

20 They made also the tunic of the ephod all of violet,

21 And a hole for the head in the upper part at the middle, and a woven border round about the hole:

22 And beneath at the feet pomegranates of violet, purple, scarlet, and fine twisted linen:

23 And little bells of the purest gold, which they put between the pomegranates at the bottom of the tunic round about:

24 To wit, a bell of gold, and a pomegranate, where-with the high priest went adorned, when he discharged his ministry, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

25 They made also fine linen tunics with woven work for Aaron and his sons:

26 And mitres with their little crowns of fine linen:

27 And linen breeches of fine linen:

28 And a girdle of fine twisted linen, violet, purple, and scarlet twice dyed, of embroidery work, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

29 They made also the plate of sacred veneration of the purest gold, and they wrote on it with the engraving of a lapidary: The Holy of the Lord:

30 And they fastened it to the mitre with a violet fillet, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

31 So all the work of the tabernacle and of the roof of the testimony was finished: and the children of Israel did all things which the Lord had commanded Moses.

32 And they offered the tabernacle, and the roof, and the whole furniture, the rings, the boards, the bars, the pillars and their sockets,

33 The cover of rams' skins dyed red, and the other cover of violet skins,

34 The veil, the ark, the bars, the propitiatory,

35 The table, with the vessels thereof, and the loaves of proposition:

36 The candlestick, the lamps, and the furniture of them, with the oil:

37 The altar of gold, and the ointment, and the incense of spices:

38 And the hanging in the entry of the tabernacle:

39 The altar of brass, the grate, the bars, and all the vessels thereof: the laver, with the foot thereof: the hangings of the court, and the pillars, with their sockets:

40 The hanging in the entry of the court, and the little cords, and the pins thereof. Nothing was wanting of the vessels, that were commanded to be made for

CHAP. XL.

The tabernacle is commanded to be set up and anointed. God filleth it with his majesty.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 The first month, the first day of the month, thou shalt set up the tabernacle of the testimony,

3 And shalt put the ark in it, and shalt let down the veil before it:

4 And thou shalt bring in the table, and set upon it the things that are commanded according to the rite. The candlestick shall stand with its lamps,

5 And the altar of gold, whereon the incense is burnt before the ark of the testimony. Thou shalt put the hanging in the entry of the tabernacle,

6 And before it the altar of holocaust.

7 The laver between the altar and the tabernacle, and thou shalt fill it with water.

8 And thou shalt encompass the court with hangings, and the entry thereof.

9 And thou shalt take the oil of unction and anoint the tabernacle with its vessels, that they may be sanctified:

10 The altar of holocaust and all its vessels:

11 The laver with its foot: thou shalt consecrate all with the oil of unction, that they may be most holy.

12 And thou shalt bring Aaron and his sons to the door of the tabernacle of the testimony, and having washed them with water, 13 Thou shalt put on them the holy vestments, that they may minister to me, and that the unction of them may prosper to an everlasting priesthood.

14 And Moses did all that the Lord had commanded.

15 So in the first month of the second year, ^bthe first day of the month, the tabernacle was set up.

16 And Moses reared it up, and placed the boards and the sockets and the bars, and set up the pillars,

VER. 18. Priesthood. Heb. "And thou shalt put upon Aaron the holy garments, and anoint him, and sanctify him, that he may serve me in the priest's office: (14) and thou shalt bring his sons, and put on them their tunics; (15) and thou shalt anoint them, as thou didst anoint their father, that they may perform the office of priests to me for ever, in their generations." As the priesthood was hereditary in Aaron's family, this first unction might suffice for all. Yet, the new high priests were always anointed till the days of our Saviour. Q. xxix. 7.

17 And spread the roof over the tabernacle, putting over it a cover, as the Lord had commanded.

18 And he put the testimony in the ark, thrusting bars underneath, and the oracle above.

19 And when he had brought the ark into the tabernacle, he drew the veil before it to fulfil the commandment of the Lord.

20 And he set the table in the tabernacle of the testimony, at the north side, without the veil, 21 Setting there in order the loaves of proposition, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

22 He set the candlestick also in the tabernacle of the testimony, over-against the table on the south side, 23 Placing the lamps in order, according to the precept of the Lord.

24 He set also the altar of gold under the roof of the testimony, over-against the veil,

25 And burnt upon it the incense of spices, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

26 And he put also the hanging in the entry of the tabernacle of the testimony, 27 And the altar of holocaust in the entry of the testimony, offering the holocaust, and the sacrifices upon it, as the Lord had commanded.

28 And he set the laver between the tabernacle of the testimony and the altar, filling it with water.

29 And Moses and Aaron, and his sons, washed their hands and feet, 30 When they went into the tabernacle of the covenant, and went to the altar, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

31 He set up also the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, drawing the hanging in the entry thereof. After all things were perfected, 32 The cloud covered the tabernacle of the testimony, and the glory of the Lord filled it.

33 Neither could Moses go into the tabernacle of the covenant, the cloud covering all things, and the majesty of the Lord shining, for the cloud had covered all.

34 If at any time the cloud removed from the tabernacle, the children of Israel went forward by their troops:

35 If it hung over, they remained in the same place.

36 For the cloud of the Lord hung over the tabernacle by day, and a fire by night, in the sight of all the children of Israel throughout all their mansions.

THE BOOK OF LEVITICUS.

This Book is called LEVITICUS: because it treats of the offices, ministries, rites and ceremonies of the Priests and Levites. The Hebrews call it VAHYICRA from the word with which it begins; (Ch.) "and (the Lord) called." The a at the end of this word is printed in a smaller size, to insinuate that little children should begin to read this Book first, if we may give any credit to those who attempt to account for all the irregularities sanctioned by the great Massora! But such irregular letters are the faults of some transcribers, and are of no authority. Kennicott Dis. 1.—This Book is styled also, "The Priests' Law." H.—The seven first chapters explain the sacrifices; the sixteen next, the offices and ordination of the Priests and Levites. From the 23d chapter to the end, the feasts are designated, and some regulations respecting vows are interspersed. All these rites and sacrifices foreshewed the eucharistic sacrifice of Jesus Christ, (S. Leo. ser. 8. de pas. Trid. set. 23. c. 1.) and tended to keep the Hebrews employed, and at a greater distance from idolatry. S. Jer. on Isai. i. &c.—These prescriptions were given during the month of Nisan, in the second year after the exit, while the Hebrews remained at the foot of Mount Sinai. God spoke from the New Tabernacle. T.—In the Book of Deuteronomy we find but few regulations respecting sacrifices, as Moses had sufficiently explained them in this book. D.—If we confine ourselves to the letter, we may say these precepts are not good, and carnal; (12ce. xx. 25. Heb. vii. 16.) but if we consider the spirit, we shall confess that they are excellent, and spiritual. Rom. vii. 14. 2 Cor. iii. 6. Orig. c. Cels. vii. C.

CHAP. I.

Of holocausts or burnt-offerings.

AND the Lord called Moses, "and spoke to him from the tabernacle of the testimony, saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: The man among you that shall offer to the Lord a sacrifice of the cattle, that is, offering victims of oxen and sheep,

3 ^b If his offering be a holocaust, and of the herd, he shall offer a male without blemish, at the door of the testimony, to make the Lord favourable to him:

4 And he shall put his hand upon the head of the victim, and it shall be acceptable, and help to his expiation.

5 And he shall immolate the calf before the Lord, and the priests, the sons of Aaron, shall offer the blood thereof, pouring it round about the altar, which is before the door of the tabernacle:

6 And when they have flayed the victim, they shall cut the joints into pieces,

7 And shall put fire on the altar, having before laid in order a pile of wood:

^a A. M. 2514, A. C. 1490.

CHAP. I. VER. 2. Offer, voluntarily, without any command. Some sacrifices were of precept. Ex. xxii. 29. M.—These first chapters are addressed to the people; the 6th from v. 9, to the priests. Oxen, goats, and sheep, pigeons, and turtles, were to be offered in sacrifice, and small birds also, in the purification of lepers, (C. xiv. 4,) as they might easily be procured. C.—By sacrifice, we testify the dominion of God over all. They were offered by the patriarchs, and by all nations. God requireth that the victim should be without blemish, and slain with certain ceremonies wisely ordained. Ps. ciii. 24. W.—A sacrifice. Heb. korban, a present of any sort. Mark vii.—Sheep and goats, v. 10. The same term, ison, signifies both. M.

VER. 3. A holocaust. That is, a whole burnt-offering; (holocauston) so called, because the whole victim was consumed with fire; and given in such manner to God as wholly to evaporate, as it were, for his honour and glory; without having any part of it reserved for the use of man. The other sacrifices of the Old Testament were either offerings for sin, or peace-offerings; and these latter again were either offered in thanksgiving for blessings received; or by way of prayer for new favours or graces. So that sacrifices were then offered to God for four different ends or intentions, answerable to the different obligations which man has to God: 1. By way of adoration, homage, praise, and glory, due to his divine Majesty. 2. By way of thanksgiving for all benefits received from him. 3. By way of confessing and craving pardon for sins. 4. By way of prayer and petition for grace and relief in all necessities. In the New Law we have but one sacrifice, viz. that of the body and blood of Christ: but this one sacrifice of the New Testament perfectly answers all these four ends; and both priest and people, as often as it is celebrated, ought to join in offering it up for these four ends. Ch. S. Aug. de C. D. viii. 17. S. Chrys. in Pa. xev.—We have an altar, (Heb. xiii. 10,) on which the unbloody sacrifice is offered, (Matt. xxvi. 25,) as the blood of Christ was on the cross. Heb. ix. 25. W.

VER. 4. Victim. To transfer all the curses due to him upon it, (Eus. Demon. i. 10,) and to testify that he gives it up entirely for the honour of God. Lyran.—The Egyptians cut off the head of the victim, and veiled upon it imprecations, begging that the gods would discharge upon it all the evils which they had deserved. Then they sold it to some foreigner, or threw it into the Nile. Herod. ii. 89. All nations seem to have acknowledged, that life should be given for life. Hanc animam vobis pro meliore damus: (Ovid Fast. i.) and they had holocausts,

8 And they shall lay the parts that are cut out in order thereupon, to wit, the head, and all things that cleave to the liver,

9 The entrails and feet being washed with water: and the priest shall burn them upon the altar for a holocaust, and a sweet savour to the Lord.

10 And if the offering be of the flocks, a holocaust of sheep or of goats, he shall offer a male without blemish.

11 And he shall immolate it at the side of the altar that looketh to the north, before the Lord: but the sons of Aaron shall pour the blood thereof upon the altar round about:

12 And they shall divide the joints, the head, and all that cleave to the liver: and shall lay them upon the wood, under which the fire is to be put:

13 But the entrails and the feet they shall wash with water. And the priest shall offer it all, and burn it all upon the altar for a holocaust, and most sweet savour to the Lord.

14 But if the oblation of a holocaust to the Lord be of birds, of turtles, or of young pigeons, in imitation of the Hebrews. Bochart.—Expiation. Heb. "it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him," provided he be in proper dispositions. M.—The primary intention of the holocaust was to honour God: but this insured his favour also, and pardon. D.

VER. 5. He, by the hands of the priests, (C. x. 1,) as the Sept. express it, "they shall immolate;" (M.) though we might infer from this text, that the person who offered the victim, had to slay it; (C.) while the priests alone could pour the blood upon and around the altar. Without the effusion of blood remission is not made. Heb. ix. 22. H.

VER. 6. They. Regularly the Levites performed this office. The skin belonged to the priest. C. vii. 8. C.

VER. 7. Fire. Heb. and Sept. place the fire first, then the wood. It was the sacred fire which was never extinguished, but removed from the altar in marches, (C. iv. 13,) perhaps in a censer or pan. H.

VER. 8. All things, &c. Heb. pader, may signify the fat, or the trunk of the animal. C.

VER. 9. Sweet. Not that the Deity can take delight in sweet odours: but he is pleased with the devotion of men. For their advancement in piety, he required these sacrifices; 1. to keep the people from idolatry; 2. to teach them to consecrate their body and effects to him, as well as their souls, to serve justice unto sanctification; (Rom. vi. 19. Jo. iv. 24,) as without the help of exterior observances, the mind will hardly rise to the contemplation of truth; 3. to prefigure the greater mysteries of the Christian religion, of which the law was only a shadow, incapable of conferring justifying grace. Jo. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11. W.—The law was our pedagogue, in Christ, that we might be justified by faith, v. 24.

VER. 10. Male. Lyranus seems to have read "a year old," in the Vulg. But it is not found in the Heb. or in any version. It may have been taken from Exod. xii. 5, where the paschal lamb must be a male of one year.—Blemish. The Sept. add, "and he shall put his hand upon its head." H.

VER. 14. Pigeons. Heb. and Sept. say nothing about the age; though the Rabbins assure us, that old turtles and young pigeons were to be immolated, as being more excellent. God requires only what each person may easily procure. This third species of holocaust was chiefly intended for the poor. C. xii. 8. Ris if they could not afford even this, they might offer flour. C. ii.

15 The priest shall offer it at the altar: and twisting back the neck, and breaking the place of the wound, he shall make the blood run down upon the brim of the altar.

16 But the crop of the throat, and the feathers he shall cast beside the altar at the east side, in the place where the ashes are wont to be poured out;

17 And he shall break the pinions thereof, and shall not cut, nor divide it with a knife, and shall burn it upon the altar, putting fire under the wood. It is a holocaust and oblation of most sweet savour to the Lord.

CHAP. II.

Of offerings of flour, and first-fruits.

WHEN any one shall offer an oblation of sacrifice to the Lord, his offering shall be of fine flour, and he shall pour oil upon it, and put frankincense,

2 And shall bring it to the sons of Aaron, the priests: and one of them shall take a handful of the flour and oil, and all the frankincense, and shall put it a memorial upon the altar, for a most sweet savour to the Lord.

3 And the remnant of the sacrifice shall be Aaron's, and his sons', holy of holies of the offerings of the Lord.

4 But when thou offerest a sacrifice baked in the oven, of flour, to wit, loaves without leaven, tempered with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil:

5 If thy oblation be from the frying-pan, of flour tempered with oil, and without leaven,

6 Thou shalt divide it into little pieces, and shalt pour oil upon it.

7 And if the sacrifice be from the gridiron, in like manner the flour shall be tempered with oil:

VER. 15. The neck. Some say, without pulling the head off (Grotius); which the Rabbin deny. C.

VER. 16. Throat. Heb. mierath, is rendered "the crop and its contents," by the Chal. Syr. and Sam.

VER. 17. Pinions, as if it were to be roasted. Eusebius remarks, that the pagans plunged their birds into the sea, then poured the blood round the altar, and afterwards burnt them. Abram did not divide the birds. Gen. xv. 10. C.—Oblation. Heb. "made by fire;" or which must be all consumed, except the crop and feathers. H.

CHAP. II. VER. 1. One, (anima). The soul is put to denote the whole person.—Of sacrifice. Heb. mincha, which is applied to inanimate things, particularly to flour, "a present of wheat." Vatable.—As the other sacrifices have peculiar names, this is barely called sacrifice by the Vulg. It was instituted, 1. for the poor; 2. to support the ministers of religion; 3. to shew that God was to be honoured with the fruits of the earth; 4. sacrifice being intended as a sort of feast, bread, salt, wine, and oil accompany it; and also incense, which was almost solely reserved for God. M.—The person who offered the sacrifice, had to furnish all things belonging to it. The Sam. and Sept. add at the end of this verse, "Behold what is the offering of the Lord." Similar words occur, (v. 6. and 16.) in Heb. Sacrifices of flour were the most ancient of all. Ovid (Fast. ii.) says, Farra tamen veteres jaciebant, farra metebant, &c. "Numa taught the people to worship the gods with fruit and flour, and to make supplication with a salted cake." Plin. xviii. 2. Frugæ deos colere, & molâ salsâ supplicare. C.

VER. 2. Memorial. "To worship and celebrate the name of God." Louis de Dieu.

VER. 3. Holy of holies. That is, most holy: as being dedicated to God, and set aside by his ordinance for the use of his priests. Ch.—All was to be eaten or consumed in the tabernacle. The high priest offered a gomer full of flour and oil, rather baked, every day. C. vi. 20. C.

VER. 9. Out of. The handful, which shall be burnt, shall cause God to remember and grant the request of the offerer, equally as if the whole were consumed. M.

VER. 11. Without leaven or honey. No leaven or honey was to be used in the sacrifice offered to God: to signify that we are to exclude from the pure worship of the gospel, all double-dealing and affection to carnal pleasures. Ch.—The prohibition of leaven regarded these sacrifices. It was offered with the first-fruits, (C. xxiii. 17,) and perhaps also in peace-offerings. C. vii. 13. Honey is here rejected, as incompatible with the other ingredients to admonish us to lead a 8 And when thou offerest it to the Lord, thou shalt deliver it to the hands of the priest.

9 And when he hath offered it, he shall take a memorial out of the sacrifice, and burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour to the Lord.

10 And whatsoever is left, shall be Aaron's and his sons', holy of holies of the offerings of the Lord.

11 Every oblation, that is offered to the Lord, shall be made without leaven, neither shall any leaven or honey be burnt in the sacrifice to the Lord.

12 You shall offer only the first-fruits of them and gifts: but they shall not be put upon the altar, for a savour of sweetness.

13 Whatsoever sacrifice thou offerest, thou shalt season it with salt, neither shalt thou take away the salt of the covenant of thy God from thy sacrifice. In all thy oblations thou shalt offer salt.

14 But if thou offer a gift of the first-fruits of thy corn to the Lord, of the ears yet green, thou shalt dry it at the fire, and break it small like meal, and so shalt thou offer thy first-fruits to the Lord, 15 Pouring oil upon it, and putting on frankincense, because it is the oblation of the Lord.

16 Whereof the priest shall burn for a memorial of the gift, part of the corn broken small, and of the oil, and all the frankincense.

CHAP. III.

Of Peace-offerings.

AND if his oblation be a sacrifice of peace-offerings, and he will offer of the herd, whether male or female, he shall offer them without blemish before the Lord.

2 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his victim, which shall be slain in the entry of the taberpenitential life, and to keep at a greater distance from the customs of the pagans, who generally accompanied their oblations with honey. Eze. xvi. 18. Herodotus (B. ii.) says, the Egyptians used honey in sacrifices. C.—By unleavened bread, the Hebrews were reminded of their flight out of Egypt; and by refraining from honey, they were taught to act like men. M.

VER. 12. First-fruits, &c. to be voluntarily given to the priests, in honour of God. The honey arising from dates might also be offered.—It was little inferior to that of bees. Josep. Bel. v. 3. See Num. xv. 19.

VER. 13. Salt. In every sacrifice salt was to be used, which is an emblem of wisdom and discretion, without which none of our performances are agreeable to God. Ch.—Salt is not prescribed in the sacrifices of animals. But it was to be used in them, as we learn from the Jews, and from S. Mark ix. 48. Every victim shall be salted. The ancient poets never specify salt in their descriptions of sacrifices. But Pliny assures us, that in his time it was of the greatest authority, and always used in sacrifices, with cakes. Maxime in sacris intelligebatur salis auctoritas, quando nulla conficiuntur sine molâ salsâ. B. xxxi. 7.—Covenant. It is so called, because it was a symbol of the durable condition of the alliance with God, which was renewed in every sacrifice; (C.) or it may signify "the salt prescribed" by God: for the law and covenant are often used synonymously. M.—Let your speech be always in grace, seasoned with salt. Col. iv. 6. See Num. xviii. 19.

VER. 14. And break, &c. Heb. has simply, "corn beaten out (or ready to be beaten out) of full ears." H.—These were to be offered at the Passover. D.

CHAP. III. VER. 1. Peace-offerings. Peace, in the Scripture language, signifies happiness, welfare or prosperity; in a word, all kind of blessings. Such sacrifices, therefore, as were offered either on occasion of blessings received, or to obtain new favours, were called pacific or peace-offerings. In these some part of the victim was consumed with fire on the altar of God: other parts were eaten by the priests, and by the persons for whom the sacrifice was offered. Ch.—Female beasts might here be sacrificed, but not birds. The victims were either offered to praise God for past favours, or to comply with some vow, or were perfectly free. C. vii. 12. Three sorts of victims, the ox, the sheep, and the goat, denoted all those who serve God in innocence, or in the state of penance. D.—Of these sacrifices "of the perfect," none of the unclean could taste. C. vii. 20. When only flour or bread was given, the donor received no part again.

VER. 2. Which shall. Heb. "which he gives, he shall slay it . . . the priests shall pour," &c. Yet some assert, that laymen were not allowed to approach the altar.

nacle of the testimony, and the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall pour the blood round about upon the altar.

3 And they shall offer of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, for an oblation to the Lord, *the fat that covereth the entrails, and all the fat that is within :

4 The two kidneys, with the fat wherewith the flanks are covered, and the caul of the liver with the two little kidneys.

5 And they shall burn them upon the altar, for a holocaust, putting fire under the wood : for an oblation of most sweet savour to the Lord.

6 But if his oblation, and the sacrifice of peace-offering be of the flock, whether he offer male or female, they shall be without blemish.

7 If he offer a lamb before the Lord,

8 He shall put his hand upon the head of his victim : and it shall be slain in the entry of the tabernacle of testimony : and the sons of Aaron shall pour the blood thereof round about upon the altar.

9 And they shall offer of the victim of peace-offerings a sacrifice to the Lord : the fat and the whole rump,

10 With the kidneys, and the fat that covereth the belly and all the vitals, and both the little kidneys, with the fat that is about the flanks, and the caul of the liver with the little kidneys.

11 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar, for the food of the fire, and of the oblation of the Lord.

12 If his offering be a goat, and he offer it to the Lord,

13 He shall put his hand upon the head thereof : and shall immolate it in the entry of the tabernacle of the testimony. And the sons of Aaron shall pour the blood thereof round about upon the altar.

14 And they shall take of it for the food of the Lord's fire, the fat that covereth the belly, and that covereth all the vital parts :

15 The two little kidneys, with the caul that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the fat of the liver with the little kidneys :

16 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar, for the food of the fire, and of a most sweet savour. All the fat shall be the Lord's,

17 By a perpetual law for your generations, and in all your habitations : neither blood nor fat shall ye eat at all.

CHAP. IV.

Of offerings for sins of ignorance.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses,^b saying :

2 Say to the children of Israel : The soul that sinneth through ignorance, and doth any thing concerning any of the commandments of the Lord, which he commanded not to be done :

3 If the priest that is anointed shall sin, making the people to offend, he shall offer to the Lord for his sin, a calf without blemish.

4 And he shall bring it to the door of the testimony before the Lord, and shall put his hand upon the head thereof, and shall sacrifice it to the Lord.

5 He shall take also of the blood of the calf, and carry it into the tabernacle of the testimony.

6 And having dipped his finger in the blood, he shall sprinkle with it seven times before the Lord, before the veil of the sanctuary.

7 And he shall put some of the same blood upon the horns of the altar of the sweet incense most acceptable to the Lord, which is in the tabernacle of the testimony. And he shall pour all the rest of the blood at the foot of the altar of holocaust in the entry of the tabernacle.

8 And he shall take off the fat of the calf for the sin-offering, as well that which covereth the entrails, as all the inwards :

9 The two little kidneys, and the caul that is upon them which is by the flanks, and the fat of the liver, with the little kidneys,

10 As it is taken off from the calf of the sacrifice of VER. 3. Fat. All the fat was carefully presented to the Lord. The Persians offered this alone. Omentum in flammâ pingue liquefaciens. Catul. Epig. de Magis.

VER. 4. Flanks. S. Jerom sometimes translates the Heb. loins, as the Sept. and Sym. do ; (Ps. xxxvii. 7.) and this Bochart believes is the most proper signification. C.—Two is not specified in the Latin, nor little in the Hebrew.

VER. 5. For a. Some translate, "upon the," others "after the burnt-sacrifice," as if that were always to be offered first, every day. C.—But it seems that the peace-offering was an imitation of the holocaust, with respect to the fat, caul, and kidneys, which were to be entirely consumed. H.

VER. 8. It. Heb. and Sept. "he shall slay," v. 2. 13. C.

VER. 9. Whole rump. Sept. "the loin without blemish." The tail of the Arabian sheep is extremely large and fat, weighing eight or ten pounds ; so that it is necessary to support it on a vehicle. Busbecq. ep. 3. The tail was not sacrificed in any other species. M.

VER. 10. With, &c. Heb. "and the two kidneys with their fat by the flanks, and the great lobe of the liver, above the kidneys, shall they take." H.—All our affections must be consecrated to God, and our passions kept under. D.

VER. 11. Food, destined for the honour of God, and to be consumed by fire. In other places, God calls these sacrifices his food, and the altar his table. C. xxi. 21. Mal. i. 7. 12.

VER. 17. Fat. It is meant of the fat, which by the prescription of the law was to be offered on God's altar : not of the fat of meat, such as we commonly eat. Ch.—This distinction is sufficiently insinuated ; (C. vii. 25.) whence it also appears that the fat, here forbidden, is only that, which, in all sacrifices, appertains to the Lord, v. 9. 10. The fat which was intermingled with the flesh, might be eaten, and even the rest if the animal was not sacrificed. God repeatedly forbids the use of blood. C. xvii. 13. Yet the Jews abstain from the fat also of all oxen, sheep, and goats ; (Josep. iii. 10.) and some, adhering to the words of this text, forbid the use of fat indiscriminately. C.—A Lapidé condemns it, if the animal might be offered in sacrifice, though it were slain at home.

CHAP. IV. VER. 2. Ignorance. To be ignorant of what we are bound to know is sinful : and for such culpable ignorance, these sacrifices, prescribed in this and the following chapter, were appointed. Ch.—Not to be done. Hence the Rablins admit sins of ignorance, only against the negative precepts. But when God forbids one thing, he commands the contrary ; and we may sin by ignorance against any of his ordinances. If the ignorance be voluntary, it enhances the crime ; and Aristotle well observes that drunkards, who do an injury, are to be doubly punished, because their fault is voluntary in its cause, (ad Nicom. iii. 7.) But if the ignorance were perfectly involuntary, and inculpable, no sacrifice was required ; so that God here speaks only of that sort of ignorance which involved some degree of negligence. This fault could not be forgiven without interior good dispositions. The sacrifices only reached to the cleansing of the flesh, (Heb. ix. 13,) or to screen the culprit from the severity of the law and of the magistrates ; (C.) though they might help the inward dispositions of the heart, and thus contribute to obtain God's pardon. Orig. S. Aug. q. 20. The difference between peccatum and delictum, is not perfectly ascertained. Some think the former word denotes sins of malice, and the latter those of ignorance. Tirinus maintains the contrary, as a more costly sacrifice, he says, is required for the latter. H.

VER. 3. Anointed. That is, "the high priest." Sept. Inferior priests were not anointed, except the sons of Aaron, at the beginning. C.—Ignorance in such a one is greatly to be avoided, as it tends to scandalize the people. H.—The same ceremonies are prescribed, as on the day of expiation ; only the priest did not enter the most holy place.—Offend, in some smaller matter. If he engaged his brethren in the crime of idolatry, he should die. Deut. xiii. 15. C.—Before the solemn unction, he might be expiated, like one of the princes. M.

VER. 3. Calf. Heb. par, does not specify the age. C.

VER. 6. The blood. As the figure of the blood of Christ shed for the remission of our sins ; and carried by him into the sanctuary of heaven.

VER. 6. Seven. A number consecrated in Scripture, (C.) and not superstitious. W.—Apuleius (Met. xi.) mentions it. Septies submerso furtivus capite C.—Sanctuary, or most holy place. M.

peace-offerings, and he shall burn them upon the altar of holocaust.

11 But the skin and all the flesh, with the head and the feet, and the bowels, and the dung,

12 And the rest of the body, he shall carry forth without the camp into a clean place, where the ashes are wont to be poured out: and he shall burn them upon a pile of wood, they shall be burnt in the place where the ashes are poured out.

13 And if all the multitude of Israel shall be ignorant, and through ignorance shall do that which is against the commandment of the Lord,

14 And afterwards shall understand their sin, they shall offer for their sin a calf, and shall bring it to the door of the tabernacle.

15 And the ancients of the people shall put their hands upon the head thereof before the Lord. And the calf being immolated in the sight of the Lord,

16 The priest that is anointed, shall carry of the blood into the tabernacle of the testimony, 17 And shall dip his finger in it, and sprinkle it seven times before the veil.

18 And he shall put of the same blood on the horns of the altar that is before the Lord, in the tabernacle of the testimony: and the rest of the blood, he shall pour at the foot of the altar of holocaust, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the testimony.

19 And all the fat thereof he shall take off, and shall burn it upon the altar:

20 Doing so with this calf, as he did also with that before: and the priest praying for them, the Lord will be merciful unto them.

21 But the calf itself he shall carry forth without the camp, and shall burn it as he did the former calf: because it is for the sin of the multitude.

22 If a prince shall sin, and through ignorance do any one of the things that the law of the Lord forbiddeth, 23 And afterwards shall come to know his sin, he shall offer a buck-goat without blemish, a sacrifice to the Lord.

24 And he shall put his hand upon the head thereof; and when he hath immolated it in the place where the holocaust is wont to be slain before the Lord, because it is for sin,

25 The priest shall dip his finger in the blood of the victim for sin, touching therewith the horns of the altar of holocaust, and pouring out the rest at the foot thereof.

26 But the fat he shall burn upon it, as is wont to be done with the victims of peace-offerings: and the priest shall pray for him, and for his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

27 And if any one of the people of the land shall sin through ignorance, doing any of those things that by the law of the Lord are forbidden, and offending, 28 And shall come to know his sin, he shall offer a she-goat without blemish.

29 And he shall put his hand upon the head of the victim that is for sin, and shall immolate it in the place of the holocaust.

30 And the priest shall take of the blood with his finger, and shall touch the horns of the altar of holocaust, and shall pour out the rest at the foot thereof.

31 But taking off all the fat, as is wont to be taken away of the victims of peace-offerings, he shall burn it upon the altar, for a sweet savour to the Lord: and he shall pray for him, and it shall be forgiven him.

32 But if he offer of the flock a victim for his sin, to wit, an ewe without blemish:

33 He shall put his hand upon the head thereof, and shall immolate it in the place where the victims of holocausts are wont to be slain.

34 And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and shall touch the horns of the altar of holocaust, and the rest he shall pour out at the foot thereof.

35 All the fat also he shall take off, as the fat of the ram that is offered for peace-offerings is wont to be taken away: and shall burn it upon the altar, for a burnt-sacrifice of the Lord: and he shall pray for him and for his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

CHAP. V.

Of other sacrifices for sins.

IF any one sin, and hear the voice of one swearing, and is a witness either because he himself hath seen, or is privy to it: if he do not utter it, he shall bear his iniquity.

* A. M. 2514.

VER. 12. Ashes of the victims. They were first laid beside the altar of holocausts. By this ceremony, the priest begged that his sins might be removed from the sight of God, (M.) by virtue of Christ's sacrifice, who suffered out of the gate of Jerusalem. Heb. xiii. 13. The high priest was obliged to offer this sacrifice himself, to expiate his own sin, as well as that of the people. Heb. ix. 7.

VER. 13. Multitude assembled. Sept. add, "be involuntarily ignorant, and no one of the congregation perceive the truth, (or word) and shall transgress by commission or omission, one of all the precepts of the Lord." Such was the offence of Saul and of the people. 1 K. xiv. 33. On these occasions, the elders were to put their hands on the victim, to acknowledge the general offence, if it were not of too heinous a nature to be expiated by sacrifice. See Deut. xiii. 12.

VER. 22. A prince. King, magistrate, general, chief of a tribe, or great family; in a word, one elevated above the rest, (Nasi) as appears, Num. i. 4. v. 1. 2.

VER. 24. He. Sam. and Sept. read, "they shall have," referring it to the priests.

VER. 25. Him. Moses does not here specify what was to be done with the flesh. But (C. vi. 26,) he commands it to be given to the priests. C.—In the sacrifices for the sins of the multitude, or of the priest, all was consumed; to express a greater detestation of such offences, (T.) and that the priests might derive no benefit from them. Theod. q. 3. S. Tho. i. 2. q. 102. a. 3. W.—Those who offered these victims received no part of them again, nor were oil or incense used; as all delicacies must be rejected by penitents. T.

VER. 27. The land. A rustic or plebeian. M.—The offences of such might be expiated by the sacrifice of a goat, ewe, lamb, ram, two pigeons, or flour. C. v. 7. xi. 15. C.

VER. 29. Of, &c. One Heb. MS. the Sept. and Syriac read "in the place in which he shall slay the holocaust." The Sam. has they slay, both here and v. 24. and 33, which seems the truer reading. Kennicott.

VER. 35. For a. Heb. may be "according to, like (H.) upon, besides, after the holocausts." C. See C. iii. 5.

CHAP. V. VER. 1. Swearing. We are accountable for the sins of others, to which we are accessory, as appears from this and part of the following chapter. No distinction of persons is here noticed. If any one, therefore, be witness to another's promise, confirmed by oath, and, being cited to the bar, refuse to speak, he shall be guilty of sin, and offer the sacrifice prescribed (v. 6,) for all the preceding cases. Restitution must also be made to the injured person. M.—But others suppose that no sacrifice was allowed for such an obstinate wretch as would not answer when the judge swore or adjured him. He was liable to be put to death. The associate of the thief fell under the like punishment as the thief himself, when he would not reveal the theft to the judge. Prov. xxix. 24. Others again understand this swearing to mean blaspheming God. If the hearer do not reprehend him, he shall suffer as his accomplice. Orig. Philo.—Junius thinks that the neglect of fraternal correction, was to be expiated by the sacrifice prescribed for the sins of ignorance, concerning which Moses is treating. But it seems that the person here mentioned was to die, as the words he shall bear his iniquity, commonly denote. C. xix. 8. &c. C.—When perjury prejudiceth another's cause, we are bound to reveal what we know to the judge, if it can be done

2 Whosoever toucheth any unclean thing, either that which has been killed by a beast, or died of itself, or any other creeping thing: and forgetteth his uncleanness, he is guilty, and hath offended:

3 And if he touch any thing of the uncleanness of man, according to any uncleanness wherewith he is wont to be defiled, and having forgotten it, come afterwards to know it, he shall be guilty of an offence.

4 The person that sweareth, and uttereth with his lips, that he would do either evil or good, and bindeth the same with an oath, and his word, and having forgotten it afterwards understandeth his offence,

5 Let him do penance for his sin,

6 And offer of the flocks an ewe-lamb, or a she-goat, and the priest shall pray for him and for his sin:

7 But if he be not able to offer a beast, let him offer two turtles, *or two young pigeons to the Lord, one for sin, and the other for a holocaust,

8 And he shall give them to the priest: who shall offer the first for sin, and twist back the head of it to the little pinions, so that it stick to the neck, and be not altogether broken off.

9 And of its blood he shall sprinkle the side of the altar, and whatsoever is left, he shall let it drop at the bottom thereof, because it is for sin.

10 And the other he shall burn for a holocaust, as is wont to be done: and the priest shall pray for him, and for his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

11 And if his hand be not able to offer two turtles, or two young pigeons, he shall offer for his sin the tenth part of an ephi of flour. He shall not put oil upon it, nor put any frankincense thereon, because it is for sin:

so as to avoid scandal. W.—Not. Heb. editions read loa, instead of la, both here and in 34 other places; an irregularity unknown to some MSS. and to the Samaritan copy. Perhaps it may have been occasioned by lu, "to him," being of the same sound with la. Kennic.

VER. 2. Beast. All wild beasts were deemed unclean; but domestic clean cattle, though slain, did not defile; (C.) while some of the unclean did, even alive. C. xi. 26. 31. H.—Fishes are comprised under the name of reptiles; yet some were not unclean. C. xi. 9. The Sept. neglect reptiles, and put "the carcases of impure abominations;" by which they probably mean dogs, and such things as the Egyptians adored. This verse does not regard those who had only touched something unclean; as such were to be purified at night, by washing their garments; but it refers to those who, having neglected that ordinance, had still ventured to touch something sacred, and were therefore required to offer the sacrifice, asson, (C.) as for an irreligious behaviour towards God. T.

VER. 8. Of man, who may be in a state of legal uncleanness. If he neglect or forget to purify himself, he must offer a sacrifice, either such as he may choose, (S. Aug. q. 2.) or such as the priest may require. Lyran. C.

VER. 4. Lips. This is necessary before he can be punished by men; but every secret promise binds before God. Tostat.—Evil or good: any thing whatsoever, whether favour or punishment, whether the completion of it be difficult or easy. C.—Thus parents sometimes foolishly swear that they will chastise their children unmercifully; libertines that they will live in luxuries as long as they have any money; ill-natured people that they will never speak to such a one, that they will murder, &c. To execute such promises, even confirmed by an oath, would be a double crime. Let them ask pardon of God for their rash oath. Philo.—Herod made his oath a pretext for killing the Baptist, deluding himself, perhaps, with a false interpretation of this law. H.—As such hasty oaths are easily forgotten, when the guilty person recollected himself, he was bound to confess his fault to the priest in the following manner, according to the Rabbins: Placing his hands between the horns of his victim, he shall say, "I beseech you, Lord, I have sinned; I have committed iniquity and prevarication; I have committed such a fault. I repent, I am filled with sorrow and confusion for having done so; I will relapse no more." These doctors teach, that without confession and sorrow no sacrifices will remit sin. C.—To preserve the secret of confession, the priests were ordered to eat the victims alone. Philo, &c. T.

VER. 5. Let, &c. Heb. "and surely when he is guilty in one of these things, he shall confess that he hath sinned therein; (6.) and he shall bring his sin-offering unto the Lord, for his transgression," &c. Confession to the priest was requisite, before all the other sacrifices for sin. See Josep. iii. 10. H.

VER. 9. Sin. The flesh belonged to the priest. C. vi. 26.

12 And he shall deliver it to the priest: who shall take a handful thereof, and shall burn it upon the altar for a memorial of him that offered it:

13 Praying for him and making atonement: but the part that is left, he himself shall have for a gift.

14 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

15 If any one shall sin through mistake, transgressing the ceremonies in those things that are sacrificed to the Lord, he shall offer for his offence a ram without blemish out of the flocks, that may be bought for two sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary:

16 And he shall make good the damage itself which he hath done, and shall add the fifth part besides, delivering it to the priest, who shall pray for him, offering the ram, and it shall be forgiven him.

17 If any one sin through ignorance, and do one of those things which by the law of the Lord are forbidden, and being guilty of sin, understand his iniquity,

18 He shall offer of the flocks a ram without blemish to the priest, according to the measure, and estimation of the sin; and the priest shall pray for him, because he did it ignorantly: and it shall be forgiven him,

19 Because by mistake he trespassed against the Lord.

CHAP. VI.

Oblations for sins of injustice: ordinances concerning the holocausts and the perpetual fire: the sacrifices of the priests, and the sin-offerings.

THE Lord spoke to Moses,^b saying:

2 Whosoever shall sin, and despising the Lord, shall deny to his neighbour the thing delivered to his keeping, which was committed to his trust; or shall by force extort any thing, or commit oppression,

^b A. M. 2514.

VER. 11. Ephi, or a gomer, which is the tenth part of three pecks and three pints, English. Arbuthnot.—For sin, and therefore to shew how odious sin is to God, he will not allow any frankincense to be offered. M.

VER. 12. Memorial. Seq. C. ii. 2. At the end, the Heb. and Sept. add, "It is a sin-offering;" peccatum. C.—Hence the priests are said to eat the sins of the people. Osee iv. 8.

VER. 15. The ceremonies: omitted in Heb. and Sept.—Sanctified, neglecting to pay the first-fruits; or, by mistake, eating any of the victims reserved for God, or for the priests.—Two sicles. S. Jerom seems to have read in the dual number, whereas the Hebrew pointed copies have sicles indefinitely; and the Rabbins understand two, when the word is plural and undetermined. Theodoret reads fifty, which some maintain is the ancient translation of the Sept. though it is not found in any of our copies. Heb. may be rendered "a ram (or) according to thy estimation, sicles of silver." The particle or is sometimes understood. It is probable that when the fault was considerable, a ram was to be sacrificed, and restitution made of what was due with the fifth part besides; but if the fault was small, the priest determined how many sicles were to be presented for sacred purposes.—Sanctuary. See Ex. xxx. 13.

VER. 17. Through ignorance. These words are not found in the Heb. or Sept. but the context shews, that they must be understood. Some pretend that the ignorance here spoken of, is that by which a person doubts whether the thing which he touched was unclean or not. But we may explain these last verses as a recapitulation of what had been already ordered. C.

VER. 18. Sin. If it were grievous, the priest required a more valuable victim, v. 16.

VER. 19. Lord. Heb. "It is a victim for the sin which he has committed against the Lord." From this chapter, as well as from Num. v. 7, it is obvious that a special confession was necessary, not only for those who had fallen into the disorder of leprosy, which was a figure of sin, and often inflicted by God in punishment of it; but also, when they had given way to the smallest transgression against the commands and ceremonies of the Lord. H.—This custom is still observed by the Jews. Galatinus x. 3.

CHAP. VI. VER. 2. Despising: interpretatively; not formally, as Num. xv. Estius.—The Lord, who knows the truth, and is an avenger of all injustice, even the most secret. H.—The law inflicts indeed a smaller punishment, as these offences are supposed to be secret, and the offender is thus invited to repent, and to repair the injury done. When the crime is public, the law is more severe. C.—Heb. "If a soul transgress and sin against the Lord." Sept. "If any one wilfully despise the commands," &c. H.—Trust. Heb. and Sept. "or a sum given for traffic for their common benefit."—Oppression, by any means whatsoever detaining the wages of the labourer, &c.

3 Or shall find a thing lost, and denying it, shall also swear falsely, or shall do any other of the many things, wherein men are wont to sin,

4 Being convicted of the offence, he shall restore

5 All that he would have gotten by fraud, in the principal, *and the fifth part besides to the owner, whom he wronged.

6 Moreover for his sin he shall offer a ram without blemish out of the flock, and shall give it to the priest, according to the estimation and measure of the offence:

7 And he shall pray for him before the Lord, and he shall have forgiveness for every thing in doing of which he hath sinned.

8 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

9 Command Aaron and his sons: This is the law of a holocaust: It shall be burnt upon the altar, all night until morning: the fire shall be of the same altar.

10 The priest shall be vested with the tunic and the linen breeches; and he shall take up the ashes of that which the devouring fire hath burnt, and putting them beside the altar,

11 Shall put off his former vestments, and being clothed with others, shall carry them forth without the camp, and shall cause them to be consumed to dust in a very clean place.

12 And the fire on the altar shall always burn, and the priest shall feed it, putting wood on it every day in the morning, and laying on the holocaust, shall burn thereupon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13 This is the perpetual fire which shall never go out on the altar.

14 This is the law of the sacrifice and libations, which the children of Aaron shall offer before the Lord, and before the altar.

15 The priest shall take a handful of the flour that is tempered with oil, and all the frankincense that is put upon the flour: and he shall burn it on the altar for a memorial of most sweet odour to the Lord:

* Num. v. 7.

VER. 3. Lost. We acquire no title to the thing by finding it. The Roman law, as well as divines, condemn those who appropriate the thing found to their own use, as guilty of theft, whether they knew to whom it belonged or not; and Plato greatly commends the law of Solon, "Take not what thou didst not put down," a rule which the Dyrbeans and the people of Biblos rigorously observed. We may, however, take up what is lost, (C.) and endeavour to find the owner, who must indemnify us for our trouble; and, if we never find him, we are directed to give the price to the poor, for the owner's welfare. H.

VER. 4. Convicted, by his own conscience, and by the judgment of the priest to whom he has confessed his sin. The Heb. expresses the different sorts of sins specified above, which the Vulgate denotes by the word offence.

VER. 5. Wronged. Heb. and Chaldee add, "in the day of his sin-offering;" and the Sept. "in which he is convicted." No unnecessary delay in making restitution can be allowed to the sincere penitent, who wishes to make his peace with God.

VER. 6. The. Heb. "thy estimation for a sin-offering." H.—Wilful sins require a more noble victim than those of ignorance, which were expiated by the sacrifice of a goat. M.

VER. 9. Holocaust. The regulations respecting it, as they regard the priests, are here given, as C. i. directions were given to those who presented the victims.—Morning. All the parts of the victim were not laid on at the same time. The like was observed during the day also, when no other sacrifices were to be offered on this altar.—Of the same, not strange, unhallowed fire, but such as was kept continually burning on the altar of holocausts, as the Heb. intimates; "the fire of the altar shall be burning in it." During the marches in the desert, it is not written how this fire was preserved. The Persians believed that their eternal fire came down from heaven, and the vestal virgins kept their sacred fire at Rome, with superstitious care. Theophrastus (ap. Euseb. præp. i. 9.) mentions the keeping of fire in the temples, as one of the most ancient rites of religion.

VER. 11. Others; such as were worn on common occasions, out of the tabernacle.—And shall, &c. Heb. has only, "unto a clean place," as the other versions and some Latin copies read. The meaning of the addition is, that all the 16 And the part of the flour that is left, Aaron and his sons shall eat, without leaven: and he shall eat it in the holy place of the court of the tabernacle.

17 And therefore it shall not be leavened, because part thereof is offered for the burnt-sacrifice of the Lord. It shall be most holy, as that which is offered for sin and for trespass.

18 The males only of the race of Aaron shall eat it. It shall be an ordinance everlasting in your generations concerning the sacrifices of the Lord: every one that toucheth them shall be sanctified.

19 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

20 This is the oblation of Aaron, and of his sons, which they must offer to the Lord, in the day of their anointing: They shall offer the tenth part of an ephi of flour for a perpetual sacrifice, half of it in the morning, and half of it in the evening:

21 It shall be tempered with oil, and shall be fried in a frying-pan.

22 And the priest that rightfully succeedeth his father, shall offer it hot, for a most sweet odour to the Lord, and it shall be wholly burnt on the altar.

23 For every sacrifice of the priest shall be consumed with fire, neither shall any man eat thereof.

24 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

25 Say to Aaron and his sons: This is the law of the victim for sin: In the place where the holocaust is offered, it shall be immolated before the Lord. It is holy of holies.

26 The priest that offereth it, shall eat it in a holy place, in the court of the tabernacle.

27 Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof, shall be sanctified. If a garment be sprinkled with the blood thereof, it shall be washed in a holy place.

28 And the earthen vessel, wherein it was sodden, shall be broken; but if the vessel be of brass, it shall be scoured, and washed with water.

29 Every male of the priestly race shall eat of the flesh thereof, because it is holy of holies.

bones, &c. must be perfectly reduced to dust, before they be carried out of the camp. C.

VER. 12. Fat, along with the whole burnt-offering. M.

VER. 13. The perpetual fire. This fire came from heaven, (infra chap. ix. 24.) and was always kept burning on the altar: as a figure of the heavenly fire of divine love, which ought to be always burning in the heart of a Christian. Ch.—It must be fed by assiduous meditation on the Scripture and holy things. D.

VER. 14. Sacrifice of flour, monée. C. ii. 1.—And libations. These words are added, to shew that oil and wine accompanied this sacrifice.

VER. 16. He. Only the priests, who were actually officiating, could partake of it. C.

VER. 18. Lord. As long as this law shall be in force. M.—Sanctified. Theodoret (q. 5.) seems to assert, that all such were obliged to serve the altar in some function or other. If any unclean person touched the victims wilfully, he was slain; if, by mistake, the blood sprinkled a garment, it was to be washed, v. 27.

VER. 20. Evening. And this shall continue as long as they are high priests, from the day of their consecration, (Josep. iii. 20. Cajetan,) a perpetual sacrifice. C.

VER. 22. Rightfully. According to the law, which decides that, if the first-born be deformed, the next shall succeed. C. xxi. 18. Heb. "the priest, of his sons, who is anointed in his stead, shall offer it." No mention is made of its being hot, either here or in the Sept. H.

VER. 23. Sacrifice of flour, not of animals. Ex. xxix. 28.

VER. 25. Sin of individuals. The victims offered by the priest, or by the whole people, were to be burnt. C. iv. 7.

VER. 26. Tabernacle. No part shall be given to those who are not of the sacerdotal race. C.

VER. 27. Place, in the court, that so it may be worn again. M.

VER. 28. Sodden, or boiled. Such vessels, of private people, as had been used to boil part of the victim, (1 K. ii. 13,) were either to be abandoned to the service of the altar, or broken, &c. C.—Earthen vessels might imbibe some part of the consecrated juice. M.

30 For the victim that is slain for sin, *the blood of which is carried into the tabernacle of the testimony to make atonement in the sanctuary, shall not be eaten, but shall be burnt with fire.

CHAP. VII.

Of sacrifices for trespasses and thanks-offerings. No fat nor blood is to be eaten.

THIS^b also is the law of the sacrifice for a trespass, it is most holy:

2 And where the holocaust is immolated, the victim also for a trespass shall be slain: the blood thereof shall be poured round about the altar.

3 They shall offer thereof the rump and the fat that covereth the entrails:

4 The two little kidneys, and the fat which is by the flanks, and the caul of the liver, with the little kidneys.

5 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar, it is the burnt-sacrifice of the Lord for a trespass.

6 Every male of the priestly race, shall eat this flesh in a holy place, because it is most holy.

7 As the sacrifice for sin is offered, so is also that for a trespass: the same shall be the law of both these sacrifices: it shall belong to the priest that offereth it.

8 The priest that offereth the victim of holocaust, shall have the skin thereof.

9 And every sacrifice of flour that is baked in the oven, and whatsoever is dressed on the gridiron, or in the frying-pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it:

10 Whether they be tempered with oil, or dry, all the sons of Aaron shall have one as much as another.

11 This is the law of the sacrifice of peace-offerings that is offered to the Lord.

12 If the oblation be for thanksgiving, they shall offer loaves without leaven tempered with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and fine flour fried, and cakes tempered and mingled with oil:

13 Moreover loaves of leavened bread, with the sacrifice of thanks, which is offered for peace-offerings:

14 Of which one shall be offered to the Lord for first-fruits, and shall be the priest's that shall pour out the blood of the victim.

VER. 30. Fire. As they are the victims for the sins of the priest and of the people. C. iv. 8. 18. M.

CHAP. VII. VER. 1. Trespass. Trespasses, for which these offerings were to be made, were less offences, than those for which the sin-offerings were appointed. Ch.—Delictum, trespass, answers to the Heb. asham, and the Gr. plemeleia; (H.) being of a more extensive signification than the Heb. chets, sin, as it comprises even sins against knowledge. Parkhurst. See C. iv. 2.—No particular ceremonies are enjoined, (v. 7,) only a he-goat or a ram was to be offered; if the former, the rump, &c. were to be given (v. 8); if the latter, the fat of the intestines and the reins were to be offered, and the blood poured out at the foot of the altar.—Victim. Sept. "ram."—Holy. To be eaten by the priests, and in the court of the tabernacle, v. 6. C.—Sins of commission, peccata; and of omission, delicta, are equally offensive to God. S. Aug. q. 20. W.

VER. 8. Skin. Of these skins a great profit was made. Philo de præm. sacer.

VER. 9. Priest's; to be divided among his brethren, v. 10. They officiated a week by turns. C.—Each, therefore, claimed the parts allotted by God to the priest on duty. But it is not certain what part they could retain for their own use. Some think that the unbaked flour alone was to be distributed equally, v. 10. Bonfrere.

VER. 11. This. Here the Roman, Sept., Junius, &c. commence the 7th chapter.

VER. 12. Oil. Any of these sorts of bread would suffice. Jacob and Jethro had formerly offered sacrifices of praise, and the Greeks had some which they termed Soteria. C.

VER. 13. Bread, for the use of the priests. C. ii. 11.

VER. 14. Of which leavened bread, one, representing all the rest, shall be offered for first-fruits. Heb. "a heave-offering," not as a sacrifice. M.—Others maintain that a loaf without leaven, was laid upon the altar; and all the rest given to the priest. C.

15 And the flesh of it shall be eaten the same day, neither shall any of it remain until the morning.

16 If any man by vow, or of his own accord, offer a sacrifice, it shall in like manner be eaten the same day: and if any of it remain until the morrow, it is lawful to eat it:

17 But whatsoever shall be found on the third day shall be consumed with fire.

18 If any man eat of the flesh of the victim of peace-offerings on the third day, the oblation shall be of no effect, neither shall it profit the offerer: yea rather whatsoever soul shall defile itself with such meat, shall be guilty of transgression.

19 The flesh that hath touched any unclean thing, shall not be eaten, but shall be burnt with fire: he that is clean shall eat of it.

20 If any one that is defiled, shall eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which is offered to the Lord, he shall be cut off from his people.

21 And he that hath touched the uncleanness of man, or of beast, or of any thing that can defile, and shall eat of such kind of flesh, shall be cut off from his people.

22 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

23 Say to the children of Israel: The fat of a sheep, and of an ox, and of a goat you shall not eat.

24 The fat of a carcass that hath died of itself, and of a beast that was caught by another beast, you shall have for divers uses.

25 If any man eat the fat that should be offered for the burnt-sacrifice of the Lord, he shall perish out of his people.

26 Moreover you shall not eat the blood of any creature whatsoever, whether of birds or beasts.

27 Every one that eateth blood, shall perish from among the people.

28 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

29 Speak to the children of Israel, saying: He that offereth a victim of peace-offerings to the Lord, let him offer therewith a sacrifice also, that is, the libations thereof.

30 He shall hold in his hands the fat of the victim, and 31 Who shall burn the fat upon the altar, but the breast shall be Aaron's, and his sons'.

32 The right shoulder also of the victims of peace-offerings, shall fall to the priest for first-fruits.

33 He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth the blood and the fat, he shall have the right shoulder also for his portion.

34 For the breast that is elevated, and the shoulder that is separated, I have taken of the children of Israel, from off their victims of peace-offerings, and have given them to Aaron the priest, and to his sons, by a law for ever, from all the people of Israel.

35 This is the anointing of Aaron and his sons, in the ceremonies of the Lord, in the day when Moses offered them, that they might do the office of priesthood, 36 And the things that the Lord commanded to be given them by the children of Israel, by a perpetual observance in their generations.

37 This is the law of holocaust, and of the sacrifice for sin, and for trespass, and for consecration, and the victims of peace-offerings:

38 Which the Lord appointed to Moses in Mount Sinai, when he commanded the children of Israel, that they should offer their oblations to the Lord in the desert of Sinai.

CHAP. VIII.

Moses consecrateth Aaron and his sons.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, "saying:

2 ^bTake Aaron with his sons, their vestments, and the oil of unction, a calf for sin, two rams, a basket with unleavened bread,

3 And thou shalt gather together all the congregation to the door of the tabernacle.

4 And Moses did as the Lord had commanded. And all the multitude being gathered together before the door of the tabernacle, 5 He said: This is the word that the Lord hath commanded to be done.

6 And immediately he offered Aaron and his sons: and when he had washed them,

7 He vested the high priest with the strait linen garment, girding him with the girdle, and putting on him the violet tunic, and over it he put the ephod,

8 And binding it with the girdle, he fitted it to the rational, in which was Doctrine and Truth.

9 He put also the mitre upon his head: and upon the mitre over the forehead, he put the plate of gold consecrated with sanctification, as the Lord had commanded him.

10 He took also the oil of unction, with which he anointed the tabernacle, with all the furniture thereof.

11 And when he had sanctified and sprinkled the altar seven times, he anointed it, and all the vessels thereof, and the laver with the foot thereof he sanctified with the oil.

12 "And he poured it upon Aaron's head, and he anointed and consecrated him:

13 And after he had offered his sons, he vested them with linen tunics, and girded them with girdles, and put mitres on them, as the Lord had commanded.

14 He offered also the calf for sin: and when Aaron and his sons had put their hands upon the head thereof

15 He immolated it: and took the blood, and dipping his finger in it, he touched the horns of the altar round about. Which being expiated, and sanctified, he poured the rest of the blood at the bottom thereof.

16 But the fat that was upon the entrails, and the caul of the liver, and the two little kidneys, with their fat, he burnt upon the altar:

17 And the calf with the skin, and the flesh, and the dung, he burnt without the camp, as the Lord had commanded.

18 He offered also a ram for a holocaust: and when Aaron and his sons had put their hands upon its head, 19 He immolated it, and poured the blood thereof round about upon the altar.

20 And cutting the ram into pieces, the head thereof, and the joints, and the fat he burnt in the fire, 21 Having first washed the entrails, and the feet; and the whole ram together, he burnt upon the altar, because it was a holocaust of most sweet odour to the Lord, as he had commanded him.

22 He offered also the second ram, in the consecration of priests: and Aaron and his sons put their hands upon the head thereof:

23 And when Moses had immolated it, he took of the blood thereof, and touched the tip of Aaron's right ear, and the thumb of his right hand, and in like manner also the great toe of his right foot.

24 He offered also the sons of Aaron: and when with the blood of the ram that was immolated, he had touched the tip of the right ear of every one of them, and the thumbs of their right hands, and the great toes of their right feet, the rest he poured on the altar round about:

VER. 14. Calf. This ceremony was repeated for seven days, v. 38. C.—At the same time, Moses consecrated the altars and all the furniture of the tabernacle, v. 10.

VER. 23. Foot. The whole person was thus sensibly consecrated to God's service. H.—The pagan high priest, among the Romans, was adorned in silk and ribbands, with a crown of gold. Being conducted under ground, the blood of an ox, which had been sacrificed, came upon his head, ears, and other parts of his body, through little holes, made in a board; and thus besmeared, he was recognized by the people. 25 But the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that covereth the entrails, and the caul of the liver, and the two kidneys with their fat, and with the right shoulder, he separated.

26 And taking out of the basket of unleavened bread, which was before the Lord, a loaf without leaven, and a cake tempered with oil, and a wafer, he put them upon the fat, and the right shoulder,

27 Delivering all to Aaron, and to his sons: who having lifted them up before the Lord, 28 He took them again from their hands, and burnt them upon the altar of holocaust, because it was the oblation of consecration, for a sweet odour of sacrifice to the Lord.

29 And he took of the ram of consecration, the breast for his portion, elevating it before the Lord, as the Lord had commanded him.

30 And taking the ointment, and the blood that was upon the altar, he sprinkled Aaron, and his vestments, and his sons and their vestments with it.

31 And when he had sanctified them in their vestments, he commanded them, saying: Boil the flesh before the door of the tabernacle, and there eat it. Eat ye also the loaves of consecration, that are laid in the basket, as the Lord commanded me, saying: "Aaron and his sons shall eat them:

32 And whatsoever shall be left of the flesh and the loaves, shall be consumed with fire.

33 And you shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle for seven days, until the day wherein the time of your consecration shall be expired. For in seven days the consecration is finished:

34 As at this present it hath been done, that the rite of the sacrifice might be accomplished.

35 Day and night shall you remain in the tabernacle, observing the watches of the Lord, lest you die: for so it hath been commanded me.

36 And Aaron and his sons did all things which the Lord spoke by the hand of Moses.

* Exod. xxix. 31. and xxx. 23. and xl. 9. Infra xxiv. 9.

VER. 27. Who having. Moses supported and directed the hands of the priests.

VER. 30. Vestments. It is a maxim among the Rabbins, that a priest without his vestments, is not considered as such; and he is put to death, if he should dare to approach the altar in that condition. When the priests lay aside their sacred robes, they are looked upon as laymen. C.—The high priest was consecrated by the unction on the head; (v. 12.) those of an inferior condition, were sprinkled with ointment mixed with blood, &c. M.

VER. 33. Finished. During this time, some say they were allowed to go out for a short time, to satisfy the calls of nature; while others say they were to continue always in the tabernacle, or in the court. Afterwards the priests on duty continued all the time in the temple, adorned with their sacred robes. The high priest could not wear his on other occasions, except some very urgent affair required it, as was the case when Jaddus went to meet Alexander. C.

VER. 34. Done . . so. The Heb. adds, "the Lord hath commanded to do, to make atonement for you." H.

VER. 35. Watches. They might be permitted to take a little sleep during part of this week. T.—In: Heb. "at the door of the tabernacle of the assembly, attentive to the ordinances of the Lord." H.—Die, as Nadab did afterwards. Moses officiated as the consecrating priest. One of the most venerable of the order, consecrated the successors of Aaron. Some assert, that they only invested him with the pontifical robes. Num. xx. 26. 1 Mac. x. 21. C.—The power of Moses was extraordinary; that of Aaron was ordinary, designed to continue in after ages. S. Aug. q. 23. None must presume to take this office of priest, but such as are called by God. Heb. v. Those of the old law, were initiated by sacred rites or sacraments, which signified the grace of God, requisite to perform their duties well. They were chosen from among men, to be more holy; of which their washing was a sign, as their splendid robes were to remind them of their sublime dignity and authority over the people. The high priest had seven special ornaments: 1. white linen, to denote purity; 2. a curious girdle, intimating that he must use discretion in all things; 3. the long tunic of various colours, with bells, &c. signifying heavenly conversation upon earth, union and harmony in

CHAP. IX.

Aaron offereth sacrifice for himself and the people. Fire cometh from the Lord upon the altar.

AND when^b the eighth day was come, Moses called Aaron and his sons,^c and the ancients of Israel and said to Aaron:

2 Take of the herd a calf for sin, and a ram for holocaust, both without blemish, and offer them before the Lord.

3 And to the children of Israel thou shalt say: Take ye a he-goat for sin, and a calf, and a lamb, both of a year old, and without blemish, for a holocaust,

4 Also a bullock and a ram for peace-offerings: and immolate them before the Lord, offering for the sacrifice of every one of them flour tempered with oil: for to-day the Lord will appear to you.

5 They brought therefore all things that Moses had commanded before the door of the tabernacle: where when all the multitude stood,

6 Moses said: This is the word which the Lord hath commanded: do it, and his glory will appear to you.

7 And he said to Aaron: Approach to the altar, and offer sacrifice for thy sin: offer the holocaust, and pray for thyself and for the people: and when thou hast slain the people's victim, pray for them, as the Lord hath commanded.

8 And forthwith Aaron approaching to the altar, immolated the calf for his sin.

9 And his sons brought him the blood of it: and he dipped his finger therein, and touched the horns of the altar, and poured the rest at the foot thereof.

10 And the fat, and the little kidneys, and the caul of the liver, which are for sin, he burnt upon the altar, as the Lord had commanded Moses:

11 But the flesh and skin thereof he burnt with fire without the camp.

12 He immolated also the victim of holocaust: and his sons brought him the blood thereof, which he poured round about on the altar.

faith and morals; 4. an ephod, with two precious stones on the shoulders, teaching him to support the failings of the multitude; 5. the rational, with its ornaments, shew that the pontiff should be solicitous to teach sound and profitable doctrine. 6. the mitre indicates, that all his actions should be referred to God above; and lastly, the plate of gold denotes that he should have God always in view, and never forget that consummate holiness which He requireth. See S. Jerom ep. ad Fabiol.—The three ornaments of the priests, put them in mind of purity, discretion, and a right intention, to be observed in all their conduct. On this occasion, a change was introduced in the priesthood, as the law was new; the first-born being obliged to give place to Aaron's family. Thus, when these were deprived of the exclusive privilege, and people from any family were chosen by Christ, the law of Moses ceased to exist. Heb. vii. The ordination of the former was a figure of that sacrament, by which Christian priests still receive grace and power. 2 Tim. i. Theod. q. 48. Num. S. Aug. de bono conj. 24. W.

CHAP. IX. VER. 1. Come. From the consecration of the tabernacle, (M.) and of Aaron.—Israel. The princes of the tribes. C.—They were to offer sacrifice by the hands of their new priests.

VER. 2. Calf. As they had formerly adored a calf, so now they sacrifice one to God. S. Jer. in Jer. vii.

VER. 3. Children. Sam. and Sept. "the ancients," or princes of the people, for whom a he-goat is sacrificed.—Old. Not above, though they might be younger.

VER. 4. Offering, &c. Heb. simply, "and a flour-offering tempered with oil for," &c. H.—All these sacrifices were accompanied with an offering of this nature, as they were in imitation of a dinner presented to God. M.—You. By the cloud, resting upon the tabernacle, or by fire proceeding thence. God will manifest his presence by miracles. v. 24.

VER. 7. Thy sin. Christ needed not daily (as the other priests) to offer sacrifices, first for his own sins, and then for the people's. Heb. vii. 27.

VER. 9. The altar of holocausts; as he is yet considered only as a private person; afterwards he touches the altar of perfumes. C.

VER. 10. Burnt, or placed in order to be burnt by the fire sent by God, v. 24. M.

VER. 11. Camp. According to the prescription given. C. iv. 12.

13 And the victim being cut into pieces, they brought to him the head and all the members, all which he burnt with fire upon the altar.

14 Having first washed the entrails and the feet with water.

15 Then offering for the sin of the people, he slew the he-goat: and expiating the altar,

16 He offered the holocaust:

17 Adding in the sacrifice the libations, which are offered withal, and burning them upon the altar, besides the ceremonies of the morning holocaust.

18 He immolated also the bullock and the ram, the peace-offerings of the people: and his sons brought him the blood, which he poured upon the altar round about.

19 The fat also of the bullock, and the rump of the ram, and the two little kidneys, with their fat, and the caul of the liver,

20 They put upon the breasts. And after the fat was burnt upon the altar, 21 Aaron separated their breasts, and the right shoulders, elevating them before the Lord, as Moses had commanded.

22 And stretching forth his hands to the people, he blessed them. And so the victims for sin, and the holocausts, and the peace-offerings, being finished, he came down.

23 And Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the testimony, and afterwards came forth and blessed the people. "And the glory of the Lord appeared to all the multitude:

24 And behold a fire coming forth from the Lord, devoured the holocaust, and the fat that was upon the altar: which when the multitude saw, they praised the Lord, falling on their faces.

* Mac. ii. 10.—A. M. 2514.

VER. 14. Water. Heb. adds, 'he burnt them upon the holocaust, upon the altar.'
VER. 15. And expiating the altar. Heb. "he offered it (the goat) for sin, as the firs," for himself, placing the parts of the victim upon his own holocaust. H.—The Chaldee says, "he expiated the altar with the blood of the he-goat, as he did before."

VER. 17. Holocaust. Which were religiously observed every day. The law respecting the libations was given already, though it be related, Num. xv. 4. M.

VER. 21. Elevating them. After which they were used by the priest. C. vii. 31. C.—Aa. Samar. and some Heb. MSS. read, "as the Lord had commanded Moses." Kennie.

VER. 22. Hands. Thus representing the form of a cross, on which Christ redeemed us; in memory of which we still make the same sign. W.—Them. The blessing is recorded, Num. vi. 24. And the Lord bless thee, &c. M.—In blessing an individual, the priest laid his hands upon him; but he stretched them out towards the multitude, as a mark of superiority.

VER. 23. Testimony. To offer incense, which always preceded the morning holocaust.—Glory; or fire, probably issuing from the tabernacle, and consuming the victims in a moment. Thus God was pleased to shew his approbation of the priests and victims; (C.) and at the same time, to impress a religious awe upon the minds of the spectators. H.—This fire was carefully preserved and nourished by the priests with wood; though the Rabbins say, this was done only to conceal the miracle of its perpetual continuance. A fire, of the same nature, came down upon the victims, when Solomon dedicated his temple, (2 Par. vii. 1.) and was kept burning till the captivity, when it was hidden in a cistern. Being found afterwards, like muddy water, God kindled it again, (2 Macc. i. 18. ii. 10.) and it was not lost till the persecution of Epiphanes.

VER. 24. The Lord: 2 Mac. ii. 10, explains this text. Fire came down from heaven, appearing like a flash of lightning, in the midst of the victims. Jos. Ant. iii. 9. C.

CHAP. X. VER. 1. The eldest sons, as they are mentioned first. Ex. vi. 23.—Censers. On the same evening of their consecration.—Fire. Not taken from the altar of holocausts. C. vi. 9. Whether they neglected to do so out of respect for the miraculous fire, or out of thoughtlessness and inattention, their fault was severely punished, however venial in itself; (T.) that all might learn to comply exactly with God's commands, and not dare to explain them away. Thus we must carefully avoid the mixing of falsehood with the word of God. Theod. q. 9. W.—Those in power, like priests, if they be negligent, shall suffer great torments. Wisd. vi. 7. They must expect to be treated with rigour. S. Aug. q. 21. Estius infers, from the command to abstain from wine being given, (v. 8.) that these priests had been rather intoxicated. Josephus says, they had not offered

CHAP. X.

Nadab and Abiu for offering strange fire, are burnt by fire. Priests are forbidden to drink wine, when they enter into the tabernacle. The law of eating the holy things.

AND Nadab and Abiu, the sons of Aaron, taking their censers, put fire therein, and incense on it, offering before the Lord strange fire: which was not commanded them.

2 And fire coming out from the Lord, destroyed them, and they died before the Lord.

3 And Moses said to Aaron: This is what the Lord hath spoken: I will be sanctified in them that approach to me, and I will be glorified in the sight of all the people. And when Aaron heard this, he held his peace.

4 And Moses called Misael and Elisaphan, the sons of Oziel, the uncle of Aaron, and said to them: Go and take away your brethren from before the sanctuary, and carry them without the camp.

5 And they went forthwith and took them as they lay, vested with linen tunics, and cast them forth, as had been commanded them.

6 And Moses said to Aaron, and to Eleazar and Ithamar, his sons: Uncover not your heads, and rend not your garments, lest perhaps you die, and indignation come upon all the congregation. Let your brethren, and all the house of Israel, bewail the burning which the Lord has kindled:

7 But you shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle, otherwise you shall perish: for the oil of the holy unction is on you. And they did all things according to the precept of Moses.

8 The Lord also said to Aaron:

9 You shall not drink wine nor any thing that may make drunk, thou nor thy sons, when you enter into proper victims; and the Rabbins assert, that they were not clothed with the sacred garments: but the Scripture only condemns them for taking strange fire. Some imagine, that no formal precept had yet been given. But had not God commanded (C. vi. 9, 12.) that the victims should be burnt with the perpetual fire on the altar, and were not these young priests guilty of rashness in doing any thing of their own head, without positive instructions? Hence some infer that their offence was mortal, and their punishment a prelude of eternal torments; while others piously hope that their sin was only venial, and that it was expiated by their repentance and violent death; in which sense Philo explains they died before the Lord. Hence they were buried honourably.

* Num. iii. 4. and xxvi. 61. 1 Par. xxiv. 2.

VER. 2. Lord. Near the altar of incense, being stricken, as it were with lightning, so that their garments were not injured. C.

VER. 3. Spoken, by this exemplary judgment. H.—We do not find the exact words recorded before: but there are some equivalent, shewing that God requires a particular sanctity in his ministers. C. viii. 35. Ex. xix. 22. The altar shall be sanctified by my glory; (Ex. xxix. 43.) may be considered as a prediction of what happened on this melancholy occasion.—Peace. Excessive grief requires silence; cuius gravior silent. "He was filled with grief." Sept. adoring the judgment of God. The fortitude of Mino and Xenophon, who, upon hearing of the death of their sons, did not desist from sacrificing, is greatly admired. C.

VER. 4. Brothers; cousins. These were ordered to bury the priests, as Aaron and his family were employed about the altar, (II.) and could not perform the office without contracting a legal uncleanness. Josephus. T.

VER. 6. Uncover not. Take not off your mitres; (Sept.) let not your hair grow long. (Chal.) as the Egyptians do in mourning, nor yet shave your heads, like the priests of Isis. This God forbids. C. xxi. 5. And Ezekiel (xlv. 20.) probably with reference to this law, says, Neither shall they shave their heads, nor wear long hair . . . and no priest shall drink wine when, &c.—Garments, sacred vestments, which were worn only in the tabernacle or temple. C.—The high priests are forbidden to tear their garments at funerals, (C. xxi. 10.) as this would betray a want of fortitude.—Perhaps. This does not imply any doubt. M. See Gen. iii. 3.—Indignation of God, punishing the people, while there is none to entreat for them.—Burning of the two priests.

VER. 7. On you. So that you cannot now join in the funeral, as there are so few anointed. H.—On other occasions, priests are allowed to mourn. C. xxi.

VER. 9. Drunk. Heb. shekar; which the Sept. and Vulg. commonly translate by sicera, any strong liquor. (S. Jerom) particularly palm-wine. S. Chrys. in Isai. v. 11. Jonathan says old wine. Heateus assures us, that the Jews drink no wine at all in the temple. But the Rabbins admit of some exceptions. This abstinence was prescribed by many other nations to their priests and magistrates (129) the tabernacle of the testimony, lest you die: because it is an everlasting precept through your generations:

10 And that you may have knowledge to discern between holy and unholy, between unclean and clean:

11 And may teach the children of Israel all my ordinances, which the Lord hath spoken to them by the hand of Moses.

12 And Moses spoke to Aaron, and to Eleazar and Ithamar, his sons, that were left: Take the sacrifice that is remaining of the oblation of the Lord, and eat it without leaven beside the altar, because it is holy of holies.

13 And you shall eat it in a holy place: which is given to thee and thy sons of the oblations of the Lord, as it hath been commanded me.

14 The breast also that is offered, and the shoulder that is separated, you shall eat in a most clean place thou and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee. For they are set aside for thee and thy children, of the victims of peace-offerings of the children of Israel:

15 Because they have elevated before the Lord the shoulder and the breast, and the fat that is burnt on the altar, and they belong to thee, and to thy sons, by a perpetual law, as the Lord hath commanded.

16 *While these things were a doing, when Moses sought for the buck-goat, that had been offered for sin, he found it burnt: and being angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron that were left, he said:

17 Why did you not eat in the holy place the sacrifice for sin, which is most holy, and given to you, that you may bear the iniquity of the people, and may pray for them in the sight of the Lord, in office. C.—The intent of the law, is to prevent any mistake arising from the fumes of wine, (v. 10,) as likewise all drowsiness or foolish mirth. As mourning and excessive grief are prohibited on the one hand; so are intoxicating liquors, on the other. H.

VER. 12. Sacrifice, of flour or bread. A tent was undoubtedly erected, where the priests might take the necessary refreshments of meat and sleep, during the days of their service.

VER. 14. Place, at home. The Sept. translate, "in the holy place;" understanding that these sacrifices for sin were to be eaten in the court of the tabernacle. Malvenda allows, that the children of the priests, and their wives, might come thither to eat the parts of the peace-offerings allotted to them. But of this there is no proof.

VER. 15. Sons. Sam. and Sept. add, "and thy daughters." The male children were allowed to partake of the sin-offerings: those of peace, were given also to females.

VER. 16. While, &c. Heb. "and Moses sought diligently for," &c. This goat had been offered the same day, for the sins of the priest and of the people. C. ix. 15. Aaron had not taken the parts allotted to his family, being too much grieved, and perhaps thinking that they could not eat all. C.—Therefore, he judged it conformable to God's command to consume the whole. C. vii. 17. Moses fearing lest the thing had been done through negligence, finds fault with his two sons; but on hearing the remonstrance of Aaron, is satisfied. H.

VER. 17. People. Offering the sacrifices of expiation, as mediators between them and God.

VER. 18. Places. This is not a victim, the blood of which is to be poured out in the holy place, and the flesh consumed with fire. C.—You ought, or might lawfully have eaten it. C. vi. 25.

VER. 19. How, &c. My children are slain. Heb. "and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day, would it have been agreeable to the Lord?" H.

CHAP. XI. VER. 1. Aaron. God shews him this honour after his consecration, though not always. See C. xii. and xvii. &c. W.

VER. 2. Animals which you are to eat, &c. The prohibition of so many kinds of beasts, birds, and fishes, in the law, was ordered, 1. to exercise the people in obedience and temperance; 2. to restrain them from the vices of which these animals were symbols; 3. because the things here forbidden were for the most part unwholesome, and not proper to be eaten; 4. that the people of God, by being obliged to abstain from things corporally unclean, might be trained up to seek a spiritual cleanness. Ch.—These animals had no natural uncleanness: for all things are clean to the clean. Tit. i. 15. But they were looked upon as such by the prejudice of the people, and many of them possessed noxious qualities. If they had been the most excellent, the will of God is a sufficient reason to enforce the duty of abstinence; (C.) as it was in the case of Adam and Eve. As some animals were adored, and others were deemed unclean by the Gentiles, the He-

18 Especially whereas none of the blood thereof hath been carried within the holy places, and you ought to have eaten it in the sanctuary, as was commanded me?

19 Aaron answered: This day hath been offered the victim for sin, and the holocaust before the Lord: and to me what thou seest has happened: how could I eat it, or please the Lord in the ceremonies, having a sorrowful heart?

20 Which when Moses had heard he was satisfied.

CHAP. XI.

The distinction of clean and unclean animals.

AND the Lord spoke ^b to Moses and Aaron, saying: 2 Say to the children of Israel: * These are the animals which you are to eat of all the living things of the earth.

3 Whatsoever hath the hoof divided, and cheweth the cud among the beasts you shall eat.

4 But whatsoever cheweth indeed the cud, and hath a hoof, but divideth it not, as the camel and others, that you shall not eat, but shall reckon it among the unclean.

5 The cherogrillus which cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof, is unclean.

6 The hare also: for that too cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof.

7 ^d And the swine, which, though it divideth the hoof, cheweth not the cud.

8 The flesh of these you shall not eat, nor shall you touch their carcasses, because they are unclean to you.

9 These are the things that breed in the waters, and which it is lawful to eat. All that hath fins, and scales, brews were commanded to sacrifice some of the former description, and to abhor also the latter, that they might never be so foolish, as to imitate the perversity of the nations, in looking upon any animal as a god. Theod. q. 11. S. Thomas (i. 2. q. 102. a. 6.) explains at large, out of the holy fathers, the different vices, which the unclean animals represent. W.—By the distinction of these creatures, God would have his people known. C. xx. 24. 26. Those who chose rather to die than to transgress in this point, are justly honoured by the Church as martyrs, 2 Mac. vi. and vii. S. Greg. or. 20. H.

^c Deut. xiv. 8.—^d 2 Mac. vi. 18.

VER. 3. Hoof divided, and cheweth the cud. The dividing the hoof, and chewing the cud, signify discretion between good and evil, and meditating on the law of God: and where either of these is wanting, a man is unclean. In like manner, fishes were reputed unclean that had not fins and scales: that is, souls that did not raise themselves up by prayer, and cover themselves with the scales of virtues, (Ch.) particularly of mortification and penance. W.

VER. 4. Camel, which hath a hard skin connecting its hoof below. The Arabs and Persians eat its flesh. God will have his people keep at a distance from imitating them; and that is one of the reasons for this and similar precepts. C.

VER. 5. The cherogrillus. Some suppose it to be the rabbit, others the hedgehog: S. Jerom intimates that it is another kind of animal common in Palestine, which lives in the holes of rocks, or in the earth. We choose here, as also in the names of several other creatures that follow, (which are little known in this part of the world) to keep the Greek or Latin names. Ch.—Bochart (Hierozoicon) may be consulted on this subject. He supposes, that the Heb. shaphan, denotes the Arabian rat called aliarbuho. But the Jews themselves are ignorant of many of these animals. C.—Both choiros and grillos, signify swine. The porcupine, or the bear-mouse of Palestine, may be meant. M.

VER. 6. Cheweth. Some copies of the Sept. add not, which agrees with the nature of the hare; though the people to whom Moses addresses himself were of a different persuasion. Its hoof is not divided into two parts only, and therefore it is accounted unclean.

VER. 7. Swine. This animal was abhorred by many other nations. If an Egyptian happened to touch one, he plunged into the Nile. Herod. ii. 47. Few are to be seen in the East. Yet the people of Crete and of Samos held swine in veneration; and they were offered in sacrifice to Venus, by the Cyprians. They seem designed for slaughter, as they are good for nothing alive. They are very subject to the leprosy. C.—The Jews would hardly name them, but called them "the beast." Old Eleazar was strongly instigated to pretend at least to eat swine's flesh, but preferred a painful death before the transgression of God's law, 2 Mac. vi. 18. H.

VER. 8. Carcasses. They might be touched while alive, v. 24.

VER. 9. Eat. The Egyptians, and the priests of the Syrian goddess, abstained from fish.—Pools. Heb. and Sept. torrents. C.—Eels are prohibited, &c. M.

as well in the sea, as in the rivers, and the pools, you shall eat.

10 But whatsoever hath not fins and scales, of those things that move and live in the waters, shall be an abomination unto you,

11 And detestable: their flesh you shall not eat, and their carcasses you shall avoid.

12 All that have not fins and scales, in the waters, shall be unclean.

13 Of birds these are they which you must not eat, and which are to be avoided by you: The eagle, and the griffon, and the osprey,

14 And the kite, and the vulture, according to their kind.

15 And all that is of the raven kind, according to their likeness.

16 The ostrich, and the owl, and the larus, and the hawk according to its kind.

17 The screech-owl, and the cormorant, and the ibis,

18 And the swan, and the bittern, and the porphyryon,

19 The heron, and the charadriion according to its kind, the houp also, and the bat.

20 Of things that fly, whatsoever goeth upon four feet, shall be abominable to you.

21 But whatsoever walketh upon four feet, but hath the legs behind longer, wherewith it hoppeth upon the earth, 22 That you shall eat, as the bruchus in its kind, the attachus, and the ophiomachus, and the locust, every one according to their kind.

23 But of flying things, whatsoever hath four feet only, shall be an abomination to you:

24 And whosoever shall touch the carcasses of them, shall be defiled, and shall be unclean until the evening:

25 And if it be necessary that he carry any of these things when they are dead, he shall wash his clothes, and shall be unclean until the sun set.

26 Every beast that hath a hoof, but divideth it not, nor cheweth the cud, shall be unclean: and he that toucheth it shall be defiled.

27 That which walketh upon hands, of all animals which go on all four, shall be unclean: he that shall touch their carcasses shall be defiled until evening.

28 And he that shall carry such carcasses, shall wash his clothes, and shall be unclean until evening; because all these things are unclean to you.

29 These also shall be reckoned among unclean things, of all that move upon the earth, the weasel, and the mouse, and the crocodile, every one according to their kind:

30 The shrew, and the chameleon, and the stellio, and the lizard, and the mole:

31 All these are unclean. He that toucheth their carcasses shall be unclean until the evening.

32 And upon what thing soever any of their carcasses shall fall, it shall be defiled, whether it be a vessel of wood, or a garment, or skins or hair-cloths; or any thing in which work is done, they shall be dipped in water, and shall be unclean until the evening, and so afterwards shall be clean.

33 But an earthen vessel, into which any of these shall fall, shall be defiled, and therefore is to be broken.

34 Any meat which you eat, if water from such a vessel be poured upon it, shall be unclean; and every liquor that is drunk out of any such vessel, shall be unclean.

35 And upon whatsoever thing any of these dead beasts shall fall, it shall be unclean: whether it be oven, or pots with feet, they shall be destroyed, and shall be unclean.

36 But fountains and cisterns, and all gatherings together of waters shall be clean. He that toucheth their carcasses shall be defiled.

37 If it fall upon seed-corn, it shall not defile it.

38 But if any man pour water upon the seed, and

VER. 10. Scales. Numa forbade fish without scales to be used in the sacred feasts. Plin. xxxii. 2.

VER. 13. The griffon. Not the monster which the painters represent; which has no being upon earth; but a bird of the eagle kind, larger than the common. Ch.—Osprey. The sea or black eagle, which is very clear-sighted, and expert in catching fish. Pliny relates, (B. x. 3.) that it tries its young by making them look at the sun, and hurls them down if they refuse. But this seems fabulous.

VER. 16. Ostrich; which was served up at the tables of the Persian kings. Heb. "the daughter of the hiena;" (both étiane) or the swan. Isai. xiii. 21.—Owl, or perhaps the male ostrich, which cruelly abandons its young.—Larus, the water-hen. C.—Some have the cuckow. H.

VER. 17. Owl, or the onocrotalus, which makes a hideous noise like an assibis, a bird adored in Egypt. Bochart takes the Heb. to mean an owl, as well as the following term, swan, (C.) which is not probable.

VER. 18. Bittern, onocrotalum. See v. 17. Prot. version has "pelican and the gier-eagle," for porphyryon. H.—Its beak and long legs are red. Plin. x. 46. Bochart understands the vulture, and the Samaritan version the pelican; both of which are remarkable for the care they take of their young. Reims may be derived from rem, "mercy."

VER. 19. Heron, or "stork," noted for the same quality: chusida, means "piety."—Charadriion, a kind of heron, (C.) mentioned by Aristot. viii. 3. It is found in deep holes and rocks. M.—Some translate parrot, peacock, kite, &c. Anaphis, may denote a bird easily vexed. C.—Houp, or lapwing. H.—Bat. Strabo (xvii.) speaks of some very large, which were salted and eaten at Borsippe.

VER. 20. Bees. Such as bees, (C.) and other insects of which he speaks. M.

VER. 21. Walketh. Heb. adds to, "not." But the Massorets read lu, "to it," agreeably to the Vulg. C.—Prot. version, "Yet these may ye eat, of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth."

VER. 22. Locust. The three former are species of the same kind. The bruchus is a young locust, without wings, (S. Aug. in Ps. civ.) and the attachus the least of all. Plin. xxi. 5. The ophiomachus is large, "encounters serpents," and is destitute of wings. The nations called Acridophagi, received their name from their feeding upon locusts, which are the food of the common people in Syria and Africa. See Plin. xi. 29, &c. Clenard, in 1541, wrote from Fez, that he had seen the sky darkened with clouds of locusts, which the people endeavoured presently to destroy, and filled waggons with their bodies, for food. Kirsten says, they are very delicious. Arnulph assures us, that they are a finger's breadth, and are fried in oil by the poor. Raban. in Matt. iii. 4. See Joel ii. C.—There is no need, therefore, of having recourse to crab fish and wild pears, for the Baptist's food, as Beza has done. T.

VER. 23. Only. Equal in length, v. 20—1. M.

VER. 24. Evening. If he were guilty of sin in so doing, contrition would be necessary to regain God's favour. W.—But the legal uncleanness would not be removed till the evening; as the one might subsist while the other was remitted. H.

VER. 25. Necessary. To prevent the obstruction of the road, or the infection of the air. M.—When any person touched these carcasses, he was obliged to wash his clothes immediately, and still to refrain from touching any thing sacred till sun-set. Estius.—If a dog chanced to die in the house of an Egyptian, all the family shaved their hair and began to mourn. The food and wine in the house could no longer be used. Euseb. prep. ii. 1. They adored the dog. But other nations, which did not adore animals, esteemed those unworthy of sacred things who had touched a carcass, though they invoked their gods by slaying beasts, as Porphyrius remarks, ib. v. 10. They put off their shoes when they entered certain temples, for the same reason. Scortica non ulli fas est inferre sacello—ne violent puros exanimata Deos.

VER. 26. It. When dead. It was lawful to ride on a camel, but not to eat its flesh.

VER. 27. Hands. Like a monkey, frog, &c. the fore-feet of which rather resemble hands.

VER. 29. Weasel. Bochart understands the mole, in opposition to all the versions: choled, means indeed "to root up the earth." C.

VER. 30. Chameleon, feeds upon air, and assumes various colours. Plin. viii. 33. It resembles a lizard, as does the stellio, ib. xxix. 4.—Lizard. Prot. "snail." H.

VER. 30. Unclean, either to eat or touch, v. 41—3. C. v. 2.

VER. 33. Broken. See C. vi. 28, where a similar injunction is given. M.—And (v. 35.) ovens and pots, made of earthenware, according to Pollux, are to be destroyed. T.

VER. 34. Water, unclean, or in a polluted vessel.

VER. 36. Clean. They would be so difficult to purify, and water is so necessary.

VER. 38. Defiled, and given to the beasts. M.

afterwards it be touched by the carcasses, it shall be forthwith defiled.

39 If any beast die, of which it is lawful for you to eat, he that toucheth the carcass thereof, shall be unclean until the evening:

40 And he that eateth or carrieth any thing thereof, shall wash his clothes, and shall be unclean until the evening:

41 All that creepeth upon the earth shall be abominable, neither shall it be taken for meat.

42 Whatsoever goeth upon the breast on four feet, or hath many feet, or traileth on the earth, you shall not eat, because it is abominable.

43 Do not defile your souls, nor touch aught thereof, lest you be unclean.

44 For I am the Lord your God: * be holy, because I am holy. Defile not your souls by any creeping thing, that moveth upon the earth.

45 For I am the Lord, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, that I might be your God.

46 You shall be holy, because I am holy. This is the law of beasts and fowls, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and creepeth on the earth.

47 That you may know the differences of the clean and unclean, and know what you ought to eat and what to refuse.

CHAP. XII.

The purification of women after child-birth.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses,^b saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: * If a woman having received seed shall bear a man-child, she shall be unclean seven days, according to the days of the separation of her flowers.

3 * And on the eighth day the infant shall be circumcised:

4 But she shall remain three and thirty days in the blood of her purification. She shall touch no holy

VER. 40. Clothes, and his whole body, either together or separate, as the Rabbins explain the law. Selden syn. i. 3. If any one eat or touch these things, on purpose, he was liable to a more severe punishment, (M.) and his soul was defiled by disobedience, v. 43. C.

VER. 42. Abominable. Serpents, worms, and reptiles, are proscribed. M.

VER. 44. Holy, and detest the uncleanness of the Gentiles, in their sacrifices and feasts. S. Aug. de C. D. vi. 7.

VER. 45. Your God. By these laws, the Jews were to be distinguished from other nations. H.—They were also to be reminded, that God was very jealous of their interior sanctity, since he required so great a legal purity. Without the former, they might easily conclude that the latter would not please him. C.

CHAP. XII. VER. 2. Child. By this manner of expressing himself, Moses excludes the blessed Virgin, as the ancient fathers and the moderns generally remark. She conceived without concupiscence, and was subject to none of the usual inconveniences of child-birth. Suarez.—So that whether this law was instituted to expiate the former, or to purify the latter, she was not included. All other mothers were separated, at least seven days, and longer if their state required it; (C.) during which time, they were treated like those mentioned, C. xv. 19. After that period they were allowed to manage their affairs, as usual, but not to touch any thing sacred, nor suffer their husbands to approach to them, till the expiration of 33 days more, v. 4. M.—Euripides blames Diana for keeping such women at a distance from her altar, while she delighted in human sacrifices. Iphigen. v. 380. Censorinus says, "Prægnans ante diem quadragesimum non prodiit in Fanum; & post partum pleræque graviore sunt, nec sanguinem interdum continent." Grotius.

VER. 3. Eighth. Nothing but the child's health could retard the day, (C.) unless the parents were under the necessity of taking a journey, as they were in the desert, &c. H.

VER. 4. Sanctuary, or court of the tabernacle, where the women had probably a place apart. C.

VER. 5. Days. In all 80, double the time required for a male child, as the infirmities of women continue so much longer when they bear a female. Vales. sac. Philos. c. xviii. Hippocrates allows forty-two days for the one, and thirty thing, neither shall she enter into the sanctuary, until the days of her purification be fulfilled.

5 But if she shall bear a maid-child, she shall be unclean two weeks, according to the custom of her monthly courses, and she shall remain in the blood of her purification sixty-six days.

6 And when the days of her purification are expired, for a son, or for a daughter, she shall bring to the door of the tabernacle of the testimony, a lamb of a year old for a holocaust, and a young pigeon, or a turtle, for sin, and shall deliver them to the priest:

7 Who shall offer them before the Lord, and shall pray for her, and so she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood. This is the law for her that beareth a man-child or a maid-child.

8 And if her hand find not sufficiency, and she is not able to offer a lamb, she shall take two turtles, * or two young pigeons, one for a holocaust, and another for sin: and the priest shall pray for her, and so she shall be cleansed.

CHAP. XIII.

The law concerning leprosy in men, and in garments.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:

2 The man, in whose skin or flesh shall arise a different colour or a blister, or as it were something shining, that is, the stroke of the leprosy, shall be brought to Aaron the priest, or any one of his sons.

3 And if he see the leprosy in his skin, and the hair turned white, and the place where the leprosy appears lower than the skin and the rest of the flesh; it is the stroke of the leprosy, and upon his judgment he shall be separated.

4 But if there be a shining whiteness in the skin, and not lower than the other flesh, and the hair be of the former colour, the priest shall shut him up seven days.

5 And the seventh day he shall look on him: and if the leprosy be grown no farther, and hath not spread for the other.—Purification. Some copies of the Sept. read, in her pure, others, in her impure blood; which Origen attempts to reconcile by observing, that she is deemed less impure during the last thirty-three or sixty-six days, than in the preceding ones. C.—During these, she was treated almost like those who were under the greatest legal uncleanness, C. xv. Num. vi. Those who were under the less, might enter the court of the Gentiles, and did not infect others by their touch. Joseph. c. Apion 2. T.

VER. 6. Lamb, to thank God for her happy delivery.—Sin, or uncleanness, which was esteemed a legal offence. Perhaps this sacrifice was also designed to expiate the sins she might have fallen into, (M.) since she was last able to offer one; and likewise the original sin of her female offspring. That of males was effaced by circumcision. H.

VER. 7. Blood, which has caused her legal uncleanness.

VER. 8. Lamb. This was the case of the blessed Virgin: (Luc. ii. 24,) so poor was she! M.—It seems difficult to conceive, how all the women of Palestine could present themselves before the tabernacle, 40 or 80 days after childbirth. Perhaps the law regarded those only who lived in the neighbourhood. The priests explained to the rest what they had to do, whether they might defer bringing their offspring to the next great festival, or they might send it by another hand. We read that Anna came to the temple after she had weaned Samuel, 1. K. i. 21. C.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 2. Colour, &c. Heb. "a tumour, abscess, or white spot," which are three marks of leprosy. C.—Leprosy. The leprosy was a figure of sin: and the observances prescribed in this and the following chapter, intimate what ought spiritually to be done, in order to be delivered from so great an evil, or preserved from it. Ch.—The authority of the priests in the new law to bind or loose sins, was hereby prefigured. S. Chrys. de Sacerd. 3. W.

VER. 3. Flesh. These two signs indicated the species of leprosy called volatile, or impetigo, (M.) resembling a scab, which did not penetrate the flesh or bones, as our leprosy or elephantiasis does. Vales. C. xix.—Separated from society. Heb. he shall contaminate him. See v. 11. H.—Some assert, that the physician was first to be consulted. But none but the priests could declare them unclean, or set them at liberty. After they had pronounced sentence, the lepers might apply for medicines to others.

itself in the skin, he shall shut him up again other seven days.

6 And on the seventh day he shall look on him: if the leprosy be somewhat obscure, and not spread in the skin, he shall declare him clean, because it is but a scab: and the man shall wash his clothes, and shall be clean.

7 But if the leprosy grow again, after he was seen by the priest, and restored to cleanness, he shall be brought to him,

8 And shall be condemned of uncleanness.

9 If the stroke of the leprosy be in a man, he shall be brought to the priest,

10 And he shall view him. And when there shall be a white colour in the skin, and it shall have changed the look of the hair, and the living flesh itself shall appear:

11 It shall be judged an inveterate leprosy, and grown into the skin. The priest therefore shall declare him unclean, and shall not shut him up, because he is evidently unclean.

12 But if the leprosy spring out running about in the skin, and cover all the skin from the head to the feet, whatsoever falleth under the sight of the eyes, 13 The priest shall view him, and shall judge that the leprosy which he has is very clean: because it is all turned into whiteness, and therefore the man shall be clean.

14 But when the live flesh shall appear in him,

15 Then by the judgment of the priest he shall be defiled, and shall be reckoned among the unclean: for live flesh, if it be spotted with leprosy, is unclean.

16 And if again it be turned into whiteness, and cover all the man, 17 The priest shall view him, and shall judge him to be clean.

18 When also there has been an ulcer in the flesh and the skin, and it has been healed,

19 And in the place of the ulcer, there appeareth a white scar, or somewhat red, the man shall be brought to the priest:

20 And when he shall see the place of the leprosy lower than the other flesh, and the hair turned white, he shall declare him unclean; for the plague of leprosy is broken out in the ulcer.

21 But if the hair be of the former colour, and the scar somewhat obscure, and be not lower than the flesh that is near it, he shall shut him up seven days.

22 And if it spread, he shall judge him to have the leprosy:

VER. 8. Uncleanness, or permanent leprosy.

VER. 10. Living flesh. The leprosy is caused by immense numbers of worms, which crawl between the skin and the flesh, and sometimes infect the latter, and the very bones, garments, &c. Hence the flesh seems all in motion, and living. H.—The different spots in the skin represent heretical opinions obscuring the true faith, of which priests are the judges. Deut. xvii. S. Aug. q. Evang. ii. 40. W.

VER. 11. Inveterate. Celsus says, this sort of leprosy is hardly ever cured.—Up. But, as the Rom. Sept. reads, "shall separate him" from the people.

VER. 13. Clean. The white leprosy causeth no itching. Gorrheus. Cels. v. 28. Theorast (q. 16.) says, it is incurable; and therefore, the person infected is not shut up, out of pity. So S. Paul (1 Cor. v. 11.) forbids us to eat with a dissolute Christian, while he allows us to have commerce with infidels, though they be wholly corrupt. But others assert, it is not so difficult to cure as that which is partial, v. 14. The hand of Moses was stricken with this white leprosy. Ex. iv. 6. C.—This species is not so contagious. M.

VER. 14. Live flesh, raw, the skin being consumed in various parts.

23 But if it stay in its place, it is but the scar of an ulcer, and the man shall be clean.

24 The flesh also and skin that hath been burnt, and after it is healed hath a white or a red scar, 25 The priest shall view it, and if he see it is turned white, and the place thereof is lower than the other skin: he shall declare him unclean, because the evil of leprosy is broken out in the scar.

26 But if the colour of the hair be not changed, nor the blemish lower than the other flesh, and the appearance of the leprosy be somewhat obscure, he shall shut him up seven days,

27 And on the seventh day he shall view him: if the leprosy be grown farther in the skin, he shall declare him unclean.

28 But if the whiteness stay in its place, and be not very clear, it is the sore of a burning, and therefore he shall be cleansed, because it is only the scar of a burning.

29 If the leprosy break out in the head or the beard of a man or a woman, the priest shall see them,

30 And if the place be lower than the other flesh, and the hair yellow, and thinner than usual: he shall declare them unclean, because it is the leprosy of the head and the beard.

31 But if he perceive the place of the spot is equal with the flesh that is near it, and the hair black, he shall shut him up seven days:

32 And on the seventh day he shall look upon it. If the spot be not grown, and the hair keep its colour, and the place of the blemish be even with the other flesh:

33 The man shall be shaven all but the place of the spot, and he shall be shut up other seven days.

34 If on the seventh day the evil seem to have staid in its place, and not lower than the other flesh, he shall cleanse him, and his clothes being washed he shall be clean.

35 But if after his cleansing, the spot spread again in the skin,

36 He shall seek no more whether the hair be turned yellow, because he is evidently unclean.

37 But if the spot be staid, and the hair be black, let him know that the man is healed, and let him confidently pronounce him clean.

38 If a whiteness appear in the skin of a man or a woman, 39 The priest shall view them. If he find that a darkish whiteness shineth in the skin, let him know that it is not the leprosy, but a white blemish, and that the man is clean.

VER. 16. Whiteness, after the red flesh is covered with skin as usual.

VER. 20. Ulcer, as before, v. 8.

VER. 23. Place, which is contrary to the nature of leprosy.

VER. 24. Scar. If it had proceeded from burning it would have been black. M.

VER. 26. Obscure. Heb. may be, "stopped," as it is opposed to v. 22, if it spread. See v. 55-6.

VER. 27. Unclean. Heb. adds, "it is the stroke of leprosy," and the Sept. "it has spread in the ulcer."

VER. 30. Leprosy, or scurf. C.—This species causes the hair to be yellow, and not white. M.

VER. 31. Black. The Heb. Sam. &c. prefix "not," which ought probably to be away, as the natural colour of the hair, in that country, is black; while yellow, or white hair, give reason to suspect the leprosy; and (v. 32.) the Heb. says, "if there be no yellow hair in it," which insinuates that it was black before. The Sept. have explained both verses in the same sense, as they found the negation also. If we admit it, we may distinguish black hair from that which approaches to brown, or light-coloured hair. When therefore a person, who had before black hair, has experienced some change, he must be shut up seven days; after which, if his hair be not become yellow or reddish, he must be shaved, &c. C.

VER. 39. Blemish, or scab, of which Celsus speaks, B. 5.

40 The man whose hair falleth off from his head, he is bald and clean :

41 And if the hair fall from his forehead, he is bald before and clean.

42 But if in the bald head, or in the bald forehead, there be risen a white or reddish colour, 43 And the priest perceive this, he shall condemn him undoubtedly of leprosy, which is risen in the bald part.

44 Now whosoever shall be defiled with the leprosy, and is separated by the judgment of the priest, 45 Shall have his clothes hanging loose, his head bare, his mouth covered with a cloth, and he shall cry out that he is defiled and unclean.

46 All the time that he is a leper and unclean, he shall dwell alone without the camp.

47 A woollen or linen garment that shall have the leprosy

48 In the warp, and the woof, or a skin, or whatsoever is made of a skin, 49 If it be infected with a white or red spot, it shall be accounted the leprosy, and shall be shewn to the priest.

50 And he shall look upon it, and shall shut it up seven days :

51 And on the seventh day, when he looketh on it again, if he find that it is grown, it is a fixed leprosy : he shall judge the garment unclean, and every thing wherein it shall be found :

52 And therefore it shall be burnt with fire.

53 But if he see that it is not grown,

54 He shall give orders, and they shall wash that part wherein the leprosy is, and he shall shut it up other seven days.

55 And when he shall see that the former colour is not returned, nor yet the leprosy spread, he shall judge it unclean, and shall burn it with fire, for the leprosy has taken hold of the outside of the garment, or through the whole.

VER. 57. Flying, as that in man, v. 12. Heb. it is a leprosy, which returns and is rooted. Chal. "it spreads." C. See Calmet's Diss. on the Leprosy.—This dreadful disorder is very common in Arabia and Palestine. During the holy wars, many of the Europeans were infected with it. The Jews believe, that the leprosy of garments and of houses was restrained to Judea, and attacked them only when the people rebelled against God. Oleaster.—The providence of God often visited those, who would not obey his ministers, with this disorder. Deut. xxiv. 8. Num. xii. Theod. q. 18. T.

VER. 59. Pronounced. This word should refer to both; mundari vel contaminari, how it ought to be pronounced clean or unclean; as the law regards the declaration of the priests, and not the medicines to be used for the leprosy. H.

57 And if after this there appear in those places that before were without spot, a flying and wandering leprosy : it must be burnt with fire.

58 If it cease, he shall wash with water the parts that are pure, the second time, and they shall be clean.

59 This is the law touching the leprosy of any woollen or linen garment, either in the warp or woof, or any thing of skins, how it ought to be cleansed, or pronounced unclean.

CHAP. XIV.

The rites or sacrifices in cleansing the leprosy. Leprosy in houses.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses,^a saying :

2 This is the rite of a leper, when he is to be cleansed : He shall be brought to the priest :

3 ^b Who, going out of the camp, when he shall find that the leprosy is cleansed,

4 ^c Shall command him, that is to be purified, to offer for himself two living sparrows, which it is lawful to eat, and cedar-wood, and scarlet and hyssop.

5 And he shall command one of the sparrows to be immolated in an earthen vessel, over living waters :

6 But the other that is alive he shall dip, with the cedar-wood, and the scarlet and the hyssop, in the blood of the sparrow that is immolated :

7 Wherewith he shall sprinkle him that is to be cleansed seven times, that he may be rightly purified : and he shall let go the living sparrow, that it may fly into the field.

8 And when the man hath washed his clothes, he shall shave all the hair of his body, and shall be washed with water ; and being purified, he shall enter into the camp, yet so that he tarry without his own tent seven days :

9 And on the seventh day he shall shave the hair of

But the priest sprinkled with its blood the other bird, which was tied with a scarlet ribband to the cedar-wood and hyssop, in such a manner that its head and wings were not much wet, as it was to fly away. C.—The cedar prevents putrefaction, the hyssop is very odoriferous; the scarlet and the bird denote beauty and life, which qualities the leper must acquire. So the penitent regains the virtues he had lost, with interest. T.

VER. 5. Living waters. That is, waters taken from a spring brook, or river: (Ch.) not stagnant or rain water.

VER. 7. Rightly. According to law. H.—The number seven is used to denote perfection, v. 15, &c. M.—Field. An emblem of the liberty which the leper would soon enjoy. Metam. xiii. 954.* They were also accustomed to set birds at liberty in honour of their gods. Demosthenes accuses Conon of having eaten those which had been used in his purification. Boisier believes that Moses does not here prescribe any sacrifice. Why then is a priest employed to make these aspersions? C.

VER. 8. Body, even to the feet. Isai. vii. 20. H.—Probably with a pair of scissors. C.—The Egyptian priests did so every third day, that nothing impure might be concealed. Herod. ii. 37. The greatest caution was requisite to prevent the return of the leprosy; and therefore, after the first purification, (v. 4.) the leper is not allowed to go home, till a sufficient time has elapsed to ascertain whether he be radically healed, and then he must offer a sacrifice, v. 10. H.—But why so many prescriptions for a disease so involuntary, (C.) which must have already caused the unhappy sufferer so much pain? H.—The Rabbins assert, that the leprosy was sent to punish some secret transgression, particularly his head, and his beard and his eye-brows, and the hair of all his body. And having washed again his clothes, and his body, 10 On the eighth day he shall take two lambs without blemish, and an ewe of a year old without blemish, and three tenths of flour tempered with oil for a sacrifice, and a sextary of oil apart.

11 And when the priest that purifieth the man, hath presented him, and all these things before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the testimony,

12 He shall take a lamb, and offer it for a trespass-offering with the sextary of oil: and having offered all before the Lord,

13 He shall immolate the lamb, where the victim for sin is wont to be immolated, and the holocaust; that is, in the holy place: for as that which is for sin, so also the victim for a trespass-offering pertaineth to the priest: it is holy of holies.

14 And the priest taking of the blood of the victim that was immolated for trespass, shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot.

15 And he shall pour of the sextary of oil into his own left hand, 16 And shall dip his right finger in it, and sprinkle it before the Lord seven times.

17 And the rest of the oil in his left hand, he shall pour upon the tip of the right ear of him that is cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot, and upon the blood that was shed for trespass,

18 And upon his head.

19 And he shall pray for him before the Lord, and shall offer the sacrifice for sin: then shall he immolate the holocaust,

20 And put it on the altar with the libations thereof, and the man shall be rightly cleansed.

21 But if he be poor, and his hand cannot find the things aforesaid: he shall take a lamb for an offering for trespass, that the priest may pray for him, and a tenth part of flour tempered with oil for a sacrifice, and a sextary of oil,

22 And two turtles, or two young pigeons, of which one may be for sin, and the other for a holocaust:

23 And he shall offer them on the eighth day of his purification to the priest, at the door of the tabernacle of the testimony before the Lord.

24 And the priest receiving the lamb for trespass, and the sextary of oil, shall elevate them together.

25 And the lamb being immolated, he shall put of the blood thereof upon the tip of the right ear of him that is cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot:

26 But he shall pour part of the oil into his own left hand,

27 And dipping the finger of his right hand in it, he shall sprinkle it seven times before the Lord:

28 And he shall touch the tip of the right ear of him that is cleansed, and the thumb of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot, in the place of the blood that was shed for trespass,

29 And the other part of the oil that is in his left hand, he shall pour upon the head of the purified person, that he may appease the Lord for him.

30 And he shall offer a turtle, or young pigeon,

31 One for trespass, and the other for a holocaust, with their libations.

32 This is the sacrifice of a leper, that is not able to have all things that appertain to his cleansing.

33 And the Lord spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:

34 When you shall be come into the land of Chanaan, which I will give you for a possession, if there be the plague of leprosy in a house, 35 He whose house it is, shall go and tell the priest, saying: It seemeth to me, that there is the plague of leprosy in my house.

36 And he shall command, that they carry forth all things out of the house, before he go into it, and see whether it have the leprosy, lest all things become unclean that are in the house. And afterwards he shall go in to view the leprosy of the house,

37 And if he see in the walls thereof as it were little dints, disfigured with paleness or redness, and lower than all the rest, some pride or detraction; as they maintain, that every illness is in punishment of some offence. Abarbanel. Grotius.—If was often the effect of intemperance or negligence; and the sacrifices were exacted, to make some reparation to God for remaining in the camp and near the tabernacle, at the commencement of the disorder. C.—This foul cutaneous disease was also very infectious, and the law was designed to impress people with a horror of it, and to teach them to prevent its ravages as much as possible. H.—A sparrow is slain, and the hair shaved, to indicate that all sinful affections must be cut off by the true penitent, while the sparrow, which is sent away into the desert, reminds him that he must live a stranger to pleasure, and perfectly mortified. D.—Days; without having any communication with his wife. Lyran.

VER. 10. A sextary; Heb. log: a measure of liquid, which was the twelfth part of a hin; and held about as much as six eggs. Ch.—For each of the victims a sacrifice of flour and oil was required. H.

VER. 12. Offered. Heb. "elevated, or waved," as Ex. xxix. 24.

VER. 13. Place; on the left hand of the altar of holocausts. C. i. 11. This sacrifice is different from that for sin, v. 19. C.

VER. 14. Taking of the blood, &c. These ceremonies, used in the cleansing of a leper, were mysterious and very significative. The sprinkling seven times with the blood of the little bird, the washing himself and his clothes, the shaving his hair and his beard, signify the means which are to be used in the reconciliation of a sinner, and the steps by which he is to return to God, viz. by the repeated application of the blood of Christ; the washing his conscience with the waters of compunction; and retrenching all vanities and superfluities, by employing all that is over and above what is necessary in alms deeds. The sin-offering, and the holocaust or burnt-offering, which he was to offer at his cleansing, signify the sacrifice of a contrite and humble heart, and that of adoration in spirit and truth, with gratitude and thankfulness, for the forgiveness of sins, with which we are ever to appear before the Almighty. The touching the right ear, the thumb of the right hand, and the great toe of the right foot, first with the blood of the victim, and then with the remainder of the oil, which had been sprinkled seven times before the Lord, signify the application of the blood of Christ, and the unction of the sevenfold grace of the Holy Ghost to the sinner's right ear, that he may duly hearken to and obey the law of God; and to his right hand and foot, that the works of his hands, and all the steps or affections of his soul, signified by the feet, may be rightly directed to God. Ch. See C. viii. 23.—These ceremonies might serve to call to the leper's recollection the benefit which he had received, and to distinguish him from others. C.

VER. 17. Blood. Sept. and Syr. "upon the place of the blood," on the person's ear, thumb, and toe.

VER. 21. Offering. Heb. "a trespass-offering to be waved," v. 12. 24.—Oil. The same quantity of oil is required as v. 10. The rest is diminished two-thirds; only instead of the ewe and one lamb, two turtles or pigeons are substituted. H.

VER. 31. Trespass. Heb. "sin," v. 19. The Chal. and Sept. agree with the original text. M.

VER. 34. If there. Heb. "and I send the plague;" whence some infer, that this leprosy was an effect of God's special indignation against the owners of the house. Muis, &c.

VER. 36. Become. If any thing was left in the house, it was deemed unclean, as soon as the priest had declared that the house was infected; and therefore, all was to be removed before he came, (C.) and might be used without scruple, unless some marks of leprosy appeared afterwards upon the garments. C. xiii. 47.

VER. 37. Paleness. Heb. "greenish." H.—Such spots are often observable in damp churches and cloisters, and cause the plaster to fall off. It is probable 38 He shall go out of the door of the house, and forthwith shut it up seven days,

39 And returning on the seventh day, he shall look upon it. If he find that the leprosy is spread,

40 He shall command, that the stones wherein the leprosy is, be taken out, and cast without the city into an unclean place:

41 And that the house be scraped on the inside round about, and the dust of the scraping be scattered without the city into an unclean place:

42 And that other stones be laid in the place of them that were taken away, and the house be plastered with other mortar.

43 But if, after the stones be taken out, and the dust scraped off, and it be plastered with other earth,

44 The priest going in perceive that the leprosy is returned, and the walls full of spots, it is a lasting leprosy, and the house is unclean:

45 And they shall destroy it forthwith, and shall cast the stones and timber thereof, and all the dust, without the town into an unclean place.

46 He that entereth into the house when it is shut, shall be unclean until evening.

47 And he that sleepeth in it, and eateth any thing, shall wash his clothes.

48 But if the priest going in perceive that the leprosy is not spread in the house, after it was plastered again, he shall purify it, it being cured.

49 And for the purification thereof he shall take two sparrows, and cedar-wood, and scarlet and hyssop:

50 And having immolated one sparrow in an earthen vessel over living waters,

51 He shall take the cedar-wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living sparrow, and shall dip all in the blood of the sparrow that is immolated, and in the living water, and he shall sprinkle the house seven times:

52 And shall purify it as well with the blood of the sparrow, as with the living water, and with the living sparrow, and with the cedar-wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet.

53 And when he hath let go the sparrow to fly freely away into the field, he shall pray for the house, and it shall be rightly cleansed.

56 Of a scar and of blisters breaking out, of a shining spot, and when the colours are diversely changed:

that little worms produce this effect. To prevent these vermin from spreading Moses orders the whole house to be demolished and carried away, if it cannot be otherwise purified. C.—Thus the plague is communicated not only by persons, but also by all the things which they have touched. The same signs of leprosy are found both in men and in houses. M.

57 That it may be known when a thing is clean, or unclean.

CHAP. XV.

Other legal uncleannesses.

AND the Lord spoke^a to Moses and Aaron, saying
2 Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them: The man that hath an issue of seed, shall be unclean.

3 And then shall he be judged subject to this evil, when a filthy humour, at every moment, cleaveth to his flesh, and gathereth there.

4 Every bed on which he sleepeth, shall be unclean, and every place on which he sitteth.

5 If any man touch his bed, he shall wash his clothes: and being washed with water, he shall be unclean until the evening.

6 If a man sit where that man hath sitten, he also shall wash his clothes: and being washed with water, shall be unclean until the evening.

7 He that toucheth his flesh, shall wash his clothes: and being himself washed with water shall be unclean until the evening.

8 If such a man cast his spittle upon him that is clean, he shall wash his clothes: and being washed with water, he shall be unclean until the evening.

9 The saddle on which he hath sitten shall be unclean:

10 And whatsoever has been under him that hath the issue of seed, shall be unclean until the evening. He that carrieth any of these things, shall wash his clothes: and being washed with water, he shall be unclean until the evening.

11 Every person whom such a one shall touch, not having washed his hands before, shall wash his clothes: and being washed with water, shall be unclean until the evening.

12 If he touch a vessel of earth, it shall be broken: but if a vessel of wood, it shall be washed with water.

13 If he who suffereth this disease be healed, he shall number seven days after his cleansing; and having washed his clothes, and all his body in living water, he shall be clean.

14 And on the eighth day he shall take two turtles, or two young pigeons, and he shall come before the Lord, to the door of the tabernacle of the testimony, and shall give them to the priest:

Ch.—If the gonorrhœa, and the lawful act of marriage, (v. 16,) and nocturnal delusions, (Deut. xxiii. 10,) induce a kind of uncleanness—surely to imitate Onan is most detestable, Gen. xxviii. 9. T.—The Jews rank the latter crime with murder, and so does Tertullian. See Ex. xxi. 22.

VER. 3 At every moment, is not in Heb., but something like it occurs in the Sam. and Sept. According to the Heb. the uncleanness subsists for some time after the issue has ceased. Grotius pretends that these disorders were contagious; but the reason why God requires such purity in his people, is given v. 31. He dwelt among them, and would not allow of any disrespectful behaviour. They were to live like priests in his temple. The pagans in Egypt, Greece, and Italy, required the like attention to cleanliness in their priests. Herod. ii.—Noctem flammis purgas. Persius ii. C.

19 The woman, who at the return of the month hath her issue of blood, shall be separated seven days.

20 Every one that toucheth her, shall be unclean until the evening.

21 And every thing that she sleepeth on, or that she sitteth on in the days of her separation, shall be defiled.

22 He that toucheth her bed shall wash his clothes: and being himself washed with water, shall be unclean until the evening.

23 Whosoever shall touch any vessel on which she sitteth, shall wash his clothes: and himself being washed with water, shall be defiled until the evening.

24 If a man copulateth with her in the time of her flowers, he shall be unclean seven days: and every bed, on which he shall sleep, shall be defiled.

25 The woman that hath an issue of blood many days out of her ordinary time, or that ceaseth not to flow after the monthly courses, as long as she is subject to this disease, shall be unclean, in the same manner as if she were in her flowers.

26 Every bed on which she sleepeth, and every vessel on which she sitteth, shall be defiled.

27 Whosoever toucheth them shall wash his clothes: and himself being washed with water, shall be unclean until the evening.

28 If the blood stop and cease to run, she shall count seven days of her purification:

29 And on the eighth day she shall offer for herself to the priest, two turtles, or two young pigeons, at the door of the tabernacle of the testimony.

VER. 16. Evening, whether the action were lawful or not. M.—Some explain this verse, of nocturnal inconveniences; and v. 18, of the act of marriage. The latter rendered unclean only in as much as it hindered a person from partaking of any thing sacred, though he might perform the duties of life. VER. 28. Run. Then she might act as usual, without defiling what she touched. It seems from v. 13, that this law regarded only the time while the tabernacle was in the camp. It would have been very difficult to observe it, when the people were dispersed throughout the land of Chanaan. C.

CHAP. XVI. VER. 1. Fire. It was upon this occasion that the feast of expiation (kippurim) was instituted, to enforce the reverence due to holy things, and particularly to the tabernacle. Heb. adds, “before the Lord,” (IL) and does not specify strawed fire; but the Chaldee and Syriac do. C.

30 And he shall offer one for sin, and the other for a holocaust, and he shall pray for her before the Lord, and for the issue of her uncleanness.

31 You shall teach therefore the children of Israel, to take heed of uncleanness, that they may not die in their filth, when they shall have defiled my tabernacle that is among them.

32 This is the law of him that hath the issue of seed and that is defiled by copulation, 33 And of the woman that is separated in her monthly times, or that hath a continual issue of blood, and of the man that sleepeth with her.

CHAP. XVI.

When and how the high priest must enter into the sanctuary. The feast of expiation.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses,^a after the death of the two sons of Aaron,^b when they were slain upon their offering strange fire:

2 And he commanded him, saying: Speak to Aaron thy brother,^c that he enter not at all into the sanctuary, which is within the veil before the propitiatory, with which the ark is covered, lest he die, (for I will appear in a cloud over the oracle)

3 Unless he first do these things: He shall offer a calf for sin, and a ram for a holocaust.

4 He shall be vested with a linen tunic, he shall cover his nakedness with linen breeches: he shall be girded with a linen girdle, and he shall put a linen mitre upon his head: for these are holy vestments: all which he shall put on, after he is washed.

5 And he shall receive from the whole multitude of the children of Israel two buck-goats for sin, and one ram for a holocaust.

6 And when he hath offered the calf, and prayed for himself, and for his own house,

7 He shall make the two buck-goats to stand before the Lord, in the door of the tabernacle of the testimony:

8 And casting lots upon them both, one to be offered to the Lord, and the other to be the emissary-goat:

9 That whose lot fell to be offered to the Lord, he shall offer for sin:

^a Exod. xxx. 10. Heb. ix. 7.

VER. 2. Enter not. No one but the high priest, and he but once a year could enter into the sanctuary: to signify that no one could enter into the sanctuary of heaven till Christ our high priest opened it by his passion, Heb. x. 8 Ch.—When the tabernacle was to be removed, and when he had to consult the Lord, he might also enter, arrayed in his pontifical attire. If the high priest was prevented by any legal uncleanness, the next priest was substituted to perform his office. Josep. xvii. 8. Adjutor vicarius propter cognationem ei datus est.

VER. 4. Washed. On this day the high priest appeared in linen clothes, like one of the inferior priests, without the jewels; though Josephus (de Bel. v. 15,) asserts the contrary. C.—This was a feast of sorrow and of penance. T.—Perhaps he put on his more costly attire before he entered the holy of holies, v. 23. 4. H.

VER. 6. Calf, or young bull, which Aaron offered for himself and all the family of Levi, to expiate the sins which they might have committed during the year. If their sins were voluntary, they were obliged also to have perfect charity and contrition. The ram was offered for the sins of the people. Moses speaks of the red heifer, (Num. xix.) which was also offered, out of the camp, for the people. This solemn day was to be kept by all as a rigid “fast from meat, drink, washing, anointing, wearing shoes, or using marriage.” This is the idea which the Oriental nations generally have of a fast. They commence at midnight, and end with the following sun set; after which they eat what they think proper. C.—On the day of expiation, the Jews made a tenfold confession of their sins. Morin. penit. ii. 22.

VER. 8. The emissary-goat: capre emissarius; in Greek, apomompaios; in Hebrew, Hazazel. The goat to go off, or as some translate it, the scape-goat. This goat, on whose head the high priest was ordered to pour forth prayers, and to make a general confession of the sins of the people, laying them all, as it were,

10 But that whose lot was to be the emissary-goat, he shall present alive before the Lord, that he may pour out prayers upon him, and let him go into the wilderness.

11 After these things are duly celebrated, he shall offer the calf, and praying for himself and for his own house, he shall immolate it:

12 And taking the censer, which he hath filled with the burning coals of the altar, and taking up with his hand the compounded perfume for incense, he shall go in within the veil into the holy place:

13 That when the perfumes are put upon the fire, the cloud and vapour thereof may cover the oracle, which is over the testimony, and he may not die.

14 He shall take also of the blood of the calf, and sprinkle with his finger seven times towards the propitiatory to the east.

15 And when he hath killed the buck-goat for the sin of the people, he shall carry in the blood thereof within the veil, as he was commanded to do with the blood of the calf, that he may sprinkle it over-against the oracle,

16 And may expiate the sanctuary from the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and from their transgressions, and all their sins. According to this rite shall he do to the tabernacle of the testimony, which is fixed among them in the midst of the filth of their habitation.

17 *Let no man be in the tabernacle when the high priest goeth into the sanctuary, to pray for himself and his house, and for the whole congregation of Israel, until he come out.

18 And when he is come out to the altar that is before the Lord, let him pray for himself, and taking the blood of the calf, and of the buck-goat, let him pour it upon the horns thereof round about:

19 And sprinkling with his finger seven times, let him expiate, and sanctify it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel.

20 After he hath cleansed the sanctuary, and the tabernacle, and the altar, then let him offer the living goat:

21 And putting both hands upon his head, let him confess all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their offences and sins: and praying that they may light on his head, he shall turn him out, by a man ready for it, into the desert.

22 And when the goat hath carried all their iniquities into an uninhabited land, and shall be let go into the desert,

23 Aaron shall return into the tabernacle of the testimony, and putting off the vestments, which he had on him before when he entered into the sanctuary, and leaving them there,

24 He shall wash his flesh in the holy place, and shall put on his own garments. And after that he is come out, and hath offered his own holocaust, and that of the people, he shall pray both for himself and for the people:

25 And the fat that is offered for sins, he shall burn upon the altar.

26 But he that hath let go the emissary-goat, shall wash his clothes, and his body with water, and so shall enter into the camp.

27 But the calf and the buck-goat, that were sacrificed for sin, and whose blood was carried into the sanctuary, to accomplish the atonement, they shall carry forth without the camp, and shall burn with fire, their skins, and their flesh, and their dung:

28 And whosoever burneth them, shall wash his clothes and flesh with water, and so shall enter into the camp.

29 And this shall be to you an everlasting ordinance: *The seventh month, the tenth day of the month, you shall afflict your souls, and shall do no work, whether

VER. 12. Censer, which resembled one of our chalices; without any chains, &c. Apoc. v. 8. C.

VER. 13, 14. The cloud.—The blood, &c. This is to teach us, that if we would go into the sanctuary of God, we must take with us the incense of prayer, and the blood, that is, the passion of Christ. Where also note, that the high priest, before he went into the holy of holies, was to wash his whole body; and then to put on white linen garments; to signify the purity and chastity with which we are to approach to God. Ch.—The Sept. call this goat apomponpion, "the averter of evils, or the one sent away." Hazazel is taken by Spencer Julian, the apostate. (ap. S. Cyr. 9. and ep. 59.) to mean the devil; as if the goat was sent or sacrificed to him, which is very foolish. C.—East. That is, the forepart of the mercy-seat, which was not to be touched with the blood, (M.) no more than the veil. Rabbin.

VER. 15. Oracle. He probably took this blood at the same time with that of the calf. Heb. ix. 7. M.—Though some Rabbinis assert, the high priest entered the holy of holies four times on that day. Drusius.—Pausanias tells us, that the temples of Dianes and Orcus were opened only once a year. C.

VER. 16. Filth. God deigned to have his tabernacle in the midst of the camp, where so many sins, and marks of disrespect, as well as legal uncleannesses, were found. H.—Sin so defileth the soul, that the most holy place is contaminated thereby. Theod. q. 22.

VER. 17. Out. Even the other priests were excluded from the tabernacle. The high priest placed incense on the censer as soon as he was entered within the veil, and prayed for all blessings, in few words, that the people might not be uneasy, fearing lest something had befallen him. This was the form: "Be pleased to grant, O Lord our God, that this year may be warm and rainy, that the sovereign power may abide in the house of Juda, that thy people may not be deprived of any of the necessities of life; and hear not the petitions of travellers" (which are commonly vain and selfish) or "of sinners," as others translate. C.—Those who were forbidden to be present on this occasion, might have made the same objections as Protestants do against the law of the Church which prescribes a language not commonly understood by all, in the administration of her sacraments. Have either any reason to be offended? H.

VER. 18. Let him pray for himself. Heb. "he shall expiate or purify it," the altar of incense. Josephus says he also sprinkled with blood the great altar of holocausts, v. 20. Ant. iii. 10.

VER. 24. Flesh, which was, in some sort, defiled by touching the goat.—Garments, belonging to his office.—Come out of the holy of holies. C.—The remainder of the day was spent in joy. The priest washed himself, as a sign that he had obtained pardon. M.

VER. 26. Camp. This was always required of those who had burnt the bodies of the victims out of the camp, as v. 28, and Num. xix. 7. Outram.—In some of the sacrifices for sin, the priests might eat part of the flesh. But here all was consumed, as the victim was offered for the sins of all.

VER. 29. Tenth. Beginning on the evening of the ninth Tisri, which corresponds with part of our September and October, and is the first month of the civil year. C. xxxiii. 32. Afflict, by a rigid abstinence from all that might give delight to the body. Children of seven years old begin to join in this mortification. Boys of 13, and girls of 11 years old complete, were obliged to fast. See v. 6. The Samaritans pray all the day, and give no food even to infants during the 24 hours. C.—Moses was the first who shewed them the example; and this was the only day which he prescribed to be kept as a fast. The Jews afterwards appointed many more. H.—Maimonides says, this festival was instituted in memory of the descent of Moses from Mount Sinai the third time, when he came to announce to the people that God had pardoned their idolatry. Usher thinks it was in memory of Adam's fall. The Jews still observe it in some degree. As they are not allowed to sacrifice, they kill a white cock, and the women a hen, on the 9th at evening. Those with child kill both. They confess their sins, receive 39 lashes, ask pardon of those whom they have offended, and generally spend the fore part of this month in acts of piety and of penance. 30 Upon this day shall be the expiation for you, and the cleansing from all your sins: you shall be cleansed before the Lord.

31 For it is a sabbath of rest, and you shall afflict your souls by a perpetual religion.

32 And the priest that is anointed, and whose hands are consecrated to do the office of the priesthood in his father's stead, shall make atonement: and he shall be vested with the linen robe and the holy vestments,

33 And he shall expiate the sanctuary, and the tabernacle of the testimony, and the altar, the priests also and all the people.

34 And this shall be an ordinance for ever, that you pray for the children of Israel, and for all their sins once in a year. He did therefore as the Lord had commanded Moses.

CHAP. XVII.

No sacrifices to be offered but at the door of the tabernacle: a prohibition of blood.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Speak to Aaron and his sons, and to all the children of Israel, saying to them: This is the word which the Lord hath commanded, saying:

3 Any man whosoever of the house of Israel, if he kill an ox, or a sheep, or a goat, in the camp or without the camp,

4 And offer it not at the door of the tabernacle an oblation to the Lord, shall be guilty of blood: as if he had shed blood, so shall he perish from the midst of his people.

5 Therefore the children of Israel shall bring to the priest their victims, which they kill in the field, that they may be sanctified to the Lord before the door of the tabernacle of the testimony, and they may sacrifice them for peace-offerings to the Lord.

6 And the priest shall pour the blood upon the altar of the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the testimony, and shall burn the fat for a sweet odour to the Lord.

7 And they shall no more sacrifice their victims to devils, with whom they have committed fornication.

CHAP. XVII. VER. 3. If he kill, &c. That is, in order to sacrifice. The law of God forbids sacrifices to be offered in any other place but at the tabernacle or temple of the Lord: to signify that no sacrifices would be acceptable to God, out of his true temple, the one, holy, Catholic Apostolic Church. Ch.—On other occasions, many believe that the blood of oxen, sheep, and goats, was to be poured out in honour of God by the priest, who received a part of each. Deut. xviii. 1. v. 15. 22. Theod. q. 23. Perhaps this law regards the time when the Hebrews sojourned in the desert; and that of Deuteronomy has a reference to those times when they should obtain possession of Chanaan. C.—We read of some private people, like Manue and Elias, who offered sacrifice at a distance from the tabernacle. But this was done by a particular inspiration of God, who dispensed with his own law. S. Aug. q. 56. 3 K. xviii. 23. Judg. xiii. 19. M. See Jos. viii. 31.

VER. 5. They. The Egyptians and other nations, kill in the field, as the Hebrews had also done, till it was now prohibited. Some were, perhaps, still much inclined to adore, (C.) and to offer sacrifice privately to devils; (v. 7,) and therefore God forbids any sacrifice, but such as was performed by his priests at the tabernacle. H.

VER. 7. Devils. Heb. shairim: which some translate goats, (the hairy ones) satyrs, &c. The Egyptians adored the goat, (which they represented like the god Pan) particularly in the territory of Mendes, near which the Hebrews had dwelt. Its worship was very abominable and obscene. Strabo xvii. C.—Ezekiel (xvi. 22,) intimates, that the Hebrews were given to idolatry in Egypt. They had also recently adored the calf. H.

VER. 10. Eat blood. To eat blood, was forbidden in the law; partly because God reserved it to himself to be offered in sacrifices on the altar, as to the Lord

It shall be an ordinance for ever to them and to their posterity.

8 And thou shalt say to them: The man of the house of Israel, and of the strangers who sojourn among you, that offereth a holocaust or a victim,

9 And bringeth it not to the door of the tabernacle of the testimony, that it may be offered to the Lord, shall perish from among his people:

10 If any man whosoever of the house of Israel, and of the strangers that sojourn among them, eat blood, I will set my face against his soul, and will cut him off from among his people:

11 Because the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you, that you may make atonement with it upon the altar for your souls, and the blood may be for an expiation of the soul.

12 Therefore I have said to the children of Israel: No soul of you, nor of the strangers that sojourn among you, shall eat blood.

13 Any man whosoever of the children of Israel, and of the strangers that sojourn among you, if by hunting or fowling, he take a wild beast or a bird, which it is lawful to eat, let him pour out its blood, and cover it with earth.

14 For the life of all flesh is in the blood: therefore I said to the children of Israel: You shall not eat the blood of any flesh at all, because the life of the flesh is in the blood, and whosoever eateth it, shall be cut off.

15 The soul that eateth that which died of itself, or has been caught by a beast, whether he be one of your own country or a stranger, shall wash his clothes and himself with water, and shall be defiled until the evening: and in this manner he shall be made clean.

16 But if he do not wash his clothes, and his body, he shall bear his iniquity.

CHAP. XVIII.

Marriage is prohibited in certain degrees of kindred: and all unnatural lusts.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: I am the Lord your God.

3 You shall not do according to the custom of the of life and death; and as a figure of the blood of Christ; and partly to give men a horror of shedding blood. Gen. ix. 4, 5, 6. Ch.—Some barbarians feast on human blood. The Massagetes drank the blood of horses, and the Gelonians of Pontus mixed it with milk. Georg. iii. 463. If the Hebrews did any such thing, and it became public, they were put to death. But if it remained private, God threatens to take vengeance himself of their cruelty and disobedience. The face often denotes anger.

VER. 11. Life, (anima). The sensitive soul depends on the blood. The soul and the blood are often used in the same sense. Deut. xii. 23. Ps. xxix. 10. Sanguine quærendi reditus animæque litandum—Argolied. Æneid. ii. C.—If any one think that blood is the soul of cattle, we need not examine this question very nicely. S. Aug. q. 57. D.

VER. 13. Hunting, with nets, or with bow and arrow. If a dog had killed the prey, it would have rendered it unclean. Tostat. But perhaps dogs were not employed in hunting by the Hebrews. The Persians use lions, &c. Chardin. C.—Earth, to prevent any abusive custom, such as that of the magicians, who pretended to raise spirits by blood. Tiresias would not disclose the truth to Ulysses, till he had drunk some blood. Odys. xxii. The Jews abhorred things strangled, and the apostles forbade the primitive Christians to use them. Act. xv. Phocildes, the pagan, says, "abandon such remains to dogs; beasts eat the leavings of beasts." Euseb. C.

VER. 15. Stranger. Perhaps the proselyte of justice, not simply of the gate for the latter were allowed to eat and to purchase what had died of itself. Deut. xiv. 21.—Clean, having offered the sacrifice. C. iv. 27. But if he ate such things knowingly, or neglected these regulations, he was more severely punished. H.

land of Egypt, in which you dwelt: neither shall you act according to the manner of the country of Chanaan, into which I will bring you, nor shall you walk in their ordinances.

4 You shall do my judgments, and shall observe my precepts, and shall walk in them. I am the Lord your God.

5 *Keep my laws and my judgments, which if a man do, he shall live in them. I am the Lord.

6 No man shall approach to her that is near of kin to him, to uncover her nakedness. I am the Lord.

7 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father, or the nakedness of thy mother: she is thy mother, thou shalt not uncover her nakedness.

8 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's wife: for it is the nakedness of thy father.

9 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy sister, by father or by mother, whether born at home or abroad.

10 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy son's daughter, or thy daughter's daughter: because it is thy own nakedness.

11 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's wife's daughter, whom she bore to thy father, and who is thy sister.

12 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister: because she is the flesh of thy father.

* Ezec. xx. 11. Rom. x. 5. Gal. iii. 12.

VER. 5. Live in them, a long and happy life, (Chal.) attended with grace and glory. Lyran.—Jesus Christ and S. Paul explain it of eternal life. Matt. xix. 17. Rom. x. 5. C.

VER. 6. Approach to marry, much less to gratify his sensual appetite. H.—To him. Heb. "None shall approach to any of their descendants;" ad omnes reliquias carnis sue; to any of those who spring from the same stock. The Jews assert, that all are bound by the law of nature to abstain from their own mother and sister, from another's wife, and from unnatural conjunctions. Seld. Jur. v. 11. C.—Nakedness, or turpitude, which title the body deserves, when it is used in a manner contrary to the law of God.

VER. 7. Father, with whom the daughters must not have any connexion, as Myrrha had with Cynoras. Metam. x. H.—All relations in a right line are excluded for ever, according to the emperor Justinian. The reason of these various impediments is, 1. That God's people may not resemble infidels, who permitted such things, v. 3. The Persians married their own mothers, daughters, and sisters. S. Clem. Strom. 3. Semiramis married her son Justir. Cleopatra was both mother and wife of the two Ptolemies, Philometor and Euergetes, or Physcon. T.—The Egyptians took their sisters to wife for a long time, by the authority of their laws, and in imitation of Isis. Diod. i. Clem. recogn. 9. Solon permitted people to marry their step-sisters by the same father, and Lycurgus only those by the same mother. Philo ad 6. præc. 2. By this law, the bands of society are strengthened, and families become connected. S. Aug. C. d. xv. 16. 3. Disorders which would easily take place under the same roof, on the prospect of a future marriage, are prevented. 4. The contrary practice would often prove contrary to order and decency, as the son would be raised above his mother. These regulations seem to have been made from the beginning, or at least from the time of the deluge; since the nations not subject to the law of Moses, are condemned for the transgression of them, v. 24. See Gen. xix. 33. C.

VER. 8. Father. He hath known her; and to him she belongs, as being one flesh. H.—If he were even dead, it would shew a want of respect to marry his widow, though she were not your own mother. C.—This law, Ruben and the incestuous Corinthian transgressed. T.

VER. 9. Abroad; being born of your mother, while she was married to another. The marriages of brothers and sisters at the beginning, were authorized by necessity; but now they are the more to be condemned, as religion forbids them. S. Aug. de C. d. xv. 16. Some Rabbins assert, that such connexions were lawful till the time of Moses. But S. Epiphanius (hæc. 33.) maintains, they had been condemned long before. Seneca (S. Aug. de C. d. vi. 10.) acknowledges that such marriages of the pagan gods were not right; ne piæ quidem: and Plato says, they are hateful to God. The Romans punished them with death. Many barbarians do not, however, make any scruple to contract marriage with their children, or with their mothers. S. Jerom c. Jov. ii. 2. Eurip. Hermione. C.

VER. 11. Sister, by thy step-mother.

VER. 12. Father. Nearly related, and springing from the same source. M.

VER. 14. Who . . . affinity. Heb. "she is thy aunt." Some say that, in the old law, a person might marry his niece, but not his aunt; as the order of nature would be inverted if the aunt were subject to her nephew. But others assert that the law was reciprocal, and excluded the marriage of both. The emperor Claudius married his niece Agrippina, and authorized others to do the like. But 13 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister: because she is thy mother's flesh.

14 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's brother: neither shalt thou approach to his wife, who is joined to thee by affinity.

15 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law: because she is thy son's wife, neither shalt thou discover her shame.

16 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife: because it is the nakedness of thy brother.

17 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy wife, and her daughter. Thou shalt not take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to discover her shame: because they are her flesh, and such copulation is incest.

18 Thou shalt not take thy wife's sister for a harlot, to rival her, neither shalt thou discover her nakedness, while she is yet living.

19 Thou shalt not approach to a woman having her flowers, neither shalt thou uncover her nakedness.

20 Thou shalt not lie with thy neighbour's wife, nor be defiled with mingling of seed.

21 ^bThou shalt not give any of thy seed to be consecrated to the idol Moloch, nor defile the name of thy God: I am the Lord.

only one imitated him at Rome; (Sueton.) though Tacitus (An. xii.) says, other nations did it with solemnity, as they had no law to the contrary. Aliis gentibus solennia, &c. C.

VER. 16. Brother; though she may be even divorced from him. S. Aug. q. 61. If the brother were dead without offspring, the next relation was bound to marry her; (Deut. xxv. 5.) and the kinsman of Booz was accounted infamous for neglecting this duty. Ruth iv. 6.

VER. 17. Daughter, together, or successively; even if she were the child of another husband.—Incest. Heb. "a crime." Aquila, "an abomination." Sept. "an impicity."

VER. 18. Rival her, (in pellicatum). Heb. Chal. "to trouble her." After the death of one sister, it seems, another might be taken. Jacob had two at once. Some think that polygamy is here forbidden. But the law seems to have tolerated it; and only condemns many, or too great a number, with respect to the king. Deut. xvii. 17. The impediments specified in this chapter, may be comprised in these four verses.

*Nata, soror, neptis, matertera, fratris & uxor,
Et patris conjux, mater, privigna, noverca,
Uxorisque soror, privigni nata, nunnusque,
Atque soror patris, conjungi lege velantur.* C.

VER. 19. Thou, &c. The refractory were to be slain. C. xx. 18. It was thought that the infant would be in danger; and hence the Jews punished with death the man whose child was born lame. S. Augustine (q. 64.) believes that this law is still in force; and some accuse the person who neglects it, as guilty of a venial sin. Bonfrere.

VER. 20. Wife. This crime is to be punished like the rest, v. 29.

VER. 21. Consecrated. Heb. "to pass through the fire to Moloch." Sept. "to serve the ruler." Syr. "to marry strange women;" as also C. xx. 2. One of the sons of Achan was offered to this idol of the Ammonites; and yet, perhaps, succeeded his father; (4 K. xvi. 3. xvi. 1.) which shews that the children were not always burnt to death, but only lustrated, or made to pass over or between two fires. Yet many assert, that the children were frequently consumed in the flames, and God condemns the cruel parents to be punished with death. C. xx. 2. The brazen idol was heated red hot, and the unhappy victim was placed in its arms, or the priests dragged the child over or between the fires. The surrounding nations delighted in human victims. The Carthaginians offered them till the time of Iphierates. Adrian abolished several such cruel customs among the Greeks. See Porphyry, de Abst. ii. Jerem. vii. 31.—God; by causing any to suppose that he is cruel, like the idols. We must mention his name with the utmost respect. "The mouth, which utters the sacred name of God, ought never to pronounce a shameful word." Philo de 10. præc. Some think, that the idolaters honoured their god by committing an abominable action in his presence. See Malvenda. But most people understand that human sacrifices are here forbidden. C.—The nations of Carolina very lately observed the same custom as the ancient idolaters, in sacrificing their children to the devil, by burning them to death in a brazen statue. Vives in Civ. Dic. vii. 19. Moloch was represented as a king, in all his ornaments, with the head of a calf. He was, perhaps, the idol adored by other nations, under the name of Saturn, who devoured his own children. Bonfrere. T.

22 Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with woman-kind, because it is an abomination.

23 Thou shalt not copulate with any beast, neither shalt thou be defiled with it. *A woman shall not lie down to a beast, nor copulate with it: because it is a heinous crime.

24 Defile not yourselves with any of these things, with which all the nations have been defiled, which I will cast out before you,

25 And with which the land is defiled: the abominations of which I will visit, that it may vomit out its inhabitants.

26 Keep ye my ordinances and my judgments, and do not any of these abominations: neither any of your own nation, nor any stranger that sojourneth among you.

27 For all these detestable things, the inhabitants of the land have done that were before you, and have defiled it.

28 Beware then lest in like manner, it vomit you also out, if you do the like things, as it vomited out the nation that was before you.

29 Every soul that shall commit any of these abominations, shall perish from the midst of his people.

30 Keep my commandments. Do not the things which they have done, that have been before you and be not defiled therein. I am the Lord your God.

CHAP. XIX.

Divers ordinances, partly moral, partly ceremonial or judicial.

THE Lord spoke to Moses, ^bsaying:

2 Speak to all the congregation of the children

* Infra xx. 16.—A. M. 2514.—Supra xi. 44. 1 Peter i. 16.—Infra xxiii. 22.

VER. 22. Abomination, punished so severely in the Sodomites. Gen. xix. Yet, even the philosophers of Greece were not at all ashamed of it. Bardesanes assures us, that the eastern nations punished it with death, and would not allow the guilty the honours of burial. Those beyond the Euphrates were so shocked at it, that they would kill themselves if they were only accused of such a crime. Ap. Eus. præp. vi. 16.

VER. 23. Crime. Heb. "confusion." The Egyptians did so with goats, as part of their religion. See C. xx. 16. and An. Univ. Hist. We need not, however, infer from this law, that the crime was common among the Jews, as Voltaire would insinuate. H.—Nothing but monsters can proceed from such wickedness. M.

VER. 24. Vomited. Moses speaks of what would shortly happen, as if it had already come to pass, which is familiar with the prophets. C.—He represents the earth as sick and disgusted with the crimes of its inhabitants, in the same manner as the Book of Wisdom (v. 23), says, the water of the sea shall rage (or foam, excoindescet) against them. The strong expression used by Moses, shews to what a length the Chanaanites had carried their abominations; so that God, justly irritated, orders them all to be exterminated.

VER. 29. People. Heb. hammam. The same temporal punishment is inflicted upon all the aforesaid crimes, though they were not all equally grievous. The smallest of them deserved to be treated with such severity, to prevent the spreading of such contagious vices. H.—The regulations respecting marriage, were not immutable, or all determined by the law of nature, which admits of no dispensation. Only those relations in a right line, and the first in the collateral line, can be esteemed of this description. D.—If Protestants maintain, that all these regulations of Moses are part of the natural law, and bind Christians, they must also allow that a person must marry the widow of a deceased brother, if he has left no children. Deut. xxv. God would never have established this general rule for his people, if it were in opposition to the natural law; which is clear and obvious to all people by the light of reason, according to Aristotle. Polit. ii. Neither would so many holy men have violated this law without reproof, if it had prohibited the marriages of two sisters, of aunts, &c. See Gen. xxix. Exod. vi. 20. God never dispensed in the right line; (1 Cor. v. 1,) and such relations, or even people in the first collateral degree of consanguinity, marrying, are punished with death. C. xx. Whereas those in the second degree, or in the first of affinity, undergo a smaller punishment; which shews that the transgression, in both cases, is not against the law of nature. No man ever undertook to dispense with the marriage of brothers and sisters; though Beza lays this to the charge of Pope Martin V. But the person alluded to, only obtained leave to retain the sister of her whom he had privately dishonoured, when his marriage could not be dissolved without great scandal. S. Antonin. 3. p. tit. i. 11. As, therefore, some of these impediments were introduced by the positive ceremonial law of the Jews, of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: * Be ye holy, because I, the Lord your God, am holy.

3 Let every one fear his father and his mother. Keep my sabbaths. I am the Lord your God.

4 Turn ye not to idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods. I am the Lord your God.

5 If ye offer in sacrifice a peace-offering to the Lord, that he may be favourable,

6 You shall eat it on the same day it was offered, and the next day: and whatsoever shall be left until the third day, you shall burn with fire.

7 If after two days any man eat thereof, he shall be profane and guilty of impiety:

8 And shall bear his iniquity, because he hath defiled the holy thing of the Lord, and that soul shall perish from among his people.

9 * When thou reapest the corn of thy land, thou shalt not cut down all that is on the face of the earth to the very ground: nor shalt thou gather the ears that remain.

10 Neither shalt thou gather the bunches and grapes that fall down in thy vineyard, but shalt leave them to the poor and the strangers to take. I am the Lord your God.

11 You shall not steal. You shall not lie, neither shall any man deceive his neighbour.

12 * Thou shalt not swear falsely by my name, nor profane the name of thy God. I am the Lord.

which was abrogated by Jesus Christ, they have no other force at present than what they derive from the authority of Christian republics, which have adopted some and changed others, appointing, in some countries, death for the punishment of theft, and not of adultery, though the old law enjoined the reverse. See C. xx. 10, and Gen. xxxviii. 24. Ex. xxii. 1. The Church may, therefore, surely dispense with those laws which she has enacted. W. Trid. Sess. xxiv. 3.—She has indeed restricted marriage between relations to the fourth degree included, both of consanguinity and of affinity. See the C. of Lateran, under Inn. III. But she will not allow people to marry their aunts, brothers' widows, or sisters of their deceased wife, as the Jews do. T.

CHAP. XIX. VER. 3. Sabbaths. Both those which occur every week, and extraordinary ones, v. 30.

VER. 4. Idols. Heb. "vain things." C.—Molten, or any other sort of workmanship. M.

VER. 7. Profane. Heb. "it shall be defiled." Sept. "improper for sacrifice." Aquila, "It shall be rejected." C.—So that the person who had offered it, shall become more guilty. M.

VER. 9. Ground. Heb. and Sept. "the extremity of thy field." The Rabbins say, a sixtieth part of all the products of the earth, was to be left for the poor. Seld. Jur. vi. 6. Thus God teaches his people to exercise themselves in the acts of mercy. D.

VER. 10. Strangers. Sept. and Syr. "proselytes," who might dwell in the country. As the soil did not belong to them, great compassion was requisite: otherwise they must have perished, or become slaves.—Lord; the sole proprietor. C.

VER. 11. Lie. "When no injury is done to another, it is a great question whether a lie can ever be justified. The case would perhaps be easily decided, if we considered the commandments alone, and not the examples," of those holy men who seem to have sometimes thought it lawful. S. Aug. q. 68. But is it not better to allow that these were under an inculpable mistake, than to defend one fault, because it is not attended with the guilt of another, by hurting others? Even lies of jest and of excuse, are contrary to the gravity and open-dealing of a Christian; and God never speaks of lying without marks of disapprobation. H.—Heb. "you shall not deny, or refuse" to restore, what has been entrusted to you; (Grotius) "nor deal falsely, or extenuate yourselves," pretending that you cannot give alms. Oleaster.

VER. 12. Profane. No greater indignity can be offered to God, than to solicit Him, as it were, to assist us in doing evil, by attesting falsehood. Philo.

VER. 13. Morning. Pay what is due to the labourer, immediately, if he desires it. H.—It was customary among the Jews to pay their workmen in the evening. Matt. xx. 8.

stumbling-block before the blind: but thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, because I am the Lord.

15 Thou shalt not do that which is unjust, nor judge unjustly. *Respect not the person of the poor, nor honour the countenance of the mighty. But judge thy neighbour according to justice.

16 Thou shalt not be a detractor nor a whisperer among people. Thou shalt not stand against the blood of thy neighbour. I am the Lord.

17 ^bThou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart,^c but reprove him openly, lest thou incur sin through him.

18 Seek not revenge, nor be mindful of the injury of thy citizens. ^dThou shalt love thy friend as thyself. I am the Lord.

19 Keep ye my laws. Thou shalt not make thy cattle to gender with beasts of any other kind. Thou shalt not sow thy field with different seeds. Thou shalt not wear a garment that is woven of two sorts.

20 If a man carnally lie with a woman that is a bond-servant and marriageable, and yet not redeemed with a price, nor made free: they both shall be scourged, and as these defects are generally found in the same person. Nothing can be more base, than to attack those who are unable to defend themselves. Solon forbids any one "to speak ill of the dead," though he may receive an injury from his children. Those who undermine and ruin the reputation of the absent, are no less to be condemned.

VER. 16. Detractor, whisperer. Heb. rakil, stands for both these terms. Some translate a parasite, a merchant, vilifying the goods of others to enhance the price of his own; or a spy, seeking to discover and laugh at others' faults.—Neighbour; accusing him wrongfully, to the danger of his life; or lying in wait for him like an assassin. But strive rather to rescue those who are attacked. Those who neglect this duty, are responsible for the consequences, according to the Jews, (Seld. Jur. iv. 3.) and the laws of the Egyptians. Diodor. i.

VER. 17. Openly, is not in the Heb. or other versions. Instead of bearing malice at the heart, we are authorized to demand our right in a legal manner, or to correct in a fraternal manner, the person who may have injured us, lest we incur sin for our neglect, and the offender continue impenitent. Jesus Christ instructs us to do this with as little disturbance as possible. Matt. xviii. 15. Yet public sins must undergo a public correction. 1 Tim. v. 20. S. Aug. ser. 82. Love should regulate our complaints. Id. q. 70.

VER. 18. Revenge, by private authority, or out of passion, which the pagans themselves acknowledged was more becoming a brute than a man, ferre est. Muson. Sen. de ira ii. 32.—Citizens. Heb. "observe or lie not in wait." Sept. "act not with fury against the son of thy people." C.—Heb. notor, means to upbraid when doing a kindness.—Thy friend. Heb. rehaka, may denote thy neighbour, or any one with whom we have any thing to do. Thus God orders us to love strangers as ourselves, (v. 34.) and to help our enemy. Exod. xxiii. 4. The false insinuations of the Jews, are fully exploded by Jesus Christ. Matt. xxii. 39. We must love the offender, but detest the offence. S. Aug. a. Faust. xix. 24. If God required his people to exterminate the Chanaanites, he did not authorize them to entertain any personal animosity against their persons, but they were to act as ministers of his justice. "O Lord, (said Philo very justly) we do not rejoice at the misfortune of our enemy, (Flaccus) having learnt from thy holy laws to compassionate the distress of others. But we thank thee for . . . delivering us from our afflictions." C.

VER. 19. Kind. Mules were therefore either brought from other countries, (3 K. x. 28.) or they were produced by some of the same species, as, good authors assert, is frequently the case in Syria, Cappadocia, &c. Plin. viii. 44. Pineda. T.—Spencer (Leg. ii. 20.) says, without any proof, that this law had a reference to the impure conjunctions of animals, in honour of Venus and of Priapus.—Different seeds, &c. This law tends to recommend simplicity and plain-dealing in all things; and to teach the people not to join any false worship or heresy with the worship of the true God. Ch.—Draw not the yoke with infidels. 2 Cor. vi. Theod. q. 27. These different colours were not in themselves evil, since they were used in the priests' vestments. They insinuate, that we must avoid schisms. W.—The sowing of different seeds tends to impoverish the soil. Plin. xviii. 10. The Egyptians sowed various seeds on a board, covered with fine mould; and, observing which sort was destroyed by the heat of the sun in the dog-days, superstitiously refrained, that year, from sowing any of it, lest it should produce no crop. Palladius.—Sorts. The Rabbins say of linen and wool, as Deut. xxii. 11. They allow other sorts. Josephus (iv. 8.) supposes, that garments of the former description were thus reserved for the priests alone. The Flamen, among the Romans, could not wear a woollen garment sowed with thread, without committing a sin; piaculum erat, says Servius. These precepts were to be literally observed, though they conveyed a moral instruction of the greatest consequence, importing that all unnatural intercourse was to be avoided. Pythagoras conveyed his instructions under similar enigmatical expressions, saying, "we must not stir up the fire with a sword," as Solomon does likewise. Prov. xxx. 15. Eccles. xii. 3. 6. C.

they shall not be put to death, because she was not a free woman.

21 And for his trespass he shall offer a ram to the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the testimony:

22 And the priest shall pray for him, and for his sin, before the Lord, and he shall have mercy on him, and the sin shall be forgiven.

23 When you shall be come into the land, and shall have planted in it fruit-trees, you shall take away the first-fruits of them: the fruit that comes forth shall be unclean to you, neither shall you eat of them.

24 But in the fourth year, all their fruit shall be sanctified, to the praise of the Lord.

25 And in the fifth year you shall eat the fruits thereof, gathering the increase thereof. I am the Lord your God.

26 You shall not eat with blood. You shall not divine nor observe dreams.

27 Nor shall you cut your hair round-wise: nor shave your beard.

28 You shall not make any cuttings in your flesh,

* Eccl. xix. 13. Matt. xviii. 5. Luke xvii. 3.—^d Matt. v. 43. and xxii. 89. Luke vi. 27. Rom. xiii. 9.

VER. 20. Marriageable. Heb. "promised or given in marriage." Sept. "reserved for another . . . she shall," &c. Onkelos and the Arabic version suppose also, that the woman alone was to be scourged with leather thongs; a punishment to which the Samaritan copy condemns only the man. The Rabbins agree with the Sept. Others translate, "there shall be an enquiry made, or they shall be set free, and shall not die."

VER. 22. Pray. Heb. and Sept. "shall atone for him with the ram of the sin-offering, before the Lord, for his sin."

VER. 23. The first-fruits. Præputia, literally their fore-skins: it alludes to circumcision, and signifies that for the first three years the trees were to be as uncircumcised, and their fruit unclean; till the fourth year their increase was sanctified and given to the Lord, that is, to the priests. Ch.—In some countries, people take off the buds to strengthen the tree. C.—The fruit, during the three first years, is not esteemed so good or wholesome; and therefore, it could not with propriety be presented to God. Philo de Creatione.—Unclean. Heb. "three years shall it be as uncircumcised unto you; it shall not be eaten." H.

VER. 24. Lord. It was to be brought to the holy city, and offered with the other tithes, out of which a feast was made for the poor, &c. Joseph. iv. 8. Besides the first-fruits for the priests, and the tithes for the Levites, out of which they again paid tithes to the priests, there was an annual tithe prescribed, (Deut. xii. 12.) to supply a feast for the indigent, &c. at Jerusalem, along with this fruit, and another, every third year, designed for the poor alone, (Deut. xiv. 28.) at the place of each one's abode. T.

VER. 26. Blood. The flesh of any animal. The blood must belong to God. The members of the Sanhedrim eat nothing on the day that a criminal is executed supposing that this is the meaning of the precept. The Sept. read erim, "on the mountains;" and another version has, "on the roof," as if the worship of idols on high places were forbidden.—Divine. Perhaps by means of "serpents," or "plates of brass," as the Heb. ness, may insinuate. These methods were known to the ancients. Horace, Ode iii. 37. Plin. xxx. 2. C.—Dreams. Heb. times. See Gal. iv. 10. H.

VER. 27. Cut your hair, &c. This, and other such like things, of themselves indifferent, were forbidden by God, that they might not imitate the Egyptians or other infidels, who practised these things out of superstition, in honour of their false deities. Ch.—The pagans consecrated locks of hair, and their beard, when it was first cut, to Apollo, the river gods, the hours, Esculapius, &c. Some, at Rome, hung the hair on a tree. T.—The Arabians and Macæ left only a tuft of hair at the top of their head, in imitation of Bacchus. Herod. iii. 8. iv. 175. This tuft is called sissoc by the Sept. who seem to have alluded to the Heb. term tsitsith. See Exod. viii. 3. The ancient scholiast says, this was left in honour of Saturn. It resembled a crown. The same custom was observed by the Syrians, (Lucian) Idumæans, &c. Jer. ix. 25.—Beard. Heb. "the angle, or extremity of your beard." These regulations would seem beneath the attention of a lawgiver. But they were made in opposition to some profane customs of the surrounding nations. The Jews still observe this direction, and leave the beard from the ear to the chin, (where they let it grow pretty long) and also two mustaches, or whiskers, on the top lip. The Egyptian mummies have only the beard on the chin. The eyebrows and other hair of the gods and inhabitants of Egypt, were entirely cut off. In mourning the chin was also shaved. God forbids his people to imitate them. C.—But heretics need not hence infer, that the tonsure of priests and monks is reprehensible. Radulph.—Superstition and affected delicacy in curling, &c. are to be avoided. T.

VER. 28. Dead. Adonis or Osiris; as if you were mourning for them, in which sense the former verse may be explained. At funerals it was customary to cut off the hair. Achilles and his soldiers did so at the death of Patroclus. Homer.—The Persians also cut the manes of their horses, to shew their grief for the loss of Masistius, (Herod. ix. 24.) as Alexander did when Hephaestion died. Plutarch.—The Egyptians, Assyrians, &c. cut their hair on the like occasions, for the dead, neither shall you make in yourselves any figures or marks: I am the Lord.

29 Make not thy daughter a common strumpet, lest the land be defiled, and filled with wickedness.

30 Keep ye my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary. I am the Lord.

31 Go not aside after wizards, neither ask any thing of soothsayers, to be defiled by them: I am the Lord your God.

32 Rise up before the hoary head, and honour the person of the aged man: and fear the Lord thy God. I am the Lord.

33 *If a stranger dwell in your land, and abide among you, do not upbraid him:

34 But let him be among you as one of the same country: and you shall love him as yourselves: for you were strangers in the land of Egypt. I am the Lord your God.

35 Do not any unjust thing in judgment, in rule, in weight, or in measure.

36 Let the balance be just, and the weights equal, the bushel just, and the sextary equal. I am the Lord your God, that brought you out of the land of Egypt.

37 Keep all my precepts, and all my judgments, and do them. I am the Lord.

CHAP. XX.

Divers crimes to be punished with death.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, ^bsaying:

2 Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel: *If any man of the children of Israel, or of the strangers, and the Hebrews did so too; whether they neglected this law, or it was rather designed only to hinder them from joining in a superstitious lamentation for some idol. They also cut their bodies, Gen. i. Jer. xli. 5. The pagans did so, intending thereby to appease the anger of the infernal deities: ut sanguine . . . inferis satisfaciant, (Varro, Servius): or to please the deceased. Plutarch, de consol. Thus Virgil represents Anna, Æn. iv.: Unquibus ora soror fedans & pectora pugnis. The Roman and Athenian laws restrained this cruelty of women towards themselves. But in Persia, the children and servants of great men still make an incision upon their arms, when their father or master dies. The women in Greece also observe a solemn mourning, with loud lamentations, tearing their cheeks and hair, and reciting the memorable actions of the deceased. The Christians and Jews of Syria inflict still more dangerous wounds upon themselves. The latter have always esteemed it lawful to adopt the customs of the nations with whom they lived, provided they were not attended with superstition; which makes us conclude, that what Moses here forbids, was done in honour of some idol.—Marks, made with a hot iron, representing false gods, as if to declare that they would serve them for ever. Philo.—The Assyrians had generally such characters upon their bodies. Philopater ordered the converts from the Jewish religion to be marked with ivy, in honour of Bacchus. 3 Macc. Theodoret (q. 18.) mentions, that the pagans were accustomed to cut their cheeks, and to prick themselves with needles, infusing some black matter, out of respect for the dead, and for demons. Allusion is made to these customs, Apoc. xiii. 16, and Isai. xlix. 15. Christians have sometimes marked their arms with the cross, or name of Jesus. Precep. in Isai. xlv. 5. C.—As S. Jane Frances de Chantal did her breast. Brev. Aug. 21. Nomen pectori insculpsit. S. Paul says, I bear the marks of the Lord Jesus in my body. Gal. vi. 17. The Church historians relate, that S. Francis and S. Catharine received miraculously the prints of his wounds. H.

VER. 29. Strumpet, which was done formerly in honour of idols. "They gave to Venus the prostitutions of their daughters." S. Aug. de C. xviii. 5. "In Cyprus they lead the unmarried women to the sea-shore, in order to acquire a dowry by these means on certain stated days, as a libation to Venus." Justin.—Such things were common in the East. See Lucian de dea Syr. Strabo xvi.—Joel (iii. 8), reproaches the Jews with prostituting their sons and daughters for bread; for there were also effeminate men among them. 3 K. xiv. 24. 4 K. xxiii. 7. See Bar. ult. xlii. Ose. iv. 14. C.

VER. 31. Wizards. Heb. oboth, denotes familiar spirits, (1 K. viii. 7.) which gave answers from the belly or breast, as from a bottle; whence such wizards are called by the Greeks, engastrimythoi; and by Sophoclea, sternomanteis. C.—Soothsayers, are properly those who judge what will happen by inspecting victims. M. Heb. gaddhonim, means connoisseurs, intelligent people, gnostics, or those who pretend that they can penetrate the secrets naturally impenetrable to the mind of man. Sept. epaoidos, "enchanters," who undertake to keep off all misfortunes. "Surely, (says Pliny, xxx. 1.) to learn this art, (of magic) Pythagoras . . . and Plato undertook long voyages by sea, or rather went into banishment. This they extolled at their return; this they kept as a secret. Hanc in arcanis habuere."

that dwell in Israel, give of his seed to the idol Moloch, dying let him die: the people of the land shall stone him.

3 And I will set my face against him: and I will cut him off from the midst of his people, because he hath given of his seed to Moloch, and hath defiled my sanctuary, and profaned my holy name.

4 And if the people of the land neglecting, and as it were little regarding my commandment, let alone the man that hath given of his seed to Moloch, and will not kill him:

5 I will set my face against that man, and his kindred, and will cut off both him and all that consented with him, to commit fornication with Moloch, out of the midst of their people.

6 The soul that shall go aside after magicians and soothsayers, and shall commit fornication with them, I will set my face against that soul, and destroy it out of the midst of its people.

7 *Sanctify yourselves, and be ye holy, because I am the Lord your God.

8 Keep my precepts, and do them. I am the Lord that sanctify you.

9 *He that curseth his father or mother, dying let him die: he hath cursed his father and mother, let his blood be upon him.

10 *If any man commit adultery with the wife of another, and defile his neighbour's wife, let them be put to death, both the adulterer and the adulteress.

11 If a man lie with his stepmother, and discover the nakedness of his father, let them both be put to death: their blood be upon them.

* Exod. xxi. 17. Prov. xx. 20. Matt. xv. 4. Mark vii. 10. † Deut. xxii. 22. John viii. 5.

VER. 32. Aged man. Such are supposed to be possessed of wisdom and experience. The Egyptians and Lacedemonians rose up out of respect to an old man. Herod. ii. 80. The Rabbins pretend that a person ought to rise up when the old man is four cubits distant, provided he be, as he ought, a man of wisdom; for otherwise he is entitled to no honour. But this would be making inferiors judges of their merit. The Chaldees, Philo, &c. comprise those "learned in the law," under the name of old men.

VER. 35. Rule; Heb. "taking dimensions" with a yard, tape, &c.

VER. 36. Weights. Heb. "stones of justice," for stone weights were formerly used. Prov. xvi. 11.—Bushel, &c. Heb. "a just epha, and a just hin." C.

CHAP. XX. VER. 2. Moloch. See C. xviii. 21.

VER. 3. I will thus execute vengeance upon him by the hands of the people; and, in case they neglect it, or the crime be secret, I will surely punish the guilty person, and all who may have consented to his wickedness, v. 5. H.—Face: Chal. "wrath," which manifests itself on the countenance. D.

VER. 4. My commandment: Heb. "If the people hide their face not to see." (C.) or Sept. "look over on purpose, and neglect the man who has given of his seed to the ruler."

VER. 6. Them. To have recourse to them, is to deal with the devil and to commit idolatry. See C. xix. 31.

VER. 8. Sanctify you, and order you to keep at a distance from the impure worship of other nations. H.

VER. 9. Die. The Rabbins say, by being strangled, when nothing farther is added: but if the following addition be made, stoning is understood. But their authority is not of much weight, and is contradicted, v. 2. Stoning was the most usual method of putting to death in the days of Moses, and is commonly meant; or perhaps the judges might determine the mode of execution.—Upon him. He deserves to die. He can blame no other. See Matt. xxvii. 25. C.—For greater infamy, the person to be stoned or hung, was stripped of his clothes. T.—The punishment of lapidation (v. 2.) seems to be designed for the following crimes, as it was for adultery. Deut. xxii. 24. M. John viii. 5.

VER. 10. Adulteress. Philo (de Joseph.) says, whoever discovered a man in the very act, might kill him; and the Roman law allowed the same liberty, impune necato. But God requires a juridical process, and witnesses, as we see in the case of Susanna, (Dan. xiii.) and in that of the woman who was brought to our Saviour. One witness might authorize a person to put his wife away, and if he then retained her, he was esteemed a fool. Prov. xviii. 23. But more witnesses were requisite before she could be put to death. They put their hands on the heads of the guilty, thus taking their blood upon themselves, if they accused them wrongfully. Solon allowed the husband to kill the adulterer. The woman was not permitted to wear any ornaments, or to enter any temple afterwards. If she did, any one might tear her clothes, and beat, but not kill her.

VER. 11. Father. See C. xviii. 8. It is supposed that the father was dead otherwise the punishment would probably be greater than for adultery. The Sam. "with the wife of his father's brother." C.

12 If any man lie with his daughter-in-law, let both die, because they have done a heinous crime: their blood be upon them.

13 If any one lie with a man as with a woman, both have committed an abomination, let them be put to death: their blood be upon them.

14 If any man, after marrying the daughter, marry her mother, he hath done a heinous crime: he shall be burnt alive with them: neither shall so great an abomination remain in the midst of you.

15 He that shall copulate with any beast or cattle, dying let him die: the beast also ye shall kill.

16 *The woman that shall lie under any beast, shall be killed together with the same: their blood be upon them.

17 If any man take his sister, the daughter of his father, or the daughter of his mother, and see her nakedness, and she behold her brother's shame: they have committed a crime: they shall be slain, in the sight of their people, because they have discovered one another's nakedness, and they shall bear their iniquity.

18 If any man lie with a woman in her flowers, and uncover her nakedness, and she open the fountain of her blood, both shall be destroyed out of the midst of their people.

19 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy aunt by thy mother, and of thy aunt by thy father: he that doth this, hath uncovered the shame of his own flesh, both shall bear their iniquity.

20 If any man lie with the wife of his uncle by the father, or of his uncle by the mother, and uncover the shame of his near akin, both shall bear their sin: they shall die without children.

21 He that marrieth his brother's wife, doth an un-

VER. 12. Crime. Heb. lebel, "confusion," the same term which is used in speaking of bestiality, (C. xvii. 23,) though the latter crime be more enormous. H.

VER. 14. Alive, is not in the original; but must be understood. The Rabbins say melted lead was to be poured down the throats of the guilty. The words of Moses seem rather to refer to external fire. C.—With them, if they both gave their consent to the crime. M.

VER. 15. The beast also ye shall kill. The killing of the beast was for the greater horror of the crime, and to prevent the remembrance of such abomination. Ch.—The beast was to be killed with clubs; the man was stoned to death. Jonathan.

VER. 16. Them. This monstrous abomination, teras, as Herodotus, an eye-witness, calls it, was not unknown to the Egyptians. Gunaiki tragos enisgeto; (11 ii. 44.) nor to other nations: Apud. Met. 10.

VER. 17. A crime. Heb. chessed, commonly signifies an act of piety or goodness, as if Moses intended to insinuate that such marriages were at first lawful. Thal-mud. Sel. Jur. v. 8. But a softer term is used to denote a great impiety, as the Hebrews say to bless, when they mean to curse, or to blaspheme; (C.) and the Greeks call the furies Eumenides, or "the good-natured."—One another's. Heb. "He hath uncovered his sister's," &c. Whether they saw what was indecent or not, if they admitted of any unlawful commerce, they were to be stoned to death. H.

VER. 18. People, if the action become public; otherwise the man may be purified. C. xv. 24. This intemperance was by a positive law declared a mortal offence in the Jews, though in itself it might be venial. Sanchez ix. 21. The text shews that the woman here gives her consent.—And she open. Hence she deserves to die, for exposing herself and children to great danger. H.

VER. 19. Kins, or relation. M.

VER. 20. Children. The Sadducees read, "they shall die naked." The present Heb. has simply "they shall be without children;" their offspring shall be illegitimate. S. Aug. q. 76. God will not bless their marriage. "Such we know can have no children." S. Greg. q. 6. S. Aug. Apost. Anglorum. The guilty shall be slain without delay. Grot. C.

VER. 24. Honey. Most fertile and delicious. M.

VER. 26. Mine. This is the reason of these different prescriptions, that they may know the dignity to which they have been raised, and may avoid the manners of the profane. C.

VER. 27. Spirit. Heb. oh, means also a bottle. See C. xix. 31. If those lawful thing, he hath uncovered his brother's nakedness: they shall be without children.

22 Keep my laws, and my judgments, and do them; lest the land, into which you are to enter to dwell therein, vomit you also out.

23 Walk not after the laws of the nations, which I will cast out before you; for they have done all these things, and therefore I abhorred them.

24 But to you I say: Possess their land, which I will give you for an inheritance, a land flowing with milk and honey. I am the Lord your God, who have separated you from other people.

25 Therefore do you also separate the clean beast from the unclean, and the clean fowl from the unclean: defile not your souls with beasts, or birds, or any things that move on the earth, and which I have shewn you to be unclean.

26 *You shall be holy unto me, because I the Lord am holy, and I have separated you from other people, that you should be mine.

27 *A man, or woman, in whom there is a pythonical or divining spirit, dying let them die: they shall stone them: their blood be upon them.

CHAP. XXI.

Ordinances relating to the priests.

THE Lord said also to Moses: "Speak to the priests, the sons of Aaron, and thou shalt say to them: Let not a priest incur an uncleanness at the death of his citizens:

2 But only for his kin, such as are near in blood, that is to say, for his father and for his mother, and for his son, and for his daughter, for his brother also,

3 And for a maiden sister, who hath had no husband.

4 But not even for the prince of his people, shall he do any thing that may make him unclean.

who consult such people be guilty, the authors of the delusion deserve death still more. H.—The spirit of python is no other than the spirit of the devil, or of Apollo, who was called Pythius, on account of his having slain the serpent python. His oracles were in great request, as he was supposed to know the secrets of futurity. C.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. An uncleanness; viz. such as was contracted in laying out the dead body, or touching it; or in going into the house, or assisting at the funeral, &c. Ch.—At the death. Heb. "for a soul;" by which name the carcass is here denoted, because it had once been ruled by the soul. S. Aug. q. 81. This law related only to the family of Aaron, when no absolute necessity or near relationship required their attendance. When such offices of charity should be deemed defiling, it is not easy to say. But the ancients generally looked upon them in this light. C. x. 6. Porphyrius enquired of Anebo, why the holy inspector touched not the dead, since in all sacred transactions, the death of animals generally intervenes. We know not the answer of this pretended prophet of Egypt; and Jamblicus confesses, that he cannot resolve the difficulty. The Romans placed a branch of cypress before the door where a corpse was lying, lest any priest might see it unthinkingly, and be defiled. Servius. "At their return from a funeral they sprinkled themselves with water, and passed over fire." Festus. The Rabbins say, that no one could be buried in Jerusalem, or in the towns of the Levites, on account of the sanctity of those places, and for fear lest the priests might thus contract some uncleanness. C.—To account for all these regulations, we only need to observe that such was the will of God; and here it may surely be said, stat pro ratione voluntas. He might thus intend to exercise their obedience; to keep their minds from being too much depressed by the sight of the dead, and to remind us all that we ought carefully to avoid sin, which kills the soul, and renders us really unclean before God. H.

VER. 3. Sister, of the same parents. Vatable.—Husband; for if she have, he ought to bury his wife, and to mourn for her. To be deprived of these advantages, was then esteemed a great misfortune.

VER. 4. Prince. Heb. "Let not the prince (of the priests, Act. xxiii. 5,) render himself unclean," by attending the funerals of any of the people; or, "let not the husband," &c. He may be allowed to attend his wife to the grave: or, as others more probably assert, even this is not permitted. She is not one of the persons privileged, v. 2, and Ecce. xlv. 25. Ezechiel (xxiv. 16,) receives a command not to bewail the death of his wife. The Romans thought their priests would be defiled, by attending the funerals even of their own wives; and Sylla

5 *Neither shall they shave their head, nor their beard, nor make incisions in their flesh.

6 They shall be holy to their God, and shall not profane his name: for they offer the burnt-offering of the Lord, and the bread of their God, and therefore they shall be holy.

7 *They shall not take to wife a harlot or a vile prostitute, nor one that has been put away from her husband: because they are consecrated to their God,

8 And offer the loaves of proposition. Let them therefore be holy, because I also am holy, the Lord, who sanctify them.

9 If the daughter of a priest be taken in whoredom, and dishonour the name of her father, she shall be burnt with fire.

10 The high priest, that is to say, the priest that is the greatest among his brethren, upon whose head the oil of unction hath been poured, and whose hands have been consecrated for the priesthood, and who hath been vested with the holy vestments, shall not uncover his head, he shall not rend his garments:

11 Nor shall he go in at all to any dead person: not even for his father, or his mother, shall he be defiled.

12 Neither shall he go out of the holy places, lest he defile the sanctuary of the Lord, because the oil of the holy unction of his God is upon him. I am the Lord.

13 *He shall take a virgin unto his wife:

14 But a widow, or one that is divorced or defiled, or a harlot, he shall not take, but a maid of his own people:

15 He shall not mingle the stock of his kindred with the common people of his nation: for I am the Lord who sanctify him.

16 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

going to dedicate a temple to Hercules, sent Metella a bill of divorce, and ordered her to be removed from his house, when she was just expiring. Plutarch.

VER. 5. Flesh. This would indicate an impotent grief, and want of patience. H.—They were not allowed to put on the usual signs of mourning, as the common people were, provided they did it not in honour of an idol. C. xix. 27.

VER. 7. Vile, (v. 14,) defiled, (sordidam). Heb. chalala, "a profane woman," (Pagnin) or one of ill-fame; as captives, inn-keepers, are generally esteemed. Zonc, means a common prostitute. Joseph. iii. 3. None of these were fit matches for the priests.

VER. 8. And offer. Heb. addresses this to Moses. "Thou shalt sanctify him, therefore, because he offereth the bread of thy God."

VER. 9. Fire. Provided she be betrothed, and still in her father's house; so that the infamy fall upon him. Jonathan.—For if she be with her husband, she must undergo the usual punishment of stoning. Other young women received no corporal chastisement for simple fornication: the man was bound to marry them, if the father consented; and, at any rate, he was forced to give them a dowry. Ex. xxii. 16. C.—But if the women pretended falsely that they were virgins, they were stoned. Deut. xxii. 20.

VER. 10. Head. Sept. "by taking off his cidaris, or tiara." He shall not shave his head. C. x. 6.—Garments, at funerals, nor the sacred vestments at all. C.

VER. 12. Places. This is to be understood in the same sense. He must not leave his sacred functions to attend any corpse whatever. Having the honour of representing God, and being his first minister upon earth, the utmost purity is required of him. Inferior priests may mourn on some occasions; and the Levites are not distinguished, in this respect, from the people; to shew that God requires sanctity in his officers, proportionate to their exaltation.—Oil. Heb. "He is the Nozor; or the crown of the anointing oil," &c. Joseph has the title of Nazir, (Gen. xlix. 26,) which is borne by the prime ministers of the Eastern kings. Such is the high priest in the temple. Let Christian priests hence learn what sanctity will be required of them. But why is the pontiff forbidden to bury his father, since he obtains that dignity after his decease. S. Augustine (q. 83,) answers, that he was to be consecrated immediately after, that he might offer incense. Another might, however, perform that office. On some occasions, the high priest was deposed, or the dignity transferred to another family. Infirmitates might also hinder him from performing the duty. C.—Priests must be detached, as much as possible, from all things which might divert them from their sacred offices. The greatest holiness is required of those who receive the body of Jesus Christ. D.

17 Say to Aaron: Whosoever of thy seed throughout their families, hath a blemish, he shall not offer bread to his God,

18 Neither shall he approach to minister to him: If he be blind, if he be lame, if he have a little, or a great, or a crooked nose,

19 If his foot, or if his hand be broken,

20 If he be crook-backed, or blear-eyed, or have a pearl in his eye, or a continual scab, or a dry scurf in his body, or a rupture:

21 Whosoever of the seed of Aaron the priest hath a blemish, he shall not approach to offer sacrifices to the Lord, nor bread to his God.

22 He shall eat nevertheless of the loaves that are offered in the sanctuary, 23 Yet so that he enter not within the veil, nor approach to the altar, because he hath a blemish, and he must not defile my sanctuary. I am the Lord who sanctify them.

24 Moses therefore spoke to Aaron, and to his sons, and to all Israel, all the things that had been commanded him.

CHAP. XXII.

Who may eat the holy things: and what things may be offered.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Speak to Aaron and to his sons, that they beware of those things that are consecrated of the children of Israel, and defile not the name of the things sanctified to me, which they offer. I am the Lord.

3 Say to them, and to their posterity: Every man of your race, that approacheth to those things that are consecrated, and which the children of Israel have offered to the Lord, in whom there is uncleanness, shall perish before the Lord. I am the Lord.

c Ezec. xlv. 22.—d A. M. 2514.

VER. 13. Wife. Josephus says he could not divorce her. The Rabbins allow him only one wife at a time. It is said that Joiada had two. But that might be successively; and it is not certain that he was the high priest; (2 Par. xxiv. 3. C.) though he has that title in the Vulg. C. xxii. 11, ibid. H.—His wife must be an Israelite. The Sept. intimates, "of his own race." But this is denied by others. He could not marry his brother's widow, (Selden) nor a girl under twelve and a half. "The Egyptian priests marry only one, while others have as many wives as they please." Diod. i. C.

VER. 14. Widow. Other priests might marry the widows of their fellow-priests. Ezec. xlv. 22.

VER. 15. Nation. The wife of the high priest must be of noble birth, that he may speak to kings and princes with more authority. M.—Heb. "he shall not defile his race," &c. by marrying one of another nation, or contrary to law. If he do, the children shall have no share in the priesthood.

VER. 17. A blemish. These corporal defects or deformities, which disqualified the priests from officiating in the old law, were figures of the vices which priests are to beware of in the new law. S. Gregory, Cura pastorum. Ch.—The Rabbins reckon 140 blemishes on which the Sanhedrim had to pass sentence. They also require in the high priest superior beauty, strength, riches, and wisdom.

VER. 18. Nose. Heb. "a flat nose, or any thing superfluous." Sept. "the nose, (hand) or ears slit." This verse rejects those whose members are too large, as the next does those who have them too small.

VER. 20. Eyed. Heb. dak, may denote "a dwarf." Syriac, or something very thin. Ex. xvi. 14.—Pearl, (albuginem) whiteness.—Rupture, (herniosus) One perhaps troubled with the stone, (M.) whose testicles have been bruised, (Onkelos) or who has only one. Sept. and Syriac.

VER. 23. Veil, which separates the sanctuary from the court. The Athenians chose the most handsome man to be the king of ceremonies; and the people of Eli appointed such only to carry the sacred vessels, &c. Athenaeus xiii. 2. C.

CHAP. XXII. VER. 2. Offer. He does not speak of such things as fell to the share of the priests; (M.) but orders them to behave with great reverence when they perform their sacred offices, lest others should take occasion to treat the name of God and holy things with disrespect. Heb. and Sept. "let them not profane my holy name, which they are bound to sanctify; or in what they consecrate to me." Such things must not be used for ordinary purposes. S. Bas. ser. de bapt. ii. 2. and 3.

VER. 3. Approacheth, &c. This is to give us to understand, with what purity of soul we are to approach to the blessed sacrament, of which these meats that had been offered in sacrifice were a figure. Ch.—Such as were unclean, either

4 The man of the seed of Aaron, that is a leper, or that suffereth a running of the seed, shall not eat of those things that are sanctified to me, until he be healed. He that toucheth any thing unclean by occasion of the dead, and he whose seed goeth from him as in generation,

5 And he that toucheth a creeping thing, or any unclean thing, the touching of which is defiling,

6 Shall be unclean until the evening, and shall not eat those things that are sanctified: but when he hath washed his flesh with water,

7 And the sun is down, then being purified, he shall eat of the sanctified things, because it is his meat.

8 "That which dieth of itself, and that which was taken by a beast, they shall not eat, nor be defiled therewith. I am the Lord.

9 Let them keep my precepts, that they may not fall into sin, and die in the sanctuary, when they shall have defiled it. I am the Lord who sanctify them.

10 No stranger shall eat of the sanctified things: a sojourner of the priest's, or a hired servant, shall not eat of them.

11 But he whom the priest hath bought, and he that is his servant, born in his house, these shall eat of them.

12 If the daughter of a priest be married to any of the people, she shall not eat of those things that are sanctified, nor of the first-fruits.

13 But if she be a widow, or divorced, and having no children return to her father's house, she shall eat of her father's meats, as she was wont to do when she was a maid; no stranger hath leave to eat of them.

14 He that eateth of the sanctified things through ignorance, shall add the fifth part with that which he ate, and shall give it to the priest into the sanctuary.

15 And they shall not profane the sanctified things of the children of Israel, which they offer to the Lord;

16 Lest perhaps they bear the iniquity of their trespass, when they shall have eaten the sanctified things. I am the Lord who sanctify them.

17 And the Lord spoke to Moses saying:

18 Speak to Aaron, and to his sons, and to all the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: The man of the house of Israel, and of the strangers who dwell with you, that offereth his oblation, either paying his vows, or offering of his own accord, whatsoever it be which he presenteth for a holocaust of the Lord, 19 To be offered by you, it shall be a male without blemish, of the beeves, or of the sheep, or of the goats.

20 If it have a blemish, you shall not offer it, neither shall it be acceptable.

21 "The man that offereth a victim of peace-offerings to the Lord, either paying his vows, or offering of his own accord, whether of beeves or of sheep, shall offer it without blemish that it may be acceptable: there shall be no blemish in it.

22 If it be blind, or broken, or have a scar or blisters, or a scab, or a dry scurf: you shall not offer them to the Lord, nor burn any thing of them upon the Lord's altar.

23 An ox or a sheep, that hath the ear and the tail cut off, thou mayst offer voluntarily: but a vow may not be paid with them.

24 You shall not offer to the Lord any beast that hath the testicles bruised or crushed, or cut and taken away: neither shall you do any such thing in your land.

25 You shall not offer bread to your God, from the hand of a stranger, nor any other thing that he would give: because they are all corrupted, and defiled: you shall not receive them.

26 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

27 When a bullock, or a sheep, or a goat, is brought forth, they shall be seven days under the udder of their dam: but the eighth day, and thenceforth, they may be offered to the Lord.

fasted till the evening, or ate unconsecrated meats till they were purified.—Perish. The Rabbins say, by the hands of the other priests. The judges could only condemn him to be whipped. If his crime were secret, the punishment was left to God. Seld. syn. ii. 1.

VER. 4. And he, &c. Hence it is plain, even the Jewish priests were bound to observe continence during the time of their ministry. C.—For the same reason, the priests of the new law, who may be called at any time to perform their more sacred functions, engage voluntarily in the state of perpetual celibacy. H.

VER. 5. Or any. Heb. "or a man who may contaminate," as lepers, &c. M.

VER. 8. That. See C. xvii. 15.

VER. 9. In the sanctuary, is not found in Heb. which is difficult to explain. "They shall observe my precepts, (or "watches," entering upon the ministry at 17. Josep. M.) and not bear sin for it, and die in it, because they have profaned it," which it may be understood either of the consecrated food, (v. 7.) or of the sanctuary. C.

VER. 10. Sojourner. "Guest," or friend. Syriac. None but priests could taste this meat, except they were going to remain in the family for ever. Hence servants and slaves of the Jewish nation, who would one day regain their liberty, are excluded.

VER. 13. Children. If she had any, she remained with them. Philo. Monur. 2.

VER. 14. He. A layman, who, through mistake, ate of any of the tithes, &c. was obliged to give the capital, and a fifth part besides, with a sacrifice, mentioned C. v. 15.—Sanctuary. Heb. and Sept. "He shall give to the priest the holy thing." But if he ate it on purpose, he was to be slain. Mum. xv. 30.

VER. 15. They; the common people shall not profane, by touching them afterwards, or by retaining any part. C.—The priests shall answer for the profanation, if it be committed through their neglect. H.

VER. 18. Strangers: proselytes of justice, or converts to the Jewish religion. See v. 25.

VER. 19. Without blemish. To teach us to aim at perfection in all our offerings and performances.

VER. 22. Scar. Sept. "If its tongue be cut out, or slit," which was a blemish among the heathens. Servius in Æn. vi.; lectas de more bidentes. They also required the victims to be perfect. The Egyptians had officers called Sealers, who were directed by many books how to choose the proper victims. The Hebrew priests had to examine such as were offered to them, with the utmost nicety. See the Misna of Babylon. The idea of God's perfection, has taught all nations to present to Him nothing but what is perfect, particularly when they offer victims.

VER. 23. Ear . . cut. Heb. saruang, which is translated a crooked nose. C. xxi. 18. The Sept. and Syriac agree here with the Vulg.: but the moderns generally adopt the interpretation of the Rabbins, who say the word is applied to those animals whose double members, feet, ears, &c. are disproportionately long; as kohut, means too short. Bochart. C.—Voluntarily, for the use of the priests, but not for any sacrifice, v. 21. D.

VER. 24. Bruised. Heb. does not specify what part, no more than the Syr. or Arab. versions; but the Sept., Chal., Rabbins, and most commentators agree with us.—Do any, &c. (faciatis.) You shall not sacrifice (Syriac) any thing that is rendered unfit to propagate its kind: neither shall you reduce either man or beast to that condition. Josephus c. App. ii. Rabbins.

VER. 25. Bread, which always accompanies the sacrifices for sin. Holocausts might be offered by the Gentiles, 2 Mac. iii. 3. 1 Eed. vi. 9. Josep. Ant. xviii. 7. Seld. Jur. iii. 4. 7.—Them. To reconcile this with v. 18, we must understand because in the sense of in as much as; they are all corrupted, when contrary to these regulations. The strangers shall not be allowed to offer any blemished victim. Heb. "Neither from the hand of a stranger shall you offer the bread (or victims) of your God of any of these; because . . blemishes are in them: they shall not be accepted (by God) for you (or them)." The Chal. and other versions explain it in the same sense. Presents of gold, &c. were accepted, and kept in the temple. The family of Augustus shewed their generosity in this respect. Philo Legat. C.—Strangers, or pagans, could not offer victims, but they might give money to purchase them. T.

VER. 27. Lord. In this and the following verses, we are taught a lesson of humanity. Tert.—The Romans did not offer sheep or goats till they were eight days old: though the Jews were at liberty to sacrifice them after that term, they generally waited till they were thirty days old. C.

28 Whether it be a cow, or a sheep, they shall not be sacrificed the same day with their young ones.

29 If you immolate a victim for thanksgiving to the Lord, that he may be favourable, 30 You shall eat it the same day, there shall not any of it remain until the morning of the next day. I am the Lord.

31 Keep my commandments, and do them. I am the Lord.

32 Profane not my holy name, that I may be sanctified in the midst of the children of Israel. I am the Lord who sanctify you, 13 And who brought you out of the land of Egypt, that I might be your God: I am the Lord.

CHAP. XXIII.

Holy-days to be kept.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, *saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: These are the feasts of the Lord, which you shall call holy.

3 Six days shall ye do work: the seventh day, because it is the rest of the sabbath, shall be called holy. You shall do no work on that day: it is the sabbath of the Lord in all your habitations.

4 These also are the holy-days of the Lord, which you must celebrate in their seasons.

5 ^bThe first month, the fourteenth day of the month at evening, is the Phase of the Lord:

6 And the fifteenth day of the same month, is the solemnity of the unleavened bread of the Lord. Seven days shall you eat unleavened bread.

7 The first day shall be most solemn unto you, and holy: you shall do no servile work therein:

8 But you shall offer sacrifice in fire to the Lord seven days. And the seventh day shall be more solemn, and more holy: and you shall do no servile work therein.

9 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

10 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: When you shall have entered into the land which I will give you, and shall reap your corn, you shall bring sheaves of ears, the first-fruits of your harvest, to the priest:

11 Who shall lift up the sheaf before the Lord, the next day after the sabbath, that it may be acceptable for you, and shall sanctify it.

12 And on the same day that the sheaf is consecrated, a lamb without blemish, of the first year, shall be killed for a holocaust of the Lord.

13 And the libations shall be offered with it, two tenths of flour tempered with oil, for a burnt-offering of the Lord, and a most sweet odour: libations also of wine, the fourth part of a hin.

14 You shall not eat either bread, or parched corn, or frumenty of the harvest, until the day that you shall offer thereof to your God. It is a precept for ever throughout your generations, and all your dwellings.

15 ^cYou shall count therefore from the morrow after the sabbath, wherein you offered the sheaf of the first-fruits, seven full weeks,

16 Even unto the morrow after the seventh week be expired, that is to say, fifty days, and so you shall offer a new sacrifice to the Lord.

17 Out of all your dwellings, two loaves of the first-fruits, of two tenths of flour leavened, which you shall bake for the first-fruits of the Lord.

18 And you shall offer with the loaves seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one calf from the herd, and two rams, and they shall be for a holocaust with their libations, for a most sweet odour to the Lord.

* A. M. 2514.—^b Exod. xii. 18. Num. xxviii. 16.

^c Deut. xvi. 9.

CHAP. XXIII. VER. 2. Holy. The Heb. Chal. and Sept. add, "and meet together; or, these are my feasts of assembly." On these days the people were called together, to hear the word of God, &c. M.

VER. 3. Sabbath. Heb. "the rest of rest;" a day in which no unnecessary servile work must be done, no more than on the great holidays, v. 6. 8. H.—Called holy, because it shall be really so: in which sense the word is often used. Isai. ix. 6. &c.—Day; you must not even dress meat, which was also forbidden on the day of expiation.—Lord, on which he ceased from work, and which you must keep in his honour.—Habitations. In the temple, the priests were intent upon sacrificing, which was indeed a material, but not a formal, violation of the sabbath. Matt. xii. 5.

VER. 4. Bread. The obligation of eating none but this sort of bread began at the second evening of the 14th, which was the beginning of the 15th of Nisan. Exod. xii. 6. 12. M.

VER. 8. In fire. Sept. "holocausts," extraordinary ones, besides the daily burnt-offerings. Num. xxviii. 19.—More holy than the five intermediate days, on which servile work was allowed. In this and the former verse, more and most are not specified in the Heb. and Sept. C.

VER. 10. Land of Chanaan, at which time these feasts began to be observed. M. See Lev. ii. 14.—Before the harvest commenced, first-fruits were offered to the Lord. A gomer containing about three pints of barley was given to the priests, by the nation at large, as each individual was not bound to make a particular solemn offering. The judges deputed three men to gather this barley on the evening of the 15th Nisan, where the neighbourhood assembled near Jerusalem. It was gathered by them in three different fields, after having been thrice assured that the sun was set, and that they had leave to reap, in answer to their triple demands on each head. Then they placed the ears in three boxes, which they brought to the court of the sanctuary, and having there ground the barley, and poured a log of oil and a handful of incense upon it, presented it to the priest, who heaving it in the form of a cross, threw as much as he could hold in his hand upon the altar, and kept the rest for himself. Joseph. iii. 10. &c. Private people offered also in kind or in money their first-fruits, or between the 40th and the 60th part of what their land produced. This custom is almost as ancient as the world, (Gen. v. 7.) and many say that it forms a part of natural religion, which all nations have observed. Porphyrius esteems it an impiety to neglect it. He says that the Thoes, living on the borders of Thrace, were in a moment destroyed, because they offered neither sacrifices nor first-fruits. De Abstin. ii. 7. The ancient Romans and Greeks were very punctual in this respect. Plin. xviii. 20. Those officers who collected the first-fruits among the latter were styled Parasites. Most of the festivals among the heathens, occurred at the end of harvest. Aristot. ad Nicom. viii. The Jews might reap their wheat, but they could not taste it, before they had offered the first-fruits, at Pentecost. C. xxiii. 17. Ex. xxiii. 16.—Of ears. Heb. homer, or gomer, "a sheaf," denotes also a measure, which was called an assaron, containing almost three pints.

VER. 11. Sabbath. Onkelos has "the good day," from which the 50 days of Pentecost were counted. C.

VER. 14. Corn, (potentam). Some translate bruised corn, or a sort of cake. See C. ii. 14.—Dwellings, even out of the holy land, which was peculiar to this law. Grotius.

VER. 15. Sabbath. Not the ninth day of the week, but the first day of the Passover; from the morrow of which seven weeks or 49 days were reckoned; and the next day was Pentecost. M.—They began, therefore, to count on the 16th of Nisan, and end on the 6th of the third month Sivan. All the intermediate days took their denomination from this second day of the Passover; so that the next Saturday was called the first sabbath after the second day, in Greek Deutero-proton, the second-first; (Lu. vi. 1.) a term which had puzzled all the interpreters till Jos. Scaliger made this discovery. Emend. vi. The Samaritans count from the day after that sabbath which follows the Passover; so that if the festival fall on Monday, they celebrate Pentecost later than the Jews. See their Letter to Huntington. C.

VER. 16. Sacrifice. Heb. mincha, which relates to the offerings of corn and liquors. Two loaves of wheaten flour leavened, were presented probably by the nation. This festival was instituted in memory of the law being given from Mount Sinai, which was a figure of the law of grace promulgated by the Holy Ghost and by the apostles, on the day of Pentecost. C.

VER. 17. Loaves. The Protestants supply wave loaves, (H.) though their Heb. text has nothing. The Sam. is more correct. Houbigant.

VER. 18. Lambs. More were prescribed. Num. xxviii. 27. Josephus joins all together. B. iii. 10.

19 You shall offer also a buck-goat for sin, and two lambs of the first year, for sacrifices of peace-offerings.

20 And when the priest hath lifted them up with the loaves of the first-fruits before the Lord, they shall fall to his use.

21 And you shall call this day most solemn, and most holy. You shall do no servile work therein. It shall be an everlasting ordinance in all your dwellings and generations.

22 *And when you reap the corn of your land, you shall not cut it to the very ground: neither shall you gather the ears that remain: but you shall leave them for the poor and for the strangers. I am the Lord your God.

23 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

24 ^bSay to the children of Israel: The seventh month, on the first day of the month, you shall keep a sabbath, a memorial, with the sound of trumpets, and it shall be called holy.

25 You shall do no servile work therein, and you shall offer a holocaust to the Lord.

26 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

27 *Upon the tenth day of this seventh month shall be the day of atonement, it shall be most solemn, and shall be called holy: and you shall afflict your souls on that day, and shall offer a holocaust to the Lord.

28 You shall do no servile work in the time of this day: because it is a day of propitiation, that the Lord your God may be merciful unto you.

29 Every soul that is not afflicted on this day, shall perish from among his people:

30 And every soul that shall do any work, the same will I destroy from among his people.

31 You shall do no work therefore on that day: it shall be an everlasting ordinance unto you in all your generations, and dwellings.

* Supra xix. 9.—^b Num. xxix. 1.

VER. 20. Use. None of the peace-offerings were burnt upon the altar, as the bread was leavened. C.

VER. 21. Most holy. Heb. "a holy convocation." H.—It is generally supposed that it had an octave, though the Scripture says nothing of it.

VER. 24. Memorial, or a memorable sabbath. This third great festival sanctified the commencement of the civil year in Tisri, the sabbatical month, according to the ecclesiastical calculation. T. See Num. xxix. 3.—The sound of trumpets, which ushered in the year with great solemnity, reminded the Jews of the approaching fast, v. 27. (Maimon.) and of those terrible sounds which had been heard at Sinai. Theodor. q. 32. The Rabbins say that a ram's horn was used, because Abraham had sacrificed a ram instead of his son. Gen. xxii. 11. Zac. ix. 14. The Jews on this day sound the horn 30 times, feast, and wish one another a happy year. Buxtorf. syn. xix. We know not on what account this festival was instituted. But it was probably ordained in order that the people might learn to thank God for the favours received during the past year, and might beg his blessing on that, upon which they were now entering. C.

VER. 28. Servile is not in the original, or in the other versions, nor in the Vulg. v. 30; whence it is inferred, that this day of atonement was to be kept like the sabbath: so that even meat could not be made ready on it lawfully. C. xvi. 29. C.

VER. 29. Woody. It was difficult for any grown person to be entirely guiltless, amid such a variety of precepts, (M.) which S. Peter says neither they nor their fathers could bear, Act. xv. 10: and S. James (iii.) observes, in many things we all offend. If any proved so happy as to keep without blame, (Lu. i. 6. H.) they were bound, at least, to grieve for the injury done to God by their fellow-members. See Dan. ix. 5. M.

VER. 32. Sabbaths. The Church adopts this custom in her divine office. The Jewish day began and ended with sun set. Ex. xii. 6. C.—No part of the ninth of Tisri belonged to this feast, (v. 27,) which only began at the expiration of it. H.

VER. 34. Seven days, during which the people were bound to rejoice, but not to abstain from servile work; except on the first and eighth day. T.—Tabernacles: Gr. Scenopogia; because during the octave, the Jews lived in tents, or booths, made of branches, &c. v. 42.

VER. 36. Most holy. Heb. "an holy assembly." The great day of the festivity, (148)

32 It is a sabbath of rest, and you shall afflict your souls, beginning on the ninth day of the month: from evening until evening you shall celebrate your sabbaths.

33 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

34 Say to the children of Israel: From the fifteenth day of this same seventh month, shall be kept the feast of tabernacles seven days to the Lord.

35 *The first day shall be called most solemn and most holy: you shall do no servile work therein. And seven days you shall offer holocausts to the Lord.

36 The eighth day also shall be most solemn and most holy, and you shall offer holocausts to the Lord: for it is the day of assembly and congregation: you shall do no servile work therein.

37 These are the feasts of the Lord, which you shall call most solemn and most holy, and shall offer on them oblations to the Lord, holocausts and libations according to the rite of every day.

38 Besides the sabbaths of the Lord, and your gifts, and those things that you shall offer by vow, or which you shall give to the Lord voluntarily.

39 So from the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when you shall have gathered in all the fruits of your land, you shall celebrate the feast of the Lord seven days: on the first day and the eighth shall be a sabbath, that is, a day of rest.

40 And you shall take to you on the first day, the fruits of the fairest tree, and branches of palm trees, and boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook, and you shall rejoice before the Lord your God.

41 And you shall keep the solemnity thereof seven days in the year. It shall be an everlasting ordinance in your generations. In the seventh month shall you celebrate this feast,

* Supra xvi. 29. Num. xxix. 7.—^d John vii. 37.

Jo. vii. 37.—Congregation. Heb. hatsereh, "retention." All were bound to wait till this day was over. In other festivals, it was sufficient if they were present one day. This was the concluding day of the feast of tabernacles. Sept. exodion. Plutarch (Sym. iv. 5.) observes, that this festival greatly resembles that of Bacchus. Ovid (Fast. iii.) speaking of the feast of Anna Perenna, describes it thus:

Sub Jove pars durat, pauci tentoria penunt,

Sub quibus e ramis frondea facta casa est.

Casaubon (on Athen. iv. 9. and v. 5.) mentions other feasts, on which the pagans dwelt under tents. The devil has caused his slaves to imitate most of the holy ceremonies of the true religion. C.

VER. 39. Eight. On the feast of the Passover, the 7th day after the 15th was kept holy, because the 14th, or the Phase, made also a part of the solemnity, v. 5. 8. H.

VER. 40. Fairest tree, branches of the orange or citron tree, laden with blossoms and fruit. T.—Josephus (iii. 10.) says, they took branches of myrtle, willow, and palm trees, on which they fixed oranges. This is the fruit which the Hebrews generally understand to be hereby designated. In the same sense the Arab. and Syriac translate "golden apples."—Thick trees, of any species; though Josephus, &c. restrain it to the myrtle, which was certainly used on this occasion. 2 Esd. viii. 12.—Willows. Sept. adds also, "branches of agnus from the torrent." Perhaps Moses only meant, that these branches should be used in forming the tents; but the Jews hold them in their hands, while they go in solemn procession round the pulpit in their synagogues, during every day of the octave, before breakfast, crying out Ana hosiah na, &c. "Save us we beseech thee, O Lord; we beseech thee, grant us good success." They gave the title of hosannah to those branches; in allusion to which, the children sung in honour of Jesus Christ, Hosanna to the Son of David.—Rejoice; dancing and singing before the altar of holocausts, 2 K. vi. 14. The wisdom of God shines forth, in thus attaching to his worship a carnal people, by intermingling with the most solemn ceremonies some relaxation and pleasure. By calling them together so often in the year, they became also better acquainted with one another, and more in love with their religion and country. The ancient lawgivers entertained the like sentiments. Seneca, Strabo &c. But the pagans generally carried these diversions to excess. C.—In this chapter we find six festivals specified: 1. sabbath; 2. Passover; 3. Pentecost; 4. trumpets; 5. expiation; 6. tabernacles lasting till the octave

42 And you shall dwell in bowers seven days: every one that is of the race of Israel, shall dwell in tabernacles:

43 That your posterity may know, that I made the children of Israel to dwell in tabernacles, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt. I am the Lord your God.

44 And Moses spoke concerning the feasts of the Lord to the children of Israel.

CHAP. XXIV.

The oil for the lamps. The loaves of proposition. The punishment of blasphemy.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Command the children of Israel, that they bring unto thee the finest and clearest oil of olives, to furnish the lamps continually,

3 Without the veil of the testimony in the tabernacle of the covenant. And Aaron shall set them from evening until morning before the Lord, by a perpetual service, and rite in your generations.

4 They shall be set upon the most pure candlestick before the Lord continually.

5 Thou shalt take also fine flour, and shalt bake twelve loaves thereof, two tenths shall be in every loaf:

6 And thou shalt set them six and six, one against another, upon the most clean table before the Lord:

7 And thou shalt put upon them the clearest frankincense, that the bread may be for a memorial of the oblation of the Lord.

8 Every sabbath they shall be changed before the Lord, being received of the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant:

9 And they shall be Aaron's and his sons', that they may eat them in the holy place: because it is most holy of the sacrifices of the Lord, by a perpetual rite.

day of assembly and collection. These three last were celebrated in the 7th month, the 1st of the civil year. There was also a feast on all the new moons. Num. xviii. 11. H.

VER. 42. Days. Tostatus affirms they might pass the nights in their houses; but most people suppose, the Jews spent the whole octave in bowers.

VER. 44. Feasts. In the institution of these feasts, as in the other regulations of Moses, there was something ceremonial, which might be altered, and something moral, which regards even those times when the Jewish religion was to cease. S. Aug. q. 43.—Hence we must conclude, that the obligation of keeping certain days holy, must always remain. But those appointed for the Jews, as they foretold the future Messiah, must be changed, lest otherwise we might seem to confess that he is still to come. Rom. xiv. Gal. iv. Colos. ii. We are not therefore allowed to Judaize obtaining from work on the Jewish sabbath, (C. of Laodicea) as Antichrist will require. S. Greg. ep. xi. 8.—But we must keep Sunday instead, (as even Protestants maintain, though there be no Scripture for it) by authority of tradition, in memory of Christ's resurrection, &c. S. Jerom, ep. ad Hed. ib. S. Aug. de C. xxii. 30. So also we observe the Christian festivals, in honour of our Lord and his saints, instead of those which God appointed for the Jews, either by himself or by his ministers: for we find that some were instituted after the time of Moses, (Est. ix. and 1 Macc. iv.) and these were sanctioned by the observance of Christ himself, It was the feast of the dedication, and Jesus walked in the temple, &c. Jo. x. 22–3. W.

CHAP. XXIV. VER. 2. Command. It is probable that this order was given while Beseleel was working at the tabernacle. C.—The people were to furnish the necessary sacrifices, &c. by the half siele, Ex. xxx. 13, and by voluntary contributions on the three great festivals, on which no one was to appear empty-handed, Ex. xxiii. 15. Some chose to put their contributions towards the temple in the treasury, Lu. xxi. 1.—Oil: Heb. "pure oil of the olive beaten, for light to," &c.

VER. 5. Bake. The family of Caath had to perform this office, 1 Par. ix. 32. xxiii. 29. M.—Incense. Sept. add "salt." Villalpand also places wine on the table. B. iv. 57.—Memorial for the Lord to bless his people, and for them to make their oblations to him as to the living God, from whom all blessings are derived. H.—The incense was burnt instead of the bread, when fresh loaves were placed there. C.

VER. 8. Of the, &c. The Israelites gave a sufficient maintenance to the ministers of religion, out of which these provided the loaves: as S. Jerom testifies, Mal. i.

10 And behold there went out the son of a woman of Israel, whom she had of an Egyptian, among the children of Israel, and fell at words in the camp with a man of Israel.

11 And when he had blasphemed the Name, and had cursed it, he was brought to Moses: (now his mother was called Salumith, the daughter of Dabri, of the tribe of Dan:)

12 And they put him into prison, till they might know what the Lord would command.

13 And the Lord spoke to Moses,

14 Saying: Bring forth the blasphemer without the camp, and let them that heard him, put their hands upon his head, and let all the people stone him.

15 And thou shalt speak to the children of Israel: The man that curseth his God, shall bear his sin:

16 And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, dying let him die: all the multitude shall stone him, whether he be a native or a stranger. He that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, dying let him die.

17 He that striketh and killeth a man, dying let him die.

18 He that killeth a beast, shall make it good, that is to say, shall give beast for beast.

19 He that giveth a blemish to any of his neighbours: as he hath done, so shall it be done to him:

20 Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth shall he restore. What blemish he gave, the like shall he be compelled to suffer.

21 He that striketh a beast, shall render another. He that striketh a man shall be punished.

22 Let there be equal judgment among you, whether he be a stranger or a native that offends: because I am the Lord your God.

• Exod. xxi. 24. Deut. xix. 21. Matt. v. 38.

VER. 10. Egyptian. Many of these came out along with the Hebrews. Exod. xii. 38.

VER. 11. The Name. Some Latin copies add, "of God;" but the best omit it, with the Heb. &c. This is, however, the meaning. C.—The son of Salumith being in a rage, cursed that sacred name; (v. 15,) and, as he perhaps had attempted to vent his fury upon whatever came in his way, God here reiterates the laws against murder, &c. v. 17. The Jews are so much afraid of taking the name of God (Yehovah) in vain, that they have for a long time abstained from pronouncing it at all; (H.) and here they have probably omitted it on purpose. Houbigant. But this seems to border upon superstition, is contrary to the design of God, who revealed that august name, and inserted it very frequently in the holy Bible, and in the very prayer, which the senators have to recite; (Deut. xxi. 8,) and, can any one suppose, that he would not have them pronounce it, even in their solemn devotions? Many of the Rabbins suppose, that blasphemy is not to be punished with death, if any other name of God be used: but others are more reasonable. Our Saviour was not accused by the Jews of transgressing, in this respect, when they condemned him as guilty of blasphemy. Matt. xxvi. 64. The name of God, is often used in the same sense as we use the words majesty, lordship, &c. as being more emphatical, and dignified. C.

VER. 14. Head. To testify, that if they witness falsehood, they are willing to suffer the same punishment; and to beg that God would accept this victim, and not afflict all his people. T.

VER. 15. His God. Heb. Elohai. Philo explains this of idols, as if it were unlawful to speak ill of them, lest we should proceed to do so with respect to the true God. But the prophets, and the most holy personages, had no scruple in speaking contemptuously of the pagan divinities.—His sin, and the punishment of it. C.

VER. 19. Blemish. Heb. mum, denotes any thing by which the body is disfigured or hurt. M.

VER. 20. Breach, or fracture: if he break a bone, the like detriment shall he receive.

VER. 21. Striketh, so as to kill or render useless, percussit, (H.) v. 18.—Punished. Sept. "slain." They omit the first part of this verse.

VER. 22. Stranger. The Jews improperly restrain this law to those nations only which have embraced their religion. God requires that the judges shall not shew more favour to their countrymen than to others who may dwell among them. C.

23 And Moses spoke to the children of Israel: and they brought forth him that had blasphemed, without the camp, and they stoned him. And the children of Israel did as the Lord had commanded Moses.

CHAP. XXV.

The law of the seventh and of the fiftieth year of jubilee.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses* in Mount Sinai, saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: When you shall have entered into the land which I will give you, observe the rest of the sabbath to the Lord.

3 Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and shalt gather the fruits thereof:

4 But in the seventh year there shall be a sabbath to the land, of the resting of the Lord: thou shalt not sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard.

5 What the ground shall bring forth of itself, thou shalt not reap: neither shalt thou gather the grapes of the first-fruits as a vintage: for it is a year of rest to the land:

6 But they shall be unto you for meat, to thee and to thy man-servant, to thy maid-servant and thy hireling, and to the strangers that sojourn with thee:

7 All things that grow shall be meat to thy beasts and to thy cattle.

8 Thou shalt also number to thee seven weeks of years, that is to say, seven times seven, which together make forty-nine years:

9 And thou shalt sound the trumpet in the seventh

* A. M. 2514.

CHAP. XXV. VER. 2. The rest, (sabbathises sabbatum). The land was to enjoy the benefit of rest every seventh year, to remind God's people that he had created the world, and that he still retained dominion over it. (S. Aug. q. 91. 92.) requiring the spontaneous fruits of that year as a tribute, part of which he gave to the poor. In the mean time, all creatures rested from their labours, and the people were taught to have an entire confidence in Providence. C.—This law was given in the desert of Sinai, in the month of Nisan, the second year after the exit: but it did not begin to be in force, till the Hebrews entered into the land of Chanaan. H.

VER. 5. Reap entirely, but only take a part, v. 6.—First-fruits. None shall be this year presented to the Lord. Heb. has the word Nezireka, "Nazareth," alluding to the custom of those who, out of devotion, let their hair grow; as here only the spontaneous fruits of the unpruned vine were to be eaten; they were separated, as the word also means, or "sanctified," (Sept.) being abandoned indifferently for the use of any one that pleased to eat of them, and no longer fenced in by the proprietor, (C.) though he might take the first, or choicest fruit, for his own use, (M.) or at least he might take his share like the rest. T.

VER. 6. They. Heb. and Sept. "The sabbath of the earth shall be meat for you" in common.

VER. 7. Cattle. This last term in Heb. Sept. &c. means "wild beasts," which must also live. At this period of the seventh year, debts were to be remitted, the law read, Ex. xxi. 2 Deut. xv. 2. and xxxi. 10. But in the jubilee year, even those Hebrew slaves, whose ears had been pierced, and those who had sold their land regained their liberty and possessions. C.—Their children and wives, according to Josephus, went out with them, v. 41. Houses and suburbs for gardens, &c. might be sold for ever, if they were not redeemed the first year, excepting those of the Levites, v. 34. T.

VER. 8. Fears. It is dubious whether the 49th or the 50th year was appointed for the jubilee. The former year is fixed upon by many able chronologers, who remark, that if two years of rest had occurred together, it would have been a serious inconvenience; and Moses might have said the 50th year for a round number, or comprise therein the year of the former jubilee, as we give five years to the olympiad, and eight days to the week, though the former consists only of four years, and the latter of seven days. Rader, Senliger, &c. But others decide for the fiftieth year, v. 10. Philo, Joseph. iii. 10. S. Aug. q. 92. Salien, &c. C.—On the feast of expiation of the 49th year, they promulgated the following to be the year of jubilee. M.—Usher places the first A. M. 2609, 49 years after the partition of the land by Josue in 2560: Salien dates 50 years from the entrance (v. 2.) of the Hebrews into Chanaan, A. M. 2583, six years sooner; and places the first jubilee 2623, immediately after the sabbatic year, which fell in the 32d year of Othniel. He supposes that both were proclaimed at the same time, on the 1st of Tisri, Ros Hashana, "the head of the year;" though the heralds went about the country only on the 10th. The writers both of the Synagogue and of month, the tenth day of the month, in the time of the expiation in all your land:

10 And thou shalt sanctify the fiftieth year, and shalt proclaim remission to all the inhabitants of thy land: for it is the year of jubilee. Every man shall return to his possession, and every one shall go back to his former family:

11 Because it is the jubilee and the fiftieth year. You shall not sow nor reap the things that grow in the field of their own accord, neither shall you gather the first-fruits of the vines, 12 Because of the sanctification of the jubilee: but as they grow you shall presently eat them.

13 In the year of the jubilee all shall return to their possessions.

14 When thou shalt sell any thing to thy neighbour, or shalt buy of him, grieve not thy brother: but thou shalt buy of him according to the number of years from the jubilee,

15 And he shall sell to thee according to the computation of the fruits.

16 The more years remain after the jubilee, the more shall the price increase: and the less time is counted, so much the less shall the purchase cost. For he shall sell to thee the time of the fruits.

17 Do not afflict your countrymen, but let every one fear his God: because I am the Lord your God.

18 Do my precepts, and keep my judgments, and fulfil them: that you may dwell in the land without any fear,

19 And the ground may yield you its fruits, of the Church, generally adopt the 50th for the year of jubilee; and the pretended inconvenience of two years' rest is nugatory, since God promised a three years' crop, v. 21. H.

VER. 10. Remission; that is, a general release and discharge from debts and bondage, and a reinstating of every man in his former possessions. Ch.—Jubilee. Heb. jubol means "liberty," (Joseph.); "re-establishment," (Philo); C.—"deliverance," (Abenezra). The Rabbins falsely assert, that a ram's horn was used on this occasion: but Bochart shews that it is solid and unfit for the purpose. B. ii. 42. They also maintain, that from the 1st of this sacred month, as it is called by Philo, till the 10th, the slaves spent their time in continual rejoicings in their master's house, and on the latter day they were set free. Cuneus (Rep. i. 6.) observes, that the jubilee was discontinued after the captivity, though the sabbatic year was still kept. C.—Indeed the Jews were often very negligent in these respects, and God complained and punished them for it. C. xxvii. 32. &c. The avarice of the great ones chiefly caused these wise regulations to be despised, though, from time to time, God enforced their observance, that it might be clearly known from what family the Messias sprung. After his birth they were abrogated, as no longer necessary. H.—Something similar was instituted by Solon, and styled "the shaking off burdens," for the redemption both of men and goods. Laertius. M.—The Locrians could not alienate their patrimony. Aristotle polit. ii. 7. and vi. 4. The Rabbins deviate from the spirit of their lawgiver, when they assert, that persons might sell their inheritance for a greater number of years than 50, if they specified how many, &c. Seld. Succes. iii. 24. In the Christian dispensation, the jubilee denotes a time of indulgence, in consequence of the power left by Jesus Christ. Matt. xvi. 19. 2 Cor. ii. 10. The first was given by Boniface VIII. in 1300; and others were granted every century, till Clement IV. reduced the space to 50 years, 1542. Gregory XI. would have them dispensed to the faithful every 33 years, and Paul XI. every 25th, that more might partake of so great a benefit. This has been done since his time, and the Popes often grant them when the Church is in great danger, and also in the year when they are consecrated. C.—They are designed to promote the fervour of piety, and the remission of the punishment due to sin. H.—Family. Slaves shall obtain their liberty. This law set a restraint upon the rich, that they might not get possession of too much land, or oppress the poor. Lycurgus, with the same view, established an equality of lands among the Spartans, and Solon acknowledged the propriety of the regulation, which he probably saw practised in Egypt. Diod. i. C.—The Agrarian laws at Rome, were often proposed; but they caused nothing but confusion and riot. H.

VER. 12. Eat them. No wine was to be made of the grapes, nor the corn heaped up, to the detriment of the poor. All is claimed by God, as his own property.

VER. 14. Grieve. Heb. "deceive not." S. Chrysostom observes, that to engage another to sell us any thing for what we know is beneath its value, is which you may eat your fill, fearing no man's invasion.

20 But if you say: What shall we eat the seventh year, if we sow not, nor gather our fruits?

21 I will give you my blessing the sixth year, and it shall yield the fruits of three years:

22 And the eighth year you shall sow, and shall eat of the old fruits, until the ninth year: till new grow up, you shall eat the old store.

23 The land also shall not be sold for ever: because it is mine, and you are strangers and sojourners with me.

24 For which cause all the country of your possession shall be under the condition of redemption.

25 If thy brother, being impoverished, sell his little possession, and his kinsman will, he may redeem what he had sold.

26 But if he have no kinsman, and he himself can find the price to redeem it:

27 The value of the fruits shall be counted from that time when he sold it: and the overplus he shall restore to the buyer, and so shall receive his possession again.

28 But if his hands find not the means to repay the price, the buyer shall have what he bought, until the year of the jubilee. For in that year all that is sold shall return to the owner, and to the ancient possessor.

29 He that selleth a house within the walls of a city, shall have the liberty to redeem it, until one year be expired:

30 If he redeem it not, and the whole year be fully out, the buyer shall possess it, and his posterity for ever, and it cannot be redeemed, not even in the jubilee.

31 But if the house be in a village, that hath no walls, it shall be sold according to the same law as the fields: if it be not redeemed before, in the jubilee it shall return to the owner.

32 The houses of Levites, which are in cities, may always be redeemed:

33 If they be not redeemed, in the jubilee they shall all return to the owners, because the houses of the cities of the Levites are for their possessions among the children of Israel.

34 But let not their suburbs be sold, because it is a perpetual possession.

35 If thy brother be impoverished, and weak of hand, and thou receive him as a stranger and sojourner, and he live with thee, 36 Take not usury of him, nor more than thou gavest: fear thy God, that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor exact of him any increase of fruits.

38 I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, that I might give you the land of Chanaan, and might be your God.

39 If thy brother, constrained by poverty, sell himself to thee, thou shalt not oppress him with the service of bond-servants:

40 But he shall be as a hireling, and a sojourner: he shall work with thee until the year of the jubilee, 41 And afterwards he shall go out with his children, and shall return to his kindred and to the possession of his fathers.

42 For they are my servants, and I brought them out of the land of Egypt: let them not be sold as bond-men:

43 Afflict him not by might, but fear thy God.

44 Let your bond-men, and your bond-women, be of the nations that are round about you.

45 And of the strangers that sojourn among you, or that were born of them in your land, these you shall have for servants:

46 And by right of inheritance shall leave them to your posterity, and shall possess them for ever. But oppress not your brethren, the children of Israel, by might.

47 If the hand of a stranger, or a sojourner, grow strong among you, and thy brother being impoverished sell himself to him, or to any of his race:

48 After the sale he may be redeemed. He that will of his brethren shall redeem him:

49 Either his uncle, or his uncle's son, or his kinsman, by blood, or by affinity. But if he himself be able also, he shall redeem himself, 50 Counting only the years from the time of his selling unto the year of the jubilee: and counting the money, that he was sold for, according to the number of the years and the reckoning of a hired servant.

51 If there be many years that remain until the jubilee, according to them shall he also repay the price.

[theft. Grot. Jur. ii. 12. The Rabbins also decide that, if an Israelite be defrauded a sixth part, restitution must be made, v. 17. Seld. Jur. vi. 6.

VER. 21. Three years. After the harvest of the sixth year was gotten in, the land rested from September to September, the beginning of the 8th year, when it was tilled again. Nothing would be ripe till about March; yet the harvest of the 6th year would suffice to furnish food till that time, or even for a year longer, as it would be requisite, when the year of jubilee succeeded that of rest, v. 6. H.

VER. 23. For ever. Sam. version, "absolutely." The only exception to this law is, when a person makes a vow to give some land to the Lord, and will not redeem it. C. xxvii. 20. In that case, God re-enters upon his property, and it belongs to his priests. C.

VER. 27. Fruits. An estimation shall be made of what the buyer would probably have gotten for the fruits of the land, till the year of jubilee, and that sum shall be given to him; (C.) or what benefit he has already derived from the land shall be computed; so that, if he purchased it for 100 sicles, and had received the value of 80, he should be content with the addition of 20 more, v. 53. H.

VER. 29. City. These houses are of greater consequence, and therefore God dissuades his people from selling them; though if they think proper to do so, he holds out an encouragement to those who buy, that they may afford a better price, on the prospect of keeping possession for ever. M.

VER. 33. Owners. The Levites had no other possessions, but these cities and 2000 eubits of land round them. The priests might buy of one another. Jer xxxi. 7.

VER. 35. And thou. Heb "thou shalt receive him: and of the stranger . . . (36) take no usury." There are two precepts; to relieve those in distress, and not to injure any one. C.

VER. 40. Hireling, who has engaged to work for a term of years, either of six, or at most 49. After the year of jubilee, he might enter into fresh engagements with his late master. H.—The Hebrews have always hated slavery. We have never been slaves to any. Jo. viii. 33. They were not allowed to part with their liberty, except from absolute distress; (Maimonides) and then they do not submit to what they call intrinsic slavery.—Children. His wife and children were not made slaves with him. But if his master gave him a second wife, her children belonged to their common master. Seld. Jur. vi. 1.

VER. 43. Might. Heb. "rigour or haughtiness." Sept. "Do not make him strain himself with work."

VER. 45. Servants, or slaves, whom you may treat with greater severity than the Hebrews, and keep for ever, even though they may have embraced the true faith. But still you must remember that they are your brethren.

VER. 47. Stranger, or Gentile, who engages at least to keep the precepts given to Noe. H.

VER. 49. Himself. He might have saved up something by greater industry. The Athenians allowed their slaves the same privilege. C.

52 If few, he shall make the reckoning with him according to the number of the years, and shall repay to the buyer for what remaineth of the years, 53 His wages being allowed for which he served before: he shall not afflict him violently in thy sight.

54 And if by these means he cannot be redeemed, in the year of the jubilee he shall go out, with his children.*

55 For the children of Israel are my servants, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt.

God's promises to them that keep his commandments. And the many punishments with which he threatens transgressors.

I AM the Lord* your God:† you shall not make to yourselves any idol or graven thing, neither shall you erect pillars, nor set up a remarkable stone in your land, to adore it: for I am the Lord your God.

2 Keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord.

3 *If you walk in my precepts, and keep my commandments, and do them, I will give you rain in due seasons,

4 And the ground shall bring forth its increase, and the trees shall be filled with fruit.

5 The threshing of your harvest shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing-time: and you shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land without fear.

6 I will give peace in your coasts: you shall sleep, and there shall be none to make you afraid. I will take away evil beasts: and the sword shall not pass through your quarters.

7 You shall pursue your enemies, and they shall fall before you.

8 Five of yours shall pursue a hundred others, and a hundred of you ten thousand: your enemies shall fall before you by the sword.

9 I will look on you, and make you increase: you shall be multiplied, and I will establish my covenant with you.

* A. M. 2514.—† Exod. xx. 4. Deut. v. 8. Ps. xvi. 7.

VER. 53. Wages. Heb. "as a yearly hired servant shall he be with him." What was customarily given to a hired servant for a certain number of years, might be a rule to judge how much was to be paid for redemption. H.—Thus if a man had engaged to serve 20 years for 100 sicles, and at the expiration of 10 years wished to redeem himself, he might do it for half that sum. Some think, that those Hebrews who had sold themselves to a Gentile, sojourning among them, could not take the benefit of the sabbatic year, (Ex. xxi. 6.) because Moses is silent on this head. But this argument is not satisfactory. C.

CHAP. XXVI. VER. 1. To adore it. This explains the prohibition of making graven things, &c. The Protestants translate as usual, "Ye shall make you no idols, nor graven image, neither rear ye up a standing image, neither shall ye set up any image of stone in your land to bow down unto it." They seem terribly afraid of images, as if they were all idols. See Ex. xx. 4. H.—Pillars. Heb. matteba, "statue, or monument." Such were erected by Jacob, Josue, and even by Moses himself, without any offence or danger of idolatry. Gen. xxviii. 18. Jos. iv. 4. Ex. xxiv. 4. Apuleius (Flor.) makes mention, among other species of superstition, "of a stone anointed, and of an altar crowned with flowers." The stone, which is here condemned, is one set up "for adoration." Onkelos.—Heb. "a stone of sight," placed on some eminence, or on the high roads. Strabo, (xvii.) speaking of those which he had seen in Egypt along the roads, says, "they are lofty, polished, and almost like a sphere, some 12 feet in diameter. There are sometimes three, of different dimensions, one upon another. Some were to be seen upon Mount Libanus. They were objects of adoration." The Greeks raised heaps of stones on the high roads, in honour of Mercury. Prov. xxvi. 7. C.—We are not forbidden to place land-marks, &c.: but we must not adore them. D.

VER. 2. Reverence. The Rabbins inform us, with what respect their ancestors appeared in the temple. They left their sticks and shoes behind them, and washed their feet; entering solely to perform some act of religion, and not to go a shorter road to another street. When they had ended their devotions, they retired slowly without turning their back to the sanctuary. Outram, Sacrif. lib. 3. n. 7.

10 You shall eat the oldest of the old store, and new coming on, you shall cast away the old.

11 I will set my tabernacle in the midst of you, and my soul shall not cast you off.

12 †I will walk among you, and will be your God, and you shall be my people.

13 I am the Lord your God: who have brought you out of the land of the Egyptians, that you should not serve them, and who have broken the chains of your necks, that you might go upright.

14 *But if you will not hear me, nor do all my commandments,

15 If you despise my laws, and contemn my judgments, so as not to do those things which are appointed by me, and to make void my covenant:

16 I also will do these things to you: I will quickly visit you with poverty, and burning heat, which shall waste your eyes, and consume your lives. You shall sow your seed in vain, which shall be devoured by your enemies.

17 I will set my face against you, and you shall fall down before your enemies, and shall be made subject to them that hate you, you shall flee when no man pursueth you.

18 But if you will not yet for all this obey me, I will chastise you seven times more for your sins,

19 And I will break the pride of your stubbornness, and I will make to you the heaven above as iron, and the earth as brass:

20 Your labour shall be spent in vain, the ground shall not bring forth her increase, nor the trees yield their fruit.

21 If you walk contrary to me, and will not hearken to me, I will bring seven times more plagues upon you for your sins:

22 And I will send in upon you the beasts of the field, to destroy you, and your cattle, and make you few in number, and that your highways may be desolate.

23 And if even so you will not amend, but will walk contrary to me:

* Deut. xxviii. 1.—† 2 Cor. vi. 16.— Deut. xxviii. 15. Malac. ii. 2.

VER. 3. Due seasons. Before harvest, in spring; and after that in autumn: when they sow their wheat and barley in Palestine. C.

VER. 5. Time. So great shall be the abundance, that you will scarcely have time to get all the work done before you will be called off to something else. H.—These promises would be so much the more agreeable to them, as in Egypt, they had been forced to keep in their houses two or three months together, on account of the overflowing of the Nile. In that country, as well as in Greece and Palestine, people sow both wheat and barley about October; while in other countries the latter is sown in spring. The harvest is ready in about six months, and that of wheat in seven. Plin. xviii. 18. Hesiod, ep. ii. C.

VER. 8. Five. Thus Gedeon's 300 men put to flight the great army of the Madianites; (Jud. vii. 22.) and the Machabees destroyed vast numbers with a small force.

VER. 10. Old; being unable to consume all. M.—Heb. "ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new." Sept. "you shall eat the old of old, and you shall bring out the old from the face of the new." Like a householder, who bringeth forth out of his treasury new things and old. Matt. xiii. 52. H.

VER. 13. Upright; and be no longer bowed down with a heavy yoke, like oxen. "I have broken the locks of your prison, and have set you at liberty." Arab. C.—A Greek proverb says, "Never was a slave's head right, but always crooked, like his neck." M.

VER. 16. Heat. Heb. kaddacha, is rendered "scab and jaundice," by the Sept. and by others "a dangerous wind," like that which causes so many diseases in Egypt. The precise meaning of some terms in this verse is not well known.

VER. 18. More, (septuplum.) "Very often, or very much;" in which sense it is used in this chapter. C.

VER. 19. As brass, (anem.) "Brazen," without moisture, and barren. Onkelos.

VER. 22. Desolate, none being left to frequent them; or the few who remain, shall keep within doors, lest the wild beasts should meet and devour them. Isai. xxxiii. 8.

24 I also will walk contrary to you, and will strike you seven times for your sins.

25 And I will bring in upon you the sword that shall avenge my covenant. And when you shall flee into the cities, I will send the pestilence in the midst of you, and you shall be delivered into the hands of your enemies.

26 After I shall have broken the staff of your bread: so that ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and give it out by weight: and you shall eat, and shall not be filled.

27 But if you will not for all this hearken to me, but will walk against me:

28 I will also go against you with opposite fury, and I will chastise you with seven plagues for your sins.

29 So that you shall eat the flesh of your sons and of your daughters.

30 I will destroy your high places, and break your idols. You shall fall among the ruins of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you, 31 Inasmuch that I will bring your cities to be a wilderness, and I will make your sanctuaries desolate, and will receive no more your sweet odours.

32 And I will destroy your land, and your enemies shall be astonished at it, when they shall be the inhabitants thereof.

33 And I will scatter you among the Gentiles, and I will draw out the sword after you, and your land shall be desert, and your cities destroyed:

34 Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths all the days of her desolation: when you shall be 35 In the enemies' land, she shall keep a sabbath, and rest in the sabbaths of her desolation, because she did not rest in your sabbaths when you dwelt therein.

36 And as to them that shall remain of you, I will send fear in their hearts in the countries of their enemies, the sound of a flying leaf shall terrify them, and they shall flee as it were from the sword: they shall fall, when no man pursueth them, 37 And they shall every one fall upon their brethren, as fleeing from wars, none of you shall dare to resist your enemies.

VER. 26. Bread; or that which supports you. You shall be deprived of the necessities of life.—One oven shall be used by 10 families, so little bread shall be baked, and even that little shall be delivered out by weight. I will also deprive it of its nutritive qualities, so that it shall not satisfy your craving appetite. C. See Ps. c17 16. Isai. iii. 1.

VER. 28. Fury. You will gain nothing by opposing me, but your own destruction. I will treat you, as you would deal with me. H.

VER. 29. Daughters. To such extremities were the Jews reduced, at the sieges of Samaria and Jerusalem. 4 K. vi. 28. Lament. iv. 10. Josep. Bel. vii. 8.

VER. 30. Places. The temple of Solomon was built on Mount Moria or Sion. The Persians sacrificed upon the mountains, and the Romans and Athenians built their most magnificent temples on the highest parts of their respective cities.—Idols. Heb. chanamanim, denotes the chariots dedicated to the sun; (4 K. xxiii. 11,) or the pyres, or enclosures for the sacred fire, in honour of the god Homanus, (Strabo xv.) whose name is probably derived from this Hebrew word, (C.) as well as Hannun, a title of Jupiter. M.—Ruins. Heb. "and cast your carcases upon the carcases of your gods of dirt, and my soul shall vomit you out." The Egyptians embalmed the carcases of their sacred animals. God threatens that, if his people be so stupid as to adore them, they shall die, and be deprived of sepulture.

VER. 31. Odours. Even the sanctuary of the Lord shall be destroyed, as you will be unworthy to have it among you, or to offer sacrifices to me. H.

VER. 34. Desolation. It shall be uncultivated; and though you would not comply with my injunctions to let it rest one year out of seven, it shall now remain desolate for many years together. H.—Theodoret (q. 37.) says for 70 years; the number of sabbatic years, from the reign of Saul till the captivity of Babylon, during the space of 490 years. This verse seems evidently to allude to those days of distress. C. 2 Par. xxxvi. 21.—But we can hardly suppose that none of the sabbatic years should have been duly observed during the reigns of David, Solomon, &c. H.—Instead of enjoy, Heb. may be "shall expiate her sabbaths," or the neglect of them. The same term tirtse, is used, (v. 41. 43,) and the Vulg. generally renders it agreeable, speaking of sacrifices. C. i. 4. xxii. 20. C.

38 You shall perish among the Gentiles, and an enemy's land shall consume you.

39 And if of them also some remain, they shall pine away in their iniquities, in the land of their enemies, and they shall be afflicted for the sins of their fathers, and their own:

40 Until they confess their iniquities and the iniquities of their ancestors, whereby they have transgressed against me, and walked contrary unto me.

41 Therefore I also will walk against them, and bring them into the enemies' land, until their uncircumcised mind be ashamed: then shall they pray for their sins.

42 And I will remember my covenant, that I made with Jacob, and Isaac, and Abraham. I will remember also the land:

43 Which when she shall be left by them, shall enjoy her sabbaths, being desolate for them. But they shall pray for their sins, because they rejected my judgments, and despised my laws.

44 And yet for all that when they were in the land of their enemies, I did not cast them off altogether, neither did I so despise them that they should be quite consumed, and I should make void my covenant with them. For I am the Lord their God.

45 And I will remember my former covenant, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt, in the sight of the Gentiles, to be their God. I am the Lord. These are the judgments, and precepts, and laws, which the Lord gave between him and the children of Israel, in Mount Sinai, by the hand of Moses.

CHAP. XXVII.

Of vows and tithes.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, *saying:

2. Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: The man that shall have made a vow, and promised his soul to God, shall give the price according to estimation.

3 If it be a man from twenty years old unto sixty years old, he shall give fifty sicles of silver, after the weight of the sanctuary:

* A. M. 2514.

VER. 35. Your sabbaths, holidays and years of rest, and of jubilee. The earth is represented as entering into the views of God, and rejoicing in his judgments. H.

VER. 36. Fear. Sept. "timidity, or slavishness." Heb. morec, "softness and inactivity." C.—Their haughty temper shall be broken; and though they have dared to rebel against their God, the fall of a leaf shall now terrify them. H.

VER. 37. Brethren, in their flight; while each one is endeavouring to save himself. The Rabbins say they shall be punished for the sins of their brethren, if they have not endeavoured to prevent them.

VER. 38. Consumes you. The Hebrew spies said that the land of Chanaan devoured its inhabitants. Such shall be in reality the enemies' country in your regard. You shall not be able to establish yourselves or be happy there.

VER. 39. Own. The sins of their fathers, which they have imitated, shall fall upon them; so that they shall pine away with remorse and misery. C.

VER. 41. Mind. Heb. "heart," wicked, rebellious, and unclean. M.—Pray for. Heb. and Syr. "please themselves in," &c. They shall see what advantage they have derived from their sins. C.—Then they shall enter into themselves, like the prodigal son. H.

VER. 42. Jacob is placed first, because he was the father of no other nation; as Abraham and Isaac were. W.

VER. 44. I did not. He speaks of a future event, which he sees will certainly come to pass, as if it had already happened. As God had preserved his people, in Egypt, conformably to his covenant with the patriarchs, so he will be reconciled to them, after they shall have done penance, and acknowledged all their excesses, in the captivity of Babylon. H.—The church never ceases all together. W.

VER. 45. Moses. What has been hitherto recorded, was mostly prescribed by God at Mount Sinai, as some of the following laws were also. C.—It would seem as if this were the conclusion of Leviticus. We must remember, however, that these divisions were not introduced by Moses, as he wrote his five books without any interruption, like one verse. So S. John seems to conclude his gospel, (C. xx. 31,) though he afterwards adds another chapter. H.

CHAP. XXVII. VER. 2. Estimation. Heb. is obscure. "Whoever has sepa

4 If a woman, thirty.

5 But from the fifth year until the twentieth, a man shall give twenty sicles: a woman ten.

6 From one month until the fifth year, for a male shall be given five sicles: for a female three.

7 A man that is sixty years old, or upwards, shall give fifteen sicles: a woman ten.

8 If he be poor, and not able to pay the estimation, he shall stand before the priest: and as much as he shall value him at, and see him able to pay, so much shall he give

9 But a beast, that may be sacrificed to the Lord, if any one shall vow, shall be holy,

10 And cannot be changed, that is to say, neither a better for a worse, nor a worse for a better. And if he shall change it: both that which was changed, and that for which it was changed, shall be consecrated to the Lord.

11 An unclean beast, which cannot be sacrificed to the Lord, if any man shall vow, shall he brought before the priest:

12 Who judging whether it be good or bad, shall set the price:

13 Which if he that offereth it will give, he shall add above the estimation, the fifth part.

14 If a man shall vow his house, and sanctify it to the Lord, the priest shall consider it, whether it be good or bad, and it shall be sold according to the price which he shall appoint.

15 But if he that vowed, will redeem it, he shall give the fifth part of the estimation over and above, and shall have the house.

16 And if he vow the field of his possession, and consecrate it to the Lord, the price shall be-rated according to the measure of the seed. If the ground be sowed with thirty bushels of barley, let it be sold for fifty sicles of silver.

17 If he vow his field immediately from the year of jubilee that is beginning, as much as it may be worth, at so much it shall be rated.

18 But if some time after: the priest shall reckon the money according to the number of years that remain until the jubilee, and the price shall be abated.

19 And if he that had vowed, will redeem his field, he shall add the fifth part of the money of the estimation, and shall possess it.

20 And if he will not redeem it, but it be sold to any other man, he that vowed it, may not redeem it any more;

21 For when the day of jubilee cometh, it shall be sanctified to the Lord, and as a possession consecrated pertaineth to the right of the priests.

22 If a field that was bought, and not of a man's ancestors' possession, be sanctified to the Lord,

23 The priest shall reckon the price according to the number of years, unto the jubilee: and he that had vowed, shall give that to the Lord.

24 But in the jubilee, it shall return to the former owner, who had sold it, and had it in the lot of his possession.

25 All estimation shall be made according to the sicle of the sanctuary. ^aA sicle hath twenty obols.

26 The first-born, which belong to the Lord, no man may sanctify and vow: whether it be bullock, or sheep, they are the Lord's.

27 And if it be an unclean beast, he that offereth it shall redeem it, according to thy estimation, and shall add the fifth part of the price. If he will not redeem it, it shall be sold to another, for how much soever it was estimated by thee.

28 ^bAny thing that is devoted to the Lord, whether it be man, or beast, or field, shall not be sold, neither may it be redeemed. Whatsoever is once consecrated, shall be holy of holies to the Lord.

29 And any consecration that is offered by man, shall not be redeemed, but dying shall die.

rated, or made a singular vow; the souls to the Lord according to thy estimation." C.—Sept. "shall vow as it were the price of a soul to the Lord." H.—The person or the beast shall belong to the Lord; but if it be redeemed, the priests shall fix a price, according to the following regulations. Whatever was vowed must be subject to these rules, or it shall remain for the service of the altar. The priests may sell it, if it be an impure animal. Those which were fit for sacrifice, were to be immolated, v. 9, &c. No change of them was allowed, lest a worse should ever be substituted for a better; (C.) and because God is better pleased with things that are offered to him by vow. W.

VER. 5. Fifth. The parents might make a vow of their children. M.

VER. 8. The estimation. Heb. is pointed improperly, "thy estimation;" for the price was fixed already. The priest had leave to reduce it only in favour of the poor. Houbigant. See v. 2, and seq.

VER. 13. That offereth it. This addition of the Vulgate shews, that if any other purchased the animal, he would not have to give a fifth part more than the value. That only concerned the person who had made the vow, to punish him for his inconstancy, and that he might not have a desire to get possession again of what he had once consecrated to the Lord. If the beast was valued at 40 sicles, he would therefore have to pay 50. C.

VER. 15. House. The Rabbins say this fifth part went towards repairing the temple. We may suppose it was laid on to indemnify the priests, for the loss which they sustained by selling a house, or a field, (v. 16,) to the former owner; since if any other had purchased them, the priests would have been able to sell them again at the return of every jubilee. At that period, even the former proprietor would not obtain a title to possess them for ever; (v. 21,) and therefore he would not need to pay any more than the stated value. Tostat. C.

VER. 16. Possession, or inheritance. If he had only purchased the field, he could not, by his vow, transfer the property of it to the priests beyond the year of jubilee, v. 22.—Seed, not of the produce, which is uncertain. The goodness of the soil must also be considered.—Silver: which rent must be paid every year, except on those of rest, when the earth was not cultivated. C.

VER. 21. Consecrated. Heb. "a field of anathema," devoted and separated (153) from common uses for ever to the Lord. H.—Priests. They were bound to sell it from one jubilee to another to some of the same tribe, to which the person, who vowed it, had belonged. M.—In the new law, religious people often consecrate themselves and their effects to the service of God; and it would be a sacrilege to alienate them from such pious uses to any thing profane. They are anathema, a deposit of offering to the Lord; while those who violate them are anathema, accursed. H. T.

VER. 25. Obols. Heb. "gerah," which were worth 1d.-2687; so that a sicle amounts to 2s. 3d.-375. Arbuthnot.

VER. 26. First-born. Sept. add "of beasts." Men, though belonging to the Lord on that title already, (Ex. xiii. 2,) might still be more particularly consecrated to him by vow, as Samuel was. C.—A vow must be concerning some greater good to which we are not otherwise bound. Such vows are agreeable to God, and can never be broken without sin. See Gen. xxxi. 13. 1 Tim. v. 12. W.

VER. 27. Unclean, either on account of some blemish, or because it is of those species which cannot be sacrificed; such as the horse, camel, &c. which might nevertheless be vowed to the Lord, and sold for the benefit of his priests.—By thee. Moses and the succeeding priests. Many MSS. read, with the Sept. and Chal. "by him," leaving the matter to the person's conscience; but the printed Hebrew and Vulgate agree. C.

VER. 28. Devoted. Heb. "anathema," different from the other vows. In this case all that had life was slain, (or consecrated to God, H.) houses were demolished, the land belonged to the priests for ever, so that they could only let it out to laymen for a certain rent. Moses thus devoted the Amalecites to destruction; (Ex. xvii. 14,) and Saul had orders to put in execution what he had denounced, 1 K. xv. It is doubtful whether people could thus devote their children and slaves. Most authors suppose, that it was necessary that God or the nation at large should pronounce such a sentence, as was done with respect to Achan. Jos. viii. See Num. xxi. 2. Judg. xi. 31. C.

VER. 29. Die. Grotius says, only public enemies and deserters could be thus devoted. Other men and women were only consecrated for ever to the divine service. D.

30 All tithes of the land, whether of corn, or of the fruits of trees, are the Lord's, and are sanctified to him.

31 And if any man will redeem his tithes, he shall add the fifth part of them.

32 Of all the tithes of oxen, and sheep, and goats, that pass under the shepherd's rod, every tenth that cometh shall be sanctified to the Lord.

VER. 30. Tithes. Abraham and Jacob paid tithes, out of devotion. Gen. xiv. and xxviii. 22. Moses first made a law on this subject, which began to be in force when the Hebrews had obtained quiet possession of Chanaan. The people paid them more exactly when they were determined to keep God's law, and had pious princes at their head. 2 Par. xxxi. 5. At other times they were very negligent. Mal. iii. 10. This forced Esdras to appoint inspectors, Nannims, to collect them. The Pharisees affected a degree of exactitude in this respect, (Lu. x. 42. Matt. xxiii. 23.) paying what some Jews do not suppose to be necessary, though our Saviour says it was. Since the destruction of the temple the Jews pay none. The first-fruits and tithes of wheat, barley, figs, raisins, olives, pomegranates, and dates, were required, though it be not certain what quantity of the first fruits was given; some say between the 40th and the 60th part of the produce. Wine and wool were also to be offered. The tithes were taken after the first-fruits and the heaved oblations (thorume) were paid. They belonged to the Levites, and these gave a tithe to the priests. Num. xviii. 28. See C. xix. 24. The Eastern kings required a tithe of their subjects, for the support of their families. 1 K. viii. 15. God does the like. Mal. iii. 10. The Persians, Carthaginians, Greeks, Romans, and even the Arabs and Scythians, religiously paid their tithes in honour of their false gods. See Cyrop. iv. and Q. Curt. iv. 2. Herod. ii. 135. Plin. xii. 14. Mela. ii. 5, &c. The Romans often consecrated the tithes of their spoils to Hercules, as the Carthaginians did also. The Scythians sent them to Apollo. Solin 27, &c. C.—Scaliger and Amama dispose the tithes, and the oblations of the Hebrews, in the following order. Supposing a person's annual produce amount to 6000 bushels, an oblation (thorume) of at least 100 was to be made to the priests; out of the remaining 5900, a first tithe of 590 belonged to the Levites, out of which they paid 59 to the priests. The residue, of 5310 bushels, paid a 33 It shall not be chosen neither good nor bad, neither shall it be changed for another. If any man change it: both that which was changed, and that for which it was changed, shall be sanctified to the Lord, and shall not be redeemed.

34 These are the precepts which the Lord commanded Moses, for the children of Israel, in Mount Sinai.

second tithe of 531, to be consumed in feasts in the temple, (a custom which the ancient Christians imitated in their love-feasts, called agape. C.) The original produce was thus reduced to 4779 bushels; and both the tithes amounted to 1121, and the oblation to 100. The thorume consisted of flour dressed, and of oil, wine, (Amama) and wool, (C.) to be given to the priests on the feast of Pentecost. C. xliii. 15. It could not be less than the 60th part of the produce, (Ezec. xlv. 13.) and it was necessary to pay it before any could be used in the family. Hence these oblations are often called first-fruits, and have been confounded with those sheaves which were to be offered at the beginning of harvest. Amama.

VER. 31. Of them. When the distance from Jerusalem was great, so that a person judged it more convenient to sell his tithes, and with the money purchase more for a feast in Jerusalem, (which the Rabbins call Zudui, Charisterion, grace or thanksgiving) he had to pay something additional, 12, for example, instead of 10. Scaliger.

VER. 32. Rod; on which was some red colouring, to mark the tenth animal as it passed through a narrow gate. If it was proper for sacrifice, its blood was poured out around the altar, and its flesh was returned to the giver. If it could not be offered in sacrifice, it was slain. The priest received none of the victim no more than of the paschal lamb. Outram, sac. i. 11. But a feast was made of flesh for the person's friends, and he gave a portion to the poor and to the Levites.—The Lord, as a sacrifice of thanksgiving, in which the greatest part of the victim is consumed by the person who offers it. The priests have but a small share. C. iii. C.

VER. 34. Sinai. The laws specified in the ten first chapters of the following book, were given here also. H.

THE BOOK OF NUMBERS.

This fourth Book of Moses is called NUMBERS, because it begins with the numbering of the people. The Hebrews, from its first words, call it VAYEDAUBER. It contains the transactions of the Israelites, from the second month of the second year after their going out of Egypt, until the beginning of the eleventh month of the 40th year; that is, a history of almost thirty-nine years. Ch.—In the nine first chapters various orders of people are described, and several laws are given or repeated. From the 10th to the 33d, the marches and history of God's people are related; (H.) from the 20th of the second month, in the second year after their departure out of Egypt, till the eleventh month of the 40th year, and the last of Moses: so that this Book contains the transactions of almost thirty-nine years; (T.) whereas, the Book of Leviticus specified only some of the laws and occurrences of one month. Here we behold what opposition Moses experienced from Aaron and his sister, from Core, and from all the people; and yet God protected him, in the midst of all dangers, and confounded, not only their attempts, but those also of Balaam, and of all his external foes. H.—Moses conquers the Midianites, and divides the conquered country between the tribes of Ruben, Gad, and half of the tribe of Manasse. In the three last chapters, he describes the land of Chanaan, orders all the inhabitants to be exterminated, assigns cities to the Levites, and for refuge; and forbids such marriages, as might cause any confusion in the distribution of the lands belonging to each tribe. Moses composed this part of the Pentateuch, as well as that of Deuteronomy, a little while before his death, out of the memoirs which he had carefully preserved. C.—According to Usher, the people were numbered this second time, A. M. 2514, C. i.; after which, they leave the desert of Sinai, (C. x. 11.) go to Cades-barne, and return thither again 2552. Soon after this, Mary and Aaron die; Moses lifts up the brazen serpent; and the Hebrews take possession of part of the promised land (2553) on the eastern banks of the Jordan. That on the western side, flowing with milk and honey, was conquered by Josue in the following years. H.

CHAP. I.

The children of Israel are numbered: the Levites are designed to serve the tabernacle.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses *in the desert of Sinai in the tabernacle of the covenant, the first day of the second month, the second year of their going out of Egypt, saying:

* A. M. 2514, A. C. 1490.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. First day of the second month, called after the captivity, Jiar, which partly corresponds with our April. These injunctions were given from the tabernacle, (C.) in the desert, the 12th station, (H.) at the foot of Mount Sinai.

VER. 2. Houses. The families consisted of the immediate descendants of the 12 patriarchs: the houses were subdivisions of these. The same plan of numbering the people was adopted on other occasions. Jos. viii. 16. 1 K. x. 20.—Sex, between 20 and 60 years of age. All the subjects of the Eastern kings may be called upon, if they be able to bear arms; and hence we find such immense armies in the Scripture, and in profane history. Moses numbered the people once before, (Ex. xxx. 2.) and found exactly the same number of warriors, the dead being replaced by others, during the space of seven months. Perhaps the odd numbers

2 *Take the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, by their families, and houses, and the names of every one, as many as are of the male sex, † Exod. xxx. 12.

might not be specified, as all the totals consist of so many exact hundreds, except that of the tribe of Gad, v. 25. On the former occasion, the people were not perhaps ranged according to their tribes, which was now deemed necessary, as the army was going to begin its march under its respective leaders. C.

VER. 3. Arms, (fortium). "Strong or brave." The psalmist (civ. 37.) says, there was not one feeble. M.—Troops. Heb. "army." Sept. "force." Their officers shall be at their head, and shall assist you in the work. Some might command 1000, others 100, and some only 50. See Ex. xiii. 18. xviii. 21.—Princes; the first born, or most ancient, (Lyran.) the lineal descendants of the patriarchs; (Jansen) or, in fine, such as were chosen for their merit, as all were equally noble; and hence Nahasson, prince of Juda, is mentioned, though he was not a descendant of the eldest son of Juda, but of Phares; and those who were

4 And there shall be with you the princes of the tribes, and of the houses in their kindreds,

5 Whose names are these: of Ruben, Elisur the son of Seduc.

6 Of Simeon, Salamiel the son of Surisaddai.

7 Of Juda, Nahasson the son of Aminadab.

8 Of Issachar, Nathanael the son of Suar.

9 Of Zabulon, Eliab the son of Helon.

10 And of the sons of Joseph: of Ephraim, Elisama the son of Ammiud: of Manasses, Gamaliel the son of Phadassur.

11 Of Benjamin, Abidan the son of Gedeon.

12 Of Dan, Ahiezer the son of Ammisaddai.

13 Of Aser, Phegiel the son of Ochran.

14 Of Gad, Eliasaph the son of Duel.

15 Of Nephthali, Ahira the son of Enan.

16 These are the most noble princes of the multitude, by their tribes and kindreds, and the chiefs of the army of Israel:

17 Whom Moses and Aaron took with all the multitude of the common people:

18 And assembled them on the first day of the second month, reckoning them up by the kindreds, and houses, and families, and heads, and names of every one from twenty years old and upward,

19 As the Lord had commanded Moses. And they were numbered in the desert of Sinai.

20 Of Ruben the eldest son of Israel, by the generations and families, and houses, and names of every head, all that were of the male sex, from twenty years old and upward, that were able to go forth to war, 21 Were forty-six thousand five hundred.

22 Of the sons of Simeon by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names and heads of every one, all that were of the male sex, from twenty years old and upward, that were able to go forth to war, 23 Fifty-nine thousand three hundred.

24 Of the sons of Gad, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war, 25 Forty-five thousand six hundred and fifty.

26 Of the sons of Juda, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war, 27 Were reckoned up seventy-four thousand six hundred.

28 Of the sons of Issachar, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that could go forth to war, 29 Were reckoned up fifty-four thousand four hundred.

30 Of the sons of Zabulon, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war, 31 Fifty-seven thousand four hundred.

32 Of the sons of Joseph, namely of the sons of Ephraim, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names of every one, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war,

• 33 Forty thousand five hundred.

34 Moreover of the sons of Manasses, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that could go forth to war, 35 Thirty-two thousand two hundred.

36 Of the sons of Benjamin, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war, 37 Thirty-five thousand four hundred.

38 Of the sons of Dan, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war, 39 Sixty-two thousand seven hundred.

40 Of the sons of Aser, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war, 41 Forty-one thousand five hundred.

42 Of the sons of Nephthali, by the generations and families, and houses of their kindreds, were reckoned up by the names of every one from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war, 43 Fifty-three thousand four hundred.

44 These are they who were numbered by Moses and Aaron, and the twelve princes of Israel, every one by the houses of their kindreds.

45 And the whole number of the children of Israel, by their houses and families, from twenty years old and upward, that were able to go to war, 46 Were six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty men.

47 But the Levites in the tribe of their families were not numbered with them.

48 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

49 Number not the tribe of Levi, neither shalt thou put down the sum of them with the children of Israel:

50 But appoint them over the tabernacle of the testimony, and all the vessels thereof, and whatsoever pertaineth to the ceremonies. They shall carry the tabernacle and all the furniture thereof: and they shall minister, and shall encamp round about the tabernacle.

51 When you are to go forward, the Levites shall take down the tabernacle: when you are to camp, they shall set it up. What stranger soever cometh to it shall be slain.

VER. 14. Duel. Heb. Dehuel. But (C. ii. 14.) we find the word begins R, as the Septuagint have read, Ragouel. H.

VER. 16. Army. Heb. "of a thousand." The Vulg. commonly styles them tribunes. They were "peop^l of name in the assembly," as the Heb. indicates. C.

VER. 26. Juda. This tribe was the most numerous. But it is not here placed first, because the order of birth in Lia's children is observed. Then come those of Rachel; and last of all, the children of the two handmaids, Bala and Zelpha. H.

VER. 47. Levites. As they attended the tabernacle, like God's peculiar servants, and were not obliged to go forth to battle, it was not necessary to number them with the rest. C.—They might, however, fight if they thought proper, as the Machabees did. See Josep. Ant. iii. 11. iv. 4. T.

VER. 51. Stranger even of any other tribe. S. Aug. q. 3. W.

52 And the children of Israel shall camp every man by his troops, and bands, and army.

53 But the Levites shall pitch their tents round about the tabernacle, lest there come indignation upon the multitude of the children of Israel, and they shall keep watch, and guard the tabernacle of the testimony.

54 And the children of Israel did according to all things which the Lord had commanded Moses.

CHAP. II.

The order of the tribes in their camp.

AND the Lord spoke * to Moses and Aaron, saying :

2 All the children of Israel shall camp by their troops, ensigns, and standards, and the houses of their kindreds, round about the tabernacle of the covenant.

3 On the east Juda shall pitch his tents by the bands of his army: and the prince of his sons shall be Nahas son, the son of Aminadab.

4 And the whole sum of the fighting men of his stock, were seventy-four thousand six hundred.

5 Next unto him, they of the tribe of Issachar encamped, whose prince was Nathanael, the son of Suar.

6 And the whole number of his fighting men were fifty-four thousand four hundred.

7 In the tribe of Zabulon, the prince was Eliab, the son of Helon.

8 And all the army of fighting men of his stock, were fifty-seven thousand four hundred.

9 All that were numbered in the camp of Juda, were a hundred and eighty-six thousand four hundred: and they, by their troops, shall march first.

10 In the camp of the sons of Ruben, on the south side, the prince shall be Elisur, the son of Sedeur:

11 And the whole army of his fighting men, that were numbered, were forty-six thousand five hundred.

12 Beside him camped they of the tribe of Simeon: whose prince was Salamiel, the son of Surisaddai.

13 And the whole army of his fighting men, that were numbered, were fifty-nine thousand three hundred.

14 In the tribe of Gad, the prince was Eliasaph, the son of Duel.

* A. M. 2514, A. C. 1490.

VER. 52. Army. Heb. "they shall have their respective camp, and follow their own standard, with their army." They were drawn up in four large bodies, C. ii. 2, &c. C.—The first contained 151,450, the second 186,400, the third 108,100, and the fourth 157,600, under Ruben, Juda, Ephraim, and Dan.

VER. 53. Watch. Lest any thing should offer any indecency to the tabernacle, and thus provoke God's indignation. II.

CHAP. II. VER. 2. By, &c. Heb. "by his own standard, in the ensigns of their father's house, far off, about," &c. Perhaps a general standard, belonging to the chief tribe, was set up for each of the four great bodies; while the two inferior tribes had their peculiar ensign, as well as the different companies. It is supposed, that these standards were distinguished either by their colour, or by the representation of some animals. Jonathan says, each of the great standards, made of silk, were of three colours, similar to those precious stones, on which the names of the patriarchs were engraven on the rational; and also exhibited the figure or emblem of the principal tribe, with some text of Scripture, and the names of the three tribes. Thus the tribe of Juda, with those of Issachar and Zabulon, occupying the space of 4000 paces, had a lion's whelp on their standard, with this inscription, Let God arise, and his enemies be put to flight; Juda, Issachar, Zabulon. The tribes of Ruben, Simeon, and Gad, bore the figure of a stag, Hear, O Israel, the Lord thy God is one God. The standard of Ephraim, Manasses, and Benjamin, had a child embroidered, The cloud also of the Lord was over them by day, when they marched. Some give to the tribes of Dan, Aser, and Nephtali, the figure of a basilisk, others that of an eagle; with these words, Return, O Lord, and dwell with thy glory in the midst of the host of Israel. See C. x. 34-5-6. Deut. vi. 4. Some imagine that the standard of Juda was green, with a lion's whelp embroidered upon it; Ruben's red, with the head of a man. That of Ephraim, yellowish, the colour of the Chrysolite, and represented an ox, or a calf's head. The standard of Dan had a mixture of white and red, like the jasper, with an eagle grasping a 15 And the whole army of his fighting men, that were numbered, were forty-five thousand six hundred and fifty.

16 All that were reckoned up in the camp of Ruben, were a hundred and fifty-one thousand four hundred and fifty, by their troops: they shall march in the second place.

17 And the tabernacle of the testimony shall be carried by the officers of the Levites and their troops. As it shall be set up, so shall it be taken down. Every one shall march according to their places, and ranks.

18 On the west side shall be the camp of the sons of Ephraim, whose prince was Elisama, the son of Ammiud.

19 The whole army of his fighting men, that were numbered, were forty thousand five hundred.

20 And with them the tribe of the sons of Manasses, whose prince was Gamaliel, the son of Phadassur.

21 And the whole army of his fighting men, that were numbered, were thirty-two thousand two hundred.

22 In the tribe of the sons of Benjamin, the prince was Abidan, the son of Gedeon.

23 And the whole army of his fighting men, that were reckoned up, were thirty-five thousand four hundred.

24 All that were numbered in the camp of Ephraim, were a hundred and eight thousand one hundred, by their troops: they shall march in the third place.

25 On the north side camped the sons of Dan: whose prince was Ahiezar, the son of Ammisaddai.

26 The whole army of his fighting men, that were numbered, were sixty-two thousand seven hundred.

27 Beside him they of the tribe of Aser pitched their tents: whose prince was Phegiel, the son of Ochran.

28 The whole army of his fighting men, that were numbered, were forty-one thousand five hundred.

29 Of the tribe of the sons of Nephthali, the prince was Ahira, the son of Enan.

30 The whole army of his fighting men were fifty-three thousand four hundred.

31 All that were numbered in the camp of Dan, were a hundred and fifty-seven thousand six hundred: and they shall march last.

32 This is the number of the children of Israel, of their army divided according to the houses of their kindreds serpent in its talons; all in allusion to various passages of Scripture, and to the cherubim of Ezechiel. We cannot, however, vouch for the accuracy of these Rabbinical accounts. The custom of bearing the figures of animals on armour and standards, is very ancient. Anubis and Macedo had a dog and a wolf engraven on their arms, when they accompanied their father Osiris. Diod. ii. 2. The heroes at Troy had similar emblems on their bucklers. Plin. xxxv. 8. Others adorned their helmets with them. Hence some derive the custom of armour-bearing.—Covenant, at the distance of 2000 cubits, as at the passage of the Jordan. Jos. iii. 4. The tabernacle in the middle formed the camp of the Lord, the Levites were round it; the third camp was for the army, (C.) occupying a large square. The nearest soldiers were a mile distant from the centre.

VER. 9. First. The gate of the tabernacle looked towards the east. H.—Juda marched therefore in the first ranks. Then followed Ruben, the Levites, with the camp of the Lord. C.—(Yet see C. x. 17. H.)—Afterwards came Ephraim; and last of all, Gad, v. 16. 17. 24. 31. But in the camp, Juda, Issachar and Zabulon, Moses and Aaron, dwelt on the eastern side of the tabernacle; Ruben, Simeon and Gad, with the Gathites, on the south; Ephraim, Manasses and Benjamin, with the sons of Gerson, to the west; and Dan, Aser and Nephtali, with the Merarites, on the north. C.

VER. 17. And. Heb. "when the tabernacle of the assembly shall depart, the camp of the Levites in the midst of the camp, they shall depart in the same order as they encamp, each in his rank, with his ensigns." The Levites shall always be in the middle. C.—So the Romans made their camps, of a square form, and placed the sacred things in the centre. Grotius.—Down. The same officers who took it down, shall set it up again. M. and their troops, six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty.

33 And the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel: for so the Lord had commanded Moses.

34 And the children of Israel did according to all things that the Lord had commanded. They camped by their troops, and marched by the families and houses of their fathers.

CHAP. III.

The Levites are numbered, and their offices distinguished. They are taken in the place of the first-born of the children of Israel.

THESE are the generations of Aaron and Moses, in the day that the Lord spoke to Moses in Mount Sinai.

2^a And these the names of the sons of Aaron: his first-born Nadab, then Abiu, and Eleazar, and Ithamar.

3 These the names of the sons of Aaron, the priests that were anointed, and whose hands were filled and consecrated, to do the functions of priesthood.

4^b Now Nadab and Abiu died without children, when they offered strange fire before the Lord, in the desert of Sinai: and Eleazar and Ithamar performed the priestly office, in the presence of Aaron, their father.

5 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

6 Bring the tribe of Levi, and make them stand in the sight of Aaron the priest, to minister to him, and let them watch,

7 And observe whatsoever appertaineth to the service of the multitude, before the tabernacle of the testimony,

8 And let them keep the vessels of the tabernacle, serving in the ministry thereof.

9 And thou shalt give the Levites for a gift,

10 To Aaron and to his sons, to whom they are delivered by the children of Israel. But thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons over the service of priesthood. The stranger that approacheth to minister, shall be put to death.

11 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

12 I have taken the Levites from the children of Israel, for every first-born that openeth the womb among the children of Israel, and the Levites shall be mine.

13^c For every first-born is mine: since I struck the VER. 4. Presence; or as it is expressed, (1 Par. xxiv. 19,) under the hand of Aaron, by his direction, and in quality of his assistant, (C.) while he lived, Eleazar succeeded him in the high priesthood; (Jos. xxiv. 33,) and his children possessed that dignity, till the posterity of Ithamar came in under Heli. C. xxv. 13. H.

VER. 6. To him, and to the other priests, who had to perform the higher offices. The Levites did not approach near the altar, except when they had to carry it and the tabernacle. - C.

VER. 7. And. Heb. "They shall watch over him, and over all the congregation, to assist the priests in their sacred office, and to take care that the people behave respectfully. H.—All were bound to prevent any sacrilegious abuse. M.

VER. 10. *To whom. Sam. and Sept. "to me." They must serve God in the persons of his priests. They are called a gift, people bestowed, as the Nothnim, to serve in the meanest functions; and hence the Nathineans take their name. The Gabaonites were employed by Josue in this quality. Jos. ix. 23.—*Over. Heb. "they shall retain," &c. They shall permit no stranger to interfere. Cuius (Rep. ii. 11,) observes, that if a Levite undertook to do the office allotted to another, he was to be slain, after sentence had been passed by the judge. C.

VER. 12. Mine. God claimed the first-born, on account of having spared them. Ex. xii. 23. He requires that all the males shall be redeemed, except those of the tribe of Levi, whom he claims as his peculiar portion, as the price of the redemption of those who were living in Egypt, when the destroying angel passed. This honour was wholly gratuitous, though the Levites deserved to obtain first-born in the land of Egypt: I have sanctified to myself whatsoever is first-born in Israel, both of man and beast, they are mine: I am the Lord.

14 And the Lord spoke to Moses in the desert of Sinai, saying:

15 Number the sons of Levi by the houses of their fathers and their families, every male from one month and upward.

16 Moses numbered them as the Lord had commanded.

17^d And there were found sons of Levi, by their names, Gerson and Caath, and Merari.

18 The sons of Gerson: Lebni and Semei.

19 The sons of Caath: Amram and Jesaar, Hebron and Oziel:

20 The sons of Merari: Moholi and Musi.

21 Of Gerson were two families, the Lebuites, and the Semeites:

22 Of which were numbered, people of the male sex from one month and upward, seven thousand five hundred.

23 These shall pitch behind the tabernacle on the west,

24 Under their prince Eliasaph, the son of Lael.

25 And their charge shall be in the tabernacle of the covenant:

26 The tabernacle itself and the cover thereof, the hanging that is drawn before the doors of the tabernacle of the covenant, and the curtains of the court: the hanging also that is hanged in the entry of the court of the tabernacle, and whatsoever belongeth to the rite of the altar, the cords of the tabernacle, and all the furniture thereof.

27 Of the kindred of Caath, come the families of the Amramites and Jesaarites, and Hebronites and Ozielites. These are the families of the Caathites, reckoned up by their names:

28 All of the male sex from one month and upward, eight thousand six hundred: they shall have the guard of the sanctuary,

29 And shall camp on the south side.

30 And their prince shall be Elisaphan, the son of Oziel:

VER. 15. Month; at which time the first-born were to be redeemed. C. xviii. 16. M.—If only those of 20 years of age had been counted, they could not have amounted to nearly an equal number with the first-born of all the other tribes. C.

VER. 17. Names. These had been long ago dead. M.

VER. 22. Five hundred, expressed by the letter e, has, according to Kennicott, been put for 200, which the Hebrews denote by a similar letter, r. See 2 K. xxiii. 8. and 1 Par. xi. 11, for other mistakes. H.

VER. 26. *Thereof. The Gersonites had the care of the veils round the court, and of the cords and gates. The priests guarded the tabernacle, v. 32. The sons of Caath carried the altars, (v. 31,) and the Merarites took care of the cords, which were attached to the pillars of the court, v. 37. Heb. may be translated "(among the vessels of) the tabernacle, the covering thereof, and the hanging for the door of the sanctuary, (or tabernacle of the congregation) and the hangings of the court, and the curtain for the door of the court, which is beside the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords belonging to the service of the tabernacle." C.—Whatsoever, in the Vulg. must only be referred to the curtains.*

VER. 28. Sanctuary, with respect to the things mentioned, v. 31. M.—The Sam. copy observes, that they also carried the brazen laver, as we find they did, C. iv. 14. All these things were folded up in the violet curtains of the sanctuary, while the ark was covered with the veil which hung before it. C. iv. 5. Some pretend that the number here specified ought to be 830, to obviate a difficulty v. 39. But this amendment has no solid foundation. C.

31 And they shall keep the ark, and the table and the candlestick, the altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary, wherewith they minister, and the veil, and all the furniture of this kind.

32 And the prince of the princes of the Levites, Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, shall be over them that watch for the guard of the sanctuary.

33 And of Merari are the families of the Moholites, and Musites, reckoned up by their names:

34 All of the male kind from one month and upward, six thousand two hundred.

35 Their prince Suriel, the son of Abihaiel: they shall camp on the north side.

36 Under their custody shall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars, and the pillars and their sockets, and all things that pertain to this kind of service:

37 And the pillars of the court round about with their sockets, and the pins with their cords.

38 Before the tabernacle of the covenant, that is to say, on the east side, shall Moses and Aaron camp, with their sons, having the custody of the sanctuary, in the midst of the children of Israel. What stranger soever cometh unto it, shall be put to death.

39 All the Levites that Moses and Aaron numbered according to the precept of the Lord, by their families, of the male kind, from one month and upward, were twenty-two thousand.

40 And the Lord said to Moses: Number the first-born of the male sex of the children of Israel, from one month and upward, and thou shalt take the sum of them.

41 And thou shalt take the Levites to me for all the first-born of the children of Israel, I am the Lord: and their cattle for all the first-born of the cattle of the children of Israel:

42 Moses reckoned up, as the Lord had commanded, the first-born of the children of Israel:

43 And the males by their names, from one month and upward, were twenty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-three.

44 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

45 Take the Levites for the first-born of the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites for their cattle, and the Levites shall be mine. I am the Lord.

46 But for the price of the two hundred and seventy three, of the first-born of the children of Israel, that exceed the number of the Levites, 47 Thou shalt take five sicles for every head, according to the weight of the sanctuary. ^aA sicle hath twenty obols.

48 And thou shalt give the money to Aaron and his sons, the price of them that are above.

49 Moses therefore took the money of them that were above, and whom they had redeemed from the Levites,

50 For the first-born of the children of Israel, one thousand three hundred and sixty-five sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, 51 And gave it to Aaron and his sons, according to the word that the Lord had commanded him.

CHAP. IV.

The age and time of the Levites' service: their offices and burdens.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:
2 Take the sum of the sons of Caath from the midst of the Levites, by their houses and families,

3 From thirty years old and upward, to fifty years old, of all that go in to stand and to minister in the tabernacle of the covenant.

4 This is the service of the sons of Caath:

5 When the camp is to set forward, Aaron and his sons shall go into the tabernacle of the covenant, and the holy of holies, and shall take down the veil that hangeth before the door, and shall wrap up the ark of the testimony in it,

6 And shall cover it again with a cover of violet skins, and shall spread over it a cloth all of violet, and shall put in the bars.

7 They shall wrap up also the table of proposition

VER. 39. And Aaron; a word omitted in the Sam. and Syriac, and in the oldest Heb. MS. and marked in the printed copies as dubious. Kennicott.—Thousand. If we collect the different sums, we shall find other 300; so that the Levites would be 27 more than the first-born of the other tribes, though Moses says (v. 43-6,) that they were fewer by 273. Some say that the 28th verse has been corrupted, (C.) or the 22d, where we read 500 instead of 200. H.—Others observe, that in the 22,000, the first-born of the Levites and the priests of Aaron's family are not included, and these might amount to 300 men. Lyran.—But Bonfrere rightly observes that this number is too small, as only one is allowed for 74 people. He thinks that the first-born, who were heads of families, are omitted, and those also who were born before the angel destroyed the Egyptians. On this supposition, however, 22,000 will appear too great a number to be produced by the Levites in the space of a year, when some were too young, and others too old to have children, and others had children already before that event. We may, therefore, either admit the solution of Lyranus, or confess that some fault has crept into the number, though this must be very difficult, since Moses argues in the sequel on the supposition of its certainty. C.—S. Jerom hence infers, that these numbers are full of mystery; and Origen (hom. 4.) says, that the exact number, 22,000, may signify the perfection which God requires from those whom he takes into his service, as there are just 22 Hebrew letters, and 22 patriarchs, from Adam to Jacob, the father of the Israelites. W.—The 22,000 might be accepted by God, instead of so many Israelites; and the 300 other Levites might be due to him on their own account, being the first-born since the Hebrews left Egypt. T. D.

VER. 41. Cattle. These were kept by the Levites, and were not intended for sacrifice. M.

VER. 46. Levites, omitting the 300, as v. 39. For each of these 273, five sicles were to be paid, the price of the redemption of a child who had been vowed. Lev. xxvii. 6. The money was to be paid either by those who were counted last, or by a tax laid upon all the people, or it was determined by lot who should pay it. The Scripture is silent on this head. C.

CHAP. IV. VER. 3. Thirty. Moses speaks of those who had to carry the sacred vessels. Those of 25 years old might perform some offices; (C. viii. 24.) and even at 20, they began to serve the tabernacle, in the reign of David, (1 Par. xxiii. 24,) the fatigue being then diminished, and the splendour of religion increasing. The Sept. read 25 instead of 30, in this and all other places, and some think that the Heb. should be so too. The time for the admission of priests to their more august functions is not specified, but was determined by themselves to be at 20 years of age. Outram, Sacrif. i. 7.—To stand. This was the ordinary posture of the priests in the temple. The king alone was allowed to sit. Maimonides—Heb. "all that enter into the host, or army, to do the work in the tabernacle of the assembly," shall be of a competent age and strength. H.

VER. 5. Sons. Necessity excused them on this occasion. Out of respect for the ark, the Levites were not allowed to behold or to touch it uncovered. C.—That hangeth before the door. Heb. "the covering veil, and shall," &c. H.

VER. 6. Put in the bars. Heb. "place the bars," upon the shoulders of the Levites; for they were never taken out of the sides of the ark. Ex. xxv. 15. Other bars, like hand-barrows, were used to carry the ark and the other different vessels, after they were folded up. Two Levites bore them on their shoulders. C.—Perhaps the bars of the ark, after it was enveloped with the three curtains, might project, so that the bearers might take hold of them. M.

VER. 7. Loaves. Some imagine this precept was not observed in the desert, as the people fed on manna. But might not they procure some flour of the 8 And they shall spread over it a cloth of scarlet, which again they shall cover with a covering of violet skins, and shall put in the bars.

9 They shall take also a cloth of violet, wherewith they shall cover the candlestick with the lamps and tongs thereof, and the snuffers, and all the oil vessels, which are necessary for the dressing of the lamps:

10 And over all they shall put a cover of violet skins, and put in the bars.

11 And they shall wrap up the golden altar also in a cloth of violet, and shall spread over it a cover of violet skins, and put in the bars.

12 All the vessels wherewith they minister in the sanctuary, they shall wrap up in a cloth of violet, and shall spread over it a cover of violet skins, and put in the bars.

13 They shall cleanse the altar also from the ashes, and shall wrap it up in a purple cloth, 14 And shall put it with all the vessels that they use in the ministry thereof, that is to say, fire-pans, flesh-hooks and forks, pot-hooks and shovels. They shall cover all the vessels of the altar together with a covering of violet skins, and shall put in the bars.

15 And when Aaron and his sons have wrapped up the sanctuary and the vessels thereof at the removing of the camp, then shall the "sons of Caath enter in to carry the things wrapped up: and they shall not touch the vessels of the sanctuary, lest they die. These are the burdens of the sons of Caath: in the tabernacle of the covenant.

16 And over them shall be Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, to whose charge pertaineth the oil to dress the lamps, and the sweet incense, and the sacrifice, that is always offered, and the oil of unction, and whatsoever pertaineth to the service of the tabernacle, and of all the vessels that are in the sanctuary.

17 And the Lord spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:

18 Destroy not the people of Caath from the midst of the Levites:

19 But do this to them, that they may live, and not die, by touching the holies of holies. Aaron and his sons shall go in, and they shall appoint every man his work, and shall divide the burdens that every man is to carry.

But some copies, with Origen, (hom. iv.) and the Samar. Pentateuch, insert some words at the end of v. 14, which Grotius believes have been omitted by the Massorets, in the present Hebrew Bibles. "They shall take a purple veil, and fold up the laver and its foot, and put them in a covering of violet skins, and place them upon the bars." C.—The children of Caath were the most honoured among the Levites, as Moses and Aaron sprung from the same family, Eleazar, the future pontiff, presided over them in a particular manner, while his younger brother Ithamar, directed the rest. H.

VER. 15. Vessels of, &c. Some say, not even their coverings. God threatens to punish all idle curiosity or negligence, particularly with respect to the ark, (140)

20 Let not others, by any curiosity, see the things that are in the sanctuary before they be wrapped up, otherwise they shall die.

21 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

22 Take the sum of the sons of Gerson also, by their houses, and families, and kindreds, 23 From thirty years old and upward, unto fifty years old. Number them all that go in and minister in the tabernacle of the covenant.

24 This is the office of the family of the Gersonites:

25 To carry the curtains of the tabernacle, and the roof of the covenant, the other covering, and the violet covering over all, and the hanging that hangeth in the entry of the tabernacle of the covenant,

26 The curtains of the court, and the veil in the entry that is before the tabernacle. All things that pertain to the altar, the cords, and the vessels of the ministry, 27 The sons of Gerson shall carry, by the commandment of Aaron and his sons: and each man shall know to what burden he must be assigned.

28 This is the service of the family of the Gersonites, in the tabernacle of the covenant, and they shall be under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest.

29 Thou shalt reckon up the sons of Merari also, by the families and houses of their fathers, 30 From thirty years old and upward, unto fifty years old, all that go in to the office of their ministry, and to the service of the covenant of the testimony.

31 These are their burdens: They shall carry the boards of the tabernacle and the bars thereof, the pillars and their sockets, 32 The pillars also of the court round about, with their sockets and pins and cords. They shall receive by account all the vessels and furniture, and so shall carry them.

33 This is the office of the family of the Merarites, and their ministry in the tabernacle of the covenant: and they shall be under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest.

34 So Moses and Aaron and the princes of the synagogue, reckoned up the sons of Caath, by their kindreds and the houses of their fathers,

35 From thirty years old and upward, unto fifty years old, all that go in to the ministry of the tabernacle of the covenant:

36 And they were found two thousand seven hundred and fifty.

which the Caathites had to carry, till the priests became sufficiently numerous to perform that office, as they generally did. Deut. xxxi. 9. C.

VER. 16. Over them. The sons of Caath, to whose care the more sacred things were entrusted; or Heb. "over the oil," &c.—Sacrifice of flour, wine, &c. These always accompanied the morning and evening holocaust. It hence appears that this law was already in force, and probably all such precepts were observed as were not incompatible with the wandering state of the Hebrews. C.

VER. 20. Curiosity. Sept. "suddenly." Let them not rush in before all the vessels be properly covered. The priests folded them up with all haste, that they might see them as little as possible themselves. C.

VER. 23. Thirty. Sept. "25," as v. 3. C.—They began to be taught how to act, at 25; but did not officiate till 30. D.

VER. 26. All things. Heb. "veils round the altar" of holocausts in the court. C.

VER. 27. Assigned. Heb. "you shall count over to them: what they have to carry." Sept. "you shall call (the Levites) by name, and all that shall be entrusted to them." v. 32. C.—From the different offices of the priests and Levites in the old law, Innocent III. takes occasion to shew the distinction of the orders in the Christian Church. De S. Altar. 2. ad 7.

37 This is the number of the people of Caath, that go in to the tabernacle of the covenant. these did Moses and Aaron number according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

38 The sons of Gerson also were numbered by the kindreds and houses of their fathers,

39 From thirty years old and upward, unto fifty years old, all that go in to minister in the tabernacle of the covenant:

40 And they were found two thousand six hundred and thirty.

41 This is the people of the Gersonites, whom Moses and Aaron numbered according to the word of the Lord.

42 The sons of Merari also were numbered by the kindreds and houses of their fathers,

43 From thirty years old and upward, unto fifty years old, all that go in to fulfil the rites of the tabernacle of the covenant:

44 And they were found three thousand two hundred.

45 This is the number of the sons of Merari, whom Moses and Aaron reckoned up, according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

46 All that were reckoned up of the Levites, and whom Moses and Aaron and the princes of Israel took by name, by the kindreds and houses of their fathers,

47 From thirty years old and upward, unto fifty years old, that go in to the ministry of the tabernacle, and to carry the burdens, 48 Were in all eight thousand five hundred and eighty.

49 Moses seckoned them up according to the word of the Lord, every one according to their office and burdens, as the Lord had commanded him.

CHAP. V.

The unclean are removed out of the camp: confession of sins, and satisfaction: first-fruits and oblations belong to the priests: trial of jealousy.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Command the children of Israel, that they

CHAP. V. VER. 2. Camp; in the midst of which God had fixed his tabernacle. See Lev. xvi. 16. Some pretend that these unclean persons were only excluded from the camp of the Lord, and from that of the Levites, which occupied 2000 cubits round the tabernacle. But God will not permit any of the camp to be defiled by such people. They were to absent themselves for seven days, and then wash themselves, &c. C. xix. 11. If lepers be excluded from the camp, how much more do heretics deserve to be cast out of the Church! Theod. q. 8. W.

VER. 3. It. Heb. "their camps, in the midst of which I dwell." C.

VER. 6. To commit, against one another, v. 7. S. Aug. q. 9. When the thing is secret, so that the judges cannot take cognizance of it, the offender must nevertheless abide by the decision of the priest. Moses condemns him who had stolen an ox to restore it with another, or even to give five oxen, if he have not the one stolen in his possession. Ex. xxii. 1. 4. H.—Here to reward the sincerity of the man, who confesses his private fault, he only requires the thing itself to be restored, with a fifth part besides. C.—Negligence, not with contempt; (M.) though he knows that he is transgressing the divine and natural law. T.

VER. 7. Shall confess. This confession and satisfaction, ordained in the old law, was a figure of the sacrament of penance. Ch.—A special confession of their sin, with satisfaction, and a sacrifice, are required. So Christ orders us to lay open our consciences to his priests. S. John xx., &c. W.

VER. 8. But if. Moses does not mention this case. Lev. vi. 2. 5. Here he determines that the heirs, if known, must be entitled to the restitution. A Hebrew could not die without an heir; but a proselyte might, and then restitution was to be made to God. The Rabbins say, that when the person injured was already dead, the offender took 10 persons with him to the grave of the deceased, and said, "I have sinned against the Lord and against N.; I have injured him thus." After which he gave what was due to his heirs; or, if none could be found, to the house of judgment or the judges, who might restore it, if any claimant appeared afterwards.

VER. 9. First-fruits; (teruma), a term which comprises also voluntary obla-cast out of the camp every leper, and whosoever hath an issue of seed, or is defiled by the dead:

3 Whether it be man or woman, cast ye them out of the camp, lest they defile it when I shall dwell with you.

4 And the children of Israel did so, and they cast them forth without the camp, as the Lord had spoken to Moses.

5 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

6 Say to the children of Israel: When a man or woman shall have committed any of all the sins that men are wont to commit, and by negligence shall have transgressed the commandment of the Lord, and offended,

7 They shall confess their sin, and restore the principal itself, and the fifth part over and above, to him against whom they have sinned.

8 But if there be no one to receive it, they shall give it to the Lord, and it shall be the priest's, besides the ram that is offered for expiation, to be an atoning sacrifice.

9 All the first-fruits also, which the children of Israel offer, belong to the priest:

10 And whatsoever is offered into the sanctuary by every one, and is delivered into the hands of the priest, it shall be his.

11 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

12 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: The man whose wife shall have gone astray, and contemning her husband,

13 Shall have slept with another man, and her husband cannot discover it, but the adultery is secret, and cannot be proved by witnesses, because she was not found in the adultery:

14 If the spirit of jealousy stir up the husband against his wife, who either is defiled, or is charged with false suspicion,

15 He shall bring her to the priest, and shall offer an oblation for her, the tenth part of a measure of barley meal: he shall not pour oil thereon, nor put tions of all sorts, and the parts of the victims which belong to the priests; unless the person offering expressed a different intention. C.

VER. 14. The spirit of jealousy, &c. This ordinance was designed to clear the innocent, and to prevent jealous husbands from doing mischief to their wives: as likewise to give all a horror of adultery, by punishing it in so remarkable a manner. Ch.—The spirit of jealousy, of fear, &c. denotes those passions of the soul. This very remarkable law of Moses suited the genius of his people, (C.) and tended greatly to restrain the infidelity of the married couple, and the fury of suspicious husbands. Theod. q. 10. God was pleased, by a continual miracle, to manifest the truth, on this occasion, provided the husband were not also guilty: for, in that case, the Rabbins assert, the waters had no effect. They relate many particularities, which seem contrary to Philo and Josephus, who inform us that the trial was still made in their time, though the former writers pretend that it was disused, on account of the many adulteries which were committed, in the age preceding the destruction of the temple by Titus. They say that the person who had committed the crime with the woman, died at the same time that the bitter waters put an end to her existence. When the suspected person was brought before the Sanhedrim, they tried, by all means, to extort a confession from her. But if she persisted in maintaining her innocence, they made her stand in black, before the eastern gate of the court, denouncing to her what she had to expect. If she answered Amen, the priest wrote the imprecations (v. 19-22), on vellum, with ink, which had no mixture of vitriol in it; and taking water from the laver, and dust from the court, with something bitter, like wormwood, effaced the writing in a new earthen vessel; while another priest tore her garments as far as the breast, and tied them up with an Egyptian cord, to remind her of the miracles wrought by God. If she confessed the crime before the writing was effaced, she was to be repudiated, without any dowry; or, if she kept company with a suspected person, contrary to her husband's admonition, after she had come off victorious from drinking the bitter waters, she was subjected to the same punishment, and could not demand to be admitted any more to make the miraculous experiment. See Selden, Uxor. iii. 13.

VER. 15. Measure, (sati). Heb. and Sept. "ephah," of which the measure was frankincense upon it: because it is a sacrifice of jealousy, and an oblation searching out adultery.

16 The priest therefore shall offer it, and set it before the Lord.

17 And he shall take holy water in an earthen vessel, and he shall cast a little earth of the pavement of the tabernacle into it.

18 And when the woman shall stand before the Lord, he shall uncover her head, and shall put on her hands the sacrifice of remembrance, and the oblation of jealousy: and he himself shall hold the most bitter waters, whereon he hath heaped curses with execration.

19 And he shall adjure her, and shall say: If another man hath not slept with thee, and if thou be not defiled by forsaking thy husband's bed, these most bitter waters, on which I have heaped curses, shall not hurt thee.

20 But if thou hast gone aside from thy husband, and art defiled, and hast lain with another man:

21 These curses shall light upon thee: The Lord make thee a curse, and an example for all among his people: may he make thy thigh to rot, and may thy belly swell and burst asunder.

22 Let the cursed waters enter into thy belly, and may thy womb swell and thy thigh rot. And the woman shall answer: Amen, amen.

23 And the priest shall write these curses in a book, and shall wash them out with the most bitter waters, upon which he hath heaped the curses, only one-third. C.—Oil, &c. These were rejected in sacrifices for sin. Lev. v. 11. Jealous husbands have no sentiments of commiseration, or of sweetness; (H.) nor can any experience the emotions of joy, while they are in such a situation. T.

VER. 17—18. Holy water, destined for sacred uses, which is called most bitter, v. 18, (M.) and cursed, (v. 22,) on account of the imprecations used to detect the guilty. W.—Earth, to shew the woman, that if she had been unfaithful, she deserved to be trod upon as dung. Eccles. ix. 10.—Head, that she may remember all is naked before the Lord. M.—Heb. may signify, "he shall cut the hair of her head," (see Lev. x. 6. C.) or take off her veil. Joseph. iii. 10. H.—Remembrance, by which God was requested to manifest the truth, either by punishing or by rewarding the woman, v. 15, 28. M.—Bitter, either on account of the wormwood, or because of their effects on the guilty. C.

VER. 19. Adjure. The woman was put to her oath. Josephus. H.

VER. 21. Curse. Heb. "an object of execration, and an oath," &c. so that people can wish no greater misfortune to befall any one, than what thou shalt endure. H.

VER. 22. Amen. Our Saviour often uses this form, to confirm what he says, verily, truly. The woman gives her assent to what had been proposed, "so be it." C.

VER. 23. Book. Heb. sepher, may also denote a board covered with wax, which was used as one of the most ancient modes of writing. C.—Josephus says, the priest wrote the name of God on parchment, and washed it out in the bitter waters.

VER. 24. Up. Heb. "and the water, which causeth the malediction, shall enter into her, bitter." According to Josephus, the jealous husband threw first a handful of the gomer of barley flour, upon the altar, and gave the rest to the priest; and after the other ceremonies were finished, the woman drunk the water, and either had a son within ten months, or died with the marks of infamy. B. iii. 11. Edit. Bern. Some Rabbins say she became livid and rotten, though she might linger on part of the year. Sotā. iii. But if she proved innocent, she acquired fresh beauty and health, and was delivered with ease of a son. Maimon. H.

VER. 27. Through her. Heb. "into her," exerting all their efficacy.

VER. 28. Children, that her husband may love her the more, and she may receive some compensation, for the stain thrown upon her character. M.—We do not read in Scripture that any was ever subjected to this trial. The method of giving a bill of divorce was more easy. C.

VER. 31. Blameless. To act in conformity with God's injunctions could not be reprehensible. But it would have been certainly criminal to tempt God in this manner, in order to discover a secret offence, if he had not authorized it expressly. If the husband wished to avoid the displeasure of God, he was bound to banish from his heart all malice, rash judgments, &c. The permission here granted, was owing to the hardness of heart of this stiff-necked people, as well as the laws regarding divorces and retaliation. Women, being of a more fickle and suspicious temper, are not indulged with the privilege of divorcing their husbands, or of making them drink the waters of jealousy. But if a man were taken in the act of adultery, he was put to death. Lev. xx. 10. The crime is equal in both parties. "The husband" says Lactantius, (de V. Culti. xxiii.) ought, by the re-

24 And he shall give them her to drink. And when she hath drunk them up,

25 The priest shall take from her hand the sacrifice of jealousy, and shall elevate it before the Lord, and shall put it upon the altar: yet so as first,

26 To take a handful of the sacrifice of that which is offered, and burn it upon the altar: and so give the most bitter waters to the woman to drink.

27 And when she hath drunk them, if she be defiled, and having despised her husband be guilty of adultery, the malediction shall go through her, and her bell, swelling, her thigh shall rot: and the woman shall be a curse, and an example to all the people.

28 But if she be not defiled, she shall not be hurt, and shall bear children.

29 This is the law of jealousy. If a woman hath gone aside from her husband, and be defiled,

30 And the husband, stirred up by the spirit of jealousy, bring her before the Lord, and the priest do to her according to all the things that are here written:

31 The husband shall be blameless, and she shall bear her iniquity.

CHAP. VI.

The law of the Nazarites: the form of blessing the people

AND the Lord spoke to Moses,* saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: When a man, or woman, shall make a vow to be sanctified, and will consecrate themselves to the Lord:

* A. M. 2514.

gularity of his conduct, to shew his wife what she owes him. For it is very unjust to exact from another, what you do not practise yourself. This injustice is the cause of the disorders, into which married women sometimes fall. They are vexed at being obliged to continue faithful to those, who will not be so to them." The Romans would not allow wives to bring an action against their husbands. "You would kill, with impunity, your wife taken in adultery, without any trial, said Cato, and she would not dare to touch you with her finger, if you fell into the same crime." Gell. x. 23. The authority which was given to husbands over their wives, was deemed a sufficient restraint; and men being obliged to be often from home, and in company, would have been exposed to continual alarms, from the suspicious temper of their wives, if they had been subjected to the like trials. C.—In latter ages, however, the Jewish ladies began to assume the right of divorcing their husbands, in imitation of Salome, sister of Herod the great, and of Herodias, his grand-daughter. Mait. xiv. 3. Joseph. Ant. xv. 11. xviii. 7. Grotius supposes that the Samaritan woman had divorced her five husbands. Jo. iv. 18. But this being contrary to the law, her first marriage alone subsisted. T.—Her iniquity, in giving her husband any grounds of suspicion. The Rabbins observe, that he was bound first to admonish her, before witnesses, not to keep company with people of bad character; and if he could bring witnesses that she had been found afterwards with them for ever so short a time, he might have the remedy of the law. The pagans maintained, that several of their fountains and rivers had the power of disclosing and punishing perjury. Polemon mentions a fountain of this nature in Sicily; and Solinus (C. xi.) says, that one in Sardinia caused the perjured to go blind. The waters of the Styx were greatly feared on this account. Hesiod, Theog. 783. Tatitus (vii. 20.) mentions some other fountains, which had the same effects as the bitter waters. C.—The various ordeal trials which were formerly in use, were probably established in imitation of this law of Moses; but not having the same authority or sanction, they were in danger of being looked upon as superstitious. H.

CHAP. VI. VER. 2. Sanctified, and separated from the common sort of people, and obliged to observe abstinence like the Nazarites, as the Heb. intimates in one word, nazir. All this was done to acquire greater sanctity and perfection. Sept. "whoever has made a great vow to be very pure to the Lord," and intends thus to signalize his zeal for God's glory. The original term, means also to distinguish oneself by a wonderful thing. There were Nazarites for life, like Samson and S. John the Baptist; and others for a limited time, like S. Paul. Their abstinence from wine, &c. lasted generally for a month, and was to be performed at Jerusalem. Those of the female sex could not bind themselves by vow, till they were ten years and a day old, nor boys before they were full 18. The custom of cutting the hair, in honour of some god, was very common among the pagans, and S. Cyril (de ador. 16.) seems to think that the Hebrews had seen it practised in Egypt, and that Moses judged it expedient to let them do so for the sake of the true God, in order to divert their minds from giving way to superstition. C.—The Hebrews made vows to abstain from wine for 30 days, and then to offer sacrifices, and to cut their hair, when they were attacked by any dangerous illness. Joseph. Bel. ii. 15. S. Paul perhaps made a vow of this nature, in the perils of the sea. Act. xviii. 11. Spencer, Rit. iii. 6. Juvenal alludes to this

3 They shall abstain from wine, and from every thing that may make a man drunk. They shall not drink vinegar of wine, or of any other drink, nor any thing that is pressed out of the grape: nor shall they eat grapes either fresh or dried.

4 All the days that they are consecrated to the Lord by vow: they shall eat nothing that cometh of the vineyard, from the raisin even to the kernel.

5 All the time of his separation, * no razor shall pass over his head until the day be fulfilled of his consecration to the Lord. He shall be holy, and shall let the hair of his head grow.

6 All the time of his consecration he shall not go in to any dead,

7 Neither shall he make himself unclean, even for his father, or for his mother, or for his brother, or for his sister, when they die, because the consecration of his God is upon his head.

8 All the days of his separation he shall be holy to the Lord.

9 But if any man die suddenly before him, the head of his consecration shall be defiled: and he shall shave it forthwith on the same day of his purification, and again the seventh day.

10 And on the eighth day he shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons, to the priest in the entry of the covenant of the testimony,

11 And the priest shall offer one for sin, and the other for a holocaust, and shall pray for him, for that he hath sinned by the dead: and he shall sanctify his head that day:

12 And shall consecrate to the Lord the days of his separation, offering a lamb of one year for sin: yet so that the former days be made void, because his sanctification was profaned.

13 This is the law of consecration. When the days which he had determined by vow shall be expired, he shall bring him to the door of the tabernacle of the covenant,

14 And shall offer his oblation to the Lord: one he-lamb of a year old, without blemish, for a holocaust, and one ewe-lamb of a year old, without blemish, for a sin-offering, and one ram, without blemish, for a victim of peace-offering,

15 A basket also of unleavened bread, tempered with oil, and wafers without leaven anointed with oil, and the libations of each:

16 And the priest shall present them before the Lord, and shall offer both the sin-offering and the holocaust.

17 But the ram he shall immolate for a sacrifice of peace-offering to the Lord, offering at the same time the basket of unleavened bread, and the libations that are due by custom.

18 ^bThen shall the hair of the consecration of the Nazarite, be shaved off before the door of the tabernacle of the covenant: and he shall take his hair, and lay it upon the fire, which is under the sacrifice of the peace offerings.

19 And shall take the boiled shoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and he shall deliver them into the hands of the Nazarite, after his head is shaven.

20 And receiving them again from him, he shall elevate them in the sight of the Lord: and they being sanctified shall belong to the priest, as the breast, which was commanded to be separated, and the shoulder. After this the Nazarite may drink wine.

21 This is the law of the Nazarite, when he hath vowed his oblation to the Lord in the time of his consecration, besides those things which his hands shall find, according to that which he had vowed in his mind, so shall he do for the fulfilling of his sanctification.

22 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

23 Say to Aaron and his sons: Thus shall you bless the children of Israel, and you shall say to them:

24 *The Lord bless thee, and keep thee.

25 The Lord shew his face to thee, and have mercy on thee.

26 The Lord turn his countenance to thee, and give thee peace.

27 And they shall invoke my name upon the children of Israel, and I will bless them.

VER. 3. Drunk. Heb. shecar, may signify old or palm wine. Lev. x. 9.—Drink. Heb. "of shecar," which was a clear wine, with perhaps a mixture of sugar.—Vinegar was a common beverage among the ancients. Plin. xiv. 16. Ruth ii. 14. The soldiers gave our Saviour some of theirs to drink. The Turks, who are not allowed to drink wine of the grape, make use of various other sorts of made wine.—Grape, or the liquor procured from grapes, with a mixture of water, after they have served already to make wine. This liquor is called secondary wine by the Greeks, (M.) being designed for labourers in winter. Varro 54, and Colum. xii. 40. Grapes of every description are forbidden to the Nazarites, as they either tend to inebriate, or at least are too luxurious. H.—God deigns to give those a rule, who voluntarily consecrate themselves to his service. "What do the Nazarites designate, but the life of those who abstain, and are continent?" S. Greg. Mor. xxxii. 23. W.

VER. 4. Kernel, or stone. Neither the inside nor the outside must be eaten. VER. 5. Grow. At the commencement, and at the end of the Nazariteship, the hair was cut; though perhaps a sort of crown was left at the top of the head, as the 7th verse may be rendered, "the crown of his God," &c. C.—The Nazarite is under the same regulations as the high priest, with respect to any corpse. v. 6. Maimon. More. p. 3. Lev. xxi. 11. Both were consecrated to God in the most perfect manner. M.—When the hair of Samson was cut off, he immediately lost his supernatural strength. Jud. xvi.

VER. 6. Dead. To teach us that those who are consecrated to God, ought to abstain from the works of death. H.

VER. 9. Day. That none might escape; (Theod. q. 11,) though the Heb. may imply that the hair was only shaved on the ninth day, when he was to be purified. C. xix. 12. Then the Nazarite had to begin again, as if he had done nothing, (C.) if his vow were only for a time. Those who had taken a vow for life never shaved.

VER. 11. Sinned. Contracting a legal uncleanness.—That day, and commence his vow. M.

VER. 13. He. The priest.

VER. 18. Fire, on the altar, where the ram has been sacrificed. Abulensis. Lyranus thinks it was burnt on the fire, with which the meat was boiled. M. Chaldee. T.—The Sept., Philo. &c. understand it in the former sense; and Theodoret says the consecrated hair was placed upon the victim on the fire. C.

VER. 20. Priest, contrary to what was required in other sacrifices. Joseph. iv. 4. Both the priest and the Nazarite waved the sacrifice towards the four quarters of the world.

VER. 21. Mind. If he have vowed any thing more, he must perform it. H.

VER. 23. Sons. The three forms of benediction for the high priests, have all the same meaning, and they might choose which they pleased. Grætius observes, that they pronounced them aloud standing, with their hands lifted up. The books of Moses are the ritual of the priests.

VER. 25. Shew. Heb. "make his face shine," joyful and serene, (C.) like a light to direct thy steps. Ps. lvi. 2.

VER. 27. Invoke. Heb. "they shall name my name (Yehovah, in pronouncing blessings) upon the sons of Israel," which I will ratify. H.—"They shall place the blessing of my name," &c. Chal. They shall praise my name. C.—God authorizes us to use a determinate form of blessing, and grants the

The offerings of the princes at the dedication of the tabernacle: God speaketh to Moses from the propitiatory.

AND it came to pass in the day^a that Moses had finished the tabernacle, and set it up, and had anointed and sanctified it with all its vessels, the altar likewise and all the vessels thereof,

2 The princes of Israel and the heads of the families, in every tribe, who were the rulers of them who had been numbered, offered^b

3 Their gifts before the Lord, six waggons covered, and twelve oxen. Two princes offered one waggon, and each one an ox, and they offered them before the tabernacle.

4 And the Lord said to Moses:

5 Receive them from them to serve in the ministry of the tabernacle, and thou shalt deliver them to the Levites according to the order of their ministry.

6 Moses therefore receiving the waggons and the oxen, delivered them to the Levites.

7 Two waggons and four oxen he gave to the sons of Gerson, according to their necessity.

8 The other four waggons, and eight oxen, he gave to the sons of Merari, according to their offices and service, under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron, the priest.

9 But to the sons of Caath he gave no waggons or oxen: because they serve in the sanctuary, and carry their burdens upon their own shoulders.

10 And the princes offered for the dedication of the altar, on the day when it was anointed, their oblation before the altar.

11 And the Lord said to Moses: Let each of the princes, one day after another, offer their gifts for the dedication of the altar.

12 The first day Nahasson, the son of Aminadab, of the tribe of Juda, offered his offering:

13 And his offering was a silver dish, weighing one hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

14 A little mortar, of ten sicles of gold, full of incense:

15 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

16 And a buck-goat for sin:

17 And for the sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of a year old.

^a Exod. xl. 16.

This was the offering of Nahasson, the son of Aminadab.

18 The second day Nathanael, the son of Suar prince of the tribe of Issachar, made his offering:

19 A silver dish, weighing one hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

20 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

21 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

22 And a buck-goat for sin:

23 And for the sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Nathanael, the son of Suar.

24 The third day the prince of the sons of Zabulon, Eliab, the son of Helon, 25 Offered a silver dish, weighing one hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, by the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

26 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

27 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

28 And a buck-goat for sin:

29 And for the sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This is the oblation of Eliab, the son of Helon.

30 The fourth day the prince of the sons of Ruben, Elisur, the son of Seducur,

31 Offered a silver dish, weighing one hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

32 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

33 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

34 And a buck-goat for sin:

35 And for victims of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Elisur, the son of Seducur.

36 The fifth day the prince of the sons of Simeon, Salamei, the son of Surisaddai, 37 Offered a silver dish, weighing one hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, after the effect, when his minister pronounces it, (W.) if no obstacle be put by the party. H.

CHAP. VII. VER. 1. The day. The second of the second month, the year after the Hebrews left Egypt. We might read this chapter immediately after the 10th of Leviticus.

VER. 3. Covered. Destined to carry some parts of the tabernacle. C.—The Sept. use a term which, according to Hesychius, denotes the chariots in which people of quality travelled, Lampenes. M.

VER. 8. Four. The sons of Merari were not very numerous, (C. iv. 44.) and they had the heaviest parts of the tabernacle to carry. The metal alone would weigh 274,875 Roman pounds, of 12 ounces each; not to mention the pillars, &c. If 100 waggons carried each 3000 pounds, and every man 50, they would not carry one half; so that the people must have furnished them with many more waggons besides these four of the princes. Jansen. C.—Abulensis thinks the Merarites carried all that was not laid on the four waggons. M.

VER. 9. Serve in removing the most sacred vessels of the sanctuary. C. iv. 4. —Shoulders, out of respect. Yet the ark itself was placed on a cart, (2 K. vi. 3. H.) improperly. D.

VER. 10. The day. About that time; the ceremony lasted at least 12 days. v. 84. T.

VER. 11. Altar of holocausts, the dedication of which continued seven days. Ex. xxix. 36. M.

VER. 13. Dish, (acetabulum.) Heb. kaharath. See Ex. xxv. 29. This present of the prince of Juda weighed five Roman pounds. It was of silver, and consequently could not be used in the sanctuary, but in the court, (C.) at the altar of holocausts. T.

VER. 14. Mortar. Heb. caph, which the Vulgate commonly renders phiala, "a cup," (M.) may signify a spoon for incense, as it generally accompanies the censers. 3 K. vii. 20. It means literally "the palm of the hand." The high priest took his hands full of incense on the day of expiation. Lev. xvi. 12. But on other occasions, a spoon was probably used to throw incense on the altar, or on the coals which were burning in the censers. C.

VER. 23. Buck-goats, (hircos). The same as the he-goats given by Nahasson. The presents of all the 12 princes are equal; and Moses mentions them in detail with equal honour. They give them according to the order in which they encamped. Juda, with his two tribes, first; then Ruben, &c.

weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

38 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

39 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

40 And a buck-goat for sin:

41 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Salamiel, the son of Suri-saddai.

42 The sixth day the prince of the sons of Gad, Elisaph, the son of Duel,

43 Offered a silver dish, weighing a hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, by the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

44 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

45 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

46 And a buck-goat for sin:

47 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Eliasaph, the son of Duel.

48 The seventh day the prince of the sons of Ephraim, Elisama, the son of Ammiud,

49 Offered a silver dish, weighing a hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

50 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

51 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

52 And a buck-goat for sin:

53 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Elisama, the son of Ammiud.

54 The eighth day the prince of the sons of Manasses, Gamaliel, the son of Phadassur,

55 Offered a silver dish, weighing a hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

56 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

57 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

58 And a buck-goat for sin:

59 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Gamaliel, the son of Phadassur.

60 The ninth day the prince of the sons of Benjamin, Abidan, the son of Gedeon,

61 Offered a silver dish, weighing a hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, by the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

62 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

63 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

64 And a buck-goat for sin:

65 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Abidan, the son of Gedeon.

66 The tenth day the prince of the sons of Dan, Ahiezer, the son of Ammisaddai,

67 Offered a silver dish, weighing a hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

68 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

69 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

70 And a buck-goat for sin:

71 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Ahiezer, the son of Ammisaddai.

72 The eleventh day the prince of the sons of Aser, Phegiel, the son of Ochran,

73 Offered a silver dish, weighing a hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

74 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

75 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

76 And a buck-goat for sin:

77 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Phegiel, the son of Ochran.

78 The twelfth day the prince of the sons of Nephthali, Ahira, the son of Enan,

79 Offered a silver dish, weighing a hundred and thirty sicles, a silver bowl of seventy sicles, according to the weight of the sanctuary, both full of flour tempered with oil, for a sacrifice:

80 A little mortar of gold, weighing ten sicles, full of incense:

81 An ox of the herd, and a ram, and a lamb of a year old for a holocaust:

82 And a buck-goat for sin:

83 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five buck-goats, five lambs of a year old. This was the offering of Ahira, the son of Enan.

84 These were the offerings made by the princes of Israel, in the dedication of the altar, in the day wherein it was consecrated. Twelve dishes of silver: twelve silver bowls: twelve little mortars of gold:

85 Each dish weighing a hundred and thirty sicles of silver, and each bowl seventy sicles: that is, putting all the vessels of silver together, two thousand four hundred sicles, by the weight of the sanctuary.

86 Twelve little mortars of gold, full of incense, weighing ten sicles a piece, by the weight of the sanctuary: that is, in all, a hundred and twenty sicles of gold.

87 Twelve oxen out of the herd for a holocaust twelve rams, twelve lambs of a year old, and their libations: twelve buck-goats for sin.

38 And for sacrifices of peace-offerings, oxen twenty-four, rams sixty, buck-goats sixty, lambs of a year old sixty. These things were offered in the dedication of the altar, when it was anointed.

89 And when Moses entered into the tabernacle of the covenant, to consult the oracle, he heard the voice of one speaking to him from the propitiatory, that was over the ark between the two cherubims, and from this place he spoke to him.

CHAP. VIII.

The seven lamps are placed on the golden candlestick, to shine towards the loaves of proposition: the ordination of the Levites: and at what age they shall serve in the tabernacle.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Speak to Aaron, and thou shalt say to him: When thou shalt place the seven lamps, let the candlestick be set up on the south side. Give orders, therefore, that the lamps look over-against the north, towards the table of the loaves of proposition, over-against that part shall they give light, towards which the candlestick looketh.

3 And Aaron did so, and he put the lamps upon the candlestick, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

4 Now this was the work of the candlestick, it was of beaten gold, both the shaft in the middle, and all that came out of both sides of the branches: according to the pattern which the Lord had shewn to Moses, so he made the candlestick.

5 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

6 Take the Levites out of the midst of the children of Israel, and thou shalt purify them,

7 According to this rite: Let them be sprinkled with the water of purification, and let them shave all the hairs of their flesh. And when they shall have washed their garments, and are cleansed,

8 They shall take an ox of the herd, and for the offering thereof, fine flour tempered with oil: and thou shalt take another ox of the herd for a sin-offering:

9 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the covenant, calling together all the multitude of the children of Israel:

10 And when the Levites are before the Lord, the children of Israel shall put their hands upon them:

11 And Aaron shall offer the Levites, as a gift in the sight of the Lord, from the children of Israel, that they may serve in his ministry.

12 The Levites also shall put their hands upon the heads of the oxen, of which thou shalt sacrifice one for sin, and the other for a holocaust of the Lord, to pray for them.

13 And thou shalt set the Levites in the sight of Aaron and of his sons, and shalt consecrate them, being offered to the Lord, 14 And shalt separate them from the midst of the children of Israel, to be mine.

15 And afterwards they shall enter into the tabernacle of the covenant, to serve me. And thus shalt thou purify and consecrate them for an oblation of the Lord: for as a gift they were given me by the children of Israel.

16 ^bI have taken them instead of the first-born that open every womb in Israel:

17 For all the first-born of the children of Israel, both of men and of beasts, are mine. From the day that I slew every first-born in the land of Egypt, have I sanctified them to myself:

18 And I have taken the Levites for all the first born of the children of Israel:

19 And have delivered them for a gift to Aaron and his sons out of the midst of the people, to serve me for Israel in the tabernacle of the covenant, and to pray for them, lest there should be a plague among the people, if they should presume to approach unto my sanctuary.

20 And Moses and Aaron, and all the multitude of the children of Israel, did with the Levites all that the Lord had commanded Moses:

21 And they were purified, and washed their garments. And Aaron lifted them up in the sight of the Lord, and prayed for them,

VER. 89. Oracle of God, whose majesty appeared, in the form of a bright cloud, upon the propitiatory, or mercy-seat. H.—Moses is allowed to enter in quality of God's messenger, to announce his will to the people; or perhaps he heard the mandates of God, standing without the veil. D.

CHAP. VIII. VER. 2. Looketh. This candlestick stood on the south side, with one branch extending towards the altar of incense, on the east, and the other to the west, so as to give light to the loaves of proposition, on the north. Ex. xxv. 31. C.—It was intended to illumine the holy of holies, where a sort of feast was prepared for God, and where no windows were found. M.—Heb. simply, "When thou lightest the lamps, the seven lamps shall give light over against," upon, or near to "the candlestick." H.—The lamps might be separated from the branches and stem of the candlestick. D.

VER. 7. Let them be sprinkled with the water of purification. This was the holy water, mixed with the ashes of the red cow, (Num. xix.) appointed for purifying all that were unclean. It was a figure of the blood of Christ, applied to our souls by his holy sacraments. Ch.—Purification, (ustrationis) or "expiation." The water, mixed with ashes, was taken and sprinkled round about the houses, and upon those persons who wished either to be cleansed from some defilement, or to advance in virtue and purity. We use salt instead of ashes. Theocritus (Idyl. xxiv. 100.) puts these words in the mouth of Tiresias, "then mixt with salt, according to the law, with a green branch sprinkle the honoured and pure water, and sacrifice to the supreme Jupiter a hog, if you wish to gain the victory over your adversaries."—Flesh, to remind them that they must cut off all superfluous thoughts, the roots of which they will however never be able to destroy entirely, as S. Greg. (Mor. v. 23,) says, "the flesh always produces superfluities, which the spirit must always cut away with the sword of solicitude." See Lev. xiv. 8. xxi. 5. 10. H.—The priests serving in the temple, were obliged to cut their hair every month; and the Levites probably observed the same regulation, to acknowledge, that they who approached to God, must be pure and detached from earthly cares, (C.) and particularly from the works of sin; to remind them of which, they were to be sprinkled with water, their garments washed, and they were to offer two oxen by the hands of Aaron, and to be lifted up or offered to God, to serve in his court. T.

VER. 10. Upon them. Some of the princes performed this ceremony, to testify that they gave up the Levites to serve God, (v. 15,) and would not be answerable, if they were guilty of any irreverence or neglect. C.—They offered them as a sort of sacrifice for the people, (M.) and gave their approbation to them, setting them at liberty. D. v. 14. 20.

VER. 11. A gift. Heb. "he shall heave them as a heave-offering before the Lord." Some assert, that Aaron lifted each of them towards the four quarters of the world; (v. 21,) or he made them go up towards the altar, and on each side. This ceremony was performed whenever a Levite was taken into the ministry. 2 Par. xxix. 34.

VER. 12. Thou, Moses, though the Heb. here seems to refer it to Aaron, "he shall." But the Sept. and Arab. agree with the Vulg. and the context shews that Moses is the person (C.) who had chiefly to officiate. Aaron also performed his part, v. 11. H.

VER. 14. Mine. Free from the burdens of the state, and employed in singing and keeping the doors of the sanctuary. M.

VER. 15. Into, or "towards, about;" for the priests alone could enter in. Heb. "The Levites shall go in (or be admitted) to do the service of the tabernacle," and to remove it, &c. H. v. 19.

VER. 21. Lifted. Heb. tenupha, Ex. xxix. 24. Perhaps only a few were received at once. M.—Prayed. Heb. means also "to expiate or redeem," as v. 19.

22 That being purified, they might go into the tabernacle of the covenant, to do their services before Aaron and his sons. As the Lord had commanded Moses touching the Levites, so was it done.

23 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

24 This is the law of the Levites: From twenty-five years old and upwards, they shall go in to minister in the tabernacle of the covenant.

25 And when they shall have accomplished the fiftieth year of their age, they shall cease to serve:

26 And they shall be the ministers of their brethren in the tabernacle of the covenant, to keep the things that are committed to their care, but not to do the works. Thus shalt thou order the Levites touching their charge.

CHAP. IX.

The precept of the pasch is renewed: the unclean, and travellers, are to observe it the second month: the camp is guided by the pillar of the cloud.

THE Lord spoke to Moses^a in the desert of Sinai, the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, in the first month, saying:

2^b Let the children of Israel make the Phase in its due time,

3 The fourteenth day of this month in the evening, according to all the ceremonies and justifications thereof.

4 And Moses commanded the children of Israel that they should make the Phase.

5 And they made it in its proper time: the fourteenth day of the month at evening, in Mount Sinai. The children of Israel did according to all things that the Lord had commanded Moses.

6 But behold some who were unclean by occasion of the soul of a man, who could not make the Phase on that day, coming to Moses and Aaron,

7 Said to them: We are unclean by occasion of the soul of a man. Why are we kept back, that we may not offer in its season the offering to the Lord among the children of Israel?

CHAP. IX. VER. 1. The Lord. The 15 first verses might be placed at the head of this book. God gave orders to celebrate the first passover in the desert, about the 14th of the first month, in the second year of liberty, soon after the consecration of the tabernacle. C.—This is the only passover which the Jews are recorded to have celebrated during the 40 years' sojournment; as they were not allowed to celebrate it, without having circumcised all the males of their family, (Ex. xii. 43,) which they could not do in the wilderness, (His cuni, &c.) being uncertain how soon they would have to remove by the direction of God. H.—First month. Hence, Moses does not always observe the order of time, as he spoke (C. i.) of what happened in the second month. D.

VER. 2. Make the Phase. That is, keep the paschal solemnity, and eat the paschal lamb.

VER. 3. In the. Heb. "between the two evenings." Ex. xii. 6. Sept. "towards the evening, in its season, according to its law, and determination," sugkivn, (v. 14,) suntaein, "arrangement;" in both places we have justifications. H.—God's law is so called, because nothing can be done right without it. M.—The merit of human actions depends on their conformity with the will of God; (D.) and when he gives directions, we must comply exactly. H.

VER. 5. In Mount. Heb. "desert (or mountainous country) of Sinai." Ex. xiv. 3. G.

VER. 6. Some. Heb. "and there was men," a solecism, rejected by the Sam. and Arab. copies. Houbigant.—Man. That is, by having touched, or come near, a dead body, out of which the soul was departed. Ch.—Such were forbidden to offer any sacrifice. Lev. xxii. 4. Yet they could not refrain from burying the dead. Philo. de vita Mos. 3. As, therefore, the action was far from being criminal, and they had partaken of the paschal lamb without restriction, in Egypt and heard that God required all to offer this sacrifice, under pain of 8 And Moses answered them: Stay, that I may consult the Lord what he will ordain concerning you.

9 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

10 Say to the children of Israel: The man that shall be unclean by occasion of one that is dead, or shall be in a journey afar off in your nation, let him make the Phase to the Lord,

11 In the second month, in the fourteenth day of the month, in the evening, they shall eat it with unleavened bread and wild lettuce:

12 They shall not leave any thing thereof until morning, nor break a bone thereof, they shall observe all the ceremonies of the Phase.

13 But if any man is clean, and was not on a journey, and did not make the Phase, that soul shall be cut off from among his people, because he offered not sacrifice to the Lord in due season: he shall bear his sin.

14 The sojourner also, and the stranger, if they be among you, shall make the Phase to the Lord, according to the ceremonies and justifications thereof. The same ordinance shall be with you, both for the stranger, and for him that was born in the land.

15 Now on the day that the tabernacle was reared up, a cloud covered it. But from the evening there was over the tabernacle, as it were, the appearance of fire, until the morning.

16 So it was always: by day the cloud covered it, and by night as it were the appearance of fire.

17 And when the cloud that covered the tabernacle was taken up, then the children of Israel marched forward: and in the place where the cloud stood still, there they camped.

18 At the commandment of the Lord they marched, and at his commandment they pitched the tabernacle. All the days that the cloud abode over the tabernacle, they remained in the same place:

19 And if it was so that it continued over it a long time, the children of Israel kept the watches of the Lord, and marched not,

20 For as many days soever as the cloud staid over excision, (v. 18,) they reasonably wished to know how they were to act, particularly as the 14th of Nisan alone was appointed for this sacrifice, and they could not be purified in less than seven days. If the law, by which they were excluded from the camp, (C. v. 2,) were already published, they consulted Moses by some friend. The Rabbins suppose, that those who buried Nadab and Abihu, are meant. C.—The common people did not properly offer a sacrifice, though they might kill the victim. D.

VER. 10. Unclean, in what manner soever. Philo.—Nation; or at a great distance, whether in the country or out of it. The Rabbins say 15 miles, or leagues, (C.) which make 45 miles. H.—Sept. all such were bound to observe the passover in the second month, as the whole people did under Ezechias; (2 Par. xxx.) though the Rabbins falsely pretend, that when the greater part of the people were under this predicament, the law did not oblige, and they might eat the paschal lamb in the month of Nisan. Women were not bound to make the second Phase. Ex. xii. 19. C.—This festival was never to be transferred beyond the second month. M.

VER. 14. Stranger. Both the Jews who lived at a distance from the promised land, and those of other nations who had embraced their religion, were obliged to observe this law; while the uncircumcised were absolutely excluded. C.

VER. 15. A cloud, and fire, alternately covered the tabernacle of the covenant, which was 30 cubits long and 15 broad. The pagans, perhaps, hence took occasion to accuse the Jews of adoring the clouds. Nil præter nubis & cæli Numen adorant. Juv. Sat. xiv. C.

VER. 16. By day. These words are omitted in Heb.; but the context shews that they must necessarily be supplied; as they are in the Sept. The same cloud assumed different appearances. C.

VER. 20. For, &c. Heb. "and so it was when the cloud was days of number upon the tabernacle; by the mouth of the Lord they staid in their tents, &c." Days of number, yanim mispar, most probably means a few days; (see Dent. iv. 27,) though Louis de Dieu would translate "a full year;" as yanim, according to the tabernacle. At the commandment of the Lord they pitched their tents, and at his commandment they took them down.

21 If the cloud tarried from evening until morning, and immediately at break of day left the tabernacle, they marched forward: and if it departed, after a day and a night, they took down their tents.

22 But if it remained over the tabernacle for two days, or a month, or a longer time, the children of Israel remained in the same place, and marched not: but immediately as soon as it departed, they removed the camp.

23 By the word of the Lord they pitched their tents, and by his word they marched: and kept the watches of the Lord, according to his commandment by the hand of Moses.

CHAP. X.

The silver trumpets and their use. They march from Sinai.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, ^asaying:

2 Make thee two trumpets of beaten silver, wherewith thou mayst call together the multitude, when the camp is to be removed.

3 And when thou shalt sound the trumpets, all the multitude shall gather unto thee, to the door of the tabernacle of the covenant.

4 If thou sound but once, the princes and the heads of the multitude of Israel shall come to thee.

5 But if the sound of the trumpets be longer, and with interruptions, they that are on the east side, shall first go forward.

6 And at the second sounding and like noise of the trumpet, they who lie on the south side shall take up their tents. And after this manner shall the rest do, when the trumpets shall sound for a march.

7 But when the people is to be gathered together, the sound of the trumpets shall be plain, and they shall not make a broken sound.

8 And the sons of Aaron the priests shall sound the trumpets: and this shall be an ordinance for ever in your generations.

Josephus (iii. 11.) says, one was sounded to call the princes together, and the other to collect the people, which is not quite conformable to the Scripture. C.

VER. 6. And, &c. Heb. "they shall blow an alarm for their marches." This must be referred to the camps on the west, which proceeded forward at the third sounding, as those on the north did at the fourth, according to the Sept. H.

VER. 7. Sound. High mysteries must be reserved for the more learned. Theod. q. 15. W.

VER. 8. Priests. God's officers and heralds. Curtius (3) observes, that among the Persians at day-break, the signal was given from the king's tent by sound of trumpet.

VER. 9. Your God, who will reward your obedience with victory.

VER. 10. And on. This serves to explain what kind of banquet is meant. On the festivals of religion, peace-offerings were made, of which those who were 9 If you go forth to war out of your land, against the enemies that fight against you, you shall sound aloud with the trumpets, and there shall be a remembrance of you before the Lord your God, that you may be delivered out of the hands of your enemies.

10 If at any time you shall have a banquet, and on your festival days, and on the first days of your months, you shall sound the trumpets over the holocausts, and the sacrifices of peace-offerings, that they may be to you for a remembrance of your God. I am the Lord your God.

11 The second year, in the second month, the twentieth day of the month, the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle of the covenant.

12 And the children of Israel marched by their troops from the desert of Sinai, and the cloud rested in the wilderness of Pharan.

13 And the first went forward according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

14 ^bThe sons of Juda by their troops: whose prince was Nahasson, the son of Aminadab.

15 In the tribe of the sons of Issachar, the prince was Nathanael, the son of Suar.

16 In the tribe of Zabulon, the prince was Eliab, the son of Helon.

17 And the tabernacle was taken down, and the sons of Gerson and Merari set forward, bearing it.

18 And the sons of Ruben also marched, by their troops and ranks, whose prince was Helisur, the son of Seducur.

19 And in the tribe of Simeon, the prince was Salamiel, the son of Surisaddai.

20 And in the tribe of Gad, the prince was Eliasaph, the son of Duel.

21 Then the Caathites also marched, carrying the sanctuary. So long was the tabernacle carried, till they came to the place of setting it up.

22 The sons of Ephraim also moved their camp by their troops, in whose army the prince was Elisama, the son of Ammiud.

pure, might partake. H.—On solemn and extraordinary occasions, holocausts were also presented to God by the whole nation; and the trumpets announced these public rejoicings. 2 Par. v. 12. xxix. 26. C.—Months. The day when the moon first appeared, was a festival day among the Jews, (M.) or the first day of the month, while they observed the solar year.

VER. 11. The second. The Samar. copy here places what we read, Deut. i. 7. 8; and it is certain that those words were addressed to Moses on this occasion, though it be not so certain, that they were written by him in this place. C.—Of the month Jiar. The Hebrews had continued near Sinai a year and 20 days. Thence they went to the desert of Pharan, encamping first at the sepulchres or conepiscence, and at Haseroth, which were probably in that desert. Moses only specifies those encampments, where something memorable took place. He mentions none between Asiongaber and Cades, though the length of the journey required many. Num. xi. 34. xiii. 1. C.—Perhaps he only reckons those among the stations where the people continued a considerable time.

VER. 17. H. Hence it would appear, that part of the Levites followed Juda's division, which was preceded by the priests bearing the ark, (v. 33,) while the Caathites bore the sacred vessels after Ruben, (v. 21,) and were followed by Ephraim and Gad. But Calmet observes, that the Levites, and the whole camp of the Lord, came in the middle of the four great divisions, immediately after Ruben. C. ii. 9. 17. Salien thinks, that the ark and cloud led the way, and returned to the middle at the end of the journey, v. 36. H. T.

VER. 21. Sanctuary, or holy vessels. They never set them down, till they arrived at the place where the tabernacle was to be fixed. Heb. may be, "the sons of Caath set forward, bearing the vessels of the sanctuary, (C.) and they (the other Levites, v. 17,) set up the boards and curtains of the tabernacle, till they arrived;" that so both the vessels and the ark might be placed in proper order. If the ark had to return into the middle of the camp from leading the way, as Salien insinuates; while it passed between the ranks of Juda, the Levites would have time to arrange every thing. H.

23 And in the tribe of the sons of Manasses, the prince was Gamaliel, the son of Phadassur.

24 And in the tribe of Benjamin, the prince was Abidan, the son of Gedeon.

25 The last of all the camp marched the sons of Dan, by their troops, in whose army the prince was Ahiezer, the son of Ammisaddai.

26 And in the tribe of the sons of Aser, the prince was Phegiel, the son of Ochran, 27 And in the tribe of the sons of Nephthali, the prince was Ahira, the son of Enan.

28 This was the order of the camps, and marches of the children of Israel, by their troops, when they set forward.

29 And Moses said to Hobab, the son of Raguel the Midianite, his kinsman: We are going towards the place which the Lord will give us: come with us, that we may do thee good: for the Lord hath promised good things to Israel.

30 But he answered him: I will not go with thee, but I will return to my ^acountry, wherein I was born.

31 And he said: Do not leave us: for thou knowest in what places we should encamp in the wilderness, and thou shalt be our guide.

32 And if thou comest with us, we will give thee what is the best of the riches, which the Lord shall deliver to us.

33 So they marched from the mount of the Lord three days' journey, and the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them, for three days, providing a place for the camp.

^a Exod. xviii. 27.—^b Ps. lxxvii. 2.—^c A. M. 2514.—^d Infra xxxiii. 16.

VER. 29. Hobab; probably the brother of Sephora, and son of Raguel or Jethro, who had departed, leaving this son for a guide to Moses. Though God directed the marches of the Hebrews, he would not have them to neglect human means.—Kinsman. The Heb. clothen, and Greek gambros, are not more determinate, as they signify either father, son, or brother-in-law; (See Ex. ii. 18. C.) or in general a relation. S. Jerom. D.

VER. 31. Guide, being well acquainted with the country, and consequently able to point out the best places for pasturage and for water, and to inform us what sort of people we are near. Heb. "thou shalt serve us for eyes." Sept. "as a senator." The Persians had officers who had the title of eyes and ears of the king. Brisson i. Some suppose that Moses stood in no need of Hobab, having lived himself in that country 40 years, with Jethro; and that he only wished to keep his kinsman with him, that he might observe the true religion. He supposed at that time that they would presently obtain possession of Chanaan. But the sins of the people caused almost all to perish in the desert. Hobab probably accepted of the proposal, as we find the Cineans, descendants of Jethro, holding a portion of the land. C. Judg. i. 16. His posterity, the Rechabites, were noted for more than usual piety, and were the same with the Essenes, according to Serarius, and the first authors of a monastic life. Jerom. xxxv. T.

VER. 33. Journey. During this time, we know not where they encamped. The first place that is specified is Tabera, or "the burning," (C. xi. 3. C.) which S. Jerom believes is the same place, which was also called the sepulchres of concupiscence, (v. 34,) the 13th station, (H.) which is described above as the desert of Pharan. M.—Before them. See v. 17. H.—The Rabbins assert that there were two arks; one containing the writings of Moses going before, with the law-giver, at the head of the army; and the other, carried by the Levites, in the centre. Drusius.—Calmet would rather translate "went in their presence;" that is, in the midst. The kings of Persia always marched in the centre, for greater safety, and that they might communicate their orders with more expedition, as well as to keep all in order, and to observe what was doing. Xenophon. Cyrop. iv. and viii. Arian ii. and iii. C.—But the ark of God would probably go before the people, with the cloud, which hung over it.

VER. 36. Host. Sept. "Bring, or turn back, (H.) O Lord, the thousands, the myriads in Israel." Some give the same sense to the Hebrew. C.—Prayers are composed, not only for the obtaining of good in general, but also for particular purposes. W.

CHAP. XI. VER. 1. Fatigue. Heb. simply, "and the people were like those who complain of evil, or who seek pretences, inwardly, in the ears of the Lord." S. Jerom explains this evil to mean the fatigue of the journey, which lasted for three days together. C.—Hence, some who were ready to lay hold of every pretext, took occasion to murmur, and to contrast their present wearisome life 34 The cloud also of the Lord was over them by day when they marched.

35 And when the ark was lifted up, Moses said: Arise, O Lord, and let thy enemies be scattered, and let them that hate thee, flee from before thy face.

36 And when it was set down, he said: Return, O Lord, to the multitude of the host of Israel.

CHAP. XI.

The people murmur, and are punished with fire. God appointeth seventy assistants to Moses. They prophesy. The people have their fill of flesh, but forthwith many die of the plague.

IN the mean time^a there arose a ^dmurmuring of the people against the Lord, as it were repining at their fatigue. And when the Lord heard it he was angry. ^eAnd the fire of the Lord being kindled against them, devoured them that were at the uttermost part of the camp.

2 And when the people cried to Moses, Moses prayed to the Lord, and the fire was swallowed up.

3 And he called the name of that place, The burning: for that the fire of the Lord had been kindled against them.

4 For a mixt multitude of people, that came up with them, burned with desire, sitting and weeping, the children of Israel also being joined with them, and said: 'Who shall give us flesh to eat?

5 We remember the fish that we ate in Egypt free-cost: the cucumbers come into our mind, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic with the false pleasures of Egypt. The people of that country were now desirous of returning, and prevailed upon many of the Hebrews to join with them, v. 4. H.—They were chiefly those who were farthest from the ark, the dregs of the people; though some pretend that the uttermost part means the principal men of the camp. See Gen. xlviii. 2. "The fire devoured one part of the camp." Sept.

6 Our soul is dry, our eyes behold nothing else but manna.

VER. 2. Up, as rain is by the earth. Amos ix. 5.

VER. 3. The burning. Heb. tabherah. Ch.—Calmet uses no reason for con founding this station with that mentioned, v. 34.

VER. 4. For, seems, however, to connect the burning of some with the destruction of many more, who had eaten the quails, as if both judgments took place at the same encampment. Sept. render the Heb. "and a mixt rabble among them, desired greatly; and sitting, cried, as well as the Israelites, and said," &c. H.—A mixt multitude. These were people that came with them out of Egypt, who were not of the race of Israel: who, by their murmuring, drew also the children of Israel to murmur: this should teach us the danger of associating ourselves with the children of Egypt; that is, with the lovers and admirers of this wicked world. Ch.—This verse may relate a different history from the preceding ones, as the punishment was of another kind. D.—The murmurers were burnt to death. H.

VER. 5. Fish. The Nile abounds in fish, which they might catch freely. The fish of the lake Moris, brought a considerable revenue to the king of Egypt. Herod. ii. 149. The Hebrews had dwelt also near the Mediterranean sea. Fish was formerly in greater esteem than it is at present. The priests of Egypt abstained from it, (Herod. ii. 37,) and the people from such as had scales, and from eels, because they believed they were sacred, (ib. C. lxxvii). Porphyrius and Ovid even maintain that they refrained from all fish, as well as the Syrians. But they had not probably carried their superstition so far, in the days of Moses.—Garlic. These things are much more delicious and wholesome in hot countries. The Greeks fed much on cucumbers and garlic. Aristophanes.—The Turks still delight in them, eating the former raw with sour milk, (which would be very dangerous in our climate), and onions, which are as good as our pears. Spon. Bellon. iii. 18, &c. The wounded Machaon feasts upon onions, &c. Iliad. ix. The Egyptians afterwards scrupled to eat leeks and onions. C.—Porrum & cepa nefas violare... O sanctas gentes! quibus hæc nascuntur in hortis—Nunina. Juven. Sat. xv. But in the earlier ages Moses represents them as accustomed to such food. H.

VER. 6. Dry, like people quite worn out for want of food. Ps. ci. 5. 12. Lamen. iv. 8.—Nothing. An exaggeration. We are disgusted with this light food. C.—They wished not only for the taste, but also for the colour, of other meats. M.—How often do we imitate their folly, when we are disgusted with the bread of life! H.

7 *Now the manna was like coriander-seed, of the colour of bdellium.

8 And the people went about, and gathering it, ground it in a mill, or beat it in a mortar, and boiled it in a pot, and made cakes thereof of the taste of bread tempered with oil.

9 And when the dew fell in the night upon the camp, the manna also fell with it.

10 Now Moses heard the people weeping by their families, every one at the door of his tent. And the wrath of the Lord was exceedingly enkindled: to Moses also the thing seemed insupportable.

11 And he said to the Lord: Why hast thou afflicted thy servant? wherefore do I not find favour before thee? and why hast thou laid the weight of all this people upon me?

12 Have I conceived all this multitude, or begotten them, that thou shouldst say to me: Carry them in thy bosom, as the nurse is wont to carry the little infant, and bear them into the land, for which thou hast sworn to their fathers?

13 Whence should I have flesh to give to so great a multitude? they weep against me, saying: Give us flesh that we may eat.

14 I am not able alone to bear all this people, because it is too heavy for me.

15 But if it seem unto thee otherwise, I beseech thee to kill me, and let me find grace in thy eyes, that I be not afflicted with so great evils.

16 And the Lord said to Moses: Gather unto me seventy men of the ancients of Israel, whom thou knowest to be ancients and masters of the people: and thou shalt bring them to the door of the tabernacle of the covenant, and shalt make them stand there with thee,

17 That I may come down and speak with thee: and I will take of thy spirit, and will give to them, that they may bear with thee the burden of the people, and thou mayst not be burthened alone.

18 And thou shalt say to the people: Be ye sanctified: to-morrow you shall eat flesh: for I have heard you say; who will give us flesh to eat? it was well with us in Egypt. That the Lord may give you flesh, and you may eat:

19 Not for one day, nor two, nor five, nor ten, nor for twenty.

20 But even for a month of days, till it come out at your nostrils, and become loathsome to you, because you have cast off the Lord, who is in the midst of you, and have wept before him, saying: Why came we out of Egypt?

21 And Moses said: There are six hundred thousand footmen of this people, and sayest thou: I will give them flesh to eat a whole month?

22 ^bShall then a multitude of sheep and oxen be killed, that it may suffice for their food? or shall the fishes of the sea be gathered together to fill them?

23 And the Lord answered him: ^cIs the hand of the Lord unable? Thou shalt presently see whether my word shall come to pass or no.

24 Moses therefore came, and told the people the words of the Lord, and assembled seventy men of the ancients of Israel, and made them to stand about the tabernacle.

25 And the Lord came down in a cloud, and spoke to him, taking away of the spirit that was in Moses, and giving to the seventy men. And when the spirit had rested on them, they prophesied, nor did they cease afterwards.

26 Now there remained in the camp two of the men, of whom one was called Eldad, and the other Medad, upon whom the spirit rested; for they also had been enrolled, but were not gone forth to the tabernacle.

VER. 7. Bdellium. Bdellium, according to Pliny, (l. xxi. c. 9,) was of the colour of a man's nail, white and bright; (Ch.) or like wax, (B. xii. 9,) between white and yellow. It might resemble a tarnished pearl or ivory in colour, and coriander-seed in shape.

VER. 8. Oil; or, when unprepared, like flour and honey. Ex. xvi. 31. C.

VER. 10. By. Heb. "for." Jonathan and others endeavour to excuse their ancestors, by saying that they wept because they were forbidden to marry their near relations.—His tent. Some explain the Heb. of the tent of Moses. But the Israelites more probably staid at home.

VER. 12. Nurse. We often read of men nursing and watching over others. 1 K. x. 5. Est. ii. 11. Thus kings shall nurse the Church. Isai. xlix. 23. C.—All who have authority should treat their subjects with love. M.

VER. 14. For me. Had he not the judges, whom Jethro advised him to appoint? But all matters of consequence were still brought to Moses. He was made answerable for all things.

VER. 15. Enils. Heb. "my misfortune." The Rabbins say their, or thy, was formerly written, but corrected by the scribes. C.—Moses fears the anger of God falling upon the people. H.—It is very wonderful that the Heb. text here retains the feminine pronoun att, instead of aita; th, thee; as if Moses were addressing himself to some woman; and this absurd peculiarity is more absurdly accounted for, by saying that Moses was "so exasperated during this his address to the divine Being, as to be incapable of pronouncing both syllables!" The same mistake occurs, 1 K. xxiv. 19. Kennicott l. 412. God does not reprehend Moses as guilty of any disrespect or pusillanimity. H.—The holy man prays with due submission to the will of the most High. W.

VER. 16. Seventy men. This was the first institution of the council or senate, called the Sanhedrim, consisting of seventy, or seventy-two senators or counselors. Ch.—Calmet calls this in question. Disert. on the Police, &c. Moses chose these senators from among the officers, whom he had before set over the people, (Ex. xviii.) or from those who had superintended their affairs in Egypt, according to the Rabbins, (Ex. iii. 14,) who say that the traditions explaining the law were entrusted to them. Jarchi, &c.—Ancients; a title of authority in the East. See Gen. l. 7. It was not so necessary that they should be far advanced in years, as that they should be men of prudence and of consummate virtue. These qualifications received a great increase, when they were filled with the spirit of God. C.—They were thus authorized to decide controversies peremptorily, and to consult God, like Moses, being endued also with a prophetic spirit. M.

VER. 17. Thy spirit. S. Augustine (q. 18,) reads "of the spirit which is on thee;" (Sept.) referring it to the indivisible spirit of God, so that these ancients received what was sufficient for them, while Moses suffered no diminution. Thus one lamp communicates light to another, without being impaired. Orig. hom. vi. Theodoret (q. 18,) also adds, that a person confers baptism on thousands, and yet loses no part of the grace himself. Seiden (Syn. ii. 4,) shews that the Jews explain this spirit of a certain emanation of divine light or inspiration, which causes the prophets to speak. They have not in general, a distinct belief of the blessed Trinity. "I will make an increase of the spirit, which is upon thee, and will place it upon thee." Chal. v. 25.

VER. 18. Sanctified. Prepare yourselves to receive flesh. The word is often used in this sense. Jer. vi. 4, &c. Onkelos.—Cease to murmur, and bewail your sin. C.

VER. 20. Of days complete. So two years of days, means two full years. 1 Mac. i. 30.—Loathsome to you. "Indigestible." Sym. "Bilious." Sept. Till it become loathsome to you, and a source of scandal, (Chal.) or of dispersion, as some translate the Heb.

VER. 21. People, able to bear arms. H.—In all there were above two millions. C.

VER. 22. Fishes. Moses does not distinguish them from flesh, no more than S. Paul does. 1 Cor. xv. 39. Fish was not formerly allowed on fasting days. C. VER. 23. Unable: Heb. "shortened." Sept. "insufficient." Moses had expressed his astonishment, not his doubts; though the words might convey the latter idea to us more than his behaviour in C. xx. 10. But God sees the heart.—To pass. Heb. may be also, "hath called thee;" (C.) Sept. "shall come upon thee," and execute the thing, as soon as thou shalt promise it. H.

VER. 25. Afterwards. Some give a contrary meaning to the Heb., with the Sept. Syr. &c.: "They prophesied, (on that occasion) but they did not continue" to do so; except when they were favoured with the influence of the spirit. When it was requisite, they were enabled to declare God's will and his praise to the people. C.—Saul is said to have prophesied when he praised God, 1 K. x. 5. 10. M.

VER. 26. Forth, being lawfully hindered, (C.) or out of humility. S. Jer. ep. 127.

27 And when they prophesied in the camp, there ran a young man, and told Moses, saying: Eldad and Medad prophesy in the camp.

28 Forthwith Josue the son of Nun, the minister of Moses, and chosen out of many, said: My lord Moses, forbid them.

29 But he said: Why hast thou emulation for me? O that all the people might prophesy, and that the Lord would give them his spirit?

30 And Moses returned, with the ancients of Israel, into the camp.

31 And a wind going out from the Lord, taking quails up beyond the sea brought them and cast them into the camp for the space of one day's journey, on every side of the camp round about, and they flew in the air two cubits high above the ground.

32 The people therefore rising up all that day, and night, and the next day, gathered together of quails, he that did least, ten cores: and they dried them round about the camp.

33 As yet the flesh was between their teeth, neither had that kind of meat failed: when behold, the wrath of the Lord being provoked against the people, struck them with an exceeding great plague.

34 And that place was called The graves of lust: for

* Ps. lxxvii. 26. and 27.—Ps. lxxvii. 30.

VER. 27. Man. The Rabbins say, without proof, that he was Gersom, the son of Moses, and that the two prophets were half brothers of the lawgiver, and foretold his death and the persecutions of Gog, &c. C.—Hermas (11. 2.) refers to some of their predictions: "The Lord is nigh to those who are converts." See Ps. xxxiii. 19. H.—But they prophesied probably, by announcing only as men inspired, the praises of God and sentiments of piety, without diving into futurity. C.—Theodoret (q. 21.) thinks they were not of the 70 judges, but equal in dignity to them. Cotellier.

VER. 28. Chosen among the seventy, and designed, from his youth, to be the general, and successor of Moses; the Heb. may be understood in all these senses. See Ex. xvii. 10. C.—Josue was afraid lest they had assumed this air of authority in opposition to Moses. S. John addressed our Saviour, under the same impressions of zeal, Luc. ix. 49.

VER. 30. Camp of the people, from the tabernacle, which was in the midst of it. H.

VER. 31. Sea; the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. The wind blew from the south west to the west with respect to Moses, or from the south with respect to Jerusalem. Ps. lxxvii. 26. Many quails are found about Rinocorura, and some have imagined that these had continued during winter at the bottom of the waters, as they say swallows do. Bochart i. 15. God had sent the Hebrews a similar provision, for one day, about the same season of the year. Ex. xvi. 13.—Heb. The Heb. says simply, "as it were two cubits upon the earth;" whether they were heaped one upon another to that height, or, as it is more probable, (C.) they flew only so much above the ground, and might easily be killed. H.—The Sept. call them a tygautra, the lender, or the largest sort of quails. Suppose twenty of these filled a bushel, or the thirtieth part of a corus, each person would have at least 6,000 quails; and if there were three million people, they must have had 18,000 million such birds. M.—Philo takes notice, that the Jews were very fond of this food; and Aristotle (Anim. viii. 12.) says, their flesh is as good as that of woodcocks. T.

VER. 32. Cores. Heb. "Chomarim," each of which contained 100 gomers. One gomer was the daily allowance of manna for each person, and of course there must have been sufficient quails for one hundred days. But Moses tells us that each one collected at least ten times that quantity, or as much as he could eat for 1000 days. Bochart therefore supposes, that only each family, of ten people, gathered so much: or the Heb. should be rendered heaps, as the cores, or chomer, is not a proper measure for birds, but for corn and liquors. The Sept. Syr., &c. have "heaps." We need not have recourse to a new creation of these birds, as their numbers are very surprising. Plin. x. 23. In Italy above 100,000 have been caught in one day, within the space of 5,000 paces. Blond. The Psalmist compares the numbers brought on this occasion, to the dust, or to the sand of the seashore. Ps. lxxvii. 27.—Dried them in the sun, having first salted them, as the Egyptians did. C. Athenæus.—Many quails are found in Egypt, and around the Arabian Gulf. Joseph. iii. D.

VER. 33. Plague of fire, v. 3. Ps. lxxvii. 21. C. a Lapide.—Failed, after the month was expired. M.—They had been accustomed to live upon manna, which was a light food, during the space of a year; and now eating greedily of this flesh, their stomachs were overcharged, and they died of an indigestion. C.—The Rabbins say, God punished their gluttony by death, and obliged the rest of the Hebrews to abstain from all flesh, except from that of the peace-offerings, till they entered the promised land. Sold. Syn. ii. 4.

VER. 34. The graves of lust; or the sepulchres of concupiscence: so called from their irregular desire of flesh. In Heb. Kibroth Hattaavah. Ch.—Hence Augustine observes that, "it is not a matter of so much moment to be heard by there they buried the people that had lusted. And departing from the graves of lust, they came unto Haseroth, and abode there.

CHAP. XII.

Mary and Aaron murmur against Moses, whom God praiseth above other prophets. Mary being struck with leprosy, Aaron confesseth his fault. Moses prayeth for her, and after seven days' separation from the camp, she is restored.

AND Mary and Aaron spoke against Moses, because of his wife the Ethiopian,

4 Immediately he spoke to him, and to Aaron and Mary: Come out you three only to the tabernacle of the covenant. And when they were come out,

5 The Lord came down in the pillar of the cloud, and stood in the entry of the tabernacle, calling to Aaron and Mary. And when they were come,

God. For some he hears in his wrath, granting their requests, while he refuses to comply with some petitions of his friends." D.

CHAP. XII. VER. 1. Ethiopian. Sephora, the wife of Moses, was of Madian, which bordered upon the land of Chus, or Ethiopia; and therefore she is called an Ethiopian: where note, that the Ethiopia here spoken of, is not that of Africa but that of Arabia, (Ch.) on the east side of the Red Sea. Ex. ii. 15. Jealousy instigated Aaron and his sister on this occasion. C.—Perhaps Sephora had claimed some pre-eminence on account of her husband's glory, in being a mediator between God and his people, and therefore they pretend to the same honour, v. 2. H.—The Heb. insinuates, that they laid hold on the pretext of Moses having married, or received again, a woman of a different nation contrary to the law which he had promulgated, "for it adds, he had married or retaken an Ethiopian woman." Others believe that he had put her away, and that Aaron and Mary stood up in her defence. "Mary and Aaron murmured against Moses, on account of the wife whom he had taken, who was a perfect beauty, because he had separated himself from his beautiful wife." Onkelos.—Some are of opinion, that this woman was Tarbis, the daughter of the king of Ethiopia, whom Moses espoused after he had terminated the wars between him and the Egyptians, before he retired to Madian. But this account of Josephus, (Ant. ii. 5.) and the explication of Onkelos, and of the Rabbins, seem to be destitute of any solid foundation. C.

VER. 3. Exceeding meek. Moses being the meekest of men, would not contend for himself; therefore God inspired him to write here his own defence: and the Holy Spirit, whose dictate he wrote, obliged him to declare the truth, though it was so much to his own praise. Ch.—So he mentions his defects without reserve. C.—There are occasions when a person may be not only authorized, but in a manner forced to declare what may be to his own praise. Moses was in such a situation. The peace of the whole nation was in danger, when false insinuations were thrown out against the lawgiver and king, by his own nearest relations, and by them who were next in authority to himself. Aaron, the high priest, countenanced at least the remarks of his sister, who seems to have been the most to blame, as she alone is punished with the leprosy. H.—Some have suspected, that this verse has been inserted by a later inspired writer. A. Lapide.—But whether it was or not, there is no reason to infer with T. Paine, that Moses was either "a vain and arrogant coxcomb, and unworthy of credit, or that the books (attributed to him) are without authority." For if he did not write this verse, it does not follow that he wrote none of the Pentateuch; and if he did write it, he was justified by the predicament in which he stood, to do so. Paine scruples not to write of himself: "the man does not exist, that can say . . . I have in any case returned evil for evil;" and is not this praising himself as a very meek man, when at the same time he is writing to cause all the mischief he can both in church and state, and thus, during the heat of revolutionary madness, to involve thousands in ruin? Watson. H.

VER. 5. Come to the door of the tabernacle, where Moses also was standing.

VER. 6. Vision. Other prophets were inspired in a more mysterious manner: Moses, though he saw not the majesty of God in any corporeal figure, was instructed by him in the most secret things with the utmost perspicuity, (C.) as if a man were explaining his sentiments to his most intimate friend. Ex. xxxiii. 19. H.

VER. 7. Faithful: Heb. Neeman, steward or master of the palace. Such were Samuel, 1 K. iii. 20; David, (C.) 1 K. xxii. 14; Naaman, the general of Syria, 2 K. v.; and Balaam, 1 Mac. vii. 19. H.—Ambassadors had this title, (Prov. xiii. 17,) and fidelity often denotes an office. 1 Par. ix. 22. Job (xii. 20,) speaks of the Nananim. C.—But none among the Israelites was more justly entitled to this honour than Moses. He announced the word of God without any mixture of falsehood, and did not arrogate to himself more than his due, as Aaron seems to have done v. 2. H.

8 *For I speak to him mouth to mouth: and plainly, and not by riddles and figures, doth he see the Lord. Why then were you not afraid to speak ill of my servant Moses?

9 And being angry with them, he went away:

10 The cloud also that was over the tabernacle departed: and behold Mary appeared white as snow with a leprosy. And when Aaron had looked on her, and saw her all covered with leprosy,

11 He said to Moses: I beseech thee, my lord, lay not upon us this sin, which we have foolishly committed:

12 Let her not be as one dead, and as an abortive that is cast forth from the mother's womb. Lo, now one half of her flesh is consumed with the leprosy.

13 And Moses cried to the Lord, saying: O God, I beseech thee heal her.

14 And the Lord answered him: If her father had spitten upon her face, ought she not to have been ashamed for seven days at least? Let her be separated seven days without the camp, and afterwards she shall be called again.

15 Mary, therefore, was put out of the camp seven days: and the people moved not from that place, until Mary was called again.

CHAP. XIII.

The twelve spies are sent to view the land: The relation they make of it.

AND the people marched from Haseiroth, and pitched their tents in the desert of Pharan.

2 And there the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

3 Send men to view the land of Chanaan: which I will give to the children of Israel, one of every tribe, of the rulers.

4 Moses did what the Lord had commanded, sending from the desert of Pharan, principal men, whose names are these:

* Exod. xxxiii. 11.—Deut. xxiv. 9.—A. M. 2514.

VER. 10. Departed from the door to its former place, (C.) as if in abhorrence of Mary's leprosy, (Hiseuni) and still more of the sin, which had brought upon her that punishment. C.—Perhaps the cloud was raised higher in the air than usual, but did not proceed forward; (M.) otherwise the Israelites would have decamped. They remained at Haseiroth till Mary was returned into the camp, v. 15. H.—Leprosy, of an incurable kind, like that of Giezi, 4 K. v. 27. It covers the whole skin with a white scurf. Lev. xiii. 10. Aaron is spared, either because he had aided with his sister only out of complaisance, without any formal malice against his brother; or because God, in consideration for his priestly character, would not render him contemptible in the eyes of all people, intending to punish him in a more secret manner: for we are not always to judge of the grievousness of a fault, by its present punishment. Perhaps Aaron obtained pardon by his speedy repentance, v. 11. C.

VER. 12. Dead; consumed by leprosy, or incapable of performing the duties of life. M.—Heb. "an abortive, whose flesh is half consumed before he comes forth from his mother's womb." Sept. "he eateth half her flesh." "Permit not her to be separated from us, I beseech you, for she is our sister: pray, I beg, that her flesh may be healed." Chaldee.

VER. 14. Answered him. The force of this reply must be very obvious. If a father had been so irritated by his daughter, as to shew his indignation in the strongest manner, (see Job xxx. 10. Mar. xiv. 65,) she would surely keep out of sight for a time: and can she complain, if I, who have been more injured in the person of my minister, exclude her from society seven days, after having covered her with the leprosy as with spittle. C.—The excommunication, in the Christian Church, bears some resemblance with this exclusion. Mary did not undergo all the legal purifications, (Lev. xxxiv.) as the miraculous cure dispensed her from them. M.—Origen (hom. vi. 7) and other Fathers, explain the mystery of this historical event. Moses, taking to wife the Ethiopian, represents Christ calling the Gentiles, which excites the murmurs of the synagogues. Mary shews the deformity of the latter religion at the present day, without head or sacrifice. The encomiums bestowed upon the Jewish legislator, belong in a still stricter sense to Jesus Christ, the mildest of men, fully acquainted with all the secrets of God, and the most faithful in all his house. S. Jer. ep. ad Fab. mansion xiv.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 1. Pharan, at Bethma, C. xxxiii. 48; though Barradius confounds that station with that at Cades-barne. The Samaritan copy inserts here a long passage, taken probably from Deut. i. 20. 21. and 22, which shews that the Hebrews first proposed the sending spies, out of timidity; which God severely punished in the sequel, though in his anger he here consents to their proposal, which seemed to originate in motives of prudence, v. 3.

5 Of the tribe of Ruben, Sammua, the son of Zechur.

6 Of the tribe of Simeon, Saphat, the son of Huri.

7 Of the tribe of Juda, Caleb, the son of Jephone.

8 Of the tribe of Issachar, Igal, the son of Joseph.

9 Of the tribe of Ephraim, Osee, the son of Nun.

10 Of the tribe of Benjamin, Phalti, the son of Raphu.

11 Of the tribe of Zabulon, Geddiel, the son of Sodi.

12 Of the tribe of Joseph, of the sceptre of Manasses, Gaddi, the son of Susi.

13 Of the tribe of Dan, Ammiel, the son of Gemalli.

14 Of the tribe of Aser, Sthur, the son of Michael.

15 Of the tribe of Nephthali, Nahabi, the son of Vapsi.

16 Of the tribe of Gad, Guel, the son of Machi.

17 These are the names of the men, whom Moses sent to view the land: and he called Osee, the son of Nun, Josue.^d

18 And Moses sent them to view the land of Chanaan, and said to them: Go you up by the south side. And when you shall come to the mountains,

19 View the land, of what sort it is: and the people that are the inhabitants thereof, whether they be strong or weak: few in number or many:

20 The land itself, whether it be good or bad: what manner of cities, walled or without walls:

21 The ground, fat or barren, woody or without trees. Be of good courage, and bring us of the fruits of the land. Now it was the time when the first ripe grapes are fit to be eaten.

22 And when they were gone up, they viewed the land from the desert of Sin, unto Rohob as you enter into Emath.

23 And they went up at the south side, and came to Hebron, where were Achiman and Sisai, and Tholmai, the sons of Enac. For Hebron was built seven years before Tanis the city of Egypt.

^d Acts vii. 45. and Heb. iv. 8.—Jos. xv. 14.

VER. 3. Rulers of a hundred men, according to Hiseuni, inferior to those mentioned, C. x. 14. C.

VER. 6. Huri: Sept. "Souri." None of the tribe of Levi, the third son of Jacob, are sent; but two represent the different branches of the tribe of Joseph, v. 9. 12. The tribe of Ephraim comes out of its natural order, and has been overlooked by Calmet. H.

VER. 12. Sceptre. Heb. matte, means also a "tribe."

VER. 17. Josue. His former name Osee, or Hoseah, means "one saved, or salvation;" but the addition of the i, taken from the name of the Lord, intimates "he shall save, or the Saviour of God." Some think that Moses had given him this name after the defeat of the Amalecites; but the Book of Exodus, where the name is found, might have been written after he received this commission. C.—The Sept. have, "Ause, the son of Nave, Josue," as he was a striking figure of our blessed Saviour, and their names are written with the same letters, Yehoshuah. This Moses foresaw, and also that he would be the happy instrument, in the hand of God, of saving the Israelites, by introducing them into the land of promise, and establishing them in peace therein. M.—The changing of his name imported likewise, that he should be the chief leader. Theod. q. 25. W.

VER. 18. South side, which is to the north of where you now dwell. Moses enters into several details for the satisfaction of the people, though they had probably a general idea of the country and of its fruitfulness already, having lived not far off. They might not know, however, but that some part of the inhabitants might dwell in tents, instead of towns, as many of the Arabians did.

VER. 21. First ripe, (præcoque): Heb. lit. "the first-born." Sept. "the days of spring, forerunners of the grape." In Madeira, grapes ripen in March. Some suppose the messengers departed in June, others in July. In Palestine, they have fresh grapes from the end of June till Martinmas, and three vintages in August, and in each of the two following months.

VER. 22. Sin. The desert of Pharan was contiguous to that of Sin. They departed from Cades-barne, and went along the Jordan to Rohob, at the foot of Mount Libanus, and on the road to Emath; then they returned by the confines of the Sidonians and Philistines, through Hebron, to the camp at Cades.

VER. 23. And came. The printed Heb. has, "and he came;" but the Sam. and all the versions, as well as some MSS. properly retain the plural, which the Massorets allow is right. Kenn. Dis. i.—Enac, the founder of Hebron, and father of the giants of Chanaan. Jos. xiv. 13. The Greek word anax, "king," was perhaps derived from him, as also the famous Inachides, who settled in Greece, after they were driven out by Josue. Grot.—Tanis, where the tyrants of the Hebrews resided; a city, which the Egyptians represented as the most 24 And going forward as far as the torrent of the cluster of grapes, they cut off a branch with its cluster of grapes, which two men carried upon a lever. They took also of the pomegranates and of the figs of that place:

25 Which was called Nehelescol, that is to say, the torrent of the cluster of grapes, because from thence the children of Israel had carried a cluster of grapes.

26 And they that went to spy out the land returned after forty days, having gone round all the country,

27 And came to Moses and Aaron, and to all the assembly of the children of Israel, to the desert of Pharan, which is in Cades. And speaking to them and to all the multitude, they shewed them the fruits of the land:

28 And they related, and said: We came into the land to which thou sentest us, which in very deed floweth with milk and honey, as may be known by these fruits:

29 But it hath very strong inhabitants, and the cities are great and walled. We saw there the race of Enac.

30 Amalec dwelleth in the south; the Hethite, and the Jebusite, and the Amorrite in the mountains: but the Chanaanite abideth by the sea and near the streams of the Jordan.

31 In the mean time Caleb, to still the murmuring of the people that rose against Moses, said: Let us go up and possess the land, for we shall be able to conquer it.

32 But the others, that had been with him, said: No, we are not able to go up to this people, because they are stronger than we.

33 And they spoke ill of the land, which they had viewed, before the children of Israel, saying: The land, which we have viewed, devoureth its inhabitants: the people, that we beheld, are of a tall stature.

ancient in the world. Moses represses their vain boasting, by informing them that Hebron was of greater antiquity. It was afterwards assigned to the priests, and for a city of refuge, in the tribe of Juda. Jos. xx. 7.

VER. 24. Torrent. Sept. "vale."—Its. Heb. "one cluster."—Two men, Josue and Caleb; (S. Maximus) though the Rabbins say they carried nothing.—Lever, or staff, suspending it thus, in order that it might not be crushed. In that valley, Doubdan (i. 21.) was assured by the religious, that clusters, weighing twelve pounds, might still be found. Pliny (xiv. 1.) says, there are some in Africa, larger than a male infant. Strabo (xi.) describes some in Carmania, two cubits high. Forster saw a religious man at Nuremberg, who had lived eight years in Palestine, and assured him that two men could hardly carry a bunch of grapes, such as grew in the vale of Hebron: (C.) but this may seem to be an hyperbole. H.—Lucas (T. i. p. 310.) assures us, that he had seen a bunch at Damascus, weighing above forty pounds. The Fathers here contemplate Jesus Christ, suspended between the two testaments, the synagogue and the Church: the juice, or blood of the grape, (Gen. xlix. 2. Deut. xxxii. 14.) denotes his passion. S. Jer. ep. ad Fab. S. Bern. in Cant. ser. xlv. C.

VER. 27. Cades. The desert of Pharan, or of Cades, is the same. H.—The town is sometimes called Cades-barne, or Recem, (Chald.) which is Petra, the capital of the stony Arabia, and lies rather nearer to the Dead Sea than to the Mediterranean. It was on the high road from the Red Sea to Hebron. In one part of the desert of Cades, the people murmured for want of water. C. xx. 1. But there was plenty near the city. Moses continued here a long time after the return of the spies. Deut. i. 19. 46. C.

VER. 30. South. They had already routed the Amalecites; but the spies insidiously recall to their remembrance, that they would be again in arms to obstruct their passage.—Hethites, dwelt nearest the Philistines, in the country which fell to the shares of Simeon and of Dan. The Jebusites occupied Jerusalem; and the Amorrites, the most powerful of all those nations, held possession of most of the territory which was allotted to Juda. Nearer the Dead Sea, on the same mountains, dwelt the Cinezeans and the Cineans. Bonfrere places the Chanaanites on the banks of the Jordan, from the lake of Sodom as far as the sea of Tiberius. But they dwelt also near the Mediterranean; and the Phœnicians maintained themselves at Tyre and Sidon, against the most powerful kings of the Jews, and extended their commerce over the old world, to many parts of which they sent out colonies. C.

VER. 31. Caleb, to whom Josue alone joined himself, to bear witness of the truth against the other ten; whom the people were, however, more inclined to believe, (C. xiv. 6. Eccl. xlv. 9.) paying more attention to numbers than to authority, when it suited their humour. H.

34 There we saw certain monsters of the sons of Enac, of the giant-kind: in comparison of whom, we seemed like locusts.

CHAP. XIV.

The people murmur. God threateneth to destroy them. He is appeased by Moses, yet so as to exclude the murmurers from entering the promised land. The authors of the sedition are struck dead. The rest going to fight against the will of God are beaten.

THEREFORE the whole multitude crying, wept that night,

2 And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron, saying:

3 Would God that we had died in Egypt: and would God we may die in this vast wilderness, and that the Lord may not bring us into this land, lest we fall by the sword, and our wives and children be led away captives. Is it not better to return into Egypt?

4 And they said one to another: Let us appoint us a captain, and let us return into Egypt.

5 And when Moses and Aaron heard this, they fell down flat upon the ground before the multitude of the children of Israel.

6 But Josue the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephone, who themselves also had viewed the land, rent their garments,

7 And said to all the multitude of the children of Israel: The land, which we have gone round, is very good:

8 If the Lord be favourable, he will bring us into it, and give us a land flowing with milk and honey.

9 Be not rebellious against the Lord: and fear ye not the people of this land, for we are able to eat them up as bread. All aid is gone from them: the Lord is with us, fear ye not.

10 And when all the multitude cried out, and would have stoned them, the glory of the Lord appeared over

VER. 33. Spoke ill, &c. These men, who, by their misrepresentations of the land of promise, discouraged the Israelites from attempting the conquest of it, were a figure of worldlings, who, by decrying or misrepresenting true devotion, discourage Christians from seeking in earnest and acquiring so great a good, and thereby securing to themselves a happy eternity. Ch.—Devoureth, by being exposed to continual wars from the Arabs, Idumeans, and from its own inhabitants, the monsters of the race of Enac. With this God had threatened the Hebrews, if they proved rebellious. Lev. xxvi. 38. See Esoc. xxxvi. 13. C.

VER. 34. Monsters. Heb. "giants."—Locusts, or grasshoppers. So much inferior in size were we to them. Heb. insinuates that the spies entertained these sentiments when they beheld the giants, and the latter seemed to look down upon them with contempt; "and so we were in their sight." These wicked men scrupled not to exaggerate in order to fill the people with dismay. H.—Their suggestions tended to make them distrust the goodness or the power of God; and therefore he would not suffer them to enjoy the sweets of the land. C. xiv. 23. 29. W. See Deut. i. 28. Isai. xl. 21.

CHAP. XIV. VER. 3. We may. The Latin MSS. and Bibles before Sixtus V. read "in Egypt, and not in this," &c. But the present translation agrees with the Heb. Sept. and Chaldee. VER. 4. Captain, instead of Moses, whom they could not bring over to their criminal design, no more than Aaron, Josue, Caleb, &c. H.—Some imagine the rebels wanted to choose themselves a king, (C.) or even another god. Drusius.—Every community acknowledges the necessity of having one at the head. W.

VER. 5. Israel; begging that God would not destroy them, as he had done their brethren. C. xi. M.

VER. 6. Garments, in testimony of their disapprobation and zeal; to make these insolent people reflect upon the evils into which they are throwing themselves. C.

VER. 9. To eat, or consume them, as easily as we devour a piece of bread. The expression is proverbial. Ps. xiii. 4.—All aid. Heb. "their shadow," which is taken in the same sense. Sept. "their time or opportunity is gone." The Rabbins refer this to holy Job, who, they say, died at this time. A. Lapide.—He dwelt near the Jordan. Pineda in Job. C. i. l. and 27.

VER. 10. Cried out, &c. Heb. "said stone them."

the tabernacle of the covenant to all the children of Israel.

11 And the Lord said to Moses: How long will this people detract me? how long will they not believe me for all the signs that I have wrought before them?

12 I will strike them therefore with pestilence, and will consume them: but thee I will make a ruler over a great nation, and a mightier than this is.

13 And Moses said to the Lord: That the Egyptians, from the midst of whom thou hast brought forth this people,

14 And the inhabitants of this land, (who have heard that thou, O Lord, art among this people, and art seen face to face, and thy cloud protecteth them, and thou goest before them in a pillar of a cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night,)

15 May hear that thou hast killed so great a multitude, as it were one man, and may say:

16 He could not bring the people into the land for which he had sworn, therefore did he kill them in the wilderness.

17 Let then the strength of the Lord be magnified, as thou hast sworn, saying:

18 "The Lord is patient and full of mercy" taking away iniquity and wickedness, and leaving no man clear, "who visitest the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.

19 Forgive, I beseech thee, the sins of this people, according to the greatness of thy mercy, as thou hast been merciful to them from their going out of Egypt unto this place.

20 And the Lord said: I have forgiven according to thy word, 21 As I live: and the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord.

22 But yet all the men that have seen my majesty, and the signs that I have done in Egypt, and in the 24 "My servant Caleb, who being full of another spirit hath followed me, I will bring into this land, which he hath gone round: and his seed shall possess it.

25 For the Amalecite and the Chanaanite dwell in the valleys. To-morrow remove the camp, and return into the wilderness by the way of the Red Sea.

26 And the Lord spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:

27 How long doth this wicked multitude murmur against me? I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel.

28 Say therefore to them: As I live, saith the Lord: According as you have spoken in my hearing, so will I do to you.

29 "In the wilderness shall your carcasses lie. All you that were numbered from twenty years old and upward, and have murmured against me, 30 "Shall not enter into the land, over which I lifted up my hand to make you dwell therein, except Caleb the son of Jephone, and Josue the son of Nun.

31 But your children, of whom you said, that they should be a prey to the enemies, will I bring in: that they may see the land which you have despised.

32 Your carcasses shall lie in the wilderness.

33 Your children shall wander in the desert forty years, and shall bear your fornication, until the carcasses of their fathers be consumed in the desert,

34 According to the number of the forty days where-in you viewed the land: "a year shall be counted for a day. "And forty years you shall receive your iniquities, and shall know my revenge:

VER. 11. Detract. Heb. "despise, irritate, or blaspheme." God is incapable of anger, says Origen; he only foretells what will come to pass.

VER. 13. That the. The sentence is left imperfect, to signify the agitation and distress with which Moses was oppressed, as if he had said, Thou wilt thus afford a pretext, that the Egyptians and Chanaanites may say to one another, that thou couldst not perform what thou hadst promised; and therefore, that in vexation thou hadst destroyed thy people. VER. 16. Sworn. God swore to give this land to the Hebrews, but not to this particular generation. His oath would be equally fulfilled by raising posterity to Moses, v. 18. But, at his entreaty, he spared the descendants of this people, and gave the land to their children under Josue. H.

VER. 17. Lord, in overcoming all difficulties, raised either by the enemy, or by thy rebellious people.

VER. 18. Mercy. Sept. "merciful and true," as Exod. xxxiv. 6. 7. On that occasion, it is not written that God swore. H.—But equal credit is to be given to his word, as to an oath. M.—Clear, or as S. Jerom expresses it in Exodus, and no man of himself is innocent before thee. C.—By these titles God will be addressed; and therefore Moses mentions them all, though some of them might seem to obstruct his petition of pardon. M.—He knew that none of God's perfections were contrary to one another, or to his nature of consummate goodness; and he sued for the pardon of his people, with all due submission to the dictates of his justice. H.

VER. 20. Forgiven the sins to those who repent; but the punishment due to them must be undergone, though not so soon as I had threatened, v. 12. 19. How happy is that nation, which has one like Moses to intercede for them! H.

VER. 21. Lord. I will surely punish the guilty; and all the earth shall know that their own crimes, and not my imbecility, prevented their taking possession of Chanaan. My glory shall shine both in my long-suffering, and in the effects of my justice. Let not a pass for a dead god, like the idols, if I do not perform what I say.

It is not necessary to specify the number of the rebellions, as some have done, placing the first on the other side of the Red Sea, (Ex. xiv. 13,) and the tenth here. The expression is often used to express a great but indefinite number. Eccles. vii. 20. C.

VER. 23. It. None of those who murmured ever entered the land of promise. Origen (hom. 27,) believes that the Levites behaved with fidelity, and were not comprised in the punishment. In effect, Eleazar certainly entered Chanaan. Jos. xiv. 1. Salmon also, who espoused Rahab, had seen the wonders of God, but had not joined with the rest; so that, when it is said (v. 2,) that all murmured, we must explain it by S. 36 *Therefore all the men, whom Moses had sent to view the land, and who at their return had made the whole multitude to murmur against him, speaking ill of the land that it was naught, 37 Died and were struck in the sight of the Lord.

38 But Josue the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephone lived, of all them that had gone to view the land.

39 And Moses spoke all these words to all the children of Israel, and the people mourned exceedingly.

40 And behold, rising up very early in the morning, they went up to the top of the mountain, and said: We are ready to go up to the place, of which the Lord hath spoken: for we have sinned.

41 And Moses said to them: Why transgress you the word of the Lord, which shall not succeed prosperously with you?

42 ^bGo not up, for the Lord is not with you: lest you fall before your enemies.

43 The Amalecite and the Chanaanite are before you, and by their sword you shall fall, because you would not consent to the Lord, neither will the Lord be with you.

44 But they being blinded went up to the top of the mountain. But the ark of the testament of the Lord, and Moses, departed not from the camp.

45 And the Amalecite came down, and the Chanaanite, that dwelt in the mountain: and smiting and slaying them, pursued them as far as Horma.

VER. 41. Which conduct shall not, &c. They had been ordered to return: now they will advance, and, though admonished that the Lord will not assist them, they depend upon their own efforts, being ever full of themselves, and distrustful of God, the two sources of all spiritual misfortunes. H.

VER. 44. Blinded, with presumption, as the Heb. yahpilu, insinuates. "Their heart was puffed up with pride, and they ascended." Deut. i. 43. C.—The enemy was ready to receive them, and easily routed this rabble, abandoned by God, and by Moses, Aaron and his sons, Josue, and other men of virtue and sense. They who before lay lurking in the valleys, (v. 25,) assume fresh courage, when they become the executioners of God's vengeance, and come pouring down from their mountains, with irresistible fury; nor do they stop till they had made a dreadful carnage of the Hebrews. The same place was again deluged with blood, (C. xxi. 3,) and was called Horma, or "the Curse." The Sam. and Sept. add, and they returned into the camp. Thus, by their own woeful experience, they began to feel that God would keep his word in punishing the common people, as well as the leaders, v. 37. H.

CHAP. XV. VER. 2. Speak. This law was probably given towards the end of the 40 years, v. 23.

VER. 4. Ephi. Heb. "a tenth of flour," or one gomer. D.

VER. 6. Oil. Greater libations are required for a ram, as it is larger than the former victim, which was accompanied with only half the quantity of fine flour. H.—Part of the wine and oil was poured on the flour, and burnt on the altar; the rest was given to the priests.

VER. 11—15. Thus, &c.—Lend. In this last verse, the Sam. copy observes offering gifts, or in your solemnities burning a sweet savour unto the Lord, of oxen or of sheep:

4 Whosoever immolateth the victim, shall offer a sacrifice of fine flour, the tenth part of an ephi, tempered with the fourth part of a hin of oil:

5 And he shall give the same measure of wine to pour out in libations for the holocaust, or for the victim. For every lamb,

6 And for every ram there shall be a sacrifice of flour of two tenths, which shall be tempered with the third part of a hin of oil:

7 And he shall offer the third part of the same measure of wine for the libation, for a sweet savour to the Lord.

8 But when thou offerest a holocaust or sacrifice of oxen, to fulfil thy vow, or for victims of peace-offerings,

9 Thou shalt give for every ox three tenths of flour tempered with half a hin of oil,

10 And wine for libations of the same measure, for an offering of most sweet savour to the Lord.

11 Thus shalt thou do,

12 For every ox, and ram, and lamb, and kid,

13 Both they that are born in the land, and the strangers,

14 Shall offer sacrifices after the same rite.

15 There shall be all one law and judgment, both for you, and for them who are strangers in the land.

16 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

17 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them:

18 When you are come into the land, which I will give you,

19 And shall eat of the bread of that country, you shall separate first-fruits to the Lord,

20 Of the things you eat. As you separate first-fruits of your barn-floors:

a more correct manner of punctuation than the Heb. which is commonly rendered "O congregation." Houbig.—The author of the Vulgate has preserved the sense, but not all the words of the original. The strangers here spoken of are the proselytes of justice, who kept all the law. Those of the gate, who lived in the land, uncircumcised, could only present holocausts, without libations. Lev. xxii. 25. C.—"The many sacrifices (of the old law) prefigured this one sacrifice" of the new. S. Aug. de C. x. 20. Christ, represented by the oil, offers himself the victim, under the forms of bread and wine. D.

VER. 20. Eat. Heb. and Sept. "of your dough." They elevated a part towards heaven, and gave it to the priest or Levite, who lived nearest them; and, in case none could be found, as at the present day, they were to burn it in honour of God. Tradition determines the quantity to be between a 40th and a 60th part. S. Jer. in Ezecl. xlv. This they do every time they bake, according to Philo, and Leo of Modena, (2. 9.) though the law be not clear, and some might think it sufficient to give a part, the first time they baked with new flour.

VER. 22. Ignorance. Other victims are prescribed; (Lev. iv. 13,) so that the ignorance here mentioned must be of a different nature. The former was perhaps a sin of commission, and this a sin of omission; such as if the whole people should neglect to eat the paschal lamb. The Rabbins think that the law alludes here to idolatry, committed for want of knowledge. But that is next to impossible in a whole nation. Outram believes, that the Book of Leviticus speaks of those who transgress the negative precepts, without abandoning the true religion; but the present law alludes to those who forget the laws of their fathers, and embrace a false worship. Thus Ezechias offered the victims here prescribed, though more in number, to expiate the idolatry of the people under Achaz, 1 Par. xxix. 21. See also 1 Esdr. viii. 35. Some think Moses has supplied in this place what was left deficient before. But it is more probable, that he supposes here only some of the tribes have sinned ignorantly, while in Leviticus he speaks of the whole nation. C.—No one sins for the sake of the offence, but for some advantage which we falsely persuade ourselves we shall derive from doing so. S. Aug. q. 24. (175)

23 And by him hath commanded you, from the day that he began to command and thence forward,

24 And the multitude have forgotten to do it: they shall offer a calf out of the herd, a holocaust for a most sweet savour to the Lord, and the sacrifice and libations thereof, as the ceremonies require, and a buck-goat for sin:

25 And the priest shall pray for all the multitude of the children of Israel: and it shall be forgiven them, because they sinned ignorantly; offering, notwithstanding, a burnt-offering to the Lord, for themselves and for their sin and their ignorance:

26 And it shall be forgiven all the people of the children of Israel, and the strangers that sojourn among them: because it is the fault of all the people through ignorance.

27 But if one soul shall sin ignorantly, he shall offer a she-goat of a year old for his sin:

28 And the priest shall pray for him, because he sinned ignorantly before the Lord: and he shall obtain his pardon, and it shall be forgiven him.

29 The same law shall be for all that sin by ignorance, whether they be natives or strangers:

30 But the soul that committeth any thing through pride, whether he be born in the land, or a stranger, (because he hath been rebellious against the Lord) shall be cut off from among his people:

31 For he hath contemned the word of the Lord, and made void his precept: therefore shall he be destroyed, and shall bear his iniquity.

VER. 25. And for. Heb. "and their sin (offering) in the presence of the Lord, for their ignorance." C.

VER. 30. Pride. Heb. and Sept. "with hand, or with head (Chald.) uplifted," without shame or control. The Rabbins say, he must deny that God is the author of the law, and sin deliberately, after being admonished, &c. before he will incur this penalty. But why all these restrictions!—Rebellious. Heb. "he hath blasphemed, or irritated the Lord." Such crimes imply a contempt of the law.—Cut off by God, if the judges neglect to do it. The Hebrews maintain, that each individual has a right to kill such scandalous offenders, as Phinees did Zambri. C. xxv. 7. 1 Mac. ii. 23. It is not clear whether all strangers, living in the country, were subjected to this law. Seld. Jur. ii. 11. Though such crimes were not pardoned by the law, true repentance will free us from them. S. Aug. q. 25. W.

VER. 32. Wilderness of Pharan, if this crime were committed soon after the murmuring of the people, or in some other part of the desert. This example tends to show the severity and extent of the former precept. The law had condemned the breaker of the sabbath to be put to death. But Moses consulted the Lord, to know in what manner; or perhaps there were some circumstances attending the offender, which extenuated or enhanced his crime. Some of the Rabbins have unjustly aspersed the character of Salphaad, as if he were the person, because it is said that he died in the desert in his own sin. C. xxvii. 8. C.—Those who transgress with full knowledge, deserve to be severely chastised; (Lu. xii. 47.) and this is the more necessary, when the law has been lately promulgated, to restrain the insolent. H.—God generally makes an example of those who first transgress his laws, as he did of our first parents, of Cain, the Sodomites, the worshippers of the golden calf, &c. He punished thus the sacrilege of Nadab, the disobedience of Saul, the lie of Ananias and Sapphira. Cnjetan. D.

VER. 38. Fringes. The Pharisees enlarged these fringes through hypocrisy, (Matt. xxiii. 5.) to appear more zealous than other men for the law of God. Ch.—Our Saviour conformed to this law. Luke viii. 44. Moses shews that these fringes were to be made for the cloak, which was square, and not for the tunic. Deut. xxii. 12. The colour, in S. Justin's time, was purple. Dial. It seems that the Phœnicians were accustomed to wear such fringes. Sidonian picto chlamidem circumdata limbo. Aeneid, iv. C.—God ordained that his people should be thus distinguished from other nations. T.

VER. 39. Astray, (fornicantes). The eyes being left without restraint, easily fix upon dangerous objects, which captivate the heart, and lead to idolatry and the contempt of God's law. C.—We are also admonished to meditate on the law, and not follow our own thoughts or interpretations, so as to render it of no effect, in the regulation of our morals. H.

The schism of Core and his adherents: their punishment.

AND behold Core, the son of Isaar, the son of Caath, the son of Levi, and Dathan and Abiron, the sons of Eliab, and Hon, the son of Pheleth, of the children of Ruben,

2 Rose up against Moses, and with them two hundred and fifty others of the children of Israel, leading men of the synagogue, and who in the time of assembly were called by name.

3 And when they had stood up against Moses and Aaron, they said: Let it be enough for you, that all the multitude consisteth of holy ones, and the Lord is among son was the cousin of Moses.—Core engaged the rest in his revolt. Heb. "took or replied," interrupting Moses at the very time when he was speaking, in the name of God, and requiring that he should shew, by what right he arrogated to himself alone that authority. "Core separated himself." Chal. "He retired." Syr. "Core spoke . . . and Dathan . . . and they rose up." Sept. The Caathites encamped near the tribe of Ruben; and hence Core had an opportunity to engage some of them in his revolt, by insinuating that Moses occupied the post in the state which ought to belong to them, as Ruben was the first-born; while Aaron had obtained the high priesthood, and the rest of the Levites, though of equal nobility, were to be treated as his servants. It is not known when this revolt happened. Some place it at the camp of Sinai; others at that of Jethata. Deut. x. 8.

VER. 2. Rose up. The crime of these men, which was punished in so remarkable a manner, was that of schism, and of rebellion against the authority established by God in the Church; and their pretending to the priesthood without being lawfully called and sent: the same is the case of all modern sectaries. Ch.—Let them dread a similar punishment; not only the authors of such wicked pretensions, but those also who consent to them. Rom. i. 32. For we find that Core and all his adherents were buried in hell; (v. 33.) and those likewise who complained that their punishment was too severe, full victims to the raging fire. v. 49. With what earnestness ought we not, therefore, to contend for the faith, once delivered to the saints! Jude 3. For if those be so severely punished who rise up in opposition to lawful superiors, either in church or state, what swift destruction do they not bring upon their own heads who deny God, who bought them, and make him a liar, by calling in question his most sacred truths? 2 Pet. ii. 1. H.—Core and his companions impugned not the law directly, but resisted Moses and Aaron. S. Ignat. ep. ad Magnea. They believed in the same God; yet, because they took upon themselves to sacrifice, they were forthwith punished by God, and their unlawful sacrifices could do them no service. S. Cyp. ep. i. 6. Thus we are warned to keep in the true Church, and to obey those who are set over us; and never, for any temporal consideration whatever, to encourage, by our presence, the sermons or meetings of heretics, or of schismatics, lest we perish with them, v. 26. W.—Assembly. Heb. "famous in the assembly, men or name," and distinction, senators. It seems Hon left the rest of the conspirators, as he is mentioned no more. The princes of Ruben were desirous of obtaining the temporal power only. But the Levites aspired at that sacred pre-eminence, which had been given by God to Aaron and his sons. C.

VER. 3. Let it be enough. Heb. rab, "too much you take upon you," or "suffice it for you." Sept.—Holy ones, as deserving of the priesthood as yourselves, v. 10. Why then would you treat them as your inferiors? We will throw off the yoke, and assert our just rights. C.—On the same plea, Luther (de abrog them: why lift you up yourselves above the people of the Lord?

4 When Moses heard this, he fell flat on his face:

5 And speaking to Core, and all the multitude, he said: In the morning the Lord will make known who belong to him, and the holy he will join to himself: and whom he shall choose, they shall approach to him.

6 Do this therefore: Take every man of you your censers, thou Core, and all thy company,

7 And putting fire in them to-morrow, put incense upon it before the Lord: and whomsoever he shall choose, the same shall be holy: you take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi

8 And he said again to Core: Hear, ye sons of Levi:

9 Is it a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath separated you from all the people, and joined you to himself, that you should serve him in the service of the tabernacle, and should stand before the congregation of the people, and should minister to him?

10 Did he therefore make thee, and all thy brethren, the sons of Levi, to approach unto him, that you should challenge to yourselves the priesthood also,

11 And that all thy company should stand against the Lord? for what is Aaron that you murmur against him?

12 Then Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiron the sons of Eliab. But they answered: We will not come.

13 Is it a small matter to thee, that thou hast brought us out of a land that flowed with milk and honey, to kill us in the desert, except thou rule also like a lord over us?

14 Thou hast brought us indeed into a land, that floweth with rivers of milk and honey, and hast given us possessions of fields and vineyards; wilt thou also pull out our eyes? We will not come.

15 Moses therefore being very angry, said to the Lord: Respect not their sacrifices: thou knowest that I have not taken of them so much as a young ass at any time, nor have injured any of them.

Missa,) rejects all ecclesiastical hierarchy, and will have no distinct priesthood, because all Christians are called priests, (Apoc. i.) and a holy priesthood, 1 Pet. ii. 5. W.—But they do not take notice that the apostle immediately explains himself, by saying, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, and to declare the virtues of Christ; in which sense, they are also styled a kingly priesthood. ib. v. 9. See 1 Tim. ii. 19.—Only those who are chosen by God, can lawfully perform this sacred office, as the Almighty declares by a miracle. H.

VER. 6. Censers. It was not lawful for the Levites to offer incense: but they had prepared for themselves the ensigns of the priestly power, and Moses permits them to try their success. H.—They might have brought the censers, or broad plates, bowls, or vials, (Apoc. v. 8,) out of Egypt, where every family offers incense to their domestic gods and sacred animals. In Sicily and Greece they were also very common, as well as at Babylon; where married people always purified themselves with the smoke of incense. Herod. i. 197.

VER. 7. Lord, in his sanctuary, where the priests alone offered incense twice a day upon the altar. C.—Too much. Moses retorts upon them their own words, v. 3.

VER. 9. To him: Heb. and Sept. "to them," or instead of the people. God had chosen them for that post of honour, to the exclusion of all the rest, so that they ought, the least of all, to have complained. But it often happens, that those who are the most exalted, take occasion to esteem themselves deserving of still higher honours; and thus, like Lucifer, fall into the bottomless pit! H.—Core was perhaps the more irritated, because he was not at the head of the Caathites, though a descendant of the second son of Caath, while Elisaphan, sprung from a fourth son, was preferred to him. C. iii. T.

VER. 11. Him. The injury is offered to God, who made choice of Aaron freely.

VER. 14. Eyes. These princes of Ruben were not desirous of the priesthood, as Core was; they repined, that Moses had got possession of the sovereign authority, and therefore they endeavour to represent him as an impostor, who had promised great things, but in reality had deprived the people of all the happiness which they formerly enjoyed in Egypt, and was now disposed to exercise his 16 And he said to Core: Do thou and thy congregation stand apart before the Lord to-morrow, and Aaron apart.

17 Take every one of you censers, and put incense upon them, offering to the Lord two hundred and fifty censers: let Aaron also hold his censer.

18 When they had done this, Moses and Aaron standing,

19 And had drawn up all the multitude against them to the door of the tabernacle, the glory of the Lord appeared to them all.

20 And the Lord speaking to Moses and Aaron, said:

21 Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may presently destroy them.

22 They fell flat on their face, and said: O most mighty, the God of the spirits of all flesh, for one man's sin, shall thy wrath rage against all?

23 And the Lord said to Moses:

24 Command the whole people to separate themselves from the tents of Core and Dathan and Abiron.

25 And Moses arose, and went to Dathan and Abiron: and the ancients of Israel following him, 26 He said to the multitude: Depart from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest you be involved in their sins.

27 And when they were departed from their tents round about, Dathan and Abiron coming out, stood in the entry of their pavilions, with their wives and children, and all the people.

28 And Moses said: By this you shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all things that you see, and that I have not forged them of my own head:

29 If these men die the common death of men, and if they be visited with a plague, wherewith others also are wont to be visited, the Lord did not send me:

30 But if the Lord do a new thing, and the earth opening her mouth swallow them down, and all things that belong to them, and they go down alive into hell, you shall know that they have blasphemed the Lord.

"wilt thou put out the eyes of these men," who have informed us what sort of a country Chanaan is! Sept. "thou hast blinded these men," who are so stupid as to obey thee. C.—Chaldee, "though thou pull out our eyes, we will not come."

VER. 15. Very angry. This anger was a zeal against sin; and an indignation at the affront offered to God; like that which the same holy prophet conceived upon the sight of the golden calf, Ex. xxxii. 19. Ch.—Respect not. Heb. "thou wilt not have regard for their sacrifices," as long as they continue in these sentiments of pride and of rebellion. H.—Thou knowest. Heb. "I have not," &c.—Assa. VER. 27. People, (frequentia). The Sept. generally translate tappan by epokene, "family and effects," of every denomination. C.—Here was a full assembly waiting for the event, between fear and hope. As these rebels would not come, when Moses sent for them, he condescended to go to them, and denounced the impending ruin, v. 14, 25. He commits his whole cause to God, and is willing to be rejected as a vile impostor, if God do not shew, by a miraculous and exemplary punishment of his opponents, that what he had hitherto done, as the head of the people, and particularly in the consecration of Aaron, was by his direction. VER. 30. Hell. See Ps. liv. 16. Prov. i. 12. "They were consigned to the tomb before they were dead," (S. Optatus, B. i.) while their impenitent souls were buried in hell. The souls of their infant children, which had no share in their rebellion, might be exempted from the latter part of their punishment. C.—If some have the rashness to blame the severity of this judgment of God, let them shew the disparity between it and the various other accidents occasioned by earthquakes, &c. which involve millions of such "smiling infants" in destruction; or, if they do not infer from these misfortunes, that the laws of nature are unjust, neither ought they to conclude that the religion, delivered by God to Moses, was 31 *And immediately as he had made an end of speaking, the earth broke asunder under their feet:

32 And opening her mouth, devoured them with their tents, and all their substance.

33 And they went down alive into hell, the ground closing upon them, and they perished from among the people.

34 But all Israel, that was standing round about, fled at the cry of them that were perishing, saying: Lest perhaps the earth swallow us up also.

35 And a fire coming out from the Lord, destroyed the two hundred and fifty men that offered the incense.

36 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

37 Command Eleazar, the son of Aaron, the priest, to take up the censers that lie in the burning, and to scatter the fire on one side and the other: because they are sanctified

38 In the deaths of the sinners: and let him beat them into plates, and fasten them to the altar, because incense hath been offered in them to the Lord, and they are sanctified, that the children of Israel may see them for a sign and a memorial.

39 Then Eleazar the priest took the brazen censers, wherein they had offered, whom the burning fire had devoured, and beat them into plates, fastening them to the altar:

40 That the children of Israel might have for the time to come wherewith they should be admonished, that no stranger, or any one that is not of the seed of Aaron, should come near to offer incense to the Lord, lest he should suffer as Core suffered, and all his congregation, according as the Lord spoke to Moses.

41 The following day all the multitude of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron, saying: You have killed the people of the Lord.

42 And when there arose a sedition, and the tumult increased,

43 Moses and Aaron fled to the tabernacle of the covenant. And when they were gone into it, the cloud covered it, and the glory of the Lord appeared.

VER. 35. Incense. Core had left them, and was busy in stirring up the people to rebellion, when a fire proceeding from the cloud, or from the altar, or perhaps a thunderbolt, (C.) came to arraign them before God’s tribunal, there to meet their chief, and to hear the eternal sentence of separation from all good, which was instantly pronounced upon all who died impenitent. H.—Perhaps Core might have been offering incense with his 250 men, when the fire seized him, v. 40. D.

VER. 38. Sinners. These censers were sanctified or set apart for God’s altar: 1. By the intention of those who used them, though contrary to his will; 2. by the exemplary vengeance which he exercised upon the rash pretenders to the priesthood; 3. by being a monument of their folly, and therefore placed, by God’s order, upon the altar, to deter all others from imitating their conduct. Eleazar was commanded to take them up, and scatter the strange fire; that Aaron might not be defiled with touching the carcases or ashes of the deceased, nor seem to exult in their death. 50 And Aaron returned to Moses to the door of the tabernacle of the covenant, after the destruction was over.

CHAP. XVII.

The priesthood is confirmed to Aaron by the miracle of the blooming of his rod which is kept for a monument in the tabernacle.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

2 Speak to the children of Israel, and take of every one of them a rod by their kindreds, of all the princes of the tribes, twelve rods, and write the name of every man upon his rod.

3 And the name of Aaron shall be for the tribe of Levi, and one rod shall contain all their families:

4 And thou shalt lay them up in the tabernacle of the covenant before the testimony, where I will speak to thee.

5 Whomsoever of these I shall choose, his rod shall blossom: and I will make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, wherewith they murmur against you.

6 And Moses spoke to the children of Israel: and all the princes gave him rods one for every tribe: and there were twelve rods besides the rod of Aaron.

7 And when Moses had laid them up before the Lord in the tabernacle of the testimony:

afflicted with a perpetual leprosy, which rendered him incapable of exercising even the office of king, because he had attempted to offer incense, 2 K. xv. 5. 2 Par. xxvi. 17. H.

VER. 45. Get ye out. Moses and Aaron complied with the spirit, though not with the letter of this injunction. They lay prostrate on their faces, with all humility and earnestness, begging that the Lord would preserve them, and at the same time take pity on the frailty of the multitude, who had been deluded, and had, in words at least, approved the conduct of the rebels. H.—God encourages them inwardly to persevere in prayer, in the same manner as when he said to Moses, (Ex. xxxii. 10.) Let me alone, that my wrath may be enkindled, &c.

VER. 46. Take. Moses was inspired by God, on this extraordinary occasion, to pass over the common rules, which forbade the high priest to offer incense any where but in the tabernacle, and never to appear among the dead. C.

VER. 49. Core. We cannot reckon less than 15,000, who perished in consequence of their adherence to this innovator. Behold the first-fruits of ambition and of rebellion. H.

CHAP. XVII. VER. 2. Speak. The cause of the different families of the Levites being now fully decided, that none of the other tribes might pretend to the honour of the priesthood, God orders Moses to propose another miracle to them, of a less terrible nature than the preceding one.—Man, or prince of the tribe. H.—The name of Aaron was written upon his staff, which was taken from an almond tree: those of the princes of the other tribes appeared upon their respective rods, and represented their different families, v. 3. C.

VER. 5. They murmur. Hence it seems this miracle was not unnecessary, as the people were still inclined to murmur at the pre-eminence given to Aaron. H.

VER. 6. Besides, &c. Heb. and the other versions, “the rod of Aaron was in the midst of their rods.” Whence some infer, that there were only 12 rods. But Origen (hom. 9.) and most others, allow 13, as the tribe of Joseph was divided into those of Ephraim and Manasses; (C.) each of whom had a proper representative or prince. See C. ii. 13. 20. x. 22. xiii. 9. 12. The tribe of Levi is generally placed by itself. If there were only 12 rods, whether would the name of Elisama, or that of Gamaliel, designate the tribe of Joseph? Who was properly the prince of that undivided tribe? H.

8 He returned on the following day, and found that the rod of Aaron for the house of Levi, was budded: and that the buds swelling, it had bloomed blossoms, which spreading the leaves, were formed into almonds.

9 Moses therefore brought out all the rods from before the Lord to all the children of Israel: and they saw, and every one received their rods.

10 And the Lord said to Moses: Carry back the rod of Aaron into the tabernacle of the testimony, *that it may be kept there for a token of the rebellious children of Israel, and that their complaints may cease from me, lest they die.

11 And Moses did as the Lord had commanded.

12 And the children of Israel said to Moses: Behold we are consumed, we all perish.

13 Whosoever approacheth to the tabernacle of the Lord, he dieth. Are we all to a man to be utterly destroyed?

CHAP. XVIII.

The charge of the priests, and of the Levites, and their portion.

AND the Lord said to Aaron: Thou, and thy sons, and thy father's house with thee, shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary: and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the sins of your priesthood.

2 And take with thee thy brethren also of the tribe of Levi, and the sceptre of thy father, and let them be ready at hand, and minister to thee: but thou and thy sons shall minister in the tabernacle of the testimony.

3 And the Levites shall watch to do thy commands, and about all the works of the tabernacle: only they shall not come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary nor the altar, lest both they die, and you also perish with them.

4 But let them be with thee, and watch in the charge of the tabernacle, and in all the ceremonies thereof. A stranger shall not join himself with you.

5 Watch ye in the charge of the sanctuary, and in

* Heb. ix. 4.

VER. 8. The rod of Aaron for the house of Levi, was budded, &c. This rod of Aaron, which thus miraculously brought forth fruit, was a figure of the blessed Virgin conceiving and bringing forth her Son, without any prejudice to her virginity. Ch.—Almonds. Buds, blossoms, leaves, and fruit just formed, (Is. xviii. 5), appeared upon the rod, which before was dry. Tostat believes, that it continued in the same state during the whole time that it was preserved in the ark. "The grace of the priesthood never fades." S. Amb. ep. 63. or 58. The almond tree is the first which blossoms, and therefore it is styled a watching rod. Jer. i. 11. The Fathers observe in this of Aaron, a figure of Christ's passion and glorious resurrection; and Origen (hom. 9.) remarks, that from his cross proceed the sweet odours of virtue, and the fruits of converted nations. C.—For Christ made peace through the blood of his cross. Colos. i. 20. The blessed Virgin, whom the blooming rod also represents, might as easily become a mother without losing her virginal integrity, as this dry rod might produce fruit, without receiving any moisture from the earth. S. Aug. S. Greg. Nys. S. Bern. &c. W.

VER. 10. Testimony. S. Paul (Heb. ix. 4.) says it was in the ark. See Deut. xxxi. 26. C.—It was not the rod with which so many miracles had been wrought. T.

VER. 12. All perish. Many had been already destroyed. Those who remained, and were conscious of their seditious practices, feared a similar treatment. H.

VER. 13. Destroyed. They betray the sentiments of their hearts; though some believe that they were now entering into themselves, and desirous to know what they must do to escape the fate of their brethren. God gives them an answer in the following chapter, teaching them that they must refrain from approaching to the tabernacle, unless they be authorized; and provide such things as are requisite for the maintenance of those, whom he has chosen for his ministers. C.—Afterwards, he passes over the transactions of about 35 years, in profound silence, that the memory of those who had so often murmured, might perish. Salien. A. C. 1505.

CHAP. XVIII. VER. 1. Priesthood. If you transgress, or if you neglect to instruct and watch over those who are employed about the sanctuary, you shall be responsible for it. C.—You must resist those strangers who would intrude themselves into the office, which I have confirmed to you by miracles. M.

VER. 2. Sceptre. Heb. shebet, denotes also "tribe, family," &c. The princes of families probably bore a sceptre, as we find all magistrates did in the days of Homer Iliad i. Æneid xii. C.—All the other children of Aaron's father, were to be in the order of the Levites, among whom even Moses left his own family, though he was himself an extraordinary priest. H.

VER. 4. Stranger; even born of a woman of the tribe of Levi. Maimonides.

the ministry of the altar: lest indignation rise upon the children of Israel.

6 I have given you your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel, and have delivered them for a gift to the Lord, to serve in the ministries of the tabernacle.

7 But thou and thy sons look ye to the priesthood: and all things that pertain to the service of the altar, and that are within the veil, shall be executed by the priests. If any stranger shall approach, he shall be slain.

8 And the Lord said to Aaron: Behold I have given thee the charge of my first-fruits. All things that are sanctified by the children of Israel, I have delivered to thee, and to thy sons for the priestly office, by everlasting ordinances.

9 These therefore shalt thou take of the things that are sanctified, and are offered to the Lord. Every offering, and sacrifice, and whatsoever is rendered to me for sin and for trespass, and becometh holy of holies, shall be for thee, and thy sons.

10 Thou shalt eat it in the sanctuary: the males only shall eat thereof, because it is a consecrated thing.

11 But the first-fruits, which the children of Israel shall vow and offer, I have given to thee, and to thy sons, and to thy daughters, by a perpetual law. He that is clean in thy house, shall eat them.

12 All the best of the oil, and of the wine, and of the corn, whatsoever first-fruits they offer to the Lord, I have given them to thee.

13 All the first-ripe of the fruits, that the ground bringeth forth, and which are brought to the Lord, shall be for thy use: he that is clean in thy house, shall eat them.

14 Every thing that the children of Israel shall give by vow, shall be thine.

15 Whatsoever is first-born of all flesh, which they offer to the Lord, whether it be of men, or of beasts,

VER. 7. Priests. Heb. "you shall serve in the ministry of priests which I have given you." The office was not due to them on account of any superior merit. H.

VER. 8. Charge, as stewards or dispensers (C.) of what is offered to me; part of which I abandon to your use, as long as your republic shall subsist. M.—First-fruits, or "heave-offerings," which comprised also the victims first-born, &c. over which the high priest had a general inspection.—Office. Heb. "unction." Sept. "as a reward," or salary for your labour, in performing the duty of priest. C.

VER. 9. And are. Heb. "This shall be thine, of the most holy things, from the fire." Some parts of the victims for sin and of the libations, were to be consumed, while the rest was given to the priests. These libations were not properly styled holy of holies, (which were to be eaten only in the holy place, by those who were in actual service) no more than the peace-offerings were, of which even women might partake, v. 11. 12. Lev. x. 14.

VER. 11. House, perpetually. Hired servants were not admitted to eat of them. Lev. xxii. 10. C.

VER. 12. The best, (medullam.) Lit. "the marrow." H.—The fattest and most delicious. M.

VER. 13. First-ripe, (initia.) "The beginnings" (H.) of the fruit of trees, in the fourth year. Lev. xix. 24. It may also comprise all the fruits of the earth. C.—First-fruits must be distinguished from tithes, which were only the tenth part. The former were offered immediately to the Lord, but the latter to the priests, &c. for their support. Besides the first-fruits of ears of corn at the Passover, and of bread at Pentecost, and at every weekly baking, first-fruits were to be given in the 7th month of the harvest and of the vintage, according to each person's generosity, provided he gave between the 40th and the 60th part of his revenue; and these last are commonly the first-fruits meant in Scripture.—Lord, in sacrifice. If they were given to the priest, the unclean might partake of them. M.

VER. 14. Vow. Heb. cherem, "anathema;" man, beast, or land might be thus consecrated to God, either for sacrifice, or for the benefit of his priests. Lev. xxvii. 28. H.

VER. 15. Beast. The Rabbins restrain this to the ass alone, which they pretend was deemed the only unclean animal by the Israelites, in Egypt, when this law was established; and Moses indeed specifies it alone. Ex. xiii. 18. Abenezra.—But we cannot doubt but that camels, and all other unclean animals, were to be included, if the Hebrews kept them; (C.) and those which were rendered impure by some defect, were also to be redeemed. M.

shall belong to thee: only for the first-born of man thou shalt take a price, and every beast that is unclean, thou shalt cause to be redeemed;

16 And the redemption of it shall be after one month, for five sicles of silver, by the weight of the sanctuary. *A sicle hath twenty obols.

17 But the firstling of a cow, and of a sheep, and of a goat, thou shalt not cause to be redeemed, because they are sanctified to the Lord. Their blood only thou shalt pour upon the altar, and their fat thou shalt burn for a most sweet odour to the Lord.

18 But the flesh shall fall to thy use, as the consecrated breast, and the right shoulder, shall be thine.

19 All the first-fruits of the sanctuary, which the children of Israel offer to the Lord, I have given to thee, and to thy sons and daughters, by a perpetual ordinance. It is a covenant of salt for ever before the Lord, to thee and to thy sons.

20 And the Lord said to Aaron: You shall possess nothing in their land, neither shall you have a portion among them: I am thy portion and inheritance in the midst of the children of Israel.

21 And I have given to the sons of Levi all the tithes of Israel for a possession, for the ministry wherewith they serve me in the tabernacle of the covenant:

22 That the children of Israel may not approach any more to the tabernacle, nor commit deadly sin,

23 But only the sons of Levi may serve me in the tabernacle, and bear the sins of the people. It shall be an everlasting ordinance in your generations. ^bThey shall not possess any other thing.

24 But be content with the oblation of tithes, which I have separated for their uses and necessities.

* Exod. xxx. 13. Levit. xxvii. 25. Supra iii. 47. Ezec. xlv. 12.

VER. 16. Of it: the first-born of man. The child might be redeemed sooner, and sometimes they waited till after the purification of the mother, or 40 days, as our blessed Lady did. Lu. ii. 22. C.—Five sicles of silver, or about 11s. 6d. Eng. were then to be paid, unless poverty obliged them to give only two turtles or pigeons. H.—Beasts might be redeemed after they were eight days old. Ex. xiii. 12. Leo of Modena, (p. 1. c. 9.) informs us, that when a child is to be redeemed, at present, the father sends for a descendant of Aaron, who, after enquiring of the mother, if she have had no child before; and of the father, if he wish to redeem the infant, says aloud, "This child, being the first-born, belongs to me; as it is said, (Num. xviii. 16.) Thou shalt redeem the child of a month old for five sicles. But I take this (about two crowns of gold) instead." C.—But how can these priests prove their genealogy, since the distinction of the tribes has been so long lost?—Of silver. Heb. "according to thy estimation, for the money of five sicles, by the sicle of the sanctuary, which hath 20 geras." H.

VER. 18. Thine. So that thy wife and children, if clean, may eat the flesh. C. VER. 19. A covenant of salt. It is a proverbial expression, signifying a covenant not to be altered or corrupted; as salt is used to keep things from corruption; a covenant perpetual, like that by which it was appointed that salt should be used in every sacrifice. Levit. ii. 8. Ch.—Thus God gave the kingdom to David for ever, by a covenant of salt, 2 Par. xiii. 5. Salt is an emblem of eternity. Oleaster believes, that salt was used in the ratification of all solemn covenants, to denote their stability. C.

VER. 20. Nothing. No portion of land, like the other tribes; but only some towns and suburbs, allotted to thy children in the midst of the Israelites. They might purchase land as well as others, and might obtain a property by the vows of their brethren. Lev. xxvii. 14. Jeremias (xxxii. 7.) and S. Barnaby had land. Act. iv. 37. God had provided for his ministers abundantly, without exposing them to much trouble. The Levites enjoyed the tithes of all the produce of the country, besides the first-fruits of corn, dough, &c. and some parts of each beast that was killed in the town. Deut. xviii. 3. The priests, who were still fewer in number, enjoyed the 100th part of the revenue of all Israel, receiving tithes from the Levites, and innumerable accidental offerings of wine, &c. which made Philo say (de præm. Sacerd.) that "the law of Moses gave the priests all the splendour of kings." They might, therefore, be zealous to preserve religion for their own temporal advantages. —I am, &c. God promises to reward those who serve him with fidelity. Deut. xviii. 1. Jos. xiii. 14. The priests of the new law ought more particularly to serve him with disinterestedness, for his own sake. C.—Of this they are reminded, when they take the first step towards holy orders. The bishop cuts off some of their hair in the form of a cross, while they recite, The Lord is the portion of my inheritance, and of my cup; it is Thou that wilt restore my inheritance to me. Ps. xv. 5. Pontif. Rom. H.—"Some possess riches, while they serve Christ, who appeared in the garb of poverty." S. Jerom ad Nepot.

25 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

26 Command the Levites, and declare unto them: When you shall receive of the children of Israel the tithes, which I have given you, offer the first-fruits of them to the Lord, that is to say, the tenth part of the tenth:

27 That it may be reckoned to you as an oblation of first-fruits, as well of the barn-floors as of the wine-presses:

28 And of all the things of which you receive tithes offer the first-fruits to the Lord, and give them to Aaron the priest.

29 All the things that you shall offer of the tithes, and shall separate for the gifts of the Lord, shall be the best and choicest things.

30 And thou shalt say to them: If you offer all the goodly and the better things of the tithes, it shall be reckoned to you as if you had given the first-fruits of the barn-floor and the wine-press:

31 And you shall eat them in all your places, both you and your families: because it is your reward for the ministry, wherewith you serve in the tabernacle of the testimony.

32 And you shall not sin in this point, by reserving the choicest and fat things to yourselves, lest you profane the oblations of the children of Israel, and die.

CHAP. XIX.

The law of the sacrifice of the red cow, and the water of expiation.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying. 2 This is the observance of the victim, which the Lord hath ordained. Command the children of Israel, that they bring unto thee a red cow of full age, in which there is no blemish, and which hath not carried the yoke:

^b Deut. xviii. 1.

VER. 22. Deadly sin. That is, sin which will bring death after it. Ch.—Heb. "lest they bear sin unto death," and fall like their brethren. C. xvii. 13. H.

VER. 23. People; or the Heb. may be also "they shall bear their own iniquity." If they prove negligent in performing their duty, they shall be punished; and if they do not restrain the people from approaching the tabernacle, they shall be answerable for their offence, and both shall incur death. C.—They shall, however, save their own souls, if they have not been deficient in instructing the people, and in doing their utmost to prevent any profanation. H.

VER. 27. As an. Thus you will perform your duty, as well as if you gave corn and wine of your own growth. M.—Presses. Heb. yakeb, means also the tub where wine was kept. Jonathan translates, "as the ripe (old) wine of the tub of your wine-press;" insinuating that the wine must be fit for use. C. v. 29. 30.

VER. 32. By, &c. Heb. "when you have made a heave-offering of the best of it; nor shall you profane the holy things of," &c. H.—This they would do, if they gave the worst only to the priests. D.—There were only three at this time; yet they received the 100th part of the produce of so many thousands. Well therefore might God say, I will fill the souls of the priests with fatness: and my people shall be filled with good things. Jer. xxxi. 14. T.

CHAP. XIX. VER. 2. Observance. Heb. "ceremony." Sept. "distinction, (distole, S. Aug. q. 33.) or ordinance." C.—Victim. Heb. "the ordinance of the law." D.—A red cow, &c. This red cow, offered in sacrifice for sin, and consumed with fire without the camp, with the ashes of which, mingled with water, the unclean were to be expiated and purified; was a figure of the passion of Christ, by whose precious blood, applied to our souls in the holy sacraments, we are cleansed from our sins. Ch.—Age, three years old. Some translate, "entirely red." They suppose, that these regulations are in opposition to the customs of the Egyptians, who never sacrificed the cow, esteeming it sacred to Isis, or to the moon. Spencer (Rit. ii. 15.) adds, that the red colour was formerly in the highest estimation; and this victim represented the death of Christ, who expiated our defilements. The Egyptians immolated bulls of a red colour, in hatred of Typhon, and to appease that dangerous god, whom they depicted perfectly red. Plut. (Isis) observes, that they hate all animals of that colour; and the Copts precipitate a red ass down a precipice. The ancient kings of Egypt sacrificed red men on the tomb of Osiris or Typhon; (Diod. Bib. 1.) and Manetho assures us, that they scattered their ashes in the wind. If this custom prevailed in the days of Moses, we need not wonder that he teaches the Hebrews to have so little dread of Typhon, as even to choose a red cow in preference, to purify themselves.—Yoke. Such victims were generally chosen by the Romans, Greeks, and Egyptians, as more delicate and respectful. Intacta totidem cervice juvenas. Georg. iv. Bochart, anim. 2. 33. S. Jerom (ep. 27.) says, that a red cow was sacrificed every year, as in reality one would be requisite for all the people, though the Rabbins

3 And you shall deliver her to Eleazar the priest, who shall bring her forth without the camp, and shall immolate her in the sight of all:

4 And dipping his finger in her blood, shall sprinkle it over-against the door of the tabernacle seven times,

5 And shall burn her in the sight of all, delivering up to the fire her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, and her dung.

6 The priest shall also take cedar-wood, and hyssop, and scarlet twice dyed, and cast it into the flame, with which the cow is consumed.

7 And then, after washing his garments and body, he shall enter into the camp, and shall be unclean until the evening.

8 He also that hath burned her shall wash his garments and his body, and shall be unclean until the evening.

9 And a man that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the cow, and shall pour them forth without the camp in a most clean place, that they may be reserved for the multitude of the children of Israel, and for a water of aspersion, because the cow was burnt for sin.

10 And when he that carried the ashes of the cow, hath washed his garments, he shall be unclean until the evening. The children of Israel, and the strangers that dwell among them, shall observe this for a holy thing, by a perpetual ordinance.

11 He that toucheth the corpse of a man, and is therefore unclean seven days, 12 Shall be sprinkled with this water on the third day, and on the seventh, and so shall be cleansed. If he were not sprinkled on the third day, he cannot be cleansed on the seventh.

13 Every one that toucheth the corpse of a man, and pretend that only seven, or ten at most, were treated in this manner, from Moses till the destruction of the temple by Titus. Drusius.

VER. 3. Of all. Heb. "before his face." Sept. "they shall bring her out, slay and burn her before him," which must be referred to some other priests, who accompanied Eleazar on this occasion, v. 8. C.—Aaron did not perform this office, as the sacrifice was not solemn, but sorrowful, and designed for purification. M.—The Rabbins say, however, that the high priest performed this ceremony ever after; and, since the building of the temple, they did it upon Mount Olivet. This is also remarked by S. Jerom, ep. 27. It was thus a more lively figure of Jesus Christ sweating blood on that same ground; as the smoke might represent his ascension. Act. i. 10, Lu. xxii. 44. C.—He died out of Jerusalem, in full age, (v. 2,) or 33 years old, being wounded in every part for our transgressions, (v. 5,) setting us an example how to suffer, (v. 8,) and by his blood communicating virtue to the sacraments, v. 5. His body, derived from Adam, (or red earth, v. 2,) was buried in a most clean place, (v. 9,) and those who crucified him became more unclean; (v. 8,) while even those who were employed in burying him, (v. 9,) required to be cleansed by the grace of his passion, which must be communicated to them by baptism, in the name of the blessed Trinity, without which they cannot partake of any of the sacraments. C. xii. The old law could bring nothing to perfection. Those who lived under that dispensation, were forced to wait till the evening, (v. 7,) when in the last ages the new law commenced, that by faith in Christ, they might obtain the remission of their sins. Thus we perceive the meaning of many things which to the Jews were veiled in shadows. Heb. x. 5. Aug. q. 33. Theod. q. 36. W.—The Fathers observe also, that the infirmity of our Saviour's flesh, and his liberty in giving and resuming his life, (Jo. x. 18,) were denoted by the cow, which had never been yoked. C.

VER. 4. And. Heb. "And Eleazar, the priest, shall take part of her blood with his finger." He looked from the pile of wood, where he was standing, towards the west, and sprinkled the blood, and wiping his fingers upon the skin of the cow, waiting till the fire was kindled, before he opened her belly; he then threw into the fire the cedar-wood, &c. Drusius.—Others believe that this last ceremony was performed by some one else, (v. 7,) as it is not clear that Eleazar became unclean. His being substituted instead of Aaron, might shew that Christ would institute a new priesthood.

VER. 6. Dyea, with which the cedar and hyssop were tied together, as being deemed most proper instruments of purifications. Lev. xiv. 4. 49. S. Paul informs us, (Heb. ix. 19,) that Moses thus sprinkled the people and the book: and branches of this description were probably used when the people took this holy water, v. 18. The ashes intimate, that those who have sinned, may be purified by the sacrament of penance, v. 9. C.

is not sprinkled with this mixture, shall profane the tabernacle of the Lord, and shall perish out of Israel: because he was not sprinkled with the water of expiation, he shall be unclean, and his uncleanness shall remain upon him.

14 This is the law of a man that dieth in a tent: All that go into his tent, and all the vessels that are there, shall be unclean seven days.

15 The vessel that hath no cover nor binding over it, shall be unclean.

16 If any man in the field, touch the corpse of a man that was slain, or that died of himself, or his bone, or his grave, he shall be unclean seven days.

17 And they shall take of the ashes of the burning and of the sin-offering, and shall pour living waters upon them into a vessel.

18 And a man that is clean shall dip hyssop in them, and shall sprinkle therewith all the tent, and all the furniture, and the men that are defiled with touching any such thing.

19 And in this manner he that is clean shall purify the unclean on the third and on the seventh day. And being expiated the seventh day, he shall wash both himself and his garments, and be unclean until the evening.

20 If any man be not expiated after this rite, his soul shall perish out of the midst of the church: because he hath profaned the sanctuary of the Lord, and was not sprinkled with the water of purification.

21 This precept shall be an ordinance for ever. He also that sprinkled the water, shall wash his garments. Every one that shall touch the waters of expiation, shall be unclean until the evening.

22 Whatsoever a person toucheth who is unclean, he shall make it unclean: and the person that toucheth any of these things, shall be unclean until the evening.

VER. 10. Strangers. Even those who had not embraced the Jewish religion. Grotius.—Thus, the baptism of Christ brings salvation both to the Jews and to the Gentiles. S. Aug.

VER. 12. Seventh. If he neglect to be sprinkled on the third day, his purification will be protracted till the 10th. As this was the only means of removing the legal uncleanness contracted by touching a dead body, some of the ashes must have been reserved in various parts of the country, after the Israelites were dispersed. C.

VER. 13. Upon him, unless he be excused by ignorance, (Lev. v. 3. 6,) he shall be slain.

VER. 14. Days. Almost all nations seem to have considered themselves defiled by the presence of a corpse. Virgil (Æn. vi. 149,) writes, Prætoræ jacet exanimem tibi corpus amici—Heu nescis! totamque incestat funere classem.

VER. 15. Cover. Sam. "neither chains nor bands." Formerly boxes were tied down. Hom. Odys. viii. If the covering of any hollow vessel was off, when a corpse was present, it became unclean. C.

VER. 16. Grave. The Hebrews buried at a distance from towns, and set up some mark to apprise all people, that they might not be defiled for seven days. C.

VER. 17. Burning of the red cow, which was also a sin-offering, v. 9. H.—Upon the ashes they poured some running or spring water. The pagans generally preferred the water of the sea; or if they could not procure any, they mixed salt with common water. Ovid. (Fast. iv.) mentions a lustration made with the ashes of a calf, mixed with horse blood; and another, which was used in honour of Pales, the goddess of harvests, by the oldest virgin present, who sprinkled the ashes of calves, populos purget ut ille cinis. Athenæus (ix. 18,) observes that a stick taken from the fire of the altar, was extinguished in water for the purification of the unclean; and the ancient Romans, who had been at a funeral, sprinkled themselves with water, and jumped over fire for the same purpose; as the Greeks were accustomed to place a vessel full of water, at the doors where a corpse was lying, that all might purify themselves when they came out. C.

VER. 20. Church, or assembly of the people. H.—He shall be put to death by the judges, or by God. M.

VER. 21. Evening. The victims which were appointed for the expiation of sin, communicated a legal uncleanness to those who were employed about them. They were looked upon as so holy, that the most pure were guilty of a sort of irreverence by touching them. C.

VER. 22. Is unclean, by touching the dead, must remain defiled seven days. But those whom he touches, as well as all who may have communication with them in infinitum, may be purified in the evening. C.

CHAP. XX.

The death of Mary, the sister of Moses. The people murmur for want of water: God giveth it them from the rock. The death of Aaron.

AND the children of Israel, and all the multitude came into the desert of Sin, in the first month: and the people abode in Cades. And Mary died there, and was buried in the same place.

2 And the people wanting water, came together against Moses and Aaron.

3 And making a sedition, they said: Would God we had perished among our brethren before the Lord.

4 Why have you brought out the church of the Lord into the wilderness, that both we and our cattle should die?

5 Why have you made us come up out of Egypt, and have brought us into this wretched place, which cannot be sowed, nor bringeth forth figs, nor vines, nor pomegranates, neither is there any water to drink?

6 And Moses and Aaron, leaving the multitude, went into the tabernacle of the covenant, and fell flat upon the ground, and cried to the Lord, and said: O Lord God, hear the cry of this people, and open to them thy treasure a fountain of living water, that being satisfied, they may cease to murmur. And the glory of the Lord appeared over them.

7 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

8 Take the rod, and assemble the people together, thou and Aaron thy brother, and speak to the rock before them, and it shall yield waters. And when thou hast brought forth water out of the rock, all the multitude and their cattle shall drink.

9 Moses therefore took the rod, which was before the Lord, as he had commanded him,

10 And having gathered together the multitude be-

CHAP. XX. VER. 1. Sin, Zin, or Tein, nearer to Judea than the desert, where the Hebrews encamped before. Ex. xvi. 1. H.—Moses informs us of very little from the time when the people murmured at Cades-barne, in the second year, till the beginning of the 40th year of their sojournment.—In Cades. The Rabbins assert, they remained there the first time twenty-nine years, (C. xiv. 45,) and the second, ten. Genebrard, A. M. 2670. But we do not believe they continued there above a year the first time.—Mary. S. Gregory of Nyssa, and S. Ambrose, suppose she was always a virgin, in which respect she was a figure of our blessed lady, as well as in her name. She was probably 130 years old, as she was very discreet at the time of the birth of Moses, and employed by Providence in preserving his life, as the blessed Virgin screened our Saviour from the fury of Herod. She had the superintendence over the Hebrew women; (Ex. xv. 20. Theod. in Mic. vi. 4,) and hence, many apply to her and her brothers, those words of Zacharias, (xi. 8.) I cut off three shepherds in one month. Mary died without being permitted to enter the promised land, on account of her murmuring, C. xii. Thus the synagogue, though proud of her prerogatives, cannot enter the land of rest. C.—There. Some place this Cades not far from the Red Sea, (v. 20.) south of Idumea, while the other was to the north, and nearer Chanaan, being generally called Cades-barne. Bonfrere and C. a Lajid. C. xx. 16.—In this place Mary died, four months before Aaron. M.

VER. 3. Brethren, Core, &c. (C. xvi. 32,) or with them who died, (C. xi.) at the graves of lust. C.

VER. 6. And cried... to murmur. These words are not found in the Heb., Sept., &c. nor in the new edition of S. Jerome, though they occur in most of the Latin MSS. C.—If it be an addition, it must be very ancient. Mariana.

VER. 8. The rod, with which Moses had wrought so many miracles, and which was placed in the tabernacle, v. 9. It is called his rod, in the Heb. v. 11. We do not find that the rod of Aaron, which budded, was used to work miracles.—Thou. Sept. "you." Both Moses and Aaron concurred in the action, (v. 12,) but Moses was the chief agent. C.

VER. 10. Rock. Your frequent murmurs will stop the course of God's bounty. If God had not condemned the conduct of his ministers on this occasion, we could hardly find any reason to blame them. But the Fathers observe, that they betrayed a want of resolution, and intended to throw the blame upon the incredulity of the people, in case they failed of success. Because they exasperated his spirit, and he distinguished with his lips. Ps. cv. 33. See S. Chrys. and S. Aug. on this psalm. They were not commanded to strike the rock at all; and when the water did not come at first, they struck again, (C.) being afraid lest they should now be taken for impostors. H.—They speak as if the work was their fore the rock, he said to them: Hear, ye rebellious and incredulous: "Can we bring you forth water out of this rock?"

11 And when Moses had lifted up his hand, and struck the rock twice with the rod, there came forth water in great abundance, so that the people and their cattle drank.

12 And the Lord said to Moses and Aaron: "Because you have not believed me, to sanctify me before the children of Israel, you shall not bring these people into the land which I will give them."

13 This is the water of contradiction, where the children of Israel strove with words against the Lord, and he was sanctified in them.

14 In the mean time Moses sent messengers from Cades to the king of Edom, to say: Thus sayeth thy brother Israel: Thou knowest all the labour that hath come upon us:

15 In what manner our fathers went down into Egypt, and there we dwelt a long time, and the Egyptians afflicted us, and our fathers:

16 And how we cried to the Lord, and he heard us, and sent an angel, who hath brought us out of Egypt. Lo we are now in the city of Cades, which is in the uttermost of thy borders, 17 And we beseech thee, that we may have leave to pass through thy country. We will not go through the fields, nor through the vineyards, we will not drink the waters of thy wells, but we will go by the common highway, neither turning aside to the right hand nor to the left, till we are passed thy borders.

18 And Edom answered them: Thou shalt not pass by me, if thou dost, I will come out armed against thee.

own.—Can we, &c. They exasperate the people, instead of promoting their conversion. In a word, they did not glorify God, (C.) by representing him as the sovereign holiness and mercy; and the God of unbounded power. H.

VER. 11. The rock. This rock was a figure of Christ, and the water that issued out from the rock, of his precious blood, the source of all our good; (Ch.) while the striking twice with the rod denoted the cross, composed of two pieces of wood. S. Aug. q. 35. W.

VER. 12. You have not believed, &c. The fault of Moses and Aaron, on this occasion, was a certain diffidence and weakness of faith: not doubting of God's power or veracity; but apprehending the unworthiness of that rebellious and incredulous people, and therefore speaking with some ambiguity. Ch.—S. Augustine (c. Faust. xvi. 16,) does not think them guilty of any grievous crime. M.—But this must be left undetermined. C.—Land, he, and the Jordan, which is described (C. xxxiv. 2,) as the land of promise, though the east side of the Jordan was so too. M.

VER. 13. The water of contradiction or strife. Heb. Mribah. Ch.—Sanctified: he shewed the effects of his power and clemency towards the people, and he treated his ministers with a just severity. The Samaritan copy here inserts what we read in Deuteronomy, only it places the speech of Moses in an historical form. "Then Moses said, Lord, &c. C. iii. 24–28. Moreover, the Lord said to Moses, you shall pass by, &c. C. ii. 4–6.

VER. 14. Cades, not far from Mount Hor, on the confines of Idumea, v. 22 and Jud. xi. 16. C.

VER. 16. Angel, who had performed so many wonders in favour of the Hebrews. He is generally supposed to have been S. Michael in the cloud.

VER. 18. Edom, the people who dwell near Mount Hor. Those of Seir, lying more to the west, (D.) granted them leave to pass, and to buy food. Dent. ii. 28. 29. Grotius maintains, that the Hebrews might justly have forced a passage upon this refusal: as S. Augustine (q. 41,) says, that they might lawfully have waged war upon the Amorrites, on the like occasion; and the holy wars have been defended on the same plea, because the Saracens would not suffer the Christians to go in pilgrimage to the holy land. See Mare. lib. i. 1. But Selden (Mare, claus. 20,) asserts, that princes have a right to hinder others from passing through their territories; and S. Augustine only excepts one case, when they are sure the strangers can or will do no harm. But how can they obtain this assurance; Calmet answers, the long continuance of the Hebrews near the confines of Seir without offering any molestation, and their being conducted by so holy a general might give the people of Hor sufficient security. But at any rate the Israelites could not wage war upon them for refusing a passage, since they were expressly 19 And the children of Israel said: We will go by the beaten way: and if we and our cattle drink of thy waters, we will give thee what is just: there shall be no difficulty in the price, only let us pass speedily.

20 But he answered: Thou shalt not pass. And immediately he came forth to meet them, with an infinite multitude, and a strong hand:

21 Neither would he condescend to their desire, to grant them passage through his borders. Wherefore Israel turned another way from him.

22 And when they had removed the camp from Cades, they came to Mount Hor, which is in the borders of the land of Edom:

23 Where the Lord spoke to Moses:

24 Let Aaron, saith he, go to his people: for he shall not go into the land, which I have given the children of Israel, because he was incredulous to my words, at the waters of contradiction.

25 Take Aaron and his son with him, and bring them up into Mount Hor:

26 And when thou hast stripped the father of his vesture, thou shalt vest therewith Eleazar, his son: Aaron shall be gathered to his people, and die there.

27 Moses did as the Lord had commanded: and they went up into Mount Hor before all the multitude.

28 And when he had stripped Aaron of his vestments, he vested Eleazar, his son, with them.

29 And Aaron being dead in the top of the mountain, he came down with Eleazar.

30 And all the multitude seeing that Aaron was dead, mourned for him thirty days throughout all their families.

forbidden by God: Stir not against them, (Deut. ii. 5,) the people of Seir, nor against any of the Idumeans, the children of Esau, who had taken possession of the country of the Horrites, Gen. xiv. 6. The Hebrews seem to have been convinced of this, otherwise they would not have feared their multitudes, nor taken such a circuitous road. The angel in the cloud directed them to proceed, without molesting their territory. They went, therefore, towards the south, round the land of the Idumeans, who dwell near the Dead Sea. H.

VER. 19. Price. Heb. "I will only do one thing, walk through." Sept. "the matter is of no consequence, we go by the mountain." Louis de Dieu translates, "It is not indeed a word, (or idle pretence) I will pass through on foot."

VER. 22. Hor, in the territory of Cades, or Rekem, which is the same town as Petra. Onkelos. Josep. Ant. iv. 4. Hor was part of a range of mountains, like Libanus. The Hebrews encamped at a place called Mosera. Deut. x. 6. C.

VER. 24. People, in the bosom of Abraham, while his body is consigned to the grave.—Incredulous. Heb. "you rebelled against," &c. the words were addressed to both. Sept. "you irritated me." H.

VER. 26. Vesture, or pontifical attire. Eleazar had been anointed already, so that perhaps he stood in need of no other ceremony to be acknowledged high priest. He was dispensed with on this occasion to attend his dying father. The spirit of God gives great encomiums to Aaron. Malac. ii. 4-7. Eccli. xlv. 7. 27. He, at the same time, prefigured Christ, the gospel, and the old law. He spoke plainly, and was allowed to enter the holy of holies. While Moses was excluded, spoke with difficulty, and had a veil on his face. See S. Jer. ep. ad Fab. man. 33. But on the other hand, he represented the law with all its defects. He falls into several great faults, and dies despoiled of his glorious vestments, to shew the abrogation of his priesthood. The pagans have, perhaps, introduced some parts of his history into that of Mercury, the god of thieves and of travellers, the messenger of the other gods, whom they adorn with a wand, &c. in imitation of the rod of Aaron, who was the interpreter of Moses, and the head of that people, which wandered for 40 years, after plundering Egypt. C.

VER. 29. Dead, in the 123d year of his age. M.—Neither Moses, Aaron, nor Mary, representing the Law, the priests, and the prophets of the Old Testament, could introduce the people into the promised land. This honour was reserved for Josue, the illustrious figure of Jesus Christ, and of his Church. C.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. Arad. This was either the name of the king, or of his city, which was situated in the southern parts of Chanaan, and which fell to the snare of Hobab, in the tribe of Juda. H.—When this king heard, by means of his spies, or was informed that Israel intended to make an irruption into his country like spies, without declaring war, or by the way which their spies had marked out either just before, or in the second year after their exit; or in fine, by the road, which the Sept. leave untranslated, Athrim, and which means, "of the spies," he resolved to be beforehand with them; and, coming suddenly upon King Arad is overcome. The people murmur, and are punished with fiery serpents: they are healed by the brazen serpent. They conquer the kings of Sehon and Og.

AND when king Arad, the Chanaanite, who dwelt toward the south, had heard this, to wit, that Israel was come by the way of the spies, he fought against them, and overcoming them, carried off their spoils.

2 But Israel binding himself by vow to the Lord, said: If thou wilt deliver this people into my hand, I will utterly destroy their cities.

3 And the Lord heard the prayers of Israel, and delivered up the Chanaanite; and they cut them off, and destroyed their cities: and they called the name of that place Horma, that is to say, Anathema.

4 And they marched from Mount Hor, by the way that leadeth to the Red Sea, to compass the land of Edom. And the people began to be weary of their journey and labour:

5 And speaking against God and Moses, they said: Why didst thou bring us out of Egypt, to die in the wilderness? There is no bread, nor have we any waters: our soul now loatheth this very light food.

6 Wherefore the Lord sent among the people fiery serpents, which bit them, and killed many of them.

7 Upon which they came to Moses, and said: We have sinned, because we have spoken against the Lord and thee: pray that he may take away these serpents from us. And Moses prayed for the people:

8 And the Lord said to him: Make a brazen serpent, and set it up for a sign: whosoever being struck shall look on it, shall live.

them, took some spoils, or, according to the Heb. Sept. &c. "captives. These, by the ancient laws of war, he might either sell or put to death. Vendere cum possis captivum, occidere non. Horace. Grot. Jur. iii. 7. The Rabbins pretend that this king took fresh courage on account of the death of Aaron, and the consequent disappearance of the cloud, and that he drove the Israelites seven encampments back, as far as Mosera, which they confound with Haseroth.

VER. 2. Cities. Heb. "I will subject their cities to anathema, or utter destruction." This vow they probably made at the place called Horma, or "Anathema," which was anciently called Saphaad. Judg. i. 17. They fully executed their threat under Josue, who defeated the king of Hered, (Jos. xii. 14,) though they destroyed, at present, whatever they could. Arad was afterwards rebuilt by Hobab.

VER. 3. Anathema. That is, a thing devoted to utter destruction. Ch.—The explanation of Horma is inserted by S. Jerom. H.

VER. 4. Edom, one of the princes, had refused them a passage; upon which they went by Salmana to Phunon, (C. xxxiii. 37. 42,) where they probably murmured, (C. v.) and were bitten by the serpents, as we read in this chapter. C.

VER. 5. God. They had before often directed their complaints against the two brothers. Now, Aaron being no more, they attack God himself, who had always resented the injury done to his ministers.—Food. So they call the heavenly manna: thus worldlings loathe the things of heaven, for which they have no relish. Ch.—Sept. "our soul is indignant at this most empty bread," which has no solidity in it, nor support. Many translate the Heb. "most vile bread." Thus, in the blessed eucharist, the substance of bread is removed, and the accidents only appear; so that to the worldly receiver, it seems very empty and light, though in reality it be super-substantial; containing Christ himself, who fills the worthy communicant with grace and comfort, and enables him to go forward, on the road to heaven, without fainting. H.

VER. 6. Fiery serpents. They are so called, because they that were bitten by them were burnt with a violent heat. Ch.—Hence they are called seraphim, by which name an order of angels is known. The Egyptians adored a serpent which they called serapia, at Rome; and they represented their god serapia, with a serpent entwining a monstrous figure, composed of a lion, a dog, and a wolf. Macrobius. Saturn. i. 20. The seraph was a winged serpent. Isai. xiv. 29. and xxx. 6. Such often infested Egypt, in spring, coming from Arabia, unless they were intercepted by the ibis. Their wings resembled those of bats. Herod. ii. 76. Mela, &c. God probably sent some of this description into the camp of the Israelites. C.—Some call them proser, (Plin. xxiv. 13,) from their burning; others the hydra, or, when out of water, the cherys, the venom of which is most dangerous. The Sept. style them simply, "the destroying, or deadly serpents." See Bochart. T. ii. B. iii. 13. Dent. viii. 15. Wis. xvi. 5. 10. H.

VER. 8. Brazen. Heb. "fiery." But in the following verse, it is said to have 9 "Moses therefore made a brazen serpent, and set it up for a sign: which when they that were bitten looked upon, they were healed.

10 And the children of Israel setting forwards camped in Oboth.

11 And departing thence, they pitched their tents in Jeabarim, in the wilderness, that faceth Moab toward the east.

12 And removing from thence, they came to the torrent Zared:

13 "Which they left, and encamped over-against Arnon," which is in the desert, and standeth out in the borders of the Amorrite. "For Arnon is the border of Moab, dividing the Moabites and the Amorrites.

14 Wherefore it is said in the book of the wars of the Lord: As he did in the Red Sea, so will he do in the streams of Arnon.

been "of brass." We might translate, "make a seraph, and fix it upon a standard," (C.) in which form it would resemble one suspended on a cross. It was placed at the entrance of the tabernacle. S. Just. apol. Ezechias afterwards destroyed it, because it was treated with superstitious honours. 4 K. xviii. 4. Thus the best things are often abused. H.—God commands this image to be erected, while he forbids all images of idols. W.—By comparing the different passages of Scripture, we may discern the true import of them. Pictures may often prove very useful and instructive. They serve the ignorant instead of books. But then the ignorant must be carefully instructed not to treat them with improper respect, as S. Gregory admonishes. And is not the same caution requisite for those who read even the word of God, lest they rest it to their own destruction, as both the unlearned and the unstable frequently do. 2 Pet. iii. 16. If every thing must be rejected which is liable to abuse, what part of the creation will be spared? The Bible, the sacraments, all creatures must be laid aside. For we read, (Rom. viii. 20. 22,) the creature was made subject to vanity—every creature groaneth. H.—It is probable that Moses represented on the standard, such a serpent, as had been the instrument of death. This was not intended for a charm or talisman, as Marsham would impiously pretend. Chron. x. p. 148. Such inventions proceed from the devil; and the Marsi were famous for curing the bites of serpents, by giving certain plates of brass. Arnob. ii. See Psal. lvi. 5. But this image was set up by God's express command; and the Book of Wisdom (xvi. 5. 7,) assures us, that the effect was entirely to be attributed to him, the figure of a brazen serpent being rather calculated to increase than to remove the danger. Kimchi. Muis. Hence Jonathan well observes, that only those were healed who raised their hearts to God. C.

VER. 9. A brazen serpent. This was a figure of Christ crucified, and of the efficacy of a lively faith in him, against the bites of the hellish serpent. John iii. 14. (Ch.) S. Amb. Apol. i. 8. As the old serpent infected the whole human race, Jesus Christ gives life to those who look at him with entire confidence. Theod. q. 38. The brazen serpent was destitute of poison, though it resembled a most noxious animal; so Jesus Christ assumed our nature, yet without sin. C.

VER. 10. Oboth, where Obodas, an ancient king of the Nabatheans, was adored. Hither they came from Phunon, celebrated for its copper-mines, where Bochart believes the Hebrews were bitten by the serpents, though others say that judgment was inflicted upon them at Salmoona; which may be derived from telem enu, "our image."

VER. 11. Jeabarim, means "the ford, (of Zared, v. 12,) or the straits of passages, passengers, or Hebrews; or the hills of Abarim," which extended over the eastern parts of Moab. It was the 38th station, (C.) at the southern extremity of Mount Abarim. H.—After which Moses specifies those of Zared, (v. 12.) Mathana, Nahaliel, Bamoth, Arnon, (v. 19,) Dibon-gad, and Helnon-dablataim, (C.) all on the sides of that mountain, before they came to the summit, which was also called Phasga and Nabo. C. xxxiii. 45. &c. But Pococke reckons only the two last among the stations, and makes those of Abarim and Shittim the 41st and 42d. The Sept. read, "they encamped in Achelgai, on the other side, in the desert." H.—Eusebius and S. Jerom call this station of Jee, Gai or Hai, which they place near Petra. Jer. xlix. 4.—East. The Sam. here inserts, (Deut. ii. 9,) "and the Lord said to Moses, Fight not," &c.

VER. 12. Zared. The Israelites passed over this torrent, 38 years after the murmur at Cades-barne, (Deut. ii. 14,) when God ordered Moses not to attack the Moabites.

VER. 13. Against. Heb. "on the other, or on this side of (the river, v. 14,) Arnon," which runs from the east, almost in the same direction as the torrent of Zared, but empties itself into the Dead Sea higher up, near the mouth of the Jordan. C.—It divides the Moabites from their brethren, the children of Ammon, who lay to the north-east. The Hebrews encamped on the south side of this river, in the desert of Cademoth, (Deut. ii. 26,) whence they sent to ask leave of Selon to pass through his dominions; but, on his refusal, God ordered them to cross the Arnon by force. C.

VER. 14. The book of the wars, &c. An ancient book, which, like several others quoted in Scripture, has been lost. Ch.—S. Augustine (q. 42.) thinks this book was written by one of that country. Others believe, that Moses wrote a more detailed account of the wars which he had to wage with the Amalecites, (Ex. xvii. 14,) and these other nations, out of which he has only inserted some 15 The rocks of the torrents were bowed down, that they might rest in Ar, and lie down in the borders of the Moabites.

16 When they went from that place, the well appeared, whereof the Lord said to Moses: Gather the people together, and I will give them water.

17 Then Israel sung this song: Let the well spring up. They sung thereto:

18 The well which the princes dug, and the chiefs of the people prepared by the direction of the lawgiver, and with their staves. And they marched from the wilderness to Mathana.

19 From Mathana unto Nahaliel: from Nahaliel unto Bamoth.

20 From Bamoth, is a valley in the country of Moab, to the top of Phasga, which looketh towards the desert.

of the heads in the Pentateuch. But whether these two verses were taken from another work of Moses, or from the history of some other person, they are now of divine authority. Saul says to David, (1 K. xviii. 17,) fight the battles of the Lord, . . . and the children of Gad and of Ruben pass all armed for war before the Lord, (C. xxxii. 29. C.) whence it appears, that the wars of the Hebrews were attributed to God. Tostat is of opinion, that the Book of the Just, is the same with that to which Moses here refers. See Jos. x. 13. 2 K. i. 18. But Theodoret thinks rather, that the former was a more extensive account of the transactions of Josue, out of which the book which bears his name was compiled. Such records certainly existed, to which the Hebrews were about to engage, it could not but make a suitable impression upon them. It might already be in every one's mouth, and the Heb. may insinuate, that it would be handed down to the latest posterity: "Wherefore in the history, or account of the wars of the Lord, this also shall be mentioned," janor, dicetur. According to this interpretation, it would not be necessary to suppose, that Moses refers to any more ancient book, as sepher means also, "a narration" by word of mouth; and R. Menachem believes, that God had revealed this event to Moses, encouraging him with the assurance, that he would give him the victory over the nations bordering upon the Arnon, as he had done over the Egyptians and Amalecites at the Red Sea. See Sixt. Senens. II.—Of Arnon, the waters of which are supposed to have given the Hebrews a passage, as the Chaldee asserts on the authority of Pa. lxxiii. 15. Habauc (iii. 13,) also mentions, that several rivers were dried up by God. The Hebrew text is almost unintelligible, "From, or against, Vaheb to Supha." As there is no verb, some translate, "he (Selon) fought against Vaheb (Grotius reads Moab) at Supha, or he came to Veb." Some render this word, he made, "a whirlpool in the torrents of Arnon." But Calmet would substitute Zared instead of Vaheb: "They encamped at the torrent of Zared, and came to Supha, (Deut. i. 1, where we read the Red Sea) to the torrent of Arnon." Protestants translate, "What he did in the Red Sea, and in the brooks of Arnon, (16) and at the stream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, and lieth upon the border of Moab." H.

VER. 15. The rocks. Some assert, that the rocks fell upon the enemy; others, that they gave way and opened a passage for the Hebrews, while the rivers were also dried up. Heb. "They encamped on the stream of the torrents, which bends towards the dwelling (or city) of Ar, and rests upon the frontiers of Moab." Thus the book to which Moses alludes, confirms his account of these different encampments. C.—The Sept. give rather a different turn to these two verses: "Hence it is said in a book, The war of the Lord has burnt Zoob and the torrents of Arnon—and has sent the torrents to inhabit Er: and it lies upon the borders of Moab." The river, it seems, had been removed out of its bed by a subterraneous fire or earthquake, and deluged the city of Ar, belonging to Moab. The mighty hand of God terrified those nations, while all nature fought against the wicked and the unwise. Wisd. v. 21. H.—Rocks were hurled upon the heads of the Amorrites, and the waters conveyed their dead bodies into the vale of Moab. W.

VER. 16. Well. Heb., Beer. H.—This station is not mentioned under the same name at least, C. xxxiii. Probably the inhabitants had covered up this well with sand, and God having discovered it to Moses, he informed the princes, who pushed their staves down. Upon which the waters appearing, the people sung a hymn of thanksgiving and joy. Water is very scarce, and, of course of great value in those deserts, where, even still, the Arabs conceal their wells, and often fight to hinder passengers from taking any of the water. C.

VER. 17. They sung. Heb. "sing ye unto it," in chorus, men and women. Sept. "commence a canticle unto it. This well the princes dug, the kings of nations hewed in the rock, in their kingdom, while they held dominion."

VER. 18. Mathana. Perhaps they did not stop here, though all the encampments are not specified, C. xxxiii. Nahaliel, "God my torrent," and Bamoth, "the heights," are also situated upon the Arnon.

VER. 20. Desert. Heb. and Chal. "Yeshimon," (Jes. xiii. 28. Eze. xxv. 9,) a city of the Moabites.

21 *And Israel sent messengers to Sehon, king of the Amorrites, saying:

22 I beseech thee that I may have leave to pass through thy land: we will not go aside into the fields or the vineyards, we will not drink water of the wells, we will go the king's highway, till we be past thy borders.

23 And he would not grant that Israel should pass by his borders: but rather gathering an army, went forth to meet them in the desert, and came to Jasa, and fought against them.

24 *And he was slain by them with the edge of the sword, and they possessed his land from the Arnon unto the Jeboc, and to the confines of the children of Ammon: for the borders of the Ammonites were kept with a strong garrison.

25 So Israel took all his cities, and dwelt in the cities of the Amorrite, to wit, in Hesebon, and in the villages thereof.

26 Hesebon was the city of Sehon, the king of the Amorrites, who fought against the king of Moab: and took all the land, that had been of his dominions, as far as the Arnon.

27 Therefore it is said in the proverb: Come into Hesebon, let the city of Sehon be built, and set up:

28 A fire is gone out of Hesebon, a flame from the city of Sehon, and hath consumed Ar, of the Moabites, and the inhabitants of the high places of the Arnon.

29 *Woe to thee, Moab: thou art undone, O people of Chamos. He hath given his sons to flight, and his daughters into captivity to Sehon, the king of the Amorrites.

VER. 21. Messengers, not from the city of Cademoth, which was in the midst of Phasga, but from a desert of the same name, situated out of the dominions of Sehon. Deut. ii. 24. Euseb.—God and already promised this country to Abraham, and though Moses did not intend to attack the king at present, being eager to fall upon the Chanaanites on the other side of the Jordan, God punishes the refusal of Sehon, to let his people pass, by a swifter destruction. C.—The measure of his crimes was full, though the mere denial of a passage to such a vast multitude might even be justified by sound policy. H.

VER. 22. Wells. We shall content ourselves with the torrents. They had only to travel about thirty miles. C.

VER. 23. Jasa was not far from the Arnon, between Medaba and Dibon. Isai. xv. 4. Euseb.

VER. 24. Garrison, either against Sehon, or against the Hebrews, whom God did not, as yet, authorize to attack the Ammonites, (C.) though the latter knew it not. H.

VER. 26. Arnon. Hence this territory, which formerly belonged to Moab, being taken in a just war, the Moabites could not lawfully retain it, as they attempted to do under Jephthah. Jud. xi. 13. Grot. Jur. iii. 6.—Hesebon, or Esbus, was the capital, and lay over-against Jericho, twenty miles from the Jordan.

VER. 27. Proverb. Heb. Moshelim: "Those who speak proverbs, or enigmas, say." Those were the ancient poets of the Amorrites, who composed this canticle on the victory of Sehon. C.—Moses inserts it in his work, as an additional proof, that the country was entirely lost to Moab, and as a denunciation of the evils which still hung over the head of that people, and would be inflicted upon them by David, &c. 2 K. x. i. and 4 K. iii. 16. Amos i. 13. H.

VER. 28. A fire and flame, denote the horrors of war. Jud. ix. 20.—Ar. Sam. and Sept. read ad, "hath consumed even the country of the Moabites and the lords (or pillars, Sept.) of Bamoth, (the heights mentioned v. 13, 19,) on the Arnon." These lords may be the principal men, priests, or gods of the city. Jeremiah (xlviii. 45.) reads this passage in a different manner, "it (the flame) shall devour part of Moab, and the crown of the head of the children of tumult." The city of Ar (which some confound with Aroer) always continued in the hands of the Moabites, so that the efforts of Sehon against it, seem to have proved abortive. Deut. ii. 9. 18. 29. Bonfrere. See C. xxiv. 17.

VER. 29. He. Chamos, the idol of Moab, is upbraided as too weak to defend his people. The pagans generally formed their judgments of the power of their gods, by the event; and, if that proved unfortunate, they were ever ready to assign the idols to the flames. Chamos was probably the sun. C.—Some say he was Bacchus, whom the Greeks call Komos. M.

VER. 30. Hesebon in the north, to Dibon in the southern extremity of the conquered country near the Arnon, where Moses places the station of Dibon-gad.

30 Their yoke is perished from Hesebon unto Dibon, they came weary to Nophe, and unto Medaba.

31 So Israel dwelt in the land of the Amorrite.

32 And Moses sent some to take a view of Jazer: and they took the villages of it, and conquered the inhabitants.

33 *And they turned themselves, and went up by the way of Basan; and *Og, the king of Basan, came against them with all his people, to fight in Edrai.

34 And the Lord said to Moses: Fear him not, for I have delivered him, and all his people, and his country into thy hand: and thou shalt do to him as thou didst to Sehon, the king of the Amorrites, the inhabitant of Hesebon.

35 So they slew him also with his sons, and all his people, not letting any one escape, and they possessed his land.

CHAP. XXII.

Balac, king of Moab, sendeth twice for Balaam to curse Israel. In his way Balaam is rebuked by an angel.

AND they went forward and encamped in the plains of Moab, over-against where Jericho is situate beyond the Jordan.

2 And Balac, the son of Sephor, seeing all that Israel had done to the Amorrite,

3 And that the Moabites were in great fear of him, and were not able to sustain his assault,

4 He said to the elders of Madian: So will this people destroy all that dwell in our borders, as the ox is wont to eat the grass to the very roots. Now he was at that time king in Moab.

The yoke, or dominion of the Moabites, was ruined in all those parts. C.—Heb. "We have shot at them; or their lamp, (children or power) from Hesebon as far as Dibon is extinguished; and their wives (or we have destroyed them) even unto Nophe and Medaba." Sept. "Their women have still kindled a fire against Moab." Nophe is probably the Nabo of Isaias, (xv. 2.) in the environs of Medaba, where the fainting Moabites had time to breathe. The fire, which the Sept. say the women enkindled against Moab, might seem to indicate that the war was commenced on their account, like that which brought on the destruction of Troy. They entailed a still heavier destruction upon their country, when, by alluring the Hebrews to sin, they enkindled God's indignation. C. xxv. With this verse the quotation, from the Amorrite proverbial writers, concludes, v. 27. H.

VER. 32. Jazer, a famous city, 15 miles from Hesebon, given afterwards to the Levites. Moses "took the Amorrites who were there" prisoners, according to the Heb.; or, "drove them away," (Sept.) putting to death those who continued to make resistance. C.

VER. 33. Og, the king of the most fertile country of Basan, was of gigantic stature. Deut. iii. 11. The Rabbins relate many fables concerning him.—Edrai was 15 miles to the north of the torrent Jeboc, (C.) which was the southern extremity of this territory. H.

CHAP. XXII. VER. 1. Plains. Sept. "to the west of Moab." These plains had formerly belonged to that people, but the Hebrews had lately taken them from Sehon, and intended now to pass over the Jordan. The Moabites, however, being jealous of their growing power, called in the aid of the Madianites, and of the magician Balaam, and, by their wanton provocation, brought destruction upon themselves. We know not exactly the extent of the dominions of the Moabites. They seem to have lost the greatest part of the country north of the Arnon. Their last town and capital was Ar. C. xxi. 13. Yet they still kept possession of Mount Phasga. C.

VER. 3. Of him: Israel. M.—They knew not that God had forbidden the Hebrews to attack the Moabites, unless they were first assailed. Joseph.—Heb. "Moab was much afraid of the people, because of their numbers, and was distressed (and upon his guard) on account of the children of Israel." H.

VER. 4. Elders of Madian, who dwelt also upon the Arnon, towards the lake of Sodom. These Madianites were a different people from those who inhabited the country to the east of the Red Sea. S. Jerom.—They were not governed by kings, but by an aristocracy, or senate of princes. H.

VER. 5. Beor. S. Peter (ii. 11. 15) reads Bosor.—A soothsayer, or magician, (ariolum) as this word always indicates. Jos. xiii. 22. The Hebrews believe he was once a true prophet, a descendant of Buz, the son of Melcha, and the same as Eliu, the friend of Job. S. Jer. q. 3. Heb. in Gen. He certainly foretold the Messiah, or star of Jacob, by divine inspiration. C. xxiv. 17. H.—He consults of Beor, a soothsayer, who dwelt by the river of the land of the children of Ammon, to call him, and to say: Behold a people is come out of Egypt, that hath covered the face of the earth, sitting over-against me.

6 Come therefore, and curse this people, because it is mightier than I: if by any means I may beat them and drive them out of my land: for I know that he whom thou shalt bless is blessed, and he whom thou shalt curse is cursed.

7 And the ancients of Moab, and the elders of Madian, went with the price of divination in their hands. And when they were come to Balaam, and had told him all the words of Balac,

8 He answered: Tarry here this night, and I will answer whatsoever the Lord shall say to me. And while they stayed with Balaam, God came and said to him:

9 What mean these men that are with thee?

10 He answered: Balac, the son of Sephor, king of the Moabites, hath sent to me, 11 Saying: Behold a people that is come out of Egypt, hath covered the face of the land: come and curse them, if by any means I may fight with them and drive them away.

12 And God said to Balaam: Thou shalt not go with them, nor shalt thou curse the people: because it is blessed.

13 And he rose in the morning and said to the princes: Go into your country, because the Lord hath forbid me to come with you.

14 The princes returning, said to Balac: Balaam would not come with us.

15 Then he sent many more, and more noble, than he had sent before:

16 Who, when they were come to Balaam, said: Thus saith Balac, the son of Sephor: Delay not to come to me:

and acknowledges the true God, v. 8. 18. 20. Origen (hom. 13.) believes that he left a book of his prophecies, which was known to the wise men, and discovered to them the birth of the Messias; and some Rab'bins think that Moses has here inserted from that work what relates to Balaam. S. Augustine (q. 48.) shews that he was a wicked man, of whom nevertheless God made use to convey important instructions; and that he is one of those reprobates who will say, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? He is placed with Cain and Core. S. Jude 11. S. Ambrose (ep. 50.) observes, that he might prophesy, like Caiphas, without knowing what he said, and that the gift of prophecy on this occasion, was no proof of his virtue. Many of the Fathers look upon him as a mere magician, who could utter no blessing, but only curses, by the rules of his infernal art. He did not design to consult God, but the Lord puts answers into his mouth. Theod. q. 39. 42. The method of consultation seemed to border on superstition. He wished to make God change his resolutions, as if he were an idol, and attempted to evade the impressions of his spirit. C.—The river, Euphrates, which waters the country of the Ammonites. M.—Heb. "to Pethora, which is by the land of the children of his people." S. Jeron has translated Pethora "soothsayer," and has left Ammon undeclined. H.—The Chaldee informs us, that he was resident at Petor, a city of Syria, on the Euphrates. It is probably the same town with the Pacora of Ptolemy, near Thapsacus. Balaam is styled an Aramean; (C. xxiii. 17.) and we know that he came from Mesopotamia. Heb. Aram Naharaim, (Deut. xvi. 4. C.) or "Syria, between the two rivers," the Euphrates and Tigris. Salien.—M's, ready to fall upon my dominions. It appears hence, that Balaam was in high estimation, since a distant king depends more upon his power, than upon the efforts of all his own armies, and those of his auxiliaries, and is willing to pay him for cursing his enemies at so dear a rate. Perhaps he thought that they employed magical arts to conquer their enemies, by prayer. See Ex. xvii. 11. Orig. hom. 13. H.

VER. 6. C. vss. The ancients placed great confidence in those whom they believed to be under the guidance of a superior spirit, whether good or bad. They thought their blessing or cursing would surely have its effect. By means of charms, they also strove to evoke or draw off the tutelary god of a place, before they could expect to take possession of it. Hence, as it was requisite to mention the true name of the place, fictitious names were given to most cities of importance, while the real appellation was kept a profound secret; and Valerius Soranus was severely punished for discovering the name of Rome, Valentia. See Plin. iii. 5. Solin. ii. Plut. prob. vi. C.—Rome, in Greek, has the same import as Valentia in Latin, and signifies strength. H.—Macrobius has preserved the form of a solemn 17 For I am ready to honour thee, and will give thee whatsoever thou wilt: come and curse this people.

18 Balaam answered: "If Balac would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot alter the word of the Lord my God, to speak either more or less.

19 I pray you to stay here this night also, that I may know what the Lord will answer me once more.

20 God therefore came to Balaam in the night, and said to him: If these men be come to call thee, arise and go with them: yet so that thou do what I shall command thee.

21 Balaam arose in the morning, and saddling his ass went with them.

22 "And God was angry. And an angel of the Lord stood in the way against Balaam, who sat on the ass, and had two servants with him.

23 The ass seeing the angel standing in the way, with a drawn sword, turned herself out of the way, and went into the field. And when Balaam beat her, and had a mind to bring her again to the way, 24 The angel stood in a narrow place between two walls, wherewith the vineyards were inclosed.

25 And the ass seeing him, thrust herself close to the wall, and bruised the foot of the rider. But he beat her again:

26 And nevertheless the angel going on to a narrow place, where there was no way to turn aside, either to the right hand or to the left, stood to meet him.

27 And when the ass saw the angel standing, she fell under the feet of the rider: who, being angry, beat her sides more vehemently with a staff.

28 And the Lord opened the mouth of the ass, and she said: What have I done to thee? why strikest thou me, lo, now this third time?

29 Balaam answered: Because thou hast deserved it, curse, pronounced by the Roman general against the Carthaginians. Saturn iii. 9 "Dis Pater, or Jupiter, or if you prefer any other title, I beg that you will send fright and terror, and put this city of Carthage, and this army which I intend to specify, to flight, &c. If you will perform these things, according to my intention, I promise to offer in sacrifice to you, O earth, mother of all things, and to you great god Jupiter, three black sheep." Thus, probably, Balac wished the Hebrews to be devoted or cursed. C.

VER. 7. The price. Heb. lit. "the enchantments." But they took money, to engage the soothsayer to comply more readily with their iniquitous request. 2 Pet. ii. 15. Sept. &c. It was customary to offer presents to the prophets. 1 K. ix. 7.

VER. 9. Night. He was accustomed to exercise his art by night; loving darkness, for his works were evil. Jo. iii. 19. H.

VER. 18. Less. Not that he was resolved to comply with God's will, but because he found an insuperable impediment to oppose it at present. C.

VER. 19. To stay. His desiring them to stay, after he had been fully informed already that it was not God's will he should go, came from the inclination he had to gratify Balac for the sake of worldly gain. And this perverse disposition God punished by permitting him to go, (though not to curse the people, as he would willingly have done) and suffering him to fall still deeper and deeper into sin, till he came at last to give that abominable counsel against the people of God, which ended in his own destruction. So sad a thing it is to indulge a passion for money. Ch. S. Aug. q. 48.—Philo (de vita, Mos. i.) thinks that Balaam feigned this leave of God, v. 22. C.

VER. 22. Angry. Either because he had not granted him permission to go, or he saw that Balaam was disposed to curse the Israelites, v. 32. Sept. "the angel (Michael) rose up on the road to oppose him," diaballein. Lit. "to calumniate, accuse, resist, or to be a satan." Hence diabolus means an accuser, opponent, calumniator, &c. S. Aug. H.

VER. 23. Ass. The angel appeared thrice to the ass, before he was perceived by Balaam. C. xxiv. 3. 4. The second time, S. Augustine (q. 50.) thinks he was standing in the vineyard. C.

VER. 28. Opened the mouth, &c. The angel moved the tongue of the ass, to utter these speeches, to rebuke, by the mouth of a brute beast, the brutal fury and folly of Balaam. Ch.—S. Thomas (ii. 2. q. 105.) says, an angel spoke by the mouth of the ass, in like manner as the devil did by that of the serpent. Gen. iii. Infidels deride this miracle, and some have thought that it was only in the imagination of Balaam, that this dialogue was formed. Maimon.—S. Gregory of Nyssa, seems to think that the ass only brayed as usual, and that the soothsayer, being accus

30 The ass said: Am not I thy beast, on which thou hast been always accustomed to ride until this present day? tell me if I ever did the like thing to thee. But he said: Never.

31 Forthwith the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the angel standing in the way, with a drawn sword, and he worshipped him, falling flat on the ground.

32 And the angel said to him: Why beatest thou thy ass these three times? I am come to withstand thee, because thy way is perverse, and contrary to me:

33 And unless the ass had turned out of the way, giving place to me who stood against thee, I had slain thee, and she should have lived.

34 Balaam said: I have sinned, not knowing that thou didst stand against me: and now if it displease thee that I go, I will return.

35 The angel said: Go with these men, and see thou speak no other thing than what I shall command thee. He went therefore with the princes.

36 And when Balac heard it, he came forth to meet him in a town of the Moabites, that is situate in the uttermost borders of Arnon.

37 And he said to Balaam: I sent messengers to call thee, why didst thou not come immediately to me? was it because I am not able to reward thy coming?

38 He answered him: Lo, here I am: shall I have power to speak any other thing but that which God shall put in my mouth?

39 So they went on together, and came into a city, that was in the uttermost borders of his kingdom.

40 And when Balac had killed oxen and sheep, he sent presents to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him.

41 And when morning was come, he brought him to tomed to augur from the voice of animals, understood its meaning. But S. Peter says, the dumb beast . . . speaking with man's voice, forbade the folly of the prophet. 2 Pet. ii. 16. God did not endue it with understanding on this occasion, but only formed, by its mouth, such sounds as might serve to repress the cruel folly of Balaam. But he was more stupid than the ass. "Being accustomed, it seems, to such prodigies," (monstris) and intent upon lucre, he paid no farther regard to such a wonderful transaction, but held conversation with his ass, without any emotion. S. Aug. q. 48. 50. C.—The pagan historians relate many instances of beasts and trees speaking; (Grotius) so that they object to this history, and to that of the serpent, with a very bad grace, as S. Cyril remarks, in his third book against Julian. H.—They relate that the ass of Balaam spoke to him, and the horse and elephant of Achilles and Porus addressed their respective masters, while the oaks of Dodona were famous for their oracles. C.—The river Causus said, "Hail, Pythagoras." Porphyrius, cited by S. Cyril, &c. H

VER. 41. People. From the heights or temple of Baal, or the god of Chamos, where a statue or pillar (Sept.) was erected in his honour, (C.) on Mount Abarim, (M.) the soothsayer was enabled to take a distinct view of all the camp of Israel, (C. xlii. 13,) and not of a part only, as the Sept. and Arab. versions would insinuate. It was deemed necessary to have those present upon whom people intended to vent their imprecations. C.

CHAP. XXIII. VER. 2. Altar. They both join in sacrificing to Chamos or the Idol, whom Balaam styles his lord, Yehovah: but the true God was pleased to hinder the idol from interfering at present, and answered Balaam, in order that he might see the folly of his conduct, and repent; and that others, who are more willing to listen to him, than to the servants of God, might be instructed by his declaration. CHAP. XXIII.

Balaam, instead of cursing Israel, is obliged to bless them, and prophesy good things of them.

AND Balaam said to Balac: Build me here seven altars, and prepare as many calves, and the same number of rams.

2 And when he had done according to the word of Balaam, they laid together a calf and a ram upon every altar.

3 And Balaam said to Balac: Stand a while by thy burnt-offering, until I go to see if perhaps the Lord will meet me, and whatsoever he shall command, I will speak to thee.

4 And when he was gone with speed, God met him. And Balaam speaking to him, said: I have erected seven altars, and have laid on every one a calf and a ram.

5 And the Lord put the word in his mouth, and said. Return to Balac, and thus shalt thou speak.

6 Returning he found Balac standing by his burnt-offering, with all the princes of the Moabites:

7 And taking up his parable, he said: Balac, king of the Moabites, hath brought me from Aram, from the mountains of the east: Come, said he, and curse Jacob: make haste and detest Israel.

8 How shall I curse him whom God hath not cursed? By what means should I detest him, whom the Lord detesteth not?

9 I shall see him from the tops of the rocks, and shall consider him from the hills. This people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations.

10 Who can count the dust of Jacob, and know the number of the stock of Israel? Let my soul die the death of the just and my last end be like to them.

Balaam might suppose that he was addressing his idol. But Moses informs us, that the true God or his angel was present, and forced Balaam to deliver an unwelcome message to the king. H.

VER. 7. Parable. Beginning to speak in a beautiful and poetic style, like a man inspired. C.—Maskal, denotes a striking and elegant prophecy. M.—Aram, when placed alone, properly means Syria; but when Padan or Naharaim are added, Mesopotamia is meant, whence Balaam came. Deut. xxii. 5.—East of Moab, though lying to the north, or higher part of Mesopotamia. C.

VER. 9. Hills. But all in vain. C.—I am prevented from cursing him; and if I should do it, my imprecations would be turned into blessings by a superior Being. H.—Alone, without standing in need of any auxiliaries, and devoid of fear. Deut. xiii. 28. Jer. xlix. 31. The Jews had but few connections with foreign nations, keeping at a distance from them, as being of a different religion. C.—Indeed, when they applied for aid to the Egyptians, &c. it generally turned out to their detriment, that they might learn to trust in God alone, who would effectually protect them, if they observed his law, as he had repeatedly promised. H.—Nations. Israel shall not be like other people. He is under the peculiar care of God, covered with glory, full of confidence, and inspired with the love of independence; so that he will have nothing to do with the rest of the world. C.

VER. 10. Dust. God had promised to multiply the seed of Abraham as the dust of the earth. Gen. xiii. 16. Balaam had just beheld several thousands of them, and in rapture, exclaims, according to the Heb. "Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel?" Their camp was divided into four great battalions, surrounding the ark and the Levites. Who can tell the number of one of these divisions, much less of all the multitudes there assembled, and what millions may, in a short time, proceed from them? You have reason, therefore, O Balac, to tremble, if they continue faithful to their God. But strive to make friends with them.—Let, &c. Heb. may also admit of the version of the Sept. "May my soul die among the souls of the just, and may my offspring be like this." We behold in this sentence, the sentiments of all worldly and interested people, who wish to obtain a reward without submitting to the necessary labour. Impotent desires! selfish views! H.—"All," says S. Bernard, (in Cant. serm. 21,) "wish to enjoy the felicity which Jesus Christ has promised. But how few are willing to imitate Him who invites us to do it." C.—Thus, infidels desire sometimes to die like Catholics, though they will not live in that religion. W.—Even those who are in the Church, frequently give in to this delusion, making fine prayers, and, in the time of temptation, forgetting all their sighs and tears, to whom God will say, as S. Gregory justly observes on those words of Job xli. 3. I will not spare him nor his mighty words, and framed to make supplication. For, like Balaam, when the fit of devotion is over, such people are ready to give the 11 And Balac said to Balaam: What is this that thou dost? I sent for thee to curse my enemies: and thou, contrariwise, blessest them.

12 He answered him: Can I speak any thing else but what the Lord commandeth?

13 Balac therefore said: Come with me to another place, from whence thou mayst see part of Israel, and canst not see them all: curse them from thence.

14 And when he had brought him to a high place, upon the top of Mount Phasga, Balaam built seven altars, and laying on every one a calf and a ram, 15 He said to Balac: Stand here by thy burnt-offering while I go to meet him.

16 And when the Lord had met him, and had put the word in his mouth, he said: Return to Balac, and thus shalt thou say to him.

17 Returning he found him standing by his burnt-sacrifice, and the princes of the Moabites with him. And Balac said to him: What hath the Lord spoken?

18 But he taking up his parable, said: Stand, O Balac, and give ear: hear, thou son of Sephor:

19 God is not as a man, that he should lie, nor as the son of man, that he should be changed. Hath he said then, and will he not do? hath he spoken, and will he not fulfil?

most pernicious advice against the lives of those, whom they pretend they would be desirous to resemble in death. "That prayer is vain, which is not followed by continual perseverance in charity." S. Greg. Mor. xxxiii. 27. The false prophet says not a word about living like the just; he only wishes, that after his soul has enjoyed all the pleasures of this world, it may depart to joys eternal, while his posterity is left behind in the midst of temporal prosperity.—Soul die, or be separated from its body. Even Balaam establishes the immortality of the soul. H.

VER. 13. Thence. He has a mind to try a new experiment. We have observed, that the object of malediction was to be in view. C. xxii. 41. But Balac, supposing perhaps that the multitude made too deep an impression upon the soothsayer, judged it expedient to place him in another situation, where he might see only a part of Israel. Some, however, imagine that he had only seen a fourth part, or the uttermost part of the people, who lay nearest to him before; (v. 10, and C. xxii. 41,) and hence, would have him to take now a distinct view of the whole; and, in this sense, the Samaritan and Glossius translate from whence, &c. thus, "for thou hast seen only part of Israel, and couldst not see them all." C.—By a similar superstition, the Syrians imagined that the God of Israel was a God of the hills, and that they could more easily conquer his people on the plain country, 3 K. xx. 23. M.

VER. 14. Place. Heb. sede tsophim, or "the field of the sentinels." Chal. such were commonly stationed on the top of high hills, to give notice, by kindling a fire, &c. of the approach of an enemy. Is. xxi. 11. Jer. vi. 1. C.

VER. 15. Hear. Heb. "to me." Sept. read hād, instead of hadai, and translate, "Give ear, thou witness, (martus) son, &c." H.

VER. 19. Changed. Heb. "repent." Sept. "to be overawed by threats." Origen, "to be terrified." In the book of Judith, (viii. 15,) it is said, For God will not threaten like man, nor be inflamed to anger, like the son of man. C.—Do. Will he suffer me to curse Israel, after he has once given me a decided prohibition? M.

VER. 20. To bless, not by my own intention, or by that of Balac, but by God, who hath only suffered me to proceed on my journey, on condition that I would declare his will. C. xxii. 35. H.—Heb. "Behold, I have received an order to bless;" or, with the Sept. "I have been chosen to pronounce a blessing; I will bless, and will not revoke it, or leave off." C.

VER. 21. Image-god, (simulacrum) "a statue." Chal. "falsehood." Heb. may also signify "perversity, or punishment." As long as Israel refrains from idol-worship, and from other transgressions, as they do at present, God will be so far from punishing them, that he will fight their battles, as their king; (H.) and at the sound of the silver trumpets, will grant them victory. C. x. 9. M.—The sound. Heb. "the shout of a king among them," encouraging his people by his presence and by his words. H.—"I behold those who do not serve idols in the house of Jacob . . . the word of the Lord their God is helping them, and the majesty of their king is among them." Chaldee. M.

VER. 22. Rhinoceros. Heb. ream, which is sometimes rendered unicorn. Bochart thinks it means the oryx, or the strong Arabian goat. The animal, of which the Scripture so often speaks, was remarkable for its strength, (C.) and could not easily be tamed. Job xxxix. 9. H.—The Sept. generally translate monoceros, which is a fish, with a horn proceeding from its upper jaw. This is often shewn in cabinets for the horn of the unicorn. There are various animals which have 22 *God hath brought him out of Egypt, whose strength is like to the rhinoceros.

23 There is no soothsaying in Jacob, nor divination in Israel. In their times it shall be told to Jacob and to Israel, what God hath wrought.

24 Behold the people shall rise up as a lioness, and shall lift itself up as a lion: it shall not lie down till it devour the prey, and drink the blood of the slain.

25 And Balac said to Balaam: Neither curse, nor bless him.

26 And he said: Did I not tell thee, that whatsoever God should command me, that I would do?

27 And Balac said to him: Come, and I will bring thee to another place, if, peradventure, it please God that thou mayst curse them from thence.

28 And when he had brought him upon the top of Mount Phogor, which looketh towards the wilderness, 29 Balaam said to him: Build me here seven altars, and prepare as many calves, and the same number of rams.

30 Balac did as Balaam had said: and he laid on every altar, a calf and a ram.

CHAP. XXIV.

Balaam still continues to prophesy good things in favour of Israel.

AND when Balaam saw that it pleased the Lord that he should bless Israel, he went not as he had gone before, to seek divination: but setting his face towards the desert,

2 And lifting up his eyes, he saw Israel abiding in only one horn. Pliny and Aristotle instance the oryx, &c. Various authors of credit specify likewise the rhinoceros, which has "a horn upon its nose," and is found in Ethiopia. The emperor of that country sent one to the court of Persia, which Chardin saw and describes. It is as large as an elephant, and the people have learnt the method of taming both these huge beasts. C.—It seems the art was unknown in the days of Job, if this be the animal of which he speaks. H.—Moses (Deut. xxxiii. 17,) seems to attribute two horns to the ream; and Pausanias allows a greater and a less one to the rhinoceros; the latter is very strong and erect. It is of a brownish colour. C.—Whatever may be the precise meaning of ream, it certainly denotes an animal of superior strength, and very formidable. Balaam represents God, or the people of Israel, in this light. God had given repeated instances of his dominion over all nature, in delivering the Hebrews out of Egypt. They were also capable of striking the Moabites with terror, on account of their known prowess, and surprising numbers, v. 24. H.

VER. 23. Soothsaying. This may be joined to what goes before, as an explanation why Israel is so much to be feared; because the people have no dealings with the devil, in which case neither he nor all his agents can hurt them, since God is their protector, and will direct them when and how to act.—Hath wrought. Sept. "will bring to perfection." Orig. c. Cels. The Heb. may also signify, "undoubtedly there is no charm powerful enough against . . . Israel," or "Jacob has no regard for the vain art of divination. Israel does not apply to augury. This very time will be memorable among their posterity for the wonders which God has wrought." Indeed, never was there a greater display of the divine power in favour of the Hebrews, than in this 40th year after their exit from Egypt; and in the following, which was noted for the victories and miracles of Josue. H.

VER. 24. Lioness. Sept. "lion's whelp." Some explain the Heb. "a lion" of full growth and strength. But the antithesis of the Vulgate is more natural and beautiful. C.—The lioness, being solicitous for its young ones, becomes more furious.—A lion, ready to fall upon its prey. So Israel will not lay down the sword, till he has conquered the nations of Chanaan, (M.) and those who dare to molest him. The allusion to the prediction of Jacob in favour of Juda seems very plain. Gen. xlix. 9. H.

VER. 25. Neither, &c. When infidels cannot prevail upon people to side with them entirely, in their false worship, they endeavour to induce them at least not to bless, nor follow up the true religion. W.

VER. 28. Phogor. Heb. "Pehor, which looketh towards Jeshimon, or the desert." This was a part of the same chain of the mountains Adarim, with Phasga, v. 14. Balac foolishly supposed that in a different aspect, he might still obtain what he wanted; and the soothsayer was no less infatuated in following him. But he soon felt an internal monitor, who informed him, that he need put himself to no farther trouble, in retiring alone, to prepare himself for the operation of the spirit. More glorious predictions in favour of Israel, presented themselves so forcibly, that he could hardly refrain, and durst no longer forbear proclaiming them aloud. C. xxiv. 1. H.

CHAP. XXIV. VER. 1. Divination. Sept. "to meet the birds." The augurs judged of future events by the flying, eating, and other appearances of birds. Heb. "enchantments." M.—Desert. The plains of Moab, where the Israelites were encamped. He found himself, as it were, involuntarily transported by the their tents, by their tribes: and the spirit of God rushing upon him,

3 He took up his parable, and said: Balaam, the son of Beor, hath said: The man hath said, whose eye is stopped up:

4 The hearer of the words of God hath said, he that hath beheld the vision of the Almighty, he that falleth, and so his eyes are opened:

5 How beautiful are thy tabernacles, O Jacob, and thy tents, O Israel!

6 As woody valleys, as watered gardens near the rivers, as tabernacles which the Lord hath pitched, as cedars by the water side.

7 Water shall flow out of his bucket, and his seed shall be into many waters. For Agag shall his king be removed, and his kingdom shall be taken away.

8 God hath brought him out of Egypt, whose strength is like to the rhinoceros. They shall devour the nations that are his enemies, and break their bones, and pierce them with arrows.

9 Lying down he hath slept as a lion, and as a lioness, whom none shall dare to rouse. He that blesseth thee, shall also himself be blessed: he that curseth thee, shall be reckoned accursed.

10 And Balac being angry against Balaam, clapped his hands together, and said: I called thee to curse my enemies, and thou, on the contrary, hast blessed them three times.

* Supra xxiii. 22.—Supra xxii. 18.

spirit of God, v. 2. C.—Yet, for all that, he did not become more holy. Some word miracles, and are damned. S. Matt. vii. 22. W.

VER. 3. Up. The same term only occurs again, (Lament. iii. 9.) where it may have the same sense, though the Sept. &c. give it here a quite opposite meaning, 'the man whose eyes are open,' the prophet. But Balaam alludes to his not being able to see the angel as soon as his ass, as he does, v. 4. C. xxii. 31. C.

VER. 4. Falleth. Out of respect to God, or in a trance. Sept. "in sleep, his eyes are uncovered." He was accustomed to commune with the spirits in the night. C. xxii. 8. H.—He who is clear-sighted enough in teaching others, neglecteth his own salvation; or, being naturally incapable of diving into futurity, he derives this power solely from the operation of the spirit. M.

VER. 6. Woody. Heb. also "extensive torrents."—Tabernacles. Heb. ahatim, which some render lign-aloes, or stacte, as S. Jerom does, Ps. xlv. 9. Prov. vii. 17. Cant. iv. 14. The aloe-tree, however, was brought from India, and was not common in Arabia. The Syrian aloe was only a shrub; and this tree, of which Balaam speaks, must have been tall and beautiful.—Pitched. Heb. "planted." C.—The Sept. agree however with the Vulg. H.—Side. Cedars grow very large on the top of Libanus, and are always green; the fruit resembles the pine-apple; the wood is incorruptible. Sionita 6. By humility we must rise to the summit of perfection. D.

VER. 7. Waters. Sept. Chal. and Syr. "From his seed a man shall spring, who shall have dominion over many nations." This must be understood of the Messiah; or, his posterity shall be very numerous; (See Prov. v. 15. 16,) or his country shall be well watered, and his crops luxuriant.—Agag. Saul lost his crown for sparing the king of the Amalekites, who always took this title, 1 K. xv. 9. Heb. may be translated, "Above Agag shall his (Israel's) king be exalted, yet," &c. or "and his kingdom shall increase." Philo and S. Ambrose read, "his kingdom shall be raised on high." The Sam. and some copies of the Sept. have, "Over Gog;" while others have Og, (C.) which may be referred to the king of Basan, who, though lately overthrown, had been possessor of great power and wealth. Israel was not satisfied with the extent of his dominions. H.—Those who read Gog, suppose that the victories of Christ over Antichrist are foretold. Origen, hom. 17. S. Cyp. Test. l. 10. C.

VER. 8—9. Lioness. See v. 22. 24, of the preceding chapter. H.—This prediction was accomplished under the reigns of David and of Solomon. M.

VER. 10. Together, to hinder him from being heard, and through indignation. Job xxxvii. 23.

VER. 11. Honour, or reward.

VER. 14. Counsel, out of my own head. This he was going to do, (C.) that he might not lose his reward, when again he found himself impelled by the Lord to speak what was contrary to his temporal interest. After complying reluctantly, God ceased to strive, as it were, with his rebellious will any longer, and left him to follow the bent of his corrupt heart. Upon which he proceeded to give that infernal counsel which involved many of the Israelites and himself in utter destruction. H. C. xxxi. 16. Apoc. ii. 4.—Days. Heb. "Come, I will admonish thee what this people shall do to thy people," &c. Onkelos, and Origen (hom. 18. and 20.) give both senses. C.—Indeed, the transactions of both people were so blended, when they were fighting together, that to give the history of one, would be explaining the fortune of the other. H.

11 Return to thy place. I had determined indeed greatly to honour thee, but the Lord hath deprived thee of the honour designed for thee.

12 Balaam made answer to Balac: Did I not say to thy messengers, whom thou sentest to me:

13 If Balac would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord, my God, to utter any thing of my own head, either good, or evil: but whatsoever the Lord shall say, that I will speak:

14 But yet going to my people, I will give thee counsel, what thy people shall do to this people in the latter days.

15 Therefore taking up his parable, again he said. Balaam, the son of Beor, hath said: The man whose eye is stopped up, hath said:

16 The hearer of the words of God hath said, who knoweth the doctrine of the Highest, and seeth the visions of the Almighty, who falling hath his eyes opened 17 I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not near. A STAR SHALL RISE out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall spring up from Israel: and shall strike the chiefs of Moab, and shall waste all the children of Seth.

18 And he shall possess Idumea: the inheritance of Seir shall come to their enemies; but Israel shall do manfully.

19 Out of Jacob shall he come that shall rule, and shall destroy the remains of the city.

c Matt. ii. 2.

VER. 16. Who knoweth. This is a new title which he had not before assumed v. 4.

VER. 17. Him. The great personage whom I have in view, whose coming is deferred yet for many ages. H.—The whole prediction refers to the Messiah, whom Balaam beheld by the eyes of his posterity, the wise men, (C.) or in the prophetic vision. M.—Some modern Rabbins pretend that he speaks of David, who was indeed a figure of Christ, (C.) and defeated the Moabites, 2 K. v. 8. But the prophecy was perfectly fulfilled only in our Saviour's person, who is called the bright and morning star, (Apoc. xxii. 28,) to whom all nations were given for an inheritance. Ps. ii. Act. i. 6. W.—Heb. also, "I see this thy ruin, but," &c. Sept. "I will shew to him, yet not now; I will make him happy; (C.) but (makarizo, I bless) it, or he does not approach." God executed all he ever promised in favour of all Israel, when he sent them his beloved Son.—A Star. Christ, the light of the world, the splendour of his Father's glory, whose birth was made known in the East, by a star, or meteor of unusual brightness. H.—This material star is not the primary object of the prediction, since it did not rise out of Jacob, but it pointed out the orient from on high, and then disappeared. The ancient Jews understood this passage of the Messiah. Onkelos, &c. Hence the impostor, Ben. Cusiba, took advantage of this general opinion, to draw the people after him, as the person designated; when he assumed the title of Bar-chocheba, "the son of the star," in the second age of the church.—Of Seth. Though David, as the figure of the Messiah, conquered the Moabites, he cannot be said to have subdued all nations, the descendants of Seth, by Noe, nor all the just of whom Seth was the father, in opposition to the children of Cain. But Christ will subject all the just to his empire, and will judge all mankind. Some, nevertheless, take the children of Seth to be the Moabites, who had been already mentioned; and Junius translates the Heb. with allusion to the shameful origin of that people. The Samar. may also signify, if we substitute d for r in korkor, as Jeremias also reads (C. xlviii. 45.) kodkod. "He shall penetrate the ends of Moab, and shall overturn the walls of the children of elevation, or of pride." There were many hills in the country of the Moabites, and the people were noted for haughtiness. Jer. xlviii. 28. 29. 45. C.—Some also assert, that Seth was the name of a king, (Grot.) and of a town of Moab. R. Nathan.—But of this there is no proof. H.

VER. 18. Idumea and Seir. The children of Esau shall acknowledge the dominion of Israel, from David to Josaphat, and again under Hircan. 3 K. xi. 15. 4 K. viii. 20. Joseph. xiii. 17. C.—Not only the faithful Israelites, but also the profane and headstrong sons of Esau, shall bend the knee before Christ, who will subdue them by the power of his grace, and by the preaching of his disciples. H.

VER. 19. City of this world. Jesus will destroy their evil habits (Orig. hom. 18.) and will select some whose lives had been hitherto scandalous, to be his intimate friends. H.—He will save those who abandoned paganism, which had fixed its seat at the great city of Rome, (C.) and he will raise up Constantine (M. T.) to rule over Jacob, his people. At his second coming he will exterminate all who shall have refused to acknowledge his sovereignty, and who have remained out of the city of his Church. H.—Those who have fled out of the cities for safety, shall be sought out by David, and destroyed. He slew all the male children of Edom, 3 K. xv. 15. C.—In this prophecy, some particulars 20 And when he saw Amalec, he took up his parable, and said: Amalec the beginning of nations, whose latter ends shall be destroyed.

21 He saw also the Cinite: and took up his parable, and said: Thy habitation indeed is strong: but though thou build thy nest in a rock, 22 And thou be chosen of the stock of Cin, how long shalt thou be able to continue? For Assur shall take thee captive.

23 And taking up his parable, again he said: Alas, who shall live when God shall do these things?

24 *They shall come in galleys from Italy, they shall overcome the Assyrians, and shall waste the Hebrews, and at the last they themselves also shall perish.

25 And Balaam rose, and returned to his place: Balac also returned the way that he came.

^a Dan. xi. 80.—^b A. M. 2552, A. C. 1451.—^c Jos. iii. 1.

relate to him, as that he shall subject Moab and Idumea by the valour of his troops, while other things can belong only to Christ, the star, who shall destroy the remains of the city. M.—By changing one letter, Calmet would translate, "Princes shall spring from Jacob: but Seir shall perish from his cities." A long train of princes in Jacob prefigured the Messias, while the Idumeans have been unknown for many ages. C.

VER. 20. Nations, which rose up to attack the Hebrews. Onkelos.—Saul will punish them, 1 K. xv. The Amalecites were a very ancient people, known in the days of Abraham. Gen. xiv. 7. But now they are no more. H.

VER. 21. Cinite. From the top of the hill, he cast his eyes across the Dead Sea, and beholding the strong holds of the Cinite, whose country had been promised to the Hebrews, he is inspired to foretell what would happen to this people. He alludes to their name, which signifies a nest; (C.) and to the manner in which those nations of Arabia lived, in caverns out of a rock. Belfon, ii. 61.

VER. 22. Captive. The Sam. insinuates that they should return, 1 Par. ii. 55. "Though thy nest should be entirely consumed, thy inhabitants shall return out of Assyria." C.—Sept. "If to Beor (the capital) there should be nests of iniquity, the Assyrians will reduce thee to captivity." Heb. "Yet the Cinite shall be wasted, till," &c. H.—The family of Jethro was now among the Hebrews, and their posterity were suffered to dwell with the tribe of Juda. Abor afterwards removed into the tribe of Nephthali, and was led away by Salmanasar, 4 K. xvii. M.—Some of the Cinites were mixed with the Amalecites, 1 K. xv. 6. The Assyrians infested the neighbouring nations, as well as the Hebrews, under Sennacherib and Nabuchodonosor, as the prophets inform us. C.

VER. 23. Things, of which he is about to speak. The time is remote, but very dreadful, when the Assyrians shall be chastised, in their turn, as well as the Greeks and Romans, who shall have destroyed Assur, and even the most favourite nation of God. Balaam began by announcing the prosperity of the Hebrews, but he at last gives some comfort to Balac, by letting him know that they shall also be laid waste, as well as his kingdom, and the powerful nations around him. This is the condition of all human things! H.

VER. 24. Italy. Heb. "Cittim," which Bochart endeavours to prove with great erudition to mean Italy; while Grotius contends it means Macedonia, and Calmet doubts not but this is the import of the present text. The Macedonians, under Alexander and his successors, conquered the countries of Assyria, Palestine, &c. Antiochus Epiphanes raised a cruel persecution against the Jews. But many suppose that the Hebrews here mentioned, are the nations beyond the Euphrates. C.—Heb. "ships . . . shall afflict Heber, and he also shall perish for ever," which seems to refer to Heber alone, and not to those who shall oppress them, as the Vulg. Sept. &c. express it. H.—Indeed, we do not find that the Scripture mentions the end of the Roman empire, of which many explain this passage. C.—Grotius (Jur. ii. 9.) maintained that it still subsisted in the German empire. Others think it will be destroyed only in the days of Antichrist. T. Dan. ii. 40.—But many have asserted that it was overturned by the Goths, and that the Romans are the people who would reduce the Hebrews to the greatest misery, under Titus. M.—The kings of Macedonia are, however, styled kings of Cethim, (1 Mac. i. 1. viii. 5.) and they were the immediate subverters of the Persian empire, as theirs fell a prey to the Romans. Theod. q. 44. C.

VER. 25. Place, in Aram. He returned soon after to the country of the Madianites, and was deservedly involved in their ruin. H. C. xxxi. 8.—Perhaps he only began his journey homeward, and stopped on the road. C.—As for Balac, he fought against Israel, (Jos. xxiv. 9.) at least by endeavouring to get them cursed. Severus says, "he was overcome." But we know not the particulars of the battle. H.

CHAP. XXV. VER. 1. Settim, which had Abel, "mourning," prefixed to it, (C. xxxiii. 49.) on account of the slaughter of 24,000 of the Israelites, v. 6. 9. It was situated in the plains of Moab, near the Jordan, and was the last station of the Hebrews. C.—In this neighbourhood all the following transactions occurred, which are recorded, till the end of the Pentateuch. M.—Balaam, being convinced that the Hebrews would be invincible, as long as they continued faithful to God, advised the nations, who had sent to consult him, to let their daughters converse freely with the Israelites, but not to yield to their impure desires, unless they consented to offer sacrifice to their idols. C.—Thus they first captivated their hearts, and then subverted their understanding: For some rejecting a good conscience, have made shipwreck concerning the faith. 1 Tim. i. 19. H.—By the same method many have been drawn into heresy. W.—The counsels of an able but wicked man, are often followed by the most dreadful effects. That these

AND Israel at that time abode in Settim, and the people committed fornication with the daughters of Moab,

2 Who called them to their sacrifices. And they ate of them, and adored their gods.

3 And Israel was initiated to Beelphegor: upon which the Lord being angry,

4 Said to Moses: "Take all the princes of the people, and hang them up on gibbets against the sun: that my fury may be turned away from Israel.

5 And Moses said to the judges of Israel: "Let every man kill his neighbours, that have been initiated to Beelphegor.

women were sent by the Moabites, and also by the Madianites, (v. 6. 17.) instigated by the perverse counsels of Balaam, (C.) appears not only from the event being recorded in this place, but also by the express declaration of Moses, C. xxxi. 7. 8, and of the Apocalypse, C. ii. 14. Salien, Mic. vi. 5. II.

VER. 2. Initiated to Beelphegor. That is, they took to the worship of Beelphegor, an obscene idol of the Moabites, and were consecrated as it were to him. Ch.—Heb. "Israel was attached, or married to Beelphegor," the sun, Adonis or Osiris, whom the psalmist (cv. 28.) styles, the dead, because the people were accustomed to bewail the death of Adonis every year, with great solemnity. C.—S. Jerom supposes this god "of opening, or nakedness," Beelphegor, to be the obscene Priapus. M.—The people fell by degrees into the depth of abomination. They first defiled their bodies with women, then their souls were contaminated by the sacrifices of their idols, till they began really to adore them, and even to consecrate themselves to their service, meaning to ratify their base apostasy from the true God. H.—Yet it is probable all those who were cut off by pestilence, were not thus initiated: but only those who were the princes or ringleaders, and who are sentenced to be gibbeted. Salien.—The mother of Asa, king of Juda, was not ashamed to preside over the mysteries of this obscene idol, (3 K. xv. 13.) which people worshipped by prostitution. Villalpand. S. Jer. in Osee iv. 9. T.

VER. 4. People. Assemble the judges, and by their sentence, hang them who have been most guilty. Onkelos.—If any of the judges, or princes themselves, have gone astray, let them not be spared. H.—The Jews assert, that the malefactor was always killed before his body was hung on a gibbet; and that crucifixion was not known among them. But the contrary is asserted by many. It is not clear whether these criminals were hung by the neck, or crucified, after they had been first stoned, as guilty of idolatry, or whether they were fastened to the gibbet alive, for greater torment and disgrace. C.—Sun; publicly. See 2 K. xii. 11. M.

VER. 5. Judges, who had not been guilty. Sept. "to the tribes." The judges, and even private individuals, were thus authorized to exterminate the guilty, as the Levites had been before, Ex. xxxii. 27. While punishment was inflicted but slowly, and some perhaps of the more noble were spared, so that Zambri, even became more insolent. God began to supply the defect of his ministers, by sending the plague among the people, as Onkelos insinuates. H.

VER. 6. One, Zambri, v. 14. M.—Went in. Heb. "brought unto his brethren, or came . . . with a woman of Madian." Sept. "introduced one of his brethren to a Madianite woman." But the Sam. copy agrees with the Vulg.; and the ancient edition of the Sept. must have done so too, since the Fathers explain it in the same sense. Philo de vita Mos. Origen, &c. Josephus (iv. 6.) pretends, that Zambri had married the most noble Cozbi, and that Moses finding fault with such infractions of his laws, this prince of the house of Simeon, arraigned him publicly of cruel tyranny and imposture in thus imposing his own laws upon a free people, and that for his part, he would retain his wife and ingratiate him self with many gods, that he might discover the truth. Phinees heard this with just indignation, and following him to his tent, transfixed him with Cozbi, his wife, while those young men who were desirous of imitating his zeal, treated similar offenders in like manner. "God destroyed the rest by the plague, so that not less than 14,000 perished," as Epiphanius translates, omitting dis, or ten thousand, though many copies have only 23,000, which agrees with the number specified by S. Paul, if indeed he allude to this transaction. 1 Cor. x. 7. Philo observes, that Phinees slew the Israelite who had sacrificed to the idols, and was in the company of the harlot; and, "that 24,000 perished in one day." H.—Perhaps 1000 of the heads might be gibbeted, and 23,000 of the common people slain. D.

VER. 7. Dagger. Josephus translates romach, by romphaia, "a sword." Sept. by sciromasten, a long and sharp iron rod, like a spit, such as people use to try if any smuggled goods be concealed. H.—It denotes any sort of offensive weapon. C.—The Vulg. sometimes translates, a lance or spear. M.

VER. 8. Parts. Ovid says, Lethifer ille locus, "That place where wounds so often deadly prove." Heb. kubbak, means a brothel-house just before, a bed, vault, cistern, belly, &c. Sept. translate, "through her womb." The plague, inflicted by God, instantly ceased, to shew the divine approbation of this exemplary punishment, and all were so much filled with terror and repentance, that it was no longer necessary for the judges to sentence any more to death. An effectual stop was also put to the spreading disorder of both carnal and spiritual fornication. II.

6 And behold one of the children of Israel went in, before his brethren, to a harlot of Madian, in the sight of Moses, and of all the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle.

7 *And when Phinees, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from the midst of the multitude, and taking a dagger,

8 Went in after the Israelite, into the brothel-house, and thrust both of them through together, to wit, the man and the woman in the genital parts. And the scourge ceased from the children of Israel:

9 And there were slain four and twenty thousand men.

10 And the Lord said to Moses:

11 Phinees, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned away my wrath from the children of Israel: because he was moved with my zeal against them, that I myself might not destroy the children of Israel in my zeal.

12 Therefore say to him: *Behold I give him the peace of my covenant, 13 And the covenant of the priesthood for ever shall be both to him and his seed, because he hath been zealous for his God, and hath made atonement for the wickedness of the children of Israel.

14 And the name of the Israelite, that was slain with the woman of Madian, was Zambri, the son of Salu, a prince of the kindred and tribe of Simeon.

15 And the Madianite woman, that was slain with him, was called Cozbi, the daughter of Sur, a most noble prince among the Madianites.

VER. 9. Slain. Heb. adds, "in the plague," or pestilence sent by God, (Ps. cv. 29,) and in the punishments inflicted by the judges, "twenty and four thousand." H.—The tribe of Simeon, lying to the south, had given way to greater disorders with the Madianites; (C.) so that they were found to have 37,100 fewer than when they were numbered before. C. ii. 13. See C. xxvi. 14. H.

VER. 12. Peace. He has the honour of restoring the people to peace and to my favour, so that my covenant shall still subsist with them. He shall surely be his father's successor in the high priesthood, and shall not be prevented by death.

VER. 13. Seed. A short interruption of 150 years, (from Heli to Abiathar, of the race of Ithamar) may be accounted trifling in a duration of so many ages, during which the posterity of Phinees enjoyed this dignity. Phinees succeeded Eleazar, and had for his successors, Abiezer, Bodei, and Elsi. C.—Some add Zararias, Meraioth, and Amarias, upon whose death, 1157 years before Christ, Heli got possession, by some means, and was followed by Achitob, Achielech, and Abiathar, of the same family, till David joined Sadoc with the latter, and he was acknowledged sole pontiff on the rebellion of Abiathar. B. C. 1014. See Lenglet's tables. H.—We have no proof that the succeeding high priests were of a different family, (C.) till our Saviour's time, who re-united in his person the right both to the priesthood and to the kingdom of Israel for ever. See S. Aug. C. D. xvii. 6. H.—God did not promise that no interruption should take place. He only granted a perpetual right to the family of Phinees, (Cajetan) which they might forfeit by their misconduct. T.—He was certainly always disposed to comply with his promise, and really granted the effects of it to the posterity of Phinees, at least for almost 1000 years, even if we grant that the Machabees were not his lineal descendants, of which there is no positive proof either way. Thus, for ever, often denotes a long duration. Though Phinees was entitled already to the high priesthood, in quality of the eldest son of Eleazar, he had before no assurance of surviving him, nor of having a succession of children who might be capable of the high office, and free from every blemish; (C.) so that the promise made to him, was not only a ratification of his title, but a new and real benefit. H.—Zealous. The Jews allow any person to kill one who publicly, or in the presence of ten people, commits idolatry, sacrilege, fornication with a strange woman, and also a priest who, being unclean, approaches to the altar. This they call the judgment of zeal. Seld. Jur. iv. 4. Grotius ii. 20. This practice they authorize by the example of Phinees, Mathathias, &c. 1 Mac. ii. 24. Such liberty was carried to a great excess by the Zealots, in the last siege of Jerusalem; and it would be very criminal, where such a law is not in force. C.—Phinees was, however, either one of the judges, and thus gave an example of just severity to his fellow magistrates, or he was inspired by God to resent the public injury done to his name. It is never lawful to kill by private authority. Catec. Rom. p. 3. C. vi. 5. S. Thomas ii. 2. q. 60. 6. W.—Those who act under the influence of inspiration, must be very careful not to give in to any delusion; and the examples of holy persons who are mentioned, with applause, in Scripture, for having been the instruments of God's vengeance, will not authorize us to do the like, unless we can

16 And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying:

17 *Let the Madianites find you their enemies, and slay you them:

18 Because they also have acted like enemies against you, and have guilefully deceived you by the idol Phogor, and Cozbi, their sister, a daughter of a prince of Madian, who was slain in the day of the plague, for the sacrilege of Phogor.

CHAP. XXVI.

The people are again numbered by their tribes and families.

AFTER ^dthe blood of the guilty was shed, the Lord said to Moses, and to Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest:

2 *Number the whole sum of the children of Israel, from twenty years old and upward, by their houses and kindreds, all that are able to go forth to war.

3 Moses therefore and Eleazar the priest, being in the plains of Moab, upon the Jordan, over-against Jericho, spoke to them that were

4 From twenty years old and upward, as the Lord had commanded: and this is the number of them:

5 Ruben the first-born of Israel. His sons were Henoeh, of whom is the family of the Henoehites: and Phallu, of whom is the family of the Phalluites:

6 And Hesron, of whom is the family of the Hesronites: and Charmi, of whom is the family of the Charmites.

7 These are the families of the stock of Ruben: whose number was found to be forty-three thousand seven hundred and thirty.

8 The son of Phallu was Eliab.

produce the like testimony. H.—Atonement, by averting the scourge of God, (v. 8. 11.) and by putting a stop to the corruption of the people, which might otherwise have greatly increased, if Zambri had escaped with impunity. C.

VER. 17. Madianites. God spared the Moabites for the sake of Lot (Deut. ii. 19,) and of Ruth, of whom David and Christ should be born. They were perhaps less guilty, but they did not escape due chastisement under David, 2 K. viii. 2. M.—The war against Madian was the last which the Hebrews waged in the lifetime of Moses. C. xxxi. H.

CHAP. XXVI. VER. 1. Shed. Heb. and Sept. "after the plague," which destroyed so many. Chal. After all who had murmured were cut off, the new progeny is numbered. S. Jerom. W.

VER. 2. Number. This was done, that the general might know what forces he could muster to attack the nations of Chanaan on the west side of the Jordan, and also in order that the lands might be properly distributed. The war lasted seven years, and the distribution of lands was not completed till some time afterwards. It is not clear that those who were not enrolled at this time, as being 20 years of age, would have any portion, except that of their fathers, allotted to them; but it seems however rational, that those who were arrived at that age when the distribution was made, would have their share like the rest. There were 1820 people fewer than in the register which was taken before, (C. i.) thirteen months after the departure from Egypt. The Levites seem not to have been numbered with the utmost exactitude, as only five families are mentioned, (v. 58, Jans.) though there were many more, 1 Par. xxiii. 6, &c. Their numbers amount to only 23,000. C.—They had rather increased in the desert during 38 years; (see C. iii. 39,) as had also the tribes of Juda, Issachar, and Zabulon, which lay to the east; of Manasses, (who perhaps on that account precedes Ephraim) and Benjamin, to the west; Dan and Aser to the north. Neftali proved deficient; so did likewise the tribes of Ruben, Simeon, and Gad, who were stationed to the south of the tabernacle. When they were numbered the first and the second time, (Ex. xxxviii. 25, and Num. i. 46,) they amounted to 603,550, exclusively of the Levites. Now they could only count 601,730 men fit for war. Considering their frequent disasters, it is even a matter of surprise that their ranks were not thinned still more, particularly as we are assured that all who had been numbered before, except Josue and Caleb, the Levites, and such as had kept themselves free from murmuring, had perished, v. 64. H.—In the particular accounts of the tribes, and in the names of persons, the Sept. frequently differ from the Hebrew. But the total amount agrees.

VER. 4. Them. Heb. "commanded Moses and the children of Israel, who came forth out of the land of Egypt." The same plan was now to be pursued as formerly.

VER. 7. Thirty. They had lost therefore 2870 men. C. i. 21.

9 His sons were Namuel, and Dathan, and Abiron. These are Dathan and Abiron the princes of the people, *that rose against Moses and Aaron in the sedition of Core, when they rebelled against the Lord:

10 And the earth opening her mouth swallowed up Core, many others dying, when the fire burned two hundred and fifty men. And there was a great miracle wrought, 11 That when Core perished, his sons did not perish.

21 Moreover the sons of Phares, were: Hesron, of whom is the family of the Hesronites: and Hamul, of whom is the family of the Hamulites.

22 These are the families of Juda, of which the whole number was seventy-six thousand five hundred.

23 The sons of Issachar, by their kindreds: Thola, of whom is the family of the Tholaïtes: Phua, of whom is the family of the Phuaïtes:

24 Jasub, of whom is the family of the Jasubites: Semran, of whom is the family of the Semranites.

25 These are the kindreds of Issachar, whose number was sixty-four thousand three hundred.

26 The sons of Zabulon, by their kindreds: Sared, of whom is the family of the Saredites: Elon, of whom is 27 These are the kindreds of Zabulon, whose number was sixty thousand five hundred.

28 The sons of Joseph, by their kindreds, Manasses and Ephraim.

29 Of Manasses was born Machir, of whom is the family of the Machirites. *Machir begot Galaad, of whom is the family of the Galaadites.

30 Galaad had sons: Jezer, of whom is the family of the Jezerites: and Helec, of whom is the family of the Helecites:

31 And Asriel, of whom is the family of the Asrielites: and Sechem, of whom is the family of the Sechemites:

32 And Semida, of whom is the family of the Semidaïtes: ^dand Hephher, of whom is the family of the Hephherites:

33 And Hephher was the father of Salphaad, who had no sons, but only daughters, whose names are these: *Maala, and Noa, and Hegla, and Melcha, and Thersa.

34 These are the families of Manasses, and the number of them fifty-two thousand seven hundred.

35 And the sons of Ephraim, by their kindreds, were these: Suthala, of whom is the family of the Suthalaïtes: Becher, of whom is the family of the Becherites: Thehen, of whom is the family of the Thehenites.

36 Now the son of Suthala was Heran, of whom is the family of the Heranites.

37 These are the kindreds of the sons of Ephraim: whose number was thirty-two thousand five hundred.

38 These are the sons of Joseph, by their families. The sons of Benjamin in their kindreds: Bela, of whom is the family of the Belaïtes: Asbel, of whom is the family of the Asbelites: Ahiram, of whom is the family of the Ahiramites:

39 Supham, of whom is the family of the Suphamites: Hupham, of whom is the family of the Huphamites.

40 The sons of Bela: Hered, and Noeman. Of Hered, is the family of the Heredites: of Noeman, the family of the Noemanites.

41 These are the sons of Benjamin, by their kindreds, whose number was forty-five thousand six hundred.

42 The sons of Dan, by their kindreds: Suham, of whom is the family of the Suhamites: these are the kindreds of Dan, by their families.

VER. 10. Miracle. Heb. "they became a sign" of reproof, and a memorial of God's just judgments, who caused the earth to swallow up Core and his companions alive, by a most disgraceful kind of death, to which the faithless vestal virgins were condemned at Rome, being buried alive; while those who had offered incense, were consumed by fire. Many of the ancients assert that Core was also burnt, meaning perhaps by the fire of hell; to which he descended. Joseph. iv. 3. —Others have thought that the children of Core were swallowed up with their father. But this is not true, with respect to some of them at least, (II.) who by a miracle of the divine grace and goodness, were preserved from joining in his sedition; (C.) while Core, his wife and servants, all concurred to shew them such a pernicious example. II.—Lyran. and the Rabbins tell us, that the children stopped to intreat their father to repent; and while the earth opened under them, God supported them in the air, and gave them the spirit of prophecy; so that they sung, (Ps. xlv.) God is our refuge, &c., or, according to others, the Ps. xli. which has their name in the title. But these accounts are to be received with caution. The Samaritan text, fuerrunt in fugam, (C.) may be translated, "out of this world they fled away, (II.) and the sons of Core did not perish."

VER. 54. A Issa. God introduced among his people that equality, which was so much desired by Lycurgus, Solon, &c. The fertility of the land assigned to Benjamin, compensated for the smallness of its quantity.

VER. 55. Loh. Josue appointed commissioners, who measured the land, and divided it according to its fertility; and the portions assigned to each of the tribes by lot, corresponded with the predictions of Jacob and of Moses; God so regulating the lots by his allwise Providence, in order that the people might be more convinced of the truth of the prophecies, and that no undue favour was shewn to any one by Josue, Eleazar, or by the other men in authority. He took the whole upon himself, that none might complain of their rulers. C.—Masius supposes that the different divisions of the land were written down, and placed in an urn, and that the heads of the tribes drew according to their birth. Jos. xv. 1.—The heads of families, such as Hemoch, &c., (v. 5.) probably also drew lots, to know what part of territory allotted to the tribe, should fall to their share; (H.) and they parcelled out their land among their children. THIEN ^ecame the daughters of Salphaad, the son of Hephher, ^fthe son of Galaad, the son of Machir, the son of Manasses, who was the son of Joseph: and their names are Maala, and Noa, and Hegla, and Melcha, and Thersa.

2 And they stood before Moses and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the people, at the door of the tabernacle of the covenant, and said:

3 Our father died in the desert, and was not in the sedition ^gthat was raised against the Lord, under Core, but he died in his own sin: and he had no male children. Why is his name taken away out of his family, because he had no son? Give us a possession among the kinsmen of our father.

of Amram, which is very improbable. It is more likely that the wives of these two bore the same name. The Heb. may agree very well with the Vulg. See Ex. ii. 1. C.—It was afterwards forbidden for a person to marry his aunt. Lev. xviii. W.

VER. 64. Sinai, if we except the Levites. M. See C. xiv. 23.—Origen (hom. 21.) makes a very good remark on this subject. This circumcised, but rebellious people, conducted by Moses into the desert, clearly points out the Hebrews, who come to the frontiers of the promised land, but are not suffered to cross the Jordan. The uncircumcised are introduced into the land flowing with milk and honey, not by Moses, but by Josue, the figure of our Saviour, who opens heaven to true believers. "The first people is rejected, which had received circumcision, and the second is introduced, which is gathered from the Gentiles; and it is this people which obtains its father's inheritance. . . If Moses give any inheritance, it is not within the Jordan. . . it is a land fit for cattle. . . he does not distribute it by lot. . . nor can he know the merits of each. This is done by Jesus only, to whom his Father has given all judgment." H.

VER. 4—6. Their. The first of these pronouns is written larger than usual, 9 If he have no daughter, his brethren shall succeed him.

10 And if he have no brethren, you shall give the inheritance to his father's brethren.

11 But if he have no uncles by the father, the inheritance shall be given to them that are the next a-kin. And this shall be to the children of Israel sacred by a perpetual law, as the Lord hath commanded Moses.

12 "The Lord also said to Moses: ^bGo up into this mountain, Abarim, and view from thence the land, which I will give to the children of Israel.

13 And when thou shalt have seen it, thou also shalt go to thy people, as thy brother Aaron is gone:

14 "Because you offended me in the desert of Sin in the contradiction of the multitude, neither would you sanctify me before them at the waters. These are the waters of contradiction, in Cades, of the desert of Sin.

15 And Moses answered him:

16 May the Lord the God of the spirits of all flesh provide a man that may be over this multitude:

17 And may go out and in before them, and may lead them out, or bring them in: lest the people of the Lord be as sheep without a shepherd.

18 And the Lord said to him: ^dTake Josue, the son of Nun, a man in whom is the Spirit, and put thy hand upon him.

19 And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, and all the multitude.

20 And thou shalt give him precepts in the sight of all, and part of thy glory, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may hear him.

21 If any thing be to be done, Eleazar the priest shall consult the Lord for him. He, and all the children of Israel with him, and the rest of the multitude, shall go out and go in at his word.

22 Moses did as the Lord had commanded. And when he had taken Josue, he set him before Eleazar the priest, and all the assembly of the people, 23 And laying his hands on his head, he repeated all things that the Lord had commanded.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Sacrifices are appointed as well for every day as for sabbaths, and other festivals.

THE Lord also said to Moses:

3 These are the sacrifices which you shall offer: *Two lambs of a year old, without blemish, every day for the perpetual holocaust:

7 And for a libation you shall offer of wine the fourth part of a hin for every lamb in the sanctuary of the Lord,

8 And you shall offer the other lamb in like manner in the evening, according to all the rites of the morning sacrifice, and of the libations thereof, an oblation of most sweet odour to the Lord.

9 'And on the sabbath day; you shall offer two lambs of a year old, without blemish, and two tenths of flour tempered with oil in sacrifice, and the libations,

VER. 13. People, in limbo. M.—He was not buried in the grave of his ancestors, but on some part of Mount Abarim, called Nebo. Deut. xxxiv. 1. 6. II.—Moses, hoping that his sentence of exclusion from the promised land might be only a threat, had earnestly besought God to let him enter. But being forbidden to speak of the matter any more, he understood that it was as irrevocable as an oath. Deut. iii. 26. iv. 21. He turned, therefore, his whole solicitude to obtain of God some one, who might enjoy the honour and happiness of conducting the people, and putting them in possession of God's promises. He regards not flesh and blood on this occasion, (Philo, de caritate. Salien.) but sets a noble pattern for all ecclesiastical superiors to imitate. D.

VER. 16. Flesh, who gives life, and penetrates the secrets of hearts. C. xvi. 22.

VER. 17. Shepherd. Christ makes use of the same comparison. Jo. x. 1. Kings are often styled shepherds in Homer. Moses begs that his successor may be enabled to conduct the multitude both in peace and war.—To go in and out, means to govern, (3 K. iii. 7,) and includes all the occurrences of life. Act. i. 21. Ps. cxx. 8. C.—Thus, temporal princes are the shepherds of the people. But they are not, on that account, supreme in spiritual causes. For here Josue only receives part of the glory of Moses, while Eleazar is appointed to consult the Lord for him, and to direct him in all matters of importance, v. 20. 21. W.

VER. 18. Spirit of God, which was given to him, when he was appointed a judge; (C. xi. 17,) the spirit of prophecy, (Onkelos,) and of wisdom, (Deut. xxxiv. 9,) of which he received a fresh increase, by the imposition of the hands of Moses. By the like ceremony people are confirmed, and ministers of religion are still ordained. Act. vi. 6. 1 Tim. iv. 14. C.—God endues Josue with all the necessary qualifications for his high office. He makes choice of him, and not of any of the relations of Moses, that the people might not be offended at the supreme power being in a manner engrossed by one family; and he appoints one 93 years old that the success of war might not be attributed to Josue, though he had been long at the head of the armies, and a man of the greatest authority, even the viceroy of Moses. He declares his election before all the multitude, with the high priest at their head, that there might be no dispute about the matter; and, on this account, he requires various external ceremonies to be observed. Salien.

VER. 20. Precepts, to accept of this office, (C.) and to discharge it with integrity. II.—Glory, not that which shone on the face of Moses, as Onkelos would have it, but all the marks of distinction due to a chief magistrate, (C.) the insignia of his office. See Ex. xviii. 21. Salien.—Treat him with respect, as your successor. M.—Let him henceforward commence to exercise his authority before you, that all the people may hear and obey him. Sararius. T.

VER. 21. For him. Heb. adds, "according to the judgment of Urim." See Ex. xxviii. 30. Nothing better shows the theocracy of the Hebrews, as Josephus styles it, (c. Apion. ii.) than this order for the chief magistrate in civil affairs, to consult and be guided by God's minister, and by the sentence which he should pronounce in his name. Till the reign of David, at least, we find few wars undertaken, without consulting God: (C.) and the Rabbins assert, that the kings could not declare any war of their own accord, without the consent of the high priest and Sanhedrim. Seld. Syned. iii. 12. Saul lost his crown and life for not complying with the injunctions of God, which were communicated to him by the prophet Samuel. H.

VER. 23. Commanded. This Moses executed on his birth-day, when he was 120 years old, (Deut. xxxi. 2. 7,) having frequently before given proper instructions to Josue. Deut. i. 38. and xxxii. 44. H.

CHAP. XXVIII. VER. 2. Seasons. These precepts had often been repeated already: but perhaps they had not been exactly observed in the desert, so that Moses inculcates them once more, as if to remind the people that they will now have no excuse, if they neglect these sacrifices in the promised land. C.—These frequent repetitions may also remind us, with what attention we ought to worship God. D.

VER. 3. Lambs. Kids would not suffice. See Ex. xxix. 38. The lambs must not be above a year old. But it is not clear whether they could be offered eight days after their birth, as on other occasions. Ex. xxiii. 19. C.

VER. 5. Sinai. Hence, it seems to have been discontinued for 88 years. C. Lev. ix. 17. M.

VER. 7. In the. Heb. "in the holy thou shalt cause the shecar to be poured out into the Lord, a drink-offering." See C. iv. 3, on the meaning of shecar. H.—Some believe, that artificial wine of palm-trees, &c., might serve for libations. In this sacrifice, the priests furnished the liquor; so that all was to be poured out on the altar of holocausts, which stood in the court. C.

10 Which regularly are poured out every sabbath for the perpetual holocaust.

11 And on the first day of the month you shall offer a holocaust to the Lord, two calves of the herd, one ram, and seven lambs, of a year old, without blemish,

12 And three tenths of flour tempered with oil in sacrifice for every calf: and two tenths of flour tempered with oil for every ram:

13 And the tenth of a tenth of flour tempered with oil in sacrifice for every lamb. It is a holocaust of most sweet odour and an offering by fire to the Lord.

14 And these shall be the libations of wine, that are to be poured out for every victim: Half a hin for every calf, a third for a ram, and a fourth for a lamb. This shall be the holocaust for every month, as they succeed one another in the course of the year.

15 A buck-goat also shall be offered to the Lord for a sin-offering over and above the perpetual holocaust with its libations.

16 *And in the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, shall be the Phase of the Lord, 17 And on the fifteenth day the solemn feast: seven days shall they eat unleavened bread.

18 And the first day of them shall be venerable and holy: you shall not do any servile work therein.

19 And you shall offer a burnt-sacrifice a holocaust to the Lord, two calves of the herd, one ram, seven lambs of a year old, without blemish:

20 And for the sacrifices of every one three tenths of flour which shall be tempered with oil, to every calf, and two tenths to every ram,

21 And the tenth of a tenth, to every lamb, that is to say, to all the seven lambs:

22 And one buck-goat for sin, to make atonement for you,

23 Besides the morning holocaust which you shall always offer.

* Exod. xii. 18. Levit. xxiii. 5.

VER. 10. Which, &c. Heb. "the burnt-offering of every sabbath, besides the perpetual holocaust and its libations," which were due for every day. H.—On the sabbath, two more were to be offered of the same age. Jansenius observes, that three of these belonged to the morning service, and one to that of the evening. M. C.

VER. 11. Month. This is not reckoned among the festivals. Lev. xxiii. The Rabbins look upon it as a day of devotion, particularly for women. Buxtorf. Syn. xvii. Spencer (Rit. iii. 1.) maintains, that the Hebrews began their month when the moon first appeared, and that they imitated the pagans in keeping that day holy. But his proofs on both heads are very unsatisfactory. The Hebrews followed the solar year for many ages after Moses, though they might have adopted the lunar towards the close of the republic; and the pagans themselves ridiculed those as vile imitators of the Jews, who kept the new moons as a festival. Hor. Sat. i. 9. Sabbata Vin tu Curtis Judeis oppellere.—The Greeks, Romans, Egyptians, Arabs, and Turks, have given in to various superstitious practices in honour of the moon. See Macrob. Sat. i. 15, &c. C.—The devil is commonly the ape of God, and teaches his votaries to adopt the ceremonies of the true religion, either to elude them more easily, or to bring those practices into discredit. Thus Middleton has endeavoured to shew the conformity of Pagan and Papal Rome, as if the ceremonies of the Catholic religion were to be rejected, because some of them have been in use among the heathens. By the same argument, he may ridicule the revelation of God himself, on this subject, and represent vestments, holy water, &c. as superstitions. He may pull down altars, condemn all forms of prayer, abolish all worship, both of soul and body. For such things have all been prostituted to idols! But those who are not totally infatuated by prejudice, will deplore the abuse of these things, and will not refrain from adoring the true God according to his will, with all the faculties both of their soul and body, on account of the devil and his false prophets having extorted similar acts of worship from their followers. It is no wonder that Protestants should ridicule our holy ceremonies, since they scruple not to assign so base an origin to those which God expressly prescribed. H.—The sacrifices which were ordered to be offered up on the first day of the month, were probably designed to renew the memory of the world's creation, or rather of the divine Providence, which regulates the seasons. Nothing was sold on this day. Amos viii. 5. But people went to hear the prophets, (4 K. iv. 22.) and feasted among themselves, 1 K. xx.

24 So shall you do every day of the seven days for the food of the fire, and for a most sweet odour to the Lord, which shall rise from the holocaust, and from the libations of each.

25 The seventh day also shall be most solemn and holy unto you: you shall do no servile work therein.

26 The day also of first-fruits, when after the weeks are accomplished, you shall offer new fruits to the Lord, shall be venerable and holy: you shall do no servile work therein.

27 And you shall offer a holocaust for a most sweet odour to the Lord, two calves of the herd, one ram, and seven lambs of a year old, without blemish:

28 And in the sacrifices of them, three tenths of flour tempered with oil to every calf, two to every ram,

29 The tenth of a tenth to every lamb, which in all are seven lambs: a goat also,

30 Which is slain for expiation: beside the perpetual holocaust and the libations thereof.

31 You shall offer them all without blemish with their libations.

CHAP. XXIX.

Sacrifices for the festivals of the seventh month.

THE first day also of the seventh month shall be venerable and holy unto you: you shall do no servile work therein, because it is the day of the sounding and of trumpets.

2 *And you shall offer a holocaust for a most sweet odour to the Lord, one calf of the herd, one ram, and seven lambs of a year old, without blemish:

3 And for their sacrifices, three tenths of flour tempered with oil to every calf, two tenths to a ram,

4 One tenth to a lamb, which in all are seven lambs:

5 And a buck-goat for sin, which is offered for the expiation of the people,

6 Besides the holocaust of the first day of the month with the sacrifices thereof, and the perpetual holocaust

18. It is thought that many rested also from servile work, though this is no where commanded. C.—Tirin agrees with Tostat and Sanctius, in supposing that servile work was prohibited, for which he refers to 1 K. xx. 19. He also asserts, that the Jews observed the lunar system, and that their months consisted of 29 and 30 days alternately, as 29 days and a half elapse from one moon to another. The sound of trumpets probably announced this solemnity. C. x. 10. Lev. xxiii. H.

VER. 13. Tenth. An assaron, gomer, or chomer, which is the tenth part of an epha, as that is the tenth of a core or chomer, which is the largest Hebrew dry measure, containing 32 pecks and one pint English; so that the gomer would be equivalent to five pints. H.—This quantity of flour accompanied each holocaust at the beginning of every month. C.

VER. 15. Above. This is the import of the Heb. &c.: for no libations accompanied the sin-offerings, nor incense. See C. xv. 3. Lev. v. 12. M.

VER. 16. Phase, or Passover, the most solemn of all the festivals, when the lamb was to be eaten on the 15th of Nisan, and during the eight days no leavened bread was allowed. The Jews searched all the corners of their houses, lest some might be concealed by mice, and they would not so much as name it. S. Paul exhorts us to do the like, in a spiritual sense, by purifying ourselves from every defilement of sin when we receive the blessed sacrament, and by not even mentioning sins of impurity. 1 Cor. v. 7. Ephes. v. 8. H.

VER. 23. Offer, as well as that in the evening, which was in less danger of being forgotten.

VER. 24. Fire. Heb. "food of the sacrifice made by fire."—Rise. Heb. "it shall be offered besides the perpetual holocaust, and its libations," morning and evening. All the aforesaid sacrifices and libations were to be repeated on each of the seven days, v. 19. 22.

VER. 26. The day of Pentecost, seven weeks after the Passover, was the next in solemnity, to thank God for the wheat harvest, of which the first-fruits were now presented. H.—Two loaves, made with leaven, were given to the priests. Lamy. See Lev. xxiii. 17.

VER. 27. Two calves. Only one is specified in Leviticus, being that designed for the morning; another was immolated at night. C.—The same victims are prescribed as v. 19. M.

CHAP. XXIX. VER. 1. The first. This day was doubly solemn, as being with the accustomed libations. With the same ceremonies you shall offer a burnt-sacrifice for a most sweet odour to the Lord.

7 *The tenth day also of this seventh month shall be holy and venerable unto you, and you shall afflict your souls: you shall do no servile work therein.

8 And you shall offer a holocaust to the Lord for a most sweet odour, one calf of the herd, one ram, and seven lambs of a year old, without blemish:

9 And for their sacrifices, three tenths of flour tempered with oil to every calf, two tenths to a ram,

10 The tenth of a tenth to every lamb, which are in all seven lambs:

11 And a buck-goat for sin, besides the things that are wont to be offered for sin, for expiation, and for the perpetual holocaust, with their sacrifice and libations.

12 And on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, which shall be unto you holy and venerable, you shall do no servile work, but shall celebrate a solemnity to the Lord seven days.

13 And you shall offer a holocaust for a most sweet odour to the Lord, thirteen calves of the herd, two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, without blemish:

14 And for their libations, three tenths of flour tempered with oil to every calf, being in all thirteen calves: and two tenths to each ram, being two rams,

15 And the tenth of a tenth to every lamb, being in all fourteen lambs:

16 And a buck-goat for sin, besides the perpetual holocaust, and the sacrifice, and the libation thereof.

17 On the second day you shall offer twelve calves of the herd, two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, without blemish:

18 And the sacrifices and the libations for every one, for the calves and for the rams, and for the lambs you shall duly celebrate:

19 And a buck-goat for a sin-offering, besides the perpetual holocaust, and the sacrifice and the libation thereof.

20 The third day you shall offer eleven calves, two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, without blemish:

21 And the sacrifices and the libations of every one for the calves and for the rams, and for the lambs you shall offer according to the rite:

22 And a buck-goat for sin, besides the perpetual holocaust, and the sacrifice, and the libation thereof.

23 The fourth day you shall offer ten calves, two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, without blemish:

the first day of the month, consequently entitled to all the sacrifices enjoined for it; and also a holiday, for which other victims are requisite, besides the perpetual holocausts, v. 2. 6. C. xxviii. 11. H.

VER. 7. Tenth. The feast of expiation, on which see Lev. xvi. 29. xxiii. 27, where we have also explained what relates to the feast of tabernacles, v. 34.

VER. 12. Seven days, not refraining indeed all that time from servile work, but remaining under tents, and daily performing what is required, v. 13. &c.

VER. 35. Eighth day, which was more solemn than the preceding ones, but less so than the first. The victims are every day diminished. C.—This day, in the Hebrew calendar, is called the feast of retention, (atsroth) as they staid near the tabernacle. D.

VER. 59. Vows. The general regulations did not hinder any private ones from being fulfilled. C.—Sacrifice. Mincha, or offering of flour, &c. H.

24 And the sacrifices and the libations of every one for the calves and for the rams, and for the lambs you shall celebrate in right manner:

25 And a buck-goat for sin, besides the perpetual holocaust, and the sacrifice and the libation thereof.

26 The fifth day you shall offer nine calves, two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, without blemish:

27 And the sacrifices and the libations of every one for the calves and for the rams, and for the lambs, you shall celebrate according to the rite:

28 And a buck-goat for sin, besides the perpetual holocaust, and the sacrifice and the libation thereof.

29 The sixth day you shall offer eight calves, two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, without blemish:

30 And the sacrifices and the libations of every one for the calves and for the rams, and for the lambs, you shall celebrate according to the rite:

31 And a buck-goat for sin, besides the perpetual holocaust, and the sacrifice thereof and the libation.

32 The seventh day you shall offer seven calves, and two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, without blemish.

33 And the sacrifices and the libations of every one for the calves and for the rams, and for the lambs, you shall celebrate according to the rite:

34 And a buck-goat for sin, besides the perpetual holocaust, and the sacrifice and the libation thereof.

35 On the eighth day, which is most solemn, you shall do no servile work:

36 But you shall offer a holocaust for a most sweet odour to the Lord, one calf, one ram, and seven lambs of a year old, without blemish:

37 And the sacrifices and the libations of every one for the calves and for the rams, and for the lambs, you shall celebrate according to the rite:

38 And a buck-goat for sin, besides the perpetual holocaust, and the sacrifice and the libation thereof.

39 These things shall you offer to the Lord in your solemnities: besides your vows and voluntary oblations for holocaust, for sacrifice, for libation, and for victims of peace-offerings.

CHAP. XXX.

Of vows and oaths: and their obligation.

AND Moses told the children of Israel all that the Lord had commanded him:

2 And he said to the princes of the tribes of the children of Israel: This is the word that the Lord hath commanded:

3 If any man make a vow to the Lord, or bind himself by an oath: he shall not make his word void, but shall fulfil all that he promised.

CHAP. XXX. VER. 3. Oath, to do something commendable, shall observe his promise, whether any body has heard him or not. The Rabbins pretend, that if the vow be not expressed in words, it is not obligatory. But this is only true before men, who cannot subject their fellow creatures to punishment for internal faults. H.—The obligation of a vow or oath is founded upon common honesty, which requires that we should comply with our lawful promises; and, though all properly belong to God, yet, as he does not strictly require us to do every good work, which may be in our power, we may, by vow, testify our desire to please and honour him the more. Some of the Rabbins have very loose sentiments with respect to vows, which they look upon as no better than building an altar, or immolating a victim upon the high places. It is sufficient, they say, to observe the law, apud Fagium. C.—Luther was desirous of introducing the same loose morality among Christians. But we need not ask, what the Rabbins said, or 4 If a woman vow any thing, and bind herself with an oath, being in her father's house, and but yet a girl in age: if her father knew the vow that she hath promised, and the oath wherewith she hath bound her soul, and held his peace, she shall be bound by the vow:

5 Whatsoever she promised, and swore, she shall fulfil in deed.

6 But if her father, immediately as soon as he heard it, gain-said it, both her vows and her oaths shall be void, neither shall she be bound to what she promised, because her father hath gain-said it.

7 If she have a husband, and shall vow any thing, and the word once going out of her mouth, shall bind her soul by an oath:

8 The day that her husband shall hear it, and not gain-say it, she shall be bound to the vow, and shall give whatsoever she promised.

9 But if as soon as he heareth, he gain-say it, and make her promises, and the words wherewith she hath bound her soul of no effect; the Lord will forgive her.

10 The widow, and she that is divorced, shall fulfil whatsoever they vow.

11 If the wife, in the house of her husband, hath bound herself by vow and by oath:

12 If her husband hear, and hold his peace, and doth not disallow the promise, she shall accomplish whatsoever she had promised.

13 But if forthwith he gain-say it, she shall not be bound by the promise: because her husband gain-said it, and the Lord will be merciful to her.

14 If she vow, and bind herself by oath, to afflict her soul by fasting, or abstinence, from other things, it

Luther, &c. But what does God and his Church assert? The Scripture repeatedly commends prudent vows; and those who can persuade themselves, that they can infringe such solemn promises without offence, will be little solicitous about keeping their word to a fellow creature, unless when interest, or fear of shame, force them to do it. H.—He who makes a vow to abstain from any thing lawful, would be guilty of sin if he should not observe it afterwards. S. Aug. q. 56. W.

VER. 4. Girl in age, not 12; or, if more, at least not married, nor out of her father's house, v. 17. For either of these conditions rendered a girl incapable of binding herself irrevocably. The father, or all who had the care of her, might rescind her vow, provided they did it as soon as it came to their knowledge, or on the same day, v. 15. Boys under 13, were under similar restrictions. Grotius.—Wives, and, in general, all who are under subjection, could not dispose of themselves without the consent of their superiors, as their want of prudence, &c. might have otherwise injured what belonged, in some measure, to another. H.—The law, therefore, submits their case to the decision of their immediate judges. C.—But if the thing, which a person vowed, was already of strict obligation, as to fast on the day of expiation, (Lev. xxiii. 29,) no one could presume to hinder his wife from complying with this double duty. W.

VER. 7. Husband, whether she live with him, or with her father; whether she be only espoused, or the marriage be consummated. Women often staid for some time at their father's house after they were married; and, in this case, some people say that either her father or her husband might disannul her vow. But others allow this right only to her husband. Bonfrere. See v. 11. C.

VER. 14. H. The Rabbins restrain this law to fasting and abstinence. But the Heb. seems more general, (v. 13,) "every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may ratify or annul." The vows of abstinence are most common, and generally more disagreeable to husbands. C.—S. Augustine (q. 59,) thinks it unreasonable that the husband should have a control over the vows of continency in his wife, any more than she should have over him, in this particular, as their rights are equal: he seems inclined to allow him to annul the vows of abstinence only. Indeed this seems to be the meaning of afflicting the soul, which is done by submitting to various restraints, required on days of fasting. See Lev. xxiii. 27. H.—In things which could nowise hurt the parent or husband, many believe, that the person who had made a vow, was bound to perform it secretly, even though the superior had declared his dissent. But with respect to fasting, pilgrimages, &c. which could not be performed, without his knowledge, it does not seem that they were under any farther obligation, even though the superior should retract what he had connived at for a whole day. In doubtful cases, inferiors must not refuse to obey. The sin lies at the door of him who exercises his authority in an improper manner. Lyran. T. v. 16.

VER. 15. Day. Heb. "from day to day" If he has not given his decision shall depend on the will of her husband, whether she shall do it, or not do it.

15 But if the husband hearing it, hold his peace, and defer the declaring his mind till another day: whatsoever she had vowed and promised, she shall fulfil: because immediately as he heard it, he held his peace.

16 But if he gain-say it after that he knew it, he shall bear her iniquity.

17 These are the laws which the Lord appointed to Moses, between the husband and the wife, between the father and the daughter, that is as yet but a girl in age, or that abideth in her father's house.

CHAP. XXXI.

The Madianites are slain, for having drawn the people of Israel into sin. The dividing of the booty.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses,* saying:

2 Revenge first the children of Israel on the Madianites, and so thou shalt be gathered to thy people.

3 And Moses forthwith said: 'Arm of you men to fight, who may take the revenge of the Lord on the Madianites.

4 Let a thousand men be chosen out of every tribe of Israel, to be sent to the war.

5 And they gave a thousand of every tribe, that is to say, twelve thousand men, well appointed for battle:

6 And Moses sent them with Phinees, the son of Eleazar the priest, and he delivered to him the holy vesseks, and the trumpets to sound.

7 And when they had fought against the Madianites and had overcome them, they slew all the men,

8 'And their kings Evi, and Recem, and Sur, and Hur, and Rebe, five princes of the nation: Balaam also, the son of Beor, they killed with the sword.

on the first day when the vow came to his knowledge, unless he asked for a delay, as some allow, the person was bound to perform what she had promised. C.—Immediately. Heb. "in the day," which seems to restrict the power of annulling the vow to a single day, v. 4. It would be unreasonable for the person to be kept long in suspense; and the law of God requires that we should not defer to perform our vows. Eccles. v. 3. 4. H.

VER. 16. That. Sept. "the day." If he retract his consent, he shall incur all the guilt. S. Aug. q. 59. The woman need not be under any disquietude, as the fault is not in her. C.—If a person had made a rash vow, he might obtain a dispensation from the tribunal of three judges, or from a doctor of the law, who would enjoin him to offer the sacrifice for ignorance, to punish his levity. See Seld. Jur. vii. 2. Those who break their vow are to be scourged among the Jews, which shews that they do not, in general, approve the sentiments of those Rabbins whom Fagius, a Protestant, alleges, v. 3. They make a distinction between vows and promises confirmed by an oath, v. 11. The former change the nature of a thing, according to them; so that, if a person should vow not to wear the phylacteries ordained by Moses, he must comply, though not if he had only promised on oath to refrain. But this distinction is absurd. No vow or oath can bind any person to transgress the law of God. H.

CHAP. XXXI. VER. 2. Madianites. The five princes (v. 8,) had joined Schon, in his attack upon the Hebrews. Jos. xiii. 21. They had united with the Moabites against them, and had been most active in perverting the people of God. They had even the wicked Balaam still among them, who was bent upon destruction; so that God saw the measure of their crimes was full, their provocations unsufferable, and he was pleased to let Moses be witness of their just punishment. This he would effect with a very small force, v. 5. H.—This war of religion was terminated about a month before the death of Moses.

VER. 6. Trumpets. These are the holy vesseks just specified, though some believe that he carried the ark, which was done in some wars. Jos. vi. 1. 1 K. iv. 5. Priests always sounded the trumpet. Deut. xx. 2. Phinees was appointed general of this expedition to reward him for his zeal against the fornicators. C.—Or Josue headed the army, as he did on other occasions, though his name be not here specified. The tribe of Levi was not obliged to go to battle, and therefore only twelve tribes send each 1000. Josue had been elected general by God, so that it was not necessary to mention his name. Salien.

Some think he was a native of Madian, though he had resided in Mesopotamia. He had either stopped in this country, or hearing of the calamities of the Hebrews, had returned to 9 And they took their women and their children captives, and all their cattle, and all their goods: and all their possessions they plundered:

10 And all their cities, and their villages, and their castles, they burned.

11 And they carried away the booty, and all that they had taken, both of men and of beasts:

12 And they brought them to Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and to all the multitude of the children of Israel. But the rest of the things for use they carried to the camp, on the plains of Moab, beside the Jordan, over-against Jericho.

13 And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the synagogue, went forth to meet them without the camp.

14 And Moses being angry with the chief officers of the army, the tribunes, and the centurions, that were come from the battle, 15 Said: Why have you saved the women?

16 "Are not these they that deceived the children of Israel by the counsel of Balaam, and made you transgress against the Lord by the sin of Phogor, for which also the people was punished?"

17 "Therefore kill all that are of the male sex, even of the children: and put to death the women that have carnally known men."

18 But the girls, and all the women that are virgins, save for yourselves:

19 And stay without the camp seven days. He that hath killed a man, or touched one that is killed, shall be purified the third day and the seventh day.

20 And of all the spoil, every garment, or vessel, or any thing made for use, of the skins, or hair of goats, or of wood, shall be purified.

21 Eleazar also, the priest, spoke to the men of the army that had fought, in this manner: This is the ordinance of the law," which the Lord hath commanded Moses:

receive the reward of his pernicious counsel. Thus he was overtaken by God's just judgment, and he fell into the pit which his avarice had dug for him. C. xxiv. 25. H.—Probably he was busy with his incantations; for this sort of men is generally cowardly. He had no sword. C. xxii. 29. Salien.

VER. 9. Possessions. Lit. "all that they could, they plundered." It seems they did not advance very far into the country; or many saved themselves by flight; for we find the Madianites soon powerful enough to enslave the Hebrews. Judg. vi. 1.

VER. 10. Castles. Heb. tiroth, means also, "palaces, or shepherds' huts." C.

VER. 13. Camp. They had sent news of their victory, and of the plunder which they were bringing to the camp, (H.) to be divided equally among their fellow soldiers, when they were met by Moses, &c. who came to congratulate with them, and to examine how they had executed their commission, as well as to admonish them to be purified before they entered the camp, v. 19. C.

VER. 15. Women. They had received no positive orders respecting them, and 'as was customary to spare their lives. But these dissolute women had rendered themselves unworthy of such indulgence, (C.) and the sight of them raised the indignation of Moses, who was afraid lest their manners should corrupt the victors. H.

VER. 16. The sin of Phogor. The sin committed in the worship of Beelphegor. Ch.—Many of the prostitutes had returned home, being terrified at the slaughter of their queen, Cozbi. H.

VER. 17. Of children. Women and children, ordinarily speaking, were not to be killed in war. Deut. xx. 14. But the great lord of life and death was pleased to order it otherwise in the present case, in detestation of the wickedness of this people, who by the counsel of Balaam, had sent their women amongst the Israelites on purpose to draw them from God. Ch.—Only those who were under twelve, would be thus reserved; and as their tender minds might yet receive the impressions of virtue, by a proper education, they might, one day, be married by some purified by fire; but whatsoever cannot abide the fire, shall be sanctified with the water of expiation:

24 And you shall wash your garments the seventh day, and being purified, you shall afterwards enter into the camp.

25 And the Lord said to Moses:

26 Take the sum of the things that were taken, both of man and beast, thou, and Eleazar the priest, and the princes of the multitude:

27 And thou shalt divide the spoil equally, between them that fought and went out to the war, and between the rest of the multitude.

28 And thou shalt separate a portion to the Lord from them that fought and were in the battle, one soul of five hundred, as well of persons as of oxen and asses and sheep, 29 And thou shalt give it to Eleazar the priest, because they are the first-fruits of the Lord.

30 Out of the moiety also of the children of Israel, thou shalt take the fiftieth head of persons, and of oxen, and asses, and sheep, and of all beasts, and thou shalt give them to the Levites, that watch in the charge of the tabernacle of the Lord.

31 And Moses and Eleazar did as the Lord had commanded.

32 And the spoil which the army had taken, was six hundred seventy-five thousand sheep,

33 Seventy-two thousand oxen,

34 Sixty-one thousand asses:

35 And thirty-two thousand persons of the female sex, that had not known men.

36 And one half was given to them that had been in the battle, to wit, three hundred thirty-seven thousand five hundred sheep:

37 Out of which, for the portion of the Lord, were reckoned six hundred seventy-five sheep.

38 And out of the thirty-six thousand oxen, seventy-two oxen:

39 Out of the thirty thousand asses, sixty-one asses:

40 Out of the sixteen thousand persons, there fell to the portion of the Lord thirty-two souls.

of the Hebrews. The boys were all slain, either because they might be inclined to resent the injury done to their relations, or because they were all consecrated to Beelphegor; the first-born to be his priests, the rest to be victims, if necessary, to avert any evil. For "the heathens in cold blood," says Paine, "offered their children in sacrifice to Baalpeor." It was on this account, that the killing of all the first-born in Egypt, was felt so terribly, as the people could not lawfully approach their gods. Forbes.—Moses did not reserve the girls for the purpose of debauchery, as Paine ignorantly pretends; for that was contrary to his own laws, nor did he wantonly kill the innocent, which he also strictly forbade, and which he would have been still more afraid to do, if he had been an impostor. But he preserved the lives of those girls who might be presumed innocent, and who might live to do good, while he took the revenge of the Lord (v. 3.) upon the rest. H.

VER. 19. Shall be. Heb. "purify yourselves and your captives on the," &c. The girls, and all the booty, might probably be rendered unclean by the presence of a corpse, &c. C. xix. 14.

VER. 23. Expiation, with which even the vessels which had been through the fire, were to be purified, or washed, as the Heb. Sept. &c. observe. C.—Moses perhaps gave this ordinance by word of mouth, on this occasion, (M.) though something similar be prescribed before. Lev. vi. 28. xi. 33. xv. 12.

VER. 27. Equally. Those who had been in battle, had about a 50th part more than the rest. They gave the first-fruits to the priests, while those in the camp presented theirs to the Levites. Other rules were afterwards observed. See 1 K. xxx. 24. 2 Mac. viii. 28. The Rabbins assign the greatest share to the king, (Seld. Jur. vi. 16.) and Homer gives the largest portion to the general; after which the rest was equally divided, and even the absent partook. The gods were not forgotten. So also among the Hebrews, Syrians, &c. the general made an equal division. David assigns a part of the booty for sacred uses, 1 Par. xxvi. 26. See Ex. xv. 9. C.

VER. 32. Spoil. Heb. "the remains of the spoil," which had not been consumed by the 12,000. C.

41 And Moses delivered the number of the first-fruits of the Lord to Eleazar the priest, as had been commanded him, 42 Out of the half of the children of Israel, which he had separated for them that had been in the battle.

43 But out of the half that fell to the rest of the multitude, that is to say, out of the three hundred thirty-seven thousand five hundred sheep,

44 And out of the thirty-six thousand oxen,

45 And out of the thirty thousand five hundred asses,

46 And out of the sixteen thousand persons,

47 Moses took the fiftieth head, and gave it to the Levites that watched in the tabernacle of the Lord, as the Lord had commanded.

48 And when the commanders of the army, and the tribunes, and centurions were come to Moses, they said:

49 We, thy servants, have reckoned up the number of the fighting men, whom we had under our hand, and not so much as one was wanting.

50 Therefore we offer as gifts to the Lord, what gold every one of us could find in the booty, in garters and tablets, rings and bracelets, and chains, that thou mayst pray to the Lord for us.

51 And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, received all the gold in divers kinds, 52 In weight sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty sicles, from the tribunes and from the centurions.

53 For that which every one had taken in the booty was his own.

54 And that which was received, they brought into the tabernacle of the testimony, for a memorial of the children of Israel before the Lord.

4 The land which the Lord hath conquered in the sight of the children of Israel, is a very fertile soil for the feeding of beasts: and we, thy servants, have very much cattle:

5 And we pray thee, if we have found favour in thy sight, that thou give it to us, thy servants, in possession, and make us not pass over the Jordan.

6 And Moses answered them: What, shall your brethren go to fight, and will you sit here?

7 Why do ye overturn the minds of the children of Israel, that they may not dare to pass into the place which the Lord hath given them?

8 Was it not thus your fathers did, when I sent from Cades-barne to view the land?

9 And when they were come as far as the valley of the cluster, having viewed all the country, they overturned the hearts of the children of Israel, that they should not enter into the coasts, which the Lord gave them.

10 ^dAnd he swore in his anger, saying:

11 If these men, that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I promised with an oath to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: because they would not follow me, 12 Except Caleb, the son of Jephone, the Cenezite, and Josue, the son of Nun: these have fulfilled my will.

13 And the Lord being angry against Israel, led them about through the desert forty years, until the whole generation, that had done evil in his sight, was consumed.

14 And behold, said he, you are risen up instead of your fathers, the increase and offspring of sinful men, to augment the fury of the Lord against Israel.

15 For if you will not follow him, he will leave the people in the wilderness, and you shall be the cause of the destruction of all.

16 But they coming near, said: We will make sheepfolds, and stalls for our cattle, and strong cities for our children:

VER. 12. Cenezite. His father was either called Cenez, or a part of the country of the Cenezites, being promised to Caleb at Cades-barne, he assumed this title. Jos. xiv. 6.

VER. 13. Led, &c. Sept. "he rolled them over," to denote their afflictions. H.
VER. 15. Of all. Heb. "if, or because you will not follow after him. He will stop them in the desert, and you will destroy all the people." Sept. "because you will turn away from him, to abandon him again in the desert, and you will sin against all this congregation." God had decreed that all should go together to the conquest of the promised land; so that, if these children of Ruben and of Gad should refuse to comply, Moses was afraid that all might be ruined. Perceiving that his discourse turned on this subject, they approached with greater confidence, and shewed their readiness to fight for their brethren. Upon which Moses was satisfied. H.

VER. 17. Cities, which in the space of two months they would repair sufficiently, so that their children might be protected against the Amorrites, &c. They left strong garrisons very prudently, to keep possession of the conquered country: 70,580 remained in the cities; while 40,000 went before their brethren. See C. xxvi. 7. 18. and Jos. iv. 13.

18 We will not return into our houses, until the children of Israel possess their inheritance:

19 Neither will we seek any thing beyond the Jordan, because we have already our possession on the east side thereof.

20 And Moses said to them: "If you do what you promise, go on well appointed for war before the Lord:

21 And let every fighting man pass over the Jordan, until the Lord overthrow his enemies,

22 And all the land be brought under him: then shall you be blameless before the Lord and before Israel, and you shall obtain the countries that you desire, before the Lord.

23 But if you do not what you say, no man can doubt but you sin against God: and know ye that your sin shall overtake you.

24 Build therefore cities for your children, and folds and stalls for your sheep and beasts: and accomplish what you have promised.

25 And the children of Gad and Ruben said to Moses: We are thy servants, we will do what my lord commandeth.

26 We will leave our children, and our wives, and sheep, and cattle, in the cities of Galaad:

27 And we, thy servants, all well appointed, will march on to the war, as thou my lord speakest.

28 Moses therefore commanded Eleazar the priest, and Josue, the son of Nun, and the princes of the families of all the tribes of Israel, and said to them:

29 "If the children of Gad, and the children of Ruben, pass with you over the Jordan, all armed for war before the Lord, and the land be made subject to you: give them Galaad in possession.

Ruben, answered: As the Lord hath spoken to his servants, so will we do:

32 We will go armed before the Lord into the land of Chanaan, and we confess that we have already received our possession beyond the Jordan.

33 Moses therefore gave to the children of Gad and of Ruben, and to the half tribe of Manasses, the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sehon, king of the Amorrites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Basan, and their land and the cities thereof round about.

34 And the sons of Gad built Dibon, and Ataroth, and Aroer,

35 And Etroth, and Sophan, and Jazer, and Jegbaa,

36 And Bethnemra, and Betharan, fenced cities, and folds for their cattle.

37 But the children of Ruben built Hesebon, and Eleale, and Cariathaim, 38 And Nabo, and Baalmeon, (their names being changed) and Sabama: giving names to the cities which they had built.

39 Moreover the children of Machir, the son of Manasses, went into Galaad, and wasted it, cutting off the Amorrites, the inhabitants thereof.

40 And Moses gave the land of Galaad to Machir, the son of Manasses, and he dwelt in it.

41 And Jair, the son of Manasses, went and took the villages thereof, and he called them Havoth Jair, that is to say, the villages of Jair.

42 Nobe also went, and took Canath, with the villages thereof: and he called it by his own name, Nobe.

The mansions or journeys of the children of Israel towards the land of promise

THESE are the mansions of the children of Israel, who went out of Egypt by their troops, under the conduct of Moses and Aaron, VER. 41. Jair was born of Segub, the son of Esron, by a daughter of Machir, 1 Par. i. 21. He did not remain in the tribe of Juda, but dwelt in that of his mother, (C.) or perhaps he married a descendant of Machir, and obtained these villages. Seld. Suc. c. xviii.—Havoth, means "a circle of cabins or shepherds' huts," in Arabic. Bochart.

VER. 42. Canath. This town is reckoned among those of Jair, (1 Par. ii. 23,) either because Nobe conquered it under his banners, or because it fell to the share of Jair, after the death of Nobe. C.

CHAP. XXXIII. VER. 1. The mansions. These mansions, or journeys of the children of Israel from Egypt to the land of promise, were figures, according to the Fathers, of the steps and degrees by which Christians, leaving sin, are to advance from virtue to virtue, till they come to the heavenly mansions, after this life, to see and enjoy God. Ch.—Conduct. Lit. "hand." Aaron died before they came to the last of these 42 stations, or encampments. VER. 2. Which. Heb. "and Moses wrote down their departure and their marches, by the commandment of the Lord; and these are their journeys, according to their going out." These are the places of any note in that wide and dreary desert, near which the Israelites passed. All the encampments are not intended to be specified. The people marched on slowly, and sought for pasturage, with all diligence. The names of these more remarkable places, have been so differently pronounced, that many of them have been greatly confounded; (C.) and interpreters vary so much in their situation, that nothing can be decided with certainty. Cellarius thinks most probably upon the Elanitic gulph, to the east of that of Suez, or Heroopolis, where Josephus maintains Asiongaber or Bernice stood. The Hebrews came to this station from that of Elat. Deut. ii. 8. C.

VER. 36. Sin, or Tsin. Cades is another name of the same desert. Near the city of Cades-barne, the Hebrews encamped a long while, and had plenty of water; but here they murmured for want of it, and Mary departed this life. C. xx. C.

VER. 37. Hor, at a place called Mosera. Deut. x. 6. This was the road from Arabia to Chanaan, and the Hebrews attempted to enter by it, but were repulsed by the king of Arad, though they afterwards defeated him at Horma. C. xxi. 3.

VER. 41. Salmona, where it is thought by some that God sent the fiery serpents. C. xxi. 6. The Israelites being refused a passage by the Idumeans and Moabites, God orders them to measure back their steps towards Asiongaber, and to go round their territories. C.

44 And from Obboth they came to Ijeabarim, which is in the borders of the Moabites.

45 And departing from Ijeabarim, they pitched their tents in Dibongad.

46 From thence they went and camped in Helmondeblathaim.

47 And departing from Helmondeblathaim, they came to the mountains of Abarim, over-against Nabo.

48 And departing from the mountains of Abarim, they passed to the plains of Moab, by the Jordan, over-against Jericho.

49 And there they camped from Bethsimoth, even to Abelsatim in the plains of the Moabites,

50 Where the Lord said to Moses:*

51 Command the children of Israel, and say to them: When you shall have passed over the Jordan, entering into the land of Chanaan,

52 Destroy all the inhabitants of that land: ^bbeat down their pillars, and break in pieces their statues, and waste all their high places,

53 Cleansing the land, and dwelling in it. For I have given it you for a possession.

54 And you shall divide it among you by lot. To the more you shall give a larger part, and to the fewer a lesser. To every one as the lot shall fall, so shall the inheritance be given. The possession shall be divided by the tribes and the families:

55 But if you will not kill the inhabitants of the land: they that remain, shall be unto you as nails in your eyes, and spears in your sides, and they shall be your adversaries in the land of your habitation.

56 And whatsoever I had thought to do to them, I will do to you.

* A. M. 2553.—b Deut. vii. 5. Judges ii. 2.

VER. 45. Dibongad, is often called Dihon. Moses observes, (C. xxi.) that the Hebrews passed by or encamped at various places, before they came to this town. It is sometimes attributed to Ruben, and at other times to Gad, being on the confines of both tribes. C.

VER. 49. Moabites. Here they were deluded by wicked women. C. xxv. H.—From these 42 stations, the Fathers take occasion to shew how we must advance in a spiritual life. D.

VER. 52. Pillars. Heb. stones placed on high "to be seen." Sept. "towers of the sentinels." Chal. "where they adore their idols."

VER. 53. Land of its old inhabitants, and of the places dedicated to superstitious purposes. H.—Heb. "occupy the land." Sept. "drive out the inhabitants, and dwell there."

VER. 55. Nails. Sept. "goads," &c. by which they will force you in a manner to gratify your curiosity, by an imitation of their idol worship; and thus will prove to you more dangerous, than if you had nails piercing your eyes. See Jos. xliii. 13. Eze. xxviii. 24. These abandoned nations must not be spared through a false pity. Deut. xx. 16. C.—The Israelites, however, proved negligent, and God made use of the remains of these nations to scourge his people, and to train them for war. D.

CHAP. XXXIV. VER. 3. The most salt sea. The lake of Sodom, otherwise called the Dead Sea. Ch.—Limits. These are very properly defined in this place, that the Hebrews may know what nations they ought to destroy. M.—A line may be drawn from the southern point of the Dead Sea, through Adar, as far as the Nile and the Mediterranean Sea, comprising a part of the desert of Sin, or Zin.

VER. 4. The Scorpion. A mountain so called, from having a great number of scorpions. Ch.—Heb. Hakrabbim. There was a city of the same name, the capital of Acrabathene, (1 Mac. iii. 3,) not far from Petra.—Senna, a town of the desert of Zin, (C.) on a mountain specified Judg. i. 36. S. Jerom.—Adar. Heb. "Hasor Adar." But they seem to be two distinct towns. Jos. xv. 3.—Asemona. See C. xxxiii. 30.

VER. 5. Egypt. Many suppose the rivulet of Rinocorura is meant. M.—But it seems more probable that the Nile, the only river of Egypt, or the eastern branch of it, where Pelusium stands, is designated. There is no proof that the former rivulet belonged to Egypt; and though some assert that the Hebrews never dwelt to the west of it, the territory was so barren, that nothing may be said respecting that affair. We find, however, that under Solomon they inhabited as far as the river of Egypt; (1 Par. xiii. 5. 3. K. viii. 65,) and if they had not, God's promise entitled them to that part of the country; as well as to that which extends to the great river Euphrates, though they perhaps never took possession of it. See Gen. xv. 18. Jos. xiii. 3. Pelusium is commonly reckoned the fron-

CHAP. XXXIV.

The limits of Chanaan: with the names of the men that shall make the division of it.

AND the Lord spoke to Moses, ^csaying:

2 Command the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: When you are entered into the land of Chanaan, and it shall be fallen unto your possession by lot, it shall be bounded by these limits:

3 ^dThe south side shall begin from the wilderness of Sin, which is by Edom: and shall have the most salt sea for its furthest limits eastward:

4 Which limits shall go round on the south side by the ascent of the Scorpion, and so into Senna, and reach toward the south as far as Cades-barne, from whence the frontiers shall go out to the town called Adar, and shall reach as far as Asemona.

5 And the limits shall fetch a compass from Asemona to the torrent of Egypt, and shall end in the shore of the great sea.

6 And the west side shall begin from the great sea, and the same shall be the end thereof.

7 But toward the north side, the borders shall begin from the great sea, reaching to the most high mountain,

8 From which they shall come to Emath, as far as the borders of Sedada:

9 And the limits shall go as far as Zephrona, and the village of Enan. These shall be the borders on the north side.

10 From thence they shall mark out the bounds towards the east side, from the village of Enan unto Sephama,

11 And from Sephama the bounds shall go down to tier town of Egypt. Eze. xxx. 15. Strabo xvi. In another place, the promised land extends from Emath to the torrent of Egypt, (1 K. viii. 65,) or of the desert. Amos vi. ult. C.

VER. 6. Great sea, compared with those of Palestine, which were only like pools or lakes. The Hebrews call every great collection of water, a sea. The Mediterranean bounded the promised land entirely, on the west.

VER. 7. The most high mountain. Libanus. Ch.—Heb. "the mountain of the mountain, or of Hor." Some understand Mount Casius, Hermon, Taurus, or Amanus; which last lies on the confines of Cilicia, and hence the Rabbins draw a line by the straits of Gibraltar to Pelusium, so as to comprise all the islands and the waters of the Mediterranean. Selden. Marc. Claus. i. 6. But Grotius denies that the sea can be claimed by any one, nor was it, even for fishing, says he, before the days of Justinian. Jur. ii. 2, 3. C.—At any rate, Moses here seems to mean the northern limits from the point of the Mediterranean, where Libanus is situated, across the country eastward to Emath, and as far as the village of Enan, v. 9. H.

VER. 8. Emath. It is of great importance to fix the situation of this city. Some take it to be Antioch, the capital of Syria, on the Orontes. But that was a modern city, founded by Nicanor, and called after his father, Antiochus, and embellished by Callinicus and Epiphanes. Strabo xvi.—Others believe it is Epiphania, at the foot of Libanus, on the same river, and a distinct city from Emath; Rabba, or "the great," of Amos vi. 2. Josephus i. 7. (C.) and S. Jerom (in Isai. x.) seem to be of this opinion. M.—But the city in question was most probably Emesa, of which Amos speaks above. It was also upon the river Orontes, at a small distance to the east of Libanus, on the road to Damascus. This road was the northern boundary. Emesa was perhaps formerly the capital of the country of Soba, (2 Par. viii. 8,) and was taken by Solomon. Reblatha, or Rebla, (v. 11,) was a part of its territory. Theod. in Jer. xxxix. 5. C.

VER. 9. Enan. Heb. "Hazer Henan." In Ezechiel, (xlvii. 17,) it is called the court of Enon. It may be Gaana, north of Damascus, or rather Inna, placed to the south of that city by Ptolemy.

VER. 11. Sephama, or Apamea. Targum. Rebla. Sept. "Bela, or Asbela." H.—S. Jerom understands Antioch, near which was the fountain of Daphne, or Daphne, a word which is inserted in the Targum, though it be not found in Hebrew. But Antioch did not lie on the eastern borders, and this fountain may be the same place as Enan, v. 9.—Against. Heb. "on the east side of Ain, or the fountain." C.—Cenereth. This is the sea of Galilee, illustrated by the miracles of our Lord. Ch.—The line was not drawn to this lake of Genesareth, or of Tiberias, as it was likewise called, but comprised a large territory lying to the east of it, (C.) and given to the tribes of Manasses, Gad, and Ruben, which inhabited the country east of the Jordan and of the Salt Sea. H.—Eastward: the Sept. inscri-

Rebla, over-against the fountain of Daphnis: from thence they shall come eastward to the sea of Cenereth, 12 And shall reach as far as the Jordan, and at the last shall be closed in by the most salt sea. This shall be your land with its borders round about.

13 And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying: This shall be the land which you shall possess by lot, and which the Lord hath commanded to be given to the nine tribes, and to the half tribe.

14 For the tribe of the children of Ruben by their families, and the tribe of the children of Gad according to the number of their kindreds, and half of the tribe of Manasses, 15 That is, two tribes and a half, have received their portion beyond the Jordan, over-against Jericho, at the east side.

16 And the Lord said to Moses:

17 ^aThese are the names of the men, that shall divide the land unto you: Eleazar the priest, and Josue, the son of Nun,

18 And one prince of every tribe,

19 Whose names are these: Of the tribe of Juda, Caleb, the son of Jephone.

20 Of the tribe of Simeon, Samuel, the son of Ammiud.

21 Of the tribe of Benjamin, Elidad, the son of Chaselon.

22 Of the tribe of the children of Dan, Bocci, the son of Jogli.

23 Of the children of Joseph of the tribe of Manasses, Hanniel, the son of Ephod.

24 Of the tribe of Ephraim, Camuel, the son of Sephtan.

^a Jos. xiv. 1. and 2.—^b A. M. 2558.

note, "to the south, leaving the sea of Cenereth on the east."—The fountain of Daphnis may probably be that near the Semechonite lake, through which the Jordan runs. Josep. Bel. iv. 1. It may have received the title of Daphnis, from the laurels with which it is adorned, like the suburbs of Antioch. Bonfrere. M.—It appears that Moses has only in view, the nine tribes for which a provision was not yet made; and their eastern limits extended from Emath, down the Jordan to the Dead Sea, so as to comprise no part to the east of that river, which was already given to their brethren; (see v. 13, 15, 29,) and thus the observation of Calmet, respecting the countries east of Cenereth, will be rather inaccurate, as the line must run through that sea, following the course of the Jordan. These were properly the eastern limits of Chanaan, which country comprised all between Egypt and Idumea, as far as Sidon and Mount Libanus, being bounded by the Jordan on the east. The other three tribes were hemmed in on the north and east by the mountains of Hermon, Basan, Galaad, and Arnon; beyond which, the nations about Damascus, and the descendants of Ammon, Ismael, and Moab dwelt, in Syria and the desert of Arabia, so that the latter country was the eastern boundary of the promised land, taken in its utmost extent. H.—The respective limits must naturally vary, when we speak of the whole or a part only. D. T.

CHAP. XXXV. Ver. 3. Cities, in all forty-eight, with a thousand paces round them. This land belonged to the community: but some built upon it, Jos. xxi. 18. 1 Par. vi. 60. The burial place for the Levites lay behind it. Drusius.—In these cities alone, the Levites had houses and gardens of their own; others might live with them, and indeed the cities acknowledged other lords, as Hebron belonged to Caleb, Jos. xiv. 14. The Levites were dispersed throughout the land, that they might instruct the people both by word and by example. Deut. xxxiii. 10. They had a clear revenue without labour of husbandry, equivalent to any two of the other tribes. Abulensia.—Six of their cities were assigned for places of refuge, as they were the proper judges of the cases, in which murder may be excused, and to remind them that they ought to be very merciful. Hence arose the privileges, granted to some churches, of protecting those who fled to them for an asylum. That none might be hindered from enjoying this benefit, three of these cities were situated on each side of the Jordan, and at equal distances. Salien.

Ver. 4. Paces. This is equivalent to 2000 cubits, (v. 5,) or a sabbath day's journey. Selden. Jur. iii. 9. S. Jerom. q. 9. ad algas. Heb. retains the same word, amza, "cubit," in both verses; but some copies of the Sept. Philo, and Josephus, have "2000 cubits," (C.) which Dr. Wall and Kennicott deem to be the original reading. H.—Bonfrere would also correct the Hebrew by the Vulgate, as a pace among the Greeks consisted of three feet, and a cubit of half that quantity. The geometric pace of the Romans, contained five feet, and the sacred cubit of Villalpand, half as much; so that 2000 sacred cubits make 1000 geo-

26 Of the tribe of Issachar, Phaltiel, the prince, the son of Ozan.

27 Of the tribe of Aser, Ahiud, the son of Salomi.

28 Of the tribe of Nephtali, Phedael, the son of Ammiud.

29 These are they whom the Lord hath commanded to divide the land of Chanaan to the children of Israel.

CHAP. XXXV.

Cities are appointed for the Levites. Of which six are to be the cities of refuge

AND the Lord spoke ^bthese things also to Moses, in the plains of Moab, by the Jordan, over-against Jericho:

2 ^cCommand the children of Israel, that they give to the Levites out of their possessions,

3 Cities to dwell in, and their suburbs round about: that they may abide in the towns, and the suburbs may be for their cattle and beasts:

4 Which suburbs shall reach from the walls of the cities outward, a thousand paces on every side:

5 Toward the east shall be two thousand cubits: and toward the south in like manner shall be two thousand cubits: toward the sea also, which looketh to the west, shall be the same extent: and the north side shall be bounded with the like limits. And the cities shall be in the midst, and the suburbs without.

6 ^dAnd among the cities, which you shall give to the Levites, six shall be separated for refuge to fugitives, that he who hath shed blood may flee to them: and besides these there shall be other forty-two cities,

7 That is, in all forty-eight, with their suburbs.

^c Jos. xxi. 2.—^d Deut. xix. 2. Jos. xx. 2.

metric paces. Thus the Vulgate is perfectly consistent with itself. M.—Some imagine that Moses speaks of the common cubit here and of the sacred one, which was doubly as large, v. 5. But this is not probable; and the distinction of cubits, (C.) at least in his days, (H.) is very uncertain. Perhaps Moses may first specify the depth of this space of ground from the wall, and afterwards its length, which would be doubly greater. C. See Servius on Jos. xxi. q. 8, &c.—The semidiameter was probably 1000 cubits. D.

Ver. 5. Sea. Heb. simply "on the west side 2000 cubits, and on the north side 2000 cubits, and the city in the midst. This shall be to them the suburbs of the city."

Ver. 6. Cities. Maimonides pretends, that all the forty-eight cities of the Levites were asylums; though only six were bound to receive the fugitive gratis. Moses had promised a place of refuge, which he now grants. Ex. xxi. 18. The altar and temple enjoyed the like privilege; the latter even till its destruction. Philo.—Josephus mentions only six cities of refuge. Those who could not be supposed to have killed a person designedly, were not obliged to flee to them; as, on the other hand, the murderer was not permitted to enter, if his malice were notorious, or his negligence extreme. Rabbins ep. Seld. Jur. iv. 2. To be secured at the altar of holocausts, it was necessary to touch the grate. If the judges declared that the person's case was such as the law admitted, he was conducted away, under a strong guard, to one of the cities; or, if he were deemed unworthy, he was put to death, out of the holy place. The altar was commonly the refuge only of priests. Those who were not of Hebrew extraction, could not claim the rights of an asylum, according to the Rabbins. But the contrary seems to be asserted, v. 15. The roads to the cities of refuge were to be kept in good repair, and in case more than six should be found necessary, three others might be appointed. Deut. xix. 3. 8. This privilege is founded on the law of nature, which decrees that the life of the innocent man, who has had the misfortune to kill another, should not be taken away. Other nations extended this right to almost every crime, that the weak might have an opportunity of defending themselves. The sons of Hercules erected for this purpose the altar of mercy, at Athens. Some of the pagan temples could protect even the greatest criminals, as well as the innocent, who might fear oppression. Those of Apollo, at Delphos, of Bacchus, at Ephesus, &c. were very famous. See Marsham, Chron. sec. 13. Tiberius found it necessary to recall these privileges among the Greeks, as they were greatly abused. Tacit. An. iii. 6. But his decree was not much regarded. The Romans had their asylums also, at Naples, &c. where those who had been condemned to die, might be secure. Rome itself was an asylum for all strangers, as S. Aug. remarks, de C. D. i. The Christian emperors afforded the like privileges to our churches. But some who were guilty of the crimes of adultery, murder, heresy, &c. were deprived of the benefit. C.—Those who fled to the altar among the Jews were first to be purified; (Philo) and if they had committed murder publicly, like Joab, they were dragged away, 3 K. ii. T.

8 And of these cities which shall be given out of the possessions of the children of Israel, from them that have more, more shall be taken: and from them that have less, fewer. Each shall give towns to the Levites according to the extent of their inheritance.

9 And the Lord said to Moses:

10 Speak to the children of Israel, and thou shalt say to them: When you shall have passed over the Jordan into the land of Chanaan, 11 Determine what cities shall be for the refuge of fugitives, who have shed blood against their will.

12 And when the fugitive shall be in them, the kinsman of him that is slain may not have power to kill him, until he stand before the multitude, and his cause be judged.

13 *And of those cities, that are separated for the refuge of fugitives,

14 Three shall be beyond the Jordan, and three in the land of Chanaan, 15 As well for the children of Israel as for strangers and sojourners, that he may flee to them, who hath shed blood against his will.

16 If any man strike with iron, and he die that was struck: he shall be guilty of murder, and he himself shall die.

17 If he throw a stone, and he that is struck die: he shall be punished in the same manner.

18 If he that is struck with wood, die: he shall be revenged by the blood of him that struck him.

19 The kinsman of him that was slain, shall kill the murderer: as soon as he apprehendeth him, he shall kill him.

20 ^bIf through hatred any one push a man, or fling any thing at him with ill design:

21 Or being his enemy, strike him with his hand, and he die: the striker shall be guilty of murder: the kinsman of him that was slain, as soon as he findeth him, shall kill him

22 But if by chance-medley, and without hatred,

23 And enmity, he do any of these things,

24 And this be proved in the hearing of the people, and the cause be debated between him that struck, and the next of kin:

25 The innocent shall be delivered from the hand of the revenger, and shall be brought back by sentence into the city, to which he had fled, and he shall abide there until the death of the high priest, that is anointed with the holy oil.

26 If the murderer be found without the limits of the cities that are appointed for the banished, 27 And be struck by him that is the avenger of blood: he shall not be guilty that killed him.

28 For the fugitive ought to have stayed in the city until the death of the high priest: and after he is dead, then shall the manslayer return to his own country.

29 These things shall be perpetual, and for an ordinance in all your dwellings.

30 The murderer shall be punished by witnesses: none shall be condemned upon the evidence of one man.

31 You shall not take money of him that is guilty of blood, but he shall die forthwith.

32 The banished and fugitives before the death of the high priest may by no means return into their own cities.

33 Defile not the land of your habitation, which is stained with the blood of the innocent: neither can it otherwise be expiated, but by his blood that hath shed the blood of another.

34 And thus shall your possession be cleansed, myself abiding with you. For I am the Lord that dwell among the children of Israel.

^a Deut. iv. 41. Jos. xx. 7. and 8.

^b Deut. xix. 11.

VER. 12. Kinsman, the nearest relation, who was called the revenger of blood, (v. 25. 27. H.) or the redeemer, because it was his duty to see that justice was done to the deceased. When the person, who had involuntarily committed murder, arrived at the city, he was to make his appearance before the judges of it, and, if they thought his account satisfactory, they admitted him, but upon condition that he should take his trial before the judges and the people of that country, where the murder had taken place, (v. 25. Jos. xx. 4. 9. T.) though some think that the judges of the city of refuge, passed sentence. Masius, &c.—If it proved favourable, he was bound to remain in the city, till the death of the high priest, otherwise the relations might kill him as an outlaw; as they might also if he was declared guilty. In case the murder were voluntary, the judges of the place where it was committed sent to demand the criminal. Deut. xix. 11.

VER. 18. If, &c. Heb. "or he smite him with a wooden weapon, (wherewith he may die) and he die, he is a murderer; the murderer shall surely be put to death." The two former verses are expressed in the same awful manner, intimating that the weapon must be of such a nature that it might easily give a mortal wound, and also that the effect really followed. In these cases, if the person could not clear himself, no refuge or reprieve was allowed. H.—But the deceased must have been killed upon the spot, otherwise the person who struck him could only be required to pay a fine. Ex. xxi. 19. M.

VER. 19. Him, with impunity. If the judges have passed sentence, he shall be obliged to put it in execution, v. 21. 31. S. Aug. q. 65. E.—The laws of Athens required also that a relation should put the murderer to death, though the deceased were even of servile condition. Demost.—Those of Rome condemned the involuntary manslayer to retire for a year, and afterwards to appease some one of the relations, and to offer the sacrifices, and submit to the usual purifications. Even at the present day, the Persians and Arabs deliver the murderer to be slain by the kinsmen of the deceased, after sentence has been passed by the judges.

VER. 21. Kill him. It seems when the case was evident, he was not only permitted, but commanded to punish the criminal. Bonfrere. Deut. xix. 12. M.

VER. 25. Delivered. Heb. "the multitude shall deliver the slayer." It seems the judges pronounced sentence, according to the votes of the people assembled; (C.) or the plurality of voices among the 21 judges decided the matter. Grot. H.—High priest. This mystically signified that our deliverance was to be effected by the death of Christ, the high priest and the anointed of God. Ch.—He rescued us from the hand of the revenger, the devil. Theod. q. 50. 51.—Before his death, the way to our true country was not open, nor secure. S. Greg. hom. 6. in Ezec. W.—By this law, Moses shewed a horror for murder, and the respect due to the person of the high priest, during whose life even the involuntary murderer was obliged to keep himself retired in a city of refuge. Masius.—At the death of the pontiff, all Israel put on mourning, so that private injuries were to be forgotten, when the public had such cause for sorrow; and in the mean time, the vengeance of kinsmen would relent. Maimon. More. iii. 40.—Murder was punished by the Greeks, in the days of Homer, with banishment, though sometimes this was remitted by the relations, for a sum of money. Iliad ix. C.

VER. 27. Him. Custom explained this law as giving leave to any person to inflict the punishment upon the wandering murderer, though the relation seem only to be specified. Grot.—Some think, that to kill such a person was still criminal in the sight of God. But others believe that, as he had forfeited the privilege of an asylum, by absenting himself from it, (C.) the law subjected him to the same rigour, with which he might have been treated before he came thither; (v. 19. H.) and provided proper moderation were observed, and malicious revenge avoided, no guilt would attach to him, who executed the implied sentence of death. The Jews observe, that God allows us to revenge another sooner than ourselves, as there is less danger of excess or of delusion. C.

VER. 30. Man. A person might be tried on such evidence. Deut. xix. 16.

VER. 32. Cities. Heb. "you shall take no money to retire to a city of refuge, to return into his own country, till the death of the priest." The Sept. supply, "you shall take no redemption money, to permit (a voluntary murderer) to flee into a city of refuge, (nor of an involuntary one) to return," &c. Grotius.—The banished, may refer to people of the former description, who had gone away to screen themselves from prosecution. But they could never be allowed to inhabit the country any more. Their presence would seem to defile it. H.—"You shall not take money of him who has fled to a city of refuge, to suffer him to return home." Chaldee.

VER. 33. Defile not. To inspire a greater horror for murder, the earth was represented as defiled by blood, and only to be purified by the death of the criminal. Without shedding of blood, there is no remission. Heb. ix. 22. H.—On the same principle, our churches, &c. are deemed profane, when murder, or some great indecencies, have been committed in them so that they require a fresh consecration. G.

CHAP. XXXVI.

That the inheritances may not be alienated from one tribe to another, all are to marry within their own tribes.

AND the princes of the families of Galaad,* the son of Machir, the son of Manasses, of the stock of the children of Joseph, came: and spoke to Moses before the princes of Israel, and said:

2 The Lord hath commanded thee, my lord, that thou shouldst divide the land by lot to the children of Israel, and that thou shouldst give to the daughters of Salphaad, our brother, the possession due to their father:

3 Now if men of another tribe take them to wives, their possession will follow them, and being transferred to another tribe, will be a diminishing of our inheritance.

4 And so it shall come to pass, that when the jubilee, that is the fiftieth year of remission is come, the distribution made by the lots shall be confounded, and the possession of the one shall pass to the others.

5 Moses answered the children of Israel, and said by the command of the Lord: The tribe of the children of Joseph hath spoken rightly.

6 And this is the law, promulgated by the Lord,

* Supra xxvii. 1.

CHAP. XXXVI. VER. 1. Galaad. The descendants of Machir, who were settled in Galaad, were particularly interested, in knowing how their female relations of the house of Salphaad, were to dispose of their fortunes, which God had allowed them. They knew that, by the law, their husbands would obtain possession; and if those husbands should be of another tribe, part of the land allotted to Manasses might be lost. See C. xxvii. and Jos. xvii. 1. 3.

VER. 4. That is, an explanation of the jubilee, added by S. Jerom, who gives the sense of the Heb. though not the very words.—Lots. Heb. "when the jubilee of the children of Israel is come, then shall their inheritance be added to that of the tribe in which they are received; so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers." H.

VER. 6. Tribe. Heb. adds family also; for heiresses were obliged to marry in their own family, to prevent the confusion of the inheritances. If they had a mind to renounce their right, they were at liberty to marry where they pleased. C.—The nearest relations, who chose to receive their land, were under an obligation of marrying them. Ruth iv. 6. H.—A similar law prevailed at Athens.

VER. 7. Wives. Heb. "shall keep to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers." Those who marry heiresses must be of the same family: but others may take wives from any of the tribes of Israel, as the most holy did without scruple. S. Jerom in Jer. xxxii. T. touching the daughters of Salphaad: 'Let them marry to whom they will, only so that it be to men of their own tribe:

8 And all women shall take husbands of the same tribe: that the inheritance may remain in the families,

9 And that the tribes be not mingled one with another, but remain so

13 These are the commandments and judgments, which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses to the children of Israel, in the plains of Moab, upon the Jordan, over-against Jericho.

VER. 8. Women. Heb. "every daughter that possesseth an inheritance . . shall be wife to one of the family of the tribe of her father." Commonly the females were debarred from inheriting land, when they had any brothers. The Levites were not concerned in these regulations, as they had no inheritance; and hence we need not be surprised to find that S. Elizabeth, of the daughters of Aaron, (Luc. i. 36,) was related to the blessed Virgin, who was of the family of David. The mother of S. Elizabeth might be of the tribe of Juda; or a maternal ancestor of the blessed Virgin might spring from the tribe of Levi. C.—Tradition determined the lawfulness of such marriages, and in this case, S. Augustine (Consens. Ev. ii. 2,) admires the providence of God, in causing his beloved Son, the great anointed, to be born both of the regal and priestly tribes, in which an unction was required, before the priests and kings were put in possession of their respective offices. Thus Christ was both priest and king, and such were anointed in the law of Moses. W.

VER. 11. Father. They married their cousin Germans. The original is rather undecisive, as Dod may signify, "an uncle, great uncle, or cousin;" and a son, in Scripture, is often put for any descendant. The marriages of cousins were not expressly forbidden by the law law if they had, they might have been dispensed with on this occasion, as well as when a brother died without issue. C.—Claudius was the first of the Romans who obtained leave of the senate to marry his brother's daughter. Sueton. D.

THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY.

This Book is called DEUTERONOMY, which signifies a SECOND LAW, because it repeats and inculcates the ordinances formerly given on Mount Sinai, with other precepts not expressed before. The Hebrews, from the first words in the Book, call it. ELLE HADDERARIM. Ch.—It may be divided into many discourses, which Moses made to the people during the two last months of his life. H.—The first was delivered by him on the first day of the eleventh month of the fortieth year, since the deliverance of the Hebrews out of Egypt, and relates various particulars which had occurred to them. In C. iv. 41, and seq., a supplement from the Book of Numbers is given to this discourse. C. v., a fresh exhortation to the people commences, which continues till C. xxvii., where the famous blessings and maledictions, from the mountains of Garizim and Hebal, are related. In the following chapters, Moses exhorts the people, in the most pathetic manner, to be faithful to the Lord, adding the strongest threats and promises to enforce their compliance; and having appointed Josue to succeed him, and repeated that beautiful canticle which God ordered them to write, (C. xxxi. 19.) he gives the Book of Deuteronomy, to be kept with care, (v. 9.) blesses the tribes like a good and tender father, and gives up his soul to God on Mount Nebo, in the 120th year of his age. C.—There can be no doubt but that Moses was the author of this book, as well as of the four preceding ones; though the last chapter may, perhaps, form a part of the Book of Josue, which formerly was written immediately after the works of Moses, without any such marks of distinction as we find at present. The whole Bible seemed to make but one verse. How easily, therefore, might the account of the death of Moses be taken in, as forming a part of the Pentateuch, when the different books came to be distinguished by separate titles! Such an insertion cannot hurt the general claim of Moses to be the author of the Pentateuch; or, if it should be thought to do so, no absolute proof can be brought to shew that he did not write this chapter also, by the spirit of prophecy. All the people spoke to Esdras, the scribe, to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded, to Israel. The whole nation of the Jews has all along maintained, that Moses wrote these books; and he himself repeatedly asserts, that he was ordered to leave on record many things of importance. Hence both internal and external evidence concur to establish his title to them; and if we be not disposed to cavil with all other authors, and to deny that Demosthenes, for example, Cæsar, and others, have written the works which bear their names, we must confess that the Pentateuch is to be attributed to the Jewish Legislator. Yet if this were a matter of doubt, the things contained in these books could not, on that account, be controverted. How many anonymous works have been published, which are of unquestionable authority! Many of the books of Scripture are of this nature. But as we have every reason to believe, that they have come down to us without any material corruption, and were written by people of veracity, by divine inspiration, they deserve to be regarded as authentic records. This is true, whether we speak of the originals or of the versions authorized by the Church; though it should suffice to stop the mouths of infidels, if we can procure an authentic history of the Bible by the collation of the different copies, which are extant. Thus, where the Hebrew editions appear to be incorrect, they may receive great light from the Samaritan copy of the Pentateuch, and from the versions of the Sept., and of other respectable authors on the whole Bible. The variations, which we may discover, are not of such moment, but that, if the very worst copy were selected, we should find the same great outlines of Scripture history, the same precepts of faith and morality. The laws of Moses, which are scattered through his five books, may be seen all together in their natural order, collected by Cornelius a Lapide and Calmet. But the spirit of God was pleased to inter-perse historical facts among them, which both shew the occasion on which they were given, and enable us to read them with greater pleasure and satisfaction. The four preceding books might be compared to the four Gospels; Deuteronomy represents the whole, (V. Bede) and may be styled a Deuteron, as it recalls to our mind the great Creator of all things, who was about to fulfil the promises which he had made to the Patriarchs. Almost all those to whom Moses addresses himself, had been unborn or very young, when their parents received God's commands at Sinai, and wandered in the desert. He therefore gives them an account of what had happened during the last eventful period of forty years. He shews what had brought on so many disasters, and cautions his hearers, that if they imitate the perfidy of their fathers, as he foresees, with sorrow, that they will, (C. xxxi.) they must expect to be treated with no less severity. This prediction we behold verified, at the present day, in the persons of the scattered remnants of Israel. How sublime! how terrifying are the truths which Moses enforces with so much earnestness! The same threats which he denounces against the perfidious Jews, regard us in some measure. If we feel not their effects at present, in being driven out from our country, we have more reason to fear lest we should be excluded from our heavenly inheritance, if we do not repent. H.

CHAP. I.

A repetition of what passed at Sinai and Cades-barne; and of the people's murmuring, and their punishment.

THESE are the words, which Moses spoke to all Israel beyond the Jordan, in the plain wilderness, over-against the Red Sea, between Pharan and Thophel, and Laban and Haseroth, where there is very much gold:

2 Eleven days' journey from Horeb, by the way of Mount Seir, to Cades-barne.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. Beyond. The eastern side of the Jordan is so called in Scripture, with reference to the promised land. M.—Heb. may mean also, “on this side, or at the passage” about Bethabara, “the house of passage,” near which the Hebrews were encamped, and where Josue probably crossed over the Jordan, as it was the usual ford. Calmet seems to think that these two first verses have been inserted by Esdras, &c. or interpolated, as he says Moses never crossed the Jordan, and certainly addressed the Hebrews near that river, at a great distance from the Red Sea; but the text does not assert the contrary. It only determines that the place where he harangued them, was a part of the wilderness, or the plains of Moab, over-against the Red Sea, which they had left when they came from A-siongaber, unless the term Suph, which signifies red, may be a proper name of the station Supha, near the torrent Zared, (Num. xxi. 14.) as Calmet maintains. If this be admitted, this difficulty vanishes, for the camp of Israel was certainly over-against, and not even remote from this place. The other cities may have been in the environs, or Moses may have referred to the stations and places in the desert of Pharan, at Thophel, Laban, or Lebna, Haseroth, (Num. xxxiii. 17,) where there is very much gold, (Sept. “gold mines;” Heb. “dizahab,”) and Cades-barne. Lebna, Haseroth, and Cades-barne, were in the territory of the Idumeans, who dwelt to the south-west of the plains of Moab. Thophel and Dizahab are unknown (C.) as well as Laban, Haseroth, and Pharan, if they be not the names of encampments. Geographers vary so much in their descriptions of the road, which the Hebrews followed, and in maps of the adjacent countries, that it is now impossible to decide. H.

VER. 2. Cades barne. All the distance between Horeb and the Jordan, by Mount Seir, on the road to Cades-barne, might have been travelled in eleven days' time, being about 300 miles; or the Hebrews were so long in going thither, Num. xxxiii. 17. C.—It was to punish the Israelites for their frequent rebellions, (206) first day of the month, Moses spoke to the children of Israel, all that the Lord had commanded him to say to them:

that they were condemned to wander in that wilderness forty years. D.—They might have entered the promised land, when they first came to Cades-barne, from Mount Horeb, (Num. xiii. 1. 27,) which, even by the circuitous road of Mount Seir, would not have taken them above eleven days. He mentions this to remind them of their folly. Perhaps all the aforesaid places may have been between Horeb and Cades-barne, as Bonfrere maintains that Laban was in the neighbourhood of Sinai, where Moses first received the law which he is now going to explain. His discourse turns upon the chief occurrences of the forty years' journey; and hence, these are the words, (v. 1.) may refer not only to what he was going to say, but also to the commands which he had already notified to the Israelites, from the passage of the Red Sea till the station Abilsetim, upon the banks of the Jordan, Num. xxxvi. 13. H.—Deuteronomy contains a recapitulation of the law, and therefore it was to be read aloud to all the people on the feast of tabernacles, every seventh year; and the new kings, or rulers of the Hebrews, were commanded to transcribe it, and every day read some part for the rule of their conduct. C. xvii. 18. and xxxi. 10. T.

VER. 3. Month, corresponding with our January, if the ecclesiastical calculation be followed; but if we date from Tisri, this eleventh month will be our July or August. Moses died on the 7th of the following month. D.

VER. 4. Astaroth signifies “sheep,” particularly ewes, with their dugs distended with milk. Hence the Sidonians formed the idea of their Astarte, 1 K. xi. 5. H.—The Rabbins say, that Astaroth denotes large mountains, generally covered with sheep. Astaroth-Carnaim, was the city. Euseb.—Here the famous Og resided, though he was defeated at Edrai, as the Heb. intimates. C.

VER. 5. Expound. He begins, as usual, with commemorating the wonders of God, in favour of an ungrateful people. This book may be considered as a supplement to the other four books. C.—We need not wonder, therefore, if we find 7 Turn you, and come to the mountain of the Amorrites, and to the other places that are next to it, the plains, and the hills, and the vales, towards the south, and by the sea shore, the land of the Chanaanites, and of Libanus, as far as the great river Euphrates.

8 Behold, said he, I have delivered it to you: go in and possess it, concerning which the Lord swore to your fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that he would give it to them, and to their seed after them.

9 And I said to you at that time:

10 "I alone am not able to bear you: for the Lord your God hath multiplied you, and you are this day as the stars of heaven, for multitude.

11 (The Lord God of your fathers add to this number many thousands, and bless you as he hath spoken.)

12 I alone am not able to bear your business, and the charge of you and your differences.

13 Let me have from among you wise and understanding men, and such whose conversation is approved among your tribes, that I may appoint them your rulers.

14 Then you answered me: The thing is good which thou meanest to do.

15 And I took out of your tribes men wise and honourable, and appointed them rulers, tribunes, and centurions, and officers over fifties, and over tens, who might teach you all things.

16 And I commanded them, saying: Hear them, and judge that which is just: ^b whether he be one of your country, or a stranger.

17 "There shall be no difference of persons, you shall hear the little as well as the great: neither shall you respect any man's person, because it is the judgment of God. And if any thing seem hard to you, refer it to me, and I will hear it.

18 And I commanded you all things that you were to do.

19 And departing from Horeb, we passed through the terrible and vast wilderness, which you saw, by the way of the mountain of the Amorrite, as the Lord our God had commanded us. And when we were come into Cades-barne, 20 I said to you: You are come to the mountain of the Amorrite, which the Lord our God will give to us.

21 See the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee: go up and possess it, as the Lord our God hath spoken to thy fathers: fear not, nor be any way discouraged.

some new observations. The reason why the sabbath is to be kept, is here said to be in the memory of the law being given to the Hebrews, and their liberation from slavery; (C. v. 15.) whereas in Exodus, it seems to be designed to remind people that God rested on the seventh day. But here is no contradiction. Watson.

VER. 7. Turn you. The Hebrews, after the passage of the Red Sea, seemed to turn their backs upon the promised land, to go southward. Now, therefore, they are ordered to bend their course to the north, and to enter Chanaan, (H.) on the western side of the lake of Sodom, where the Amorrites dwelt. C.—Their mountain, and the other hills and plains, and vales, (Heb. shephela, mentioned Minc. xii. 38,) as far as the Nile and the Mediterranean, were the southern limits of the Chanaanites, whose country extended to Libanus. See Num. xxxiv. H.—God promises also to deliver the country as far as the Euphrates to the Hebrews, provided they continue faithful to him. C. xix. 8. As they neglected this condition, they never possessed the whole country, not even that of Chanaan, uncollected. Yet the whole was tributary to them, in the days of David and Solomon.

The Persians still call such officers chaters. The Rabbins say, that the shoterim were generally selected from among the Cinites, the descendants of Jethro 1 Par. ii.

22 "And you came all to me, and said: Let us send men who may view the land, and bring us word what way we shall go up, and to what cities we shall go.

23 And because the saying pleased me, I sent of you twelve men, one of every tribe:

24 Who, when they had set forward, and had gone up to the mountains, came as far as the valley of the cluster: and having viewed the land,

25 Taking of the fruits thereof, to shew its fertility, they brought them to us, and said: The land is good, which the Lord our God will give us.

26 And you would not go up, but being incredulous to the word of the Lord our God, 27 You murmured in your tents, and said: The Lord hateth us, and therefore he hath brought us out of the land of Egypt, that he might deliver us into the hand of the Amorrite, and destroy us.

28 Whither shall we go up? the messengers have terrified our hearts, saying: The multitude is very great, and taller than we: the cities are great, and walled up to the sky, we have seen the sons of the Enacims there.

29 And I said to you: Fear not, neither be ye afraid of them:

30 The Lord God, who is your leader, himself will fight for you, as he did in Egypt in the sight of all.

31 And in the wilderness (as thou hast seen) the Lord thy God hath carried thee, as a man is wont to carry his little son, all the way that you have come, until you came to this place.

32. And yet for all this you did not believe the Lord your God, 33 "Who went before you in the way, and marked out the place wherein you should pitch your tents; in the night shewing you the way by fire, and in the day by the pillar of a cloud.

34 And when the Lord had heard the voice of your words, he was angry and swore, and said:

35 "Not one of the men of this wicked generation shall see the good land, which I promised with an oath to your fathers:

36 Except Caleb, the son of Jephone: for he shall see it, and to him I will give the land, that he hath trodden upon, and to his children, because he hath followed the Lord.

39 Your children, of whom you said that they should be led away captives, and your sons, who know not this day the difference of good and evil, they shall go in: and to them I will give the land, and they shall possess it.

40 But return you and go into the wilderness by the way of the Red Sea.

41 *And you answered me: We have sinned against the Lord: we will go up and fight, as the Lord our God hath commanded. And when you went ready armed unto the mountain, 42 The Lord said to me: Say to them: 'Go not up, and fight not, for I am not with you: lest you fall before your enemies.

43 I spoke, and you hearkened not: but resisting the commandment of the Lord, and swelling with pride, you went up into the mountain.

44 And the Amorrite that dwelt in the mountains, coming out, and meeting you, chased you, as bees do: and made slaughter of you from Seir as far as Horma.

VER. 39. Evil. These words were spoken by God to the Hebrews, after they had refused to go from Cades-barne, to take immediate possession of the land of Chanaan, and not after Moses had offended at the waters of contradiction, which happened only a short time before his death. H.—Those who were not come to the use of reason at the former period, (M.) or who had not arrived at 20 years of age, were now permitted to enter. H.

VER. 44. Bees do. This similitude shews the vivacity, courage, and numbers of those who pursued the Hebrews from Seir to Horma. See Num. xxi. 3. Ps. cvii. 12. Isai. vii. 18.

VER. 46. Time. Heb. adds, "according to the days that you abode." All the time that the Hebrews spent in that neighbourhood, they remained at Cades-barne. The Rabbins say 38 years; but Moses informs us, that they were so long in coming thence to the torrent of Zared. C. ii. 14. C.

CHAP. II. VER. 1. Seir, encamping again at Mosera. When they were at Asiongaber, they were ordered to go to the north, by the mountains of Idumea, or of Seir. Being arrived at Cades, they attempted to penetrate into Chanaan, by the road of the spies, but were repulsed. 4 And command thou the people, saying: You shall pass by the borders of your brethren the children of Esau, who dwell in Seir, and they will be afraid of you.

5 Take ye then good heed that ye stir not against them: For I will not give you of their land so much as the step of one foot can tread upon, because I have given Mount Seir to Esau, for a possession.

6 You shall buy meats of them for money, and shall eat: you shall draw water for money, and shall drink.

7 The Lord thy God hath blessed thee in every work of thy hands: the Lord thy God dwelling with thee, knoweth thy journey, how thou hast passed through this great wilderness for forty years, and thou hast wanted nothing.

8 And when we had passed by our brethren, the children of Esau, that dwelt in Seir, by the way of the plain from Elath, and from Asiongaber, we came to the way that leadeth to the desert of Moab.

9 And the Lord said to me: *Fight not against the Moabites, neither go to battle against them: for I will not give thee any of their land, because I have given Ar to the children of Lot in possession.

11 They were esteemed as giants, and were like the sons of the Enacims. But the Moabites call them Emims.

12 The Horrites also formerly dwelt in Seir: who being driven out and destroyed, the children of Esau dwelt there, as Israel did in the land of his possession, which the Lord gave him.

13 Then rising up to pass the torrent Zared, we came to it.

14 And the time that we journeyed from Cades-barne till we passed over the torrent Zared, was thirty-eight years: until all the generation of the men that were fit for war was consumed out of the camp, as the Lord had sworn:

VER. 9. Moabites. They allowed the Hebrews to pass, as the Idumeans had done; (v. 29.) but they treated them with no peculiar marks of affection, (C. xxiii. 3,) nor would they suffer them to go across their country. Judg. xi. 17.—Ar, is sometimes called Rabbath Moab, "the great city of the Moabites," (Jos. xiii. 25,) and Areopolis. Euseb.

VER. 10. Emim, signifies "the terrible," or "men of cubits or length." See Num. xiii. 33. They had been probably ruined in the war of Chodorlahomor, (Gen. xiv. 5,) a little before the birth of Moab. C.—But those few who remained, were sufficient to strike the beholders with terror, as they were not inferior to the other giants who were known, since the deluge, of the race of Enac, or of Rapha. H.

VER. 11. Giants. Heb. Raphaim, which Grotius thinks is a word retained from the primitive language. It sometimes denotes giants, and those who groan in hell, on account of the great antiquity of the Raphaim. Job. xxvi. 5. Og was one of their descendants, and inhabited the same country, which they had occupied in the days of Abraham. C. iii. 2. C.—They lost much of their power in the war of Sodom. Some of them fled into the land of the Philistines, and established themselves there, 1 K. xxi. 16. As these gigantic nations had been overthrown, as well as the Horrites, when God formerly gave their territories to Moab and to Esau, (H.) so the Hebrews may be assured, that nothing will be able to resist their power, while He is with them. M.

VER. 12. Gave him, on the east side of the Jordan. They had not yet taken possession of Chanaan. But Moses foresees that they shortly will; and in this sense we may translate, "Esau dwelt there, as Israel will in the land," &c. v. 29. The neighbouring nations could not rationally object to their coming, as they themselves had dispossessed the former owners of the land, v. 20. 23. C.

VER. 14. Years. They had continued another year at Sinai, and some months at least at Cades-barne; so that the few remaining months of the 40 years sojournment, were spent in conquering the kingdoms east of the Jordan. H.

15 For his hand was against them, that they should perish from the midst of the camp.

16 And after all the fighting men were dead,

17 The Lord spoke to me, saying:

18 Thou shalt pass this day the borders of Moab,* the city named Ar:

19 And when thou comest nigh the frontiers of the children of Ammon, take heed thou fight not against them, nor once move to battle: for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon, because I have given it to the children of Lot for a possession.

20 It was accounted a land of giants: and giants formerly dwelt in it, whom the Ammonites call Zomzommims,

21 A people great, and many, and of tall stature, like the Enacims, whom the Lord destroyed before their face: and he made them to dwell in their stead,

22 As he had done in favour of the children of Esau, that dwell in Seir, destroying the Horrites, and delivering their land to them, which they possess unto this day.

23 The Hevites also, that dwelt in Haserim as far as Gaza, were expelled by the Cappadocians: who came out of Cappadocia, and destroyed them, and dwelt in their stead.

24 Arise ye, and pass the torrent Arnon: behold I have delivered into thy hand Sehon, king of Hesebon, the Amorrite, and begin thou to possess his land, and make war against him.

25 This day will I begin to send the dread and fear of thee upon the nations, that dwell under the whole heaven: that when they hear thy name they may fear and tremble, and be in pain like women in travail.

26 So I sent messengers from the wilderness of Cademoth to Sehon, the king of Hesebon, with peaceable words, saying:

27 We will pass through thy land, we will go along by the high way: we will not turn aside neither to the right hand nor to the left.

28 Sell us meat for money, that we may eat: give us water for money, and so we will drink. We only ask that thou wilt let us pass through,

29 As the children of Esau have done, that dwell in Seir, and the Moabites, that abide in Ar: until we come

VER. 20. Zomzommim, means "wicked wretches," famous for their stature, &c. M.—They are probably the same nation as the Zuzim. Gen. xiv. 5.

VER. 21. Enacims. See on this race of giants what has been said, Num. xiii. 23. They made place for the Zomzommim, as the latter did for the Ammonites. H.

VER. 22. Horrites, so called because they dwelt in caverns. S. Jerom.

VER. 23. Haserim, the same as Haseroth. Num. xxxiii. 17.—Gaza belonged to the Philistines. The intermediate country, or the south part of Chanaan, occupied by the Hevites was seized by invaders from the isle of Cyprus, (Heb. Caph-torum. C. Gen. x. 14,) or from Egypt, which the Nile intersects, forming many islands, in the Delta. Jer. xlvii. 4. The Cappadocians, who dwell in Asia Minor, on the Euxine sea, were a different nation, and sprung from Japhet. T.

VER. 24. Arise. God did not forbid Moses to ask for leave to pass through the land quietly, as the latter did; (v. 26.) but he gives him to understand that his demand will be rejected with disdain, and he is at liberty to attack this insolent king, and thus to commence his conquests.

VER. 25. Heaven. All who hear of thy exploits, will have cause to fear. H. VER. 26. Cademoth, "to the east" of the Arnon. There was a city of the same name on the other side of its banks, which belonged to Sehon, and was given afterwards to the Levites, 1 Par. vi. 79. C.

VER. 29. As, &c. These nations had only permitted them to pass along their borders, and furnished them, through fear, (v. 4.) with the necessaries of life. Sehon will not even grant so much.

VER. 30. Hardened, &c. That is, in punishment of his past sins, he left him to to the Jordan, and pass to the land, which the Lord our God will give us.

30 And Sehon, the king of Hesebon, would not let us pass: because the Lord thy God had hardened his spirit and fixed his heart, that he might be delivered into thy hands, as now thou seest.

31 And the Lord said to me: Behold I have begun to deliver unto thee Sehon, and his land; begin to possess it.

32 And Sehon came out to meet us with all his people to fight at Jasa.

33 And the Lord our God delivered him to us: and we slew him, with his sons, and all his people.

34 And we took all his cities at that time, killing the inhabitants of them, men, and women, and children. We left nothing of them,

35 Except the cattle, which came to the share of them that took them: and the spoils of the cities, which we took:

36 From Aroer, which is upon the bank of the torrent Arnon, a town that is situate in a valley, as far as Galaad, there was not a village or city, that escaped our hands: the Lord our God delivered all unto us:

37 Except the land of the children of Ammon, to which we approached not: and all that border upon the torrent Jeboc, and the cities in the mountains, and all the places, which the Lord our God forbade us.

CHAP. III.

The victory over Og, king of Basan. Ruben, Gad, and half the tribe of Manasses, receive their possession on the other side of the Jordan.

THEN we turned* and went by the way of Basan: and Og, the king of Basan, came out to meet us with his people to fight in Edrai.

2 And the Lord said to me: Fear him not: because he is delivered into thy hand, with all his people and his land: and thou shalt do to him as thou hast done to Sehon, king of the Amorrites, that dwelt in Hesebon.

3 So the Lord our God delivered into our hands Og also, the king of Basan, and all his people: and we utterly destroyed them,

4 Wasting all his cities at one time; there was not a town that escaped us: sixty cities, all the country of Argob, the kingdom of Og, in Basan.

his own stubborn and perverse disposition, which drew him to his ruin. See the note on Exod. vii. 3. Ch.—God did not soften his heart, (M.) nor make him see the danger to which he was exposing his dominions, by provoking such an army. H.

VER. 34. Killing, according to God's express command. C. xx. 16. M.

VER. 37. Jeboc, towards its source; for both sides of the torrent were taken by the Hebrews from the kings Sehon and Og, who had already driven the Ammonites farther into the mountains, on the east. H.—When these demanded the conquered country to be restored to them, Jephthah shewed that their claim was inadmissible. Jud. xi. 18. C.—They had lost possession when the Hebrews came; and, as God had authorized the latter to take the land from those kings, without enquiring who were the former proprietors, the Ammonites, who had themselves expelled the Zomzommim, came with a very bad grace to assert their title, after a lapse of near 300 years. God only forbids the Hebrews to molest the actual dominions of the sons of Ammon, Moab, and Esau, in consideration of their fathers, to whom they were so nearly related. H.

CHAP. III. VER. 1. Turned. Instead of going straight forward across the Jordan, we directed our arms against Basan, in the north. See Num. xxi. 33.

VER. 4. Country. Heb. "the line" with which lands were measured. C. xxxii. 9.—Argob, may signify rich and fertile; "all that fertile region, the kingdom of Og." Vatable thinks that Basan, Argob, and Trachonitis, denote the same country. But Cellarius observes, that the last mentioned country was ill cultivated and very poor, the inhabitants living mostly in the caverns of rocks, whereas Argob or Basan was adorned with 60 cities.

5 All the cities were fenced with very high walls, and with gates and bars, besides innumerable towns that had no walls.

6 And we utterly destroyed them, as we had done to Sehon, the king of Hesebon, destroying every city, men, and women, and children:

7 But the cattle, and the spoils of the cities, we took for our prey.

8 And we took at that time the land out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorrites, that were beyond the Jordan: from the torrent Arnon unto the mountain Hermon,

9 Which the Sidonians call Sarion, and the Amorrites Sanir*:

10 All the cities, that are situate in the plain, and all the land of Galaad and Basan, as far as Selcha, and Edrai, cities of the kingdom of Og, in Basan.

11 For only Og, king of Basan, remained of the race of the giants. His bed of iron is shewn, which is in Rabbath of the children of Ammon, being nine cubits long, and four broad after the measure of the cubit of a man's hand.

12 And we possessed the land at that time from Aroer, which is upon the bank of the torrent Arnon, unto the half of Mount Galaad: and I gave the cities thereof to Ruben and Gad.

* Infra. iv. 48.—b Num. xxxii. 29.

VER. 5. Walls. Tacitus remarks, that "a great part of Judea is covered with villages, though towns may likewise be found in the country." Hist. v. 8. See 3 K. iv. 18. Sept. "besides the towns of the Perezites, which were very numerous." C.—The spies had not travelled in this country, when they gave an account of the walled towns being as high as heaven. But Moses here informs us, that the cities on the east side of the Jordan were not much inferior to those on the west, and the land was infested also with giants, v. 13. H.

VER. 6. Utterly. Yet out of the ruins they soon raised other strong cities. Num. xxxii. 26. All the walls were not probably demolished, (v. 19,) but only a part, so that they might be repaired with no great labour or expense. The inhabitants were all destroyed, that they might not pervert the Hebrews by their bad example; and because God had pronounced the sentence of death upon them, in punishment of their crimes. Heb. seems to insinuate, that the cities were destroyed only by the death of the inhabitants. "We subjected them to anathema . . . utterly destroying the men," &c. H.—We devoted to utter ruin the men, women, and children of the cities which we took. C.

VER. 8. Beyond. East of the promised land of Chanaan, which the sacred writers have generally in view. H.—Heb. heber, means, "alongside, opposite to, at the passage, on this side," &c. See C. i. 1. 3 K. iv. 24. C.—There is no need, therefore, to suppose that this and similar passages have been inserted by a later writer. H.—Hermon, which profane authors commonly call Antilibanus, (C.) was a part of the range of the mountains of Galaad, by which name it goes frequently, though it be also denominated Seon, or Sion, (C. iv. 48. M.) and the different nations had other names for it, v. 9. H.—It does not appear that Moses went much beyond the torrent Jeboc. But he knew that the territory, as far as Hermon and Emath, belonged to the Hebrews, and he probably sent some troops to take possession of it. They did not, however, entirely banish the Hivites, that dwell from Basan to Hermon, as the entering into Emath. These and some other nations were left by God to instruct Israel. Judg. iii. 3.

VER. 10. Plain. Heb. Mishor, which the Sept. leave untranslated. It has perhaps the same meaning as Argob, v. 4. C.

VER. 11. Giants. Heb. "Raphaim" Og was the only survivor of this family, in Basan, though there were other giants dispersed throughout the land. 1 Par. xv. 6. T.—Some of the stock of Rapha, were also seen afterwards at Geth, but they did not reign in the country of their fathers, as Og alone did at this time. Jos. xv. 14. xvii. 15. Heb. may be, "Now Og, king of Basan, was a remnant of the Raphaim." C.—Sept. "for, moreover, Og . . . was left of the Raphaim." His bed was 13½ feet long, and 6½ broad, taking the cubit at 18 inches, with Arbuthnot; though Calmet allows 20½ French inches, which are greater than ours. As beds are commonly made larger than the person who lies in them, he concludes that Og might be 14 or 15 feet high, unless he was possessed with the same vanity as Alexander the Great, who caused beds five cubits long to be left in his camp, when he returned from his Indian expedition, in order that the people might think that his soldiers were of a gigantic stature. Allowances must here be made for a royal bed; and, at any rate, it will not easily be proved that a human body might not exceed 12 or 15 feet in height, without injuring the just proportions, as T. Paine would have us to believe. We know that the difference in size between the inhabitants of Shetland and of Patagonia is still very great; and the people of the former island would act very irrationally, if they would not credit the existence of the Lincolnshire ox, or of the large dray horses in London, because their own oxen are not bigger than mastiffs. See Watson, p. 26.—Iron. Bedsteads are frequently made of iron, brass, silver, or gold, in hot countries, for the sake of cleanliness and grandeur. Prov. xxv. 11. Est. i. 6.

13 And I delivered the other part of Galaad, and all Basan, the kingdom of Og, to the half tribe of Manasses, all the country of Argob: and all Basan is called the land of giants.

14 Jair, the son of Manasses, possessed all the country of Argob unto the borders of Jessuri, and Machati. And he called Basan by his own name, Havoth Jair, that is to say, the towns of Jair, until this present day.

15 To Machir also I gave Galaad.

16 And to the tribes of Ruben and Gad, I gave of the land of Galaad, as far as the torrent Arnon, half the torrent, and the confines even unto the torrent Jeboc, which is the border of the children of Ammon:

17 And the plain of the wilderness, and the Jordan, and the borders of Cenereth, unto the sea of the desert, which is the most salt sea, to the foot of Mount Phasga, eastward.

18 And I commanded you at that time, saying: The Lord your God giveth you this land for an inheritance; go ye well appointed before your brethren, the children of Israel, all the strong men of you:

19 Leaving your wives, and children, and cattle. For I know you have much cattle, and they must remain in the cities, which I have delivered to you,

20 Until the Lord give rest to your brethren, as he

The Parthian kings reserved to themselves the privilege of lying on golden beds. Josep. xx. 20. The Thebans made beds of iron and brass out of the spoils of Plataea, and consecrated them to Juno. Thucyd. iii.—Ammon. Heb. "Behold his bedstead was of iron; is it not in Rabbath?" &c. This town is called Rabbatmana, by Polybius; and Ammana, by Eusebius, who says it had afterwards the name of Astarte, till Ptolemy Philadelphus gave it the title of Philadelphia. It lay to the east of Jazer, not far from the Arnon. Cellar. iii. 14. It is probable that the bed of Og continued in this city, till it was taken by David, 2 K. xxii. 30. How the Ammonites got possession of it, we do not know. It seems that the account of it, and of Jair, (v. 15,) have been given by some one who lived a long time after these events had taken place. C.—This conjecture, however, is not well founded, for though Moses was addressing those who had been witnesses to these transactions not many months before, his appeal to them gives the strongest authority to a narration, which was to be handed down to the latest posterity. They could attest the surprising stature of that giant, whom they had slain, and their neighbours kept his bed as a proof of his having existed, the terror of all that country. Until this present day, (v. 14,) is an expression often used in Scripture, to denote an event which had taken place at no very great distance of time. C. xi. 4. Thus S. Matthew, (xxvii. 8,) writing about eight years after the ascension of our Saviour, says, the field was called Haceldama . . . even to this day. See Jos. viii. 29. H.—It is sufficient if the thing be still in the same state as it was before. M.—Hand. Heb. "according to the cubit of a man," from the elbow to the finger ends. C.—Syr. "of giants." Chal. "of the king;" whence some have imagined, that the bed was nine times as long as the cubit of Og, which is very improbable. H.—The Rabbins, who delight in fables, say that this bed was used by Og only while he was in his infancy: for he grew to be 120 cubits high; and some say his foot alone was this length. He would have hurled a mountain to overwhelm all the Hebrews at once, only a bird, or some ants, made a hole in it, and the mountain falling upon his shoulders, he could not extricate his head, God causing his teeth to grow ten cubits, and in this condition he was taken and killed by Moses. Lyran, &c.—Noble discovery of these blind guides! VER. 12. Galaad. Moses comprises under this name, all the conquered country. C.

VER. 14. Jair. Some have supposed that this was one of the judges of Israel, but without foundation. He was a son, or descendant of Manasses. Num. xxxii. 41. Jud. x. 4.—And Machati. These were the most southern towns of this half tribe. C.—Day. If Esdras added these words, he did it not against the law, but to explain it. W.

VER. 15. Machir's posterity was settled in the same part of Galaad. M.

VER. 16. Torrent. The other part belonged to the Moabites, (C.) on the south and east.—Ammon. See C. ii. 37. The two tribes of Gad and Ruben, occupied the territory lying between the Jeboc and the Arnon, hemmed in by the mountains of Galaad, on the east, and by the Jordan and the most salt sea, and that of Cenereth, on the west. Gad occupied the northern division of this country. H.

VER. 17. Foot. Heb. and Sept. Ashdod-th-pisga, Eusebius seems to have taken these for two different towns. The former was situated near Phasga. Jos. xii. 3. This mount was the eastern boundary of Ruben. The plain here mentioned was that where Moses was speaking. C.

VER. 20. Rest. Abulensis says, this took place only 14 years after. M.

hath given to you. and they also possess the land, which he will give them beyond the Jordan: then shall every man return to his possession, which I have given you.

21 *I commanded Josue also at that time, saying: Thy eyes have seen what the Lord your God hath done to these two kings: so will he do to all the kingdoms, to which thou shalt pass.

22 Fear them not: for the Lord your God will fight for you.

23 And I besought the Lord at that time, saying:

24 Lord God, thou hast begun to shew unto thy servant thy greatness, and most mighty hand; for there is no other God, either in heaven, or earth, that is able to do thy works, or to be compared to thy strength.

25 I will pass over, therefore, and will see this excellent land beyond the Jordan, and this goodly mountain, and Libanus.

26 And the Lord was angry with me on your account, and heard me not, but said to me: It is enough: speak no more to me of this matter.

27 Go up to the top of Phasga, and cast thy eyes round about to the west, and to the north, and to the south, and to the east, and behold it, ^b for thou shalt not pass this Jordan.

28 Command Josue, and encourage and strengthen him: for he shall go before this people, and shall divide unto them the land which thou shalt see.

* Num. xxvii. 18.—^b Infra xxxi. 2. and xxxiv. 4.

VER. 25. I will. Moses flattered himself, that God's refusal to let him cross the Jordan, was only conditional; and therefore he begs, with all humility, for leave to enter Chanaan, at the head of the people. But, though God had pardoned his fault, he would not deprive Josue of the honour, which to fulfil the mystery, was reserved for him. Num. xx. 12. xxvi. 64. C.—Moses might very lawfully desire to behold a place, consecrated by the abode of the Patriarchs, and to be honoured still more by the presence of the Messiah, a happiness for which he had been labouring now forty years. D.—And Libanus. Whether this and be an explanation of what mountain he meant, (T.) is a matter of doubt. He unquestionably desired to see, and to put his people in possession of all the country designed for their inheritance, in which various fruitful mountains appeared. That of Bethel was very high, and most delightful where Abraham and Jacob had dwelt. Moria and Sion, the future seat of the temple, might also attract his notice, and the mountains of Judea, as well as all the other lofty hills, which diversify the country from Idumea to Libanus. H.—Egypt was a flat country. New and grander prospects now open to his view. Libanus is styled Antilibanus by the Sept., and by profane authors, as it lies, in effect, to the land of the Hebrews. Behind it Coslosyria extends, as far as Libanus. This mountain comprises four different hills, rising one above another, and taking in a circuit of 300 miles. The first of these hills, Antilibanus, is remarkable for its fertility in corn; the second has abundance of fine springs: but the third resembles an earthly paradise, being constantly adorned with fruits and flowers. Cedars grow chiefly upon the fourth, amidst the snows which lie there perpetually, notwithstanding the burning heats of the adjacent countries. Lebanon signifies both "whiteness and incense," for which it is very renowned. C.—De la Roque thinks that it is higher than the Alps or Pyrenees. It stands in the form of a horse-shoe, extending from above Smyrna to Sidon, and thence towards Damascus, (Buffon) unless this be a part of Antilibanus, which runs north, from Damascus, in a parallel direction to Libanus, and includes the hollow Syria. H.—Serarius makes these two mountains run eastward, almost from the Mediterranean sea, as Strabo (xvi.) and Ptolemy seem also to do. Bonfrere.

VER. 26. Your account. Moses cannot help reminding the people, that they were the occasion of his giving way to diffidence, and thus incurring a most sensible abatement from the hands of God. Their conduct had provoked him so, that he gave some outward signs of the trouble with which his mind was so much disturbed. C. xx. 12. Yet God admits of no excuse, particularly in the sins of those who act in his name, and who, of course, ought to guard against the smallest deviation from virtue. Be ye holy and perfect, is addressed to such in a particular manner. H.

VER. 27. East. It seems, if Phasga was the eastern boundary of Ruben, (v. 17,) there was no occasion for Moses to cast his eyes that way. He is ordered to take a full view of the countries allotted by God to the Hebrews; and if we consider that the territory, as far as the Euphrates, was promised to them, if they would continue faithful, and that it was made tributary, under Solomon, we need not wonder if Moses should be pleased to behold it. C. i. 7. H.

VER. 29. Phogor. Heb. Beth pehor, "the house, temple, or city of Phogor," where that idol was the object of adoration. The city was probably at the foot of Mount Phasga, and fell to the share of Ruben. Jos. xiii. 20. C.—The Hebrews dwelt in the valley when Moses made the aforesaid supplication to God, and was ordered to desist and, after taking a view of the promised land, to give the Moses exhorteth the people to keep God's commandments: particularly to fly idolatry. Appointeth three cities of refuge, on that side of the Jordan.

AND now, O Israel, hear the commandments and judgments, which I teach thee: that doing them, thou mayst live, and entering in mayst possess the land, which the Lord, the God of your fathers, will give you.

2 You shall not add to the word that I speak to you, neither shall you take away from it: keep the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you.

3 *Your eyes have seen all that the Lord hath done against Beelphegor, how he hath destroyed all his worshippers from among you.

4 But you that adhere to the Lord your God, are all alive until this present day.

5 You know that I have taught you statutes and justices, as the Lord my God hath commanded me: so shall you do them in the land, which you shall possess:

6 And you shall observe, and fulfil them in work. For this is your wisdom, and understanding in the sight of nations, that hearing all these precepts, they may say: Behold a wise and understanding people, a great nation.

7 Neither is there any other nation so great, that hath gods so nigh them, as our God is present to all our petitions.

necessary injunctions to his successor, v. 23. H.—Perhaps this might take place before the defeat of the two kings. C.

CHAP. IV. VER. 1. And judgments, regarding religion and civil affairs. C.—Live a happy life. M.

VER. 2. Add any thing repugnant to the spirit of my law. No interpretation of this kind can be admitted. But this does not condemn well authorized traditions, and laws enacted by lawful superiors. The Jews always boast of their close adherence to the letter of the law, but they often forget the spirit of it, and by their traditions render it deformed, like a carcass. Demosthenes takes notice, that the Loerians had such a regard for their laws, that if any one chose to propose any fresh ones, he came with a rope about his neck, that if they did not meet with the approbation of the people, he might be strangled immediately. C.—Moses cannot mean to forbid any more divine or civil commandments being written by Josue and the subsequent prophets. He only enjoins that nothing shall be altered by human authority. The other books of the Old Testament serve to explain the law; and so do the apostolical traditions (W.) afford great assistance to understand the true meaning of all the Scriptures, and hence we learn whatever we have to perform, without danger of being led astray. H.—To these the Scriptures frequently refer. He that heareth you, heareth me. Lu. x. Hold the tradition; which you have learnt. 2. Thes. ii. The rest I will set in order, when I come. 1 Cor. xi. 34. Hence S. Augustine (c. Cresc. i. 33.) observes, "Though no evident example can be produced from Scripture, yet we hold the truth of the same Scripture, when we do what meets with the approbation of that Church whose authority the Scripture establishes." See ep. 80. S. Chrys. in 1 Thes. iv. S. Iren. iii. 4. W.—The Jews themselves never had the folly to imagine with the modern innovators, that all laws both of a religious or civil nature were here proscribed. Under David, Mardocheus, and the Machabees, various laws and feasts were commanded, and observed in the true spirit of the law. 1 K. xxx. 25. Est. ix. 1 Mac. iv. God does not leave to the discretion of the Jews, the appointing of different victims, &c. in his worship, (C. xii. 30.) as they might very easily give way to the superstitious observances of their neighbours, and these things had been sufficiently determined. But he enjoins all to obey the declarations of the priests and judges. C. xvii. 10. Bellarm. T.—Thus when the Apocalypse records a prohibition similar to this, (C. xvii. 18, 19,) it is not intended to seal up the divine volume, so that nothing more shall be admitted into it, for S. John wrote his gospel afterwards. But it must be explained in the same sense as this passage, and condemns all those who, of their own authority, would set up fresh doctrine in opposition to the word of God. Let Protestants consider if they be not concerned in this caution, when they not only cut off whole books of Scripture, but deny the authority of the Church itself, without which the Scriptures can be of little service. They are the book sealed with seven seals, impenetrable to man, without the aid of the divine author; (Apoc. v. 5.) and this aid he will never grant to those who obstinately refuse to hear the Church. 8 For what other nation is there so renowned, that hath ceremonies, and just judgments, and all the law, which I will set forth this day before your eyes?

9 Keep thyself therefore, and thy soul carefully. Forget not the words, that thy eyes have seen, and let them not go out of thy heart all the days of thy life. Thou shalt teach them to thy sons and to thy grandsons,

10 From the day in which thou didst stand before the Lord thy God in Horeb, when the Lord spoke to me, saying: Call together the people unto me, that they may hear my words, and may learn to fear me all the time that they live on the earth, and may teach their children.

11 *And you came to the foot of the mount, which burned even unto heaven: and there was darkness, and a cloud, and obscurity in it.

12 And the Lord spoke to you from the midst of the fire. You heard the voice of his words, but you saw not any form at all.

13 And he shewed you his covenant, which he commanded you to do, and the ^bten words, that he wrote in two tables of stone.

14 And he commanded me at that time that I should teach you the ceremonies and judgments, which you shall do in the land that you shall possess.

15 Keep therefore your souls carefully. *You saw not any similitude, in the day that the Lord God spoke to you in Horeb, from the midst of the fire:

16 Lest perhaps being deceived you might make you a graven similitude, or image of male or female,

17 The similitude of any beasts, that are upon the earth, or of birds, that fly under heaven,

18 Or of creeping things, that move on the earth, or of fishes, that abide in the waters under the earth:

19 Lest perhaps lifting up thy eyes to heaven, thou see the sun and the moon, and all the stars of heaven, and being deceived by error, thou adore and serve them, which the Lord thy God created for the service of all the nations, that are under heaven.

20 But the Lord hath taken you, and brought you out of the iron furnace of Egypt, to make you his people of inheritance, as it is this present day.

21 ^a And the Lord was angry with me for your words, and he swore that I should not pass over the Jordan, nor enter into the excellent land, which he will give you.

22 Behold I die in this land, I shall not pass over the Jordan: you shall pass, and possess the goodly land.

23 Beware lest thou ever forget the covenant of the Lord thy God, which he hath made with thee: and make to thyself a graven likeness of those things, which the Lord hath forbid to be made:

24 *Because the Lord thy God is a consuming fire, a jealous God.

25 If you shall beget sons and grandsons, and abide in the land, and being deceived make to yourselves any similitude, committing evil before the Lord your God, to provoke him to wrath:

26 I call this day heaven and earth to witness, that you shall quickly perish out of the land, which, when the same truths. Prov. i. 7. Eccl. i. 34. Even profane writers applauded the laws and fidelity of the Jews. See Jos. de Bel. i. 5. Strabo xvi. C.

VER. 7. Goda. Supposing they deserved that title, which of them has the power to shew their votaries such favours as the true God hath shewn to us! The idols are nothing but devils, which seek to destroy. C.—But God had manifested his power and love to the Hebrews in the most astonishing manner. He seemed to choose his residence among them, in the tabernacle. H.—This Jesus does in a still more wonderful manner, with respect to Christians, remaining with them in the sacrament of love. The other sacraments which he has instituted, are more noble and efficacious than those of the old law. He was pleased to take his nature, (^c) and to dwell among us. Jo. i. The providence of God pervades all things; and, though all live in Him, (Act. xvii. 28.) yet he shews the marks of the most parental tenderness to his elect. H.

VER. 8. Eyes. Most of these laws had been already promulgated; so that the people could set a just value upon them. But Moses undertakes to place them in a more beautiful point of view, as it were altogether, and accompanied with some fresh regulations. How imperfect are all the codes of the ancient lawgivers, when compared with this of Moses! H.

VER. 9. Words. Heb. also, "things." H.—Both sacred and profane authors use the term of seeing, to denote any of the senses, v. 12. Eschylus (in Proneth.) says, "you shall neither see the form nor the voice of mortals."

VER. 12. At all. Heb. "but saw no similitude, only a voice." See Ex. xx. 18.

VER. 13. Stone. Josephus (Ant. iii. 4. 6.) says, that each table contained five precepts, two and a half being inscribed on one side. The Jews now suppose that four appeared on one table, and six on the other. But each table probably contained an entire copy of the law. C.—It hence appears, that there are just ten precepts. W.—But the manner of dividing them is rather uncertain. S. Aug. and Catholics in general, place the three commandments, which regard God, by themselves. See Ex. xx. 1. Their greater importance and length would require as much space as the other seven, which ascertain the mutual duties of people to each other. H.

VER. 15. Carefully. Heb. "Be therefore particularly attentive, as much as you love your own soul." Vatab. By keeping my commandments, you can alone obtain salvation, v. 9. M.—Similitude of any living creature, such as were the objects of adoration among the pagans. Some represented their gods under the forms of men, women, beasts, birds, or reptiles; while others adored the sun, moon, and stars. H.—This last was indeed the most ancient species of idolatry. Job. xxi. 26. Baal, Astarte, Moloch, Chamos, &c. were different names by which they denoted the heavenly bodies. But the Egyptians carried their superstition to the greatest excess. There was hardly any sort of animal which did not obtain sovereign worship among them. C.—Their great gods, Isis and Osiris, were sometimes depicted like a man and woman; at other times, like beasts, and frequently they appeared with parts of both. The head of Isis was generally adorned or disfigured with the horns of a bull; (H.) and that animal, either alive or in a picture, as well as dogs and cats, were adored throughout the country, while some places had their peculiar idols. The lion, the wolf, and the fish called latas, gave their names to the cities Leontopolis, &c. which had a particular veneration for them. Moses takes care to inform the Hebrews, that the true God is like none of these things; and that they cannot pretend to represent him under any such forms, without doing him an injury. C.—If Catholics endeavour to put the people in mind of the blessed Trinity, by representing a venerable old man, Jesus Christ in his human nature, and a dove, under which forms the Scripture has introduced the three divine persons, they do not pretend that their divine and most spiritual nature can be thus expressed. "If," says the Council of Trent, Sess. 25, the historical accounts of Scripture be sometimes set forth in paintings, for the benefit of the illiterate, let the people be informed that the Divinity is not thus represented, with a design to insinuate that it may be seen with the eyes of the body." So neither can the figure of a triangle, with the ineffable name of God in Heb., &c., explain this adorable mystery. But such things may recall to our remembrance, the innumerable benefits which we have received from the three divine persons, after we have been once informed what we have to believe respecting them. This is the laudable motive which has induced the Church to encourage the keeping of such pictures, as well as those of the saints, with due respect. "Not as if we believed that any divinity or virtue resided in them for which they were to be worshipped, or that we should ask any thing of them, or place our confidence in images, as the Gentiles formerly did, who hoped in their idols, (Ps. cxxxiv.) but because the honour given to them is referred to the originals, which they represent," &c. C. of Trent, Sess. 25. H.

VER. 19. Service. How then could the nations give way to such stupidity but because they had forgotten the design of God in creating the heavenly bodies, which Moses therefore takes care to inculcate! Gen. i. 14. Heb. and Sept. "which God has divided unto all," &c.; whence some have falsely supposed, that God had tolerated the worship of the stars in other nations. See C. xxix. 26. Drusus. C.

VER. 20. Furnace. This expression gives us some idea of the cruelties to which the Hebrews had been exposed, 3 K. viii. 51. Iron and other metals were melted in furnaces: Heb. cur. Eze. xxii. 20. In the countries of the East, workmen have them in the middle of their shops, and sit round them to work. Bellon. iii. 45. C.

VER. 21. Words. The murmurs of the people occasioned the diffidence of Moses, and he often reminds them of it, that they may reflect how severely God will punish them, if they transgress, since he spares not his greatest favourites. C.—Even venial faults must be punished. W.

VER. 23. Made. Heb. "and make to thyself a sculpture, the likeness of any thing which the Lord thy God commanded thee." He ordered them to abstain from idolatry. D.

VER. 24. Fire. God often appeared in the midst of fire. All the land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy. Sophon. i. 18. and iii. 8. C.—By these expressions, we are exhorted not to do any thing which would excite the indignation of our true lover, nor ever be unfaithful to him. H.—The pagans thought that fire was the fittest symbol of the divinity. Porphy. de Abstin.

VER. 26. And earth, or all their rational inhabitants. S. Jer. and S. Bas. in Isai. i. 2. Moses conjures the Israelites, by all that is most sacred, to continue faithful. He speaks with the greatest earnestness, as he does again, C. xxxii. 1 you have passed over the Jordan, you shall possess. You shall not dwell therein long, but the Lord will destroy you, 27 And scatter you among all nations, and you shall remain a few among the nations, to which the Lord shall lead you.

28 And there you shall serve gods, that were framed with men's hands; wood and stone, that neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell.

29 And when thou shalt seek there the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him: yet so, if thou seek him with all thy heart, and all the affliction of thy soul.

30 After all the things aforesaid shall find thee, in the latter time thou shalt return to the Lord thy God, and shalt hear his voice:

31 Because the Lord thy God, is a merciful God: he will not leave thee, nor altogether destroy thee, nor forget the covenant, by which he swore to thy fathers.

32 Ask of the days of old, that have been before thy time, from the day that God created man upon the earth, from one end of heaven to the other end thereof, if ever there was done the like thing, or it hath been known at any time,

33 That a people should hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of fire, as thou hast heard, and lived:

^a Exod. xiii. 21.

C.—He makes use of a sort of oath, by the creatures, in which God shines forth. M.—Destroy you. He will take from you that delightful country, though he will save a remnant of you out of the captivity of Babylon, and in the latter days, v. 31. The Jews, in the promised land, were almost always prone to idolatry, till God severely chastised them by the hands of the Babylonians. Since that time, few of them have willingly yielded to the worship of idols, though some have fallen by compulsion, as we read, Dan. iii. 1 Mac. i. 53, and ii. 16. Jeremias (v. 19), foretold that this would be the case. As you have forsaken me, and served a strange god in your own land, so shall you serve strangers in a land that is not your own. H.

VER. 27. Nations. This prediction we see verified at the present day. They are despised by all. No one of their numerous masters embraces their religion. They are so few, as hardly to possess a single town. C.

VER. 29. There. Heb. 'thence' from the place of captivity, or returning from the love of idols to the service of the true God.—Soul. Heb. "with all thy soul." (30) In thy tribulation after," &c. C.—God often sends chastisements as the most effectual means of salvation, to make his children enter into themselves. In this state, the soul is more at liberty to consider the folly of adhering to any thing in opposition to the sovereign Lord. Then she is forced to confess that her idols cannot afford her any protection. How, in effect, could any one fall into such an abyss of corruption and stupidity, as to imagine those things to be gods which have not even the dignity and advantages which they themselves possess? Their soul must first have been strangely blinded, and their heart corrupt. Even the more enlightened pagans acknowledged the folly of pretending to represent the Divinity under sensible forms. "God, says Empedocles, has no human members. . . He is a pure and ineffable spirit, who governs the world by his profound wisdom." Numa would not allow any picture of Him, conformably to the doctrine of Pythagoras; and, for the first 170 years of Rome, no representation of God was set up in the temples. Plutarch.—The ancient Phœnicians seemed to have acted on the same principle, as the temple of Hercules, at the Straits, had no image. It is well known that the Persians rejected both the statues and temples erected in honour of the gods; and the Germans esteemed it beneath the majesty of the heavenly Beings, to represent them under any human form. Tacitus, Hist. v. C.—Yet these sages gave way to the folly of the people, and, against their better knowledge, adored the stupid and senseless idols. H.

VER. 30. Voice, after the captivity of Babylon, or rather at the end of the world. The nation at large has not embraced the worship of idols since the former period. But it will not be perfectly converted, until the fullness of the Gentiles . . . come in.—And so all Israel . . . be saved. Rom. xi. 25. C.—S. Paul terms their present state a blindness in part, because, though a few have embraced the revelation of God, made to all by his only Son, the far greater part have obstinately shut their eyes, so that, even while they read the clearest prophecies, they seem to have a veil on them. But, after they shall have been the sport of their passions and errors till the latter time, when the man of sin shall be fully revealed, they will see how wretchedly they have been deluded, and, the grace of God touching their hearts, they will remember the covenant, and embrace Christ, the that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt, before thy eyes:

35 That thou mightest know that the Lord he is God, and there is no other besides him.

36 From heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might teach thee. And upon earth he shewed thee his exceeding great fire, and thou didst hear his words out of the midst of the fire,

37 Because he loved thy fathers, and chose their seed after them. * And he brought thee out of Egypt, going before thee with his great power, 38 To destroy at thy coming very great nations, and stronger than thou art, and to bring thee in, and give thee their land in possession, as thou seest at this present day.

39 Know therefore this day, and think in thy heart, that the Lord he is God in heaven above, and in the earth beneath, and there is no other.

40 Keep his precepts and commandments, which I command thee: that it may be well with thee, and thy children after thee, and thou mayst remain a long time upon the land, which the Lord thy God will give thee.

41 ^b Then Moses set aside three cities beyond the Jordan, at the east side, 42 That any one might flee to them who should kill his neighbour unwillingly, and was not his enemy a day or two before, and that he might escape to some one of these cities:

end of all the law. Happy those who do not defer their conversion till that awful period! H.

VER. 32. Heaven. To our senses the sky seems to rest upon the horizon. So Jesus says, Then he . . . shall gather . . . his elect . . . from the uttermost part of the earth, to the uttermost part of heaven. Mat. xxiv. 31. Vatable translates, "from the east to the west." In no age or place did God ever declare his will, as he had done at Sinai. C.

VER. 33. And lived. It was generally supposed, that those who had seen a vision of God, or of his angel, would instantly die. See Gen. xvi. 13. H. C. v. 24.

VER. 34. Temptations. The Chal. and Arab. understand this of the prodigies which God wrought in favour of his people; though they may also denote the trials to which the Patriarchs and the Hebrews had been exposed, that their virtue might shine more brightly. Many indeed lost courage under these trials, but they were of great service to form a perfect people; and those who continued to lead a virtuous life, received the reward of their labours. C.—Visions, during the three days' darkness mentioned, Wisd. xvii. 9, 18, &c. (M.) or those terrible appearances on Sinai, v. 33. 6. C. v. 22. C. Heb. may be, "by great terrors."—In Egypt. God himself fought for his people, when he brought them out of that country. He repeatedly made the king and his people feel the impressions of terror, but as they presently recovered their wonted insolence and pride, he at last miraculously divided the Red Sea, and buried vast multitudes in its waters. H.

VER. 38. Day. They had already conquered the mighty kingdoms of Sehon and of Og. M.

VER. 39. Other. The power of the true and only God is not confined to the sea, or to the land, &c. (C.) as the pagans believed that of their various idols was. H.

VER. 41. Then, &c. This piece of history seems to be placed out of its natural order, by another hand. C.—Yet if we attend to the method of Moses, in his other works, we shall not hastily conclude that it is an interpolation. He frequently repeats what has been already specified. He had received an order from God to appoint these three cities of refuge, (Num. xxxv. 14,) after he had given the land to the tribes of Ruben, &c. Num. xxxii. This he executes at the conclusion of this discourse; and hence takes occasion to mention how they had taken possession of this country. H.

VER. 42. Before. The Rabbins say, when two people had refused to speak to one another for three days, it was a sufficient indication of their enmity. Seld. Jur. iv. 2.

VER. 43. Wilderness, or plains of Moab, at the mouth of the Jordan. It is sometimes called Bosor, and is very different from Bozra of Idumea, (Isai. lxxiii. 1,) a very famous city, known to profane authors by the name of Bozra.—Ramoth, one of the strongest towns of Galaad, 15 miles west of Philadelphia, (Euseb.) where Achab, king of Israel, received a mortal wound, 3 K. xxii. 3.—Golan, or Gaulan, gave its name to Gaulanitis, a part of Batanea, lying on the southern parts of the division of Gad, though the city belonged to Manasse. The ten commandments are repeated and explained.

3 He made not the covenant with our fathers, but with us, who are now present and living.

4 He spoke to us face to face in the mount out of the midst of fire.

5 I was the mediator, and stood between the Lord and you at that time, to shew you his words; for you feared the fire, and went not up into the mountain, and he said:

VER. 48. Sion begins here with s, being the northern boundary of the tribe of Manasses, east of the Jordan; whereas the famous Sion, on which the temple was built, is written with ts, and lay on the west side of the Jordan, (II.) in the tribe of Juda. C. iii. 8. C.

VER. 49. Wilderness, which Moses commonly calls the salt sea, (on account of the asphalt with which it abounds) or the sea of Araba, as it lies at the extremity of the plains of Moab, which are sometimes called Araboth, "deserts," because they were more fit for pasturage than for ploughing. C.

CHAP. V. VER. 1. All Israel: not one was wanting, C. xxix. 10. God enabled all to hear the words of their lawgiver, (M.) by an evident miracle. Jansen. C.

VER. 3. Fathers, the ancient patriarchs, who were not favoured in such a signal manner. M.—Though many of those who had heard the words of God at Horeb, were dead, and had not enjoyed the full benefit of the covenant, some still remained, and the children of the deceased were about to enter the land which had been there promised. H.—God did not make a covenant with the Patriarchs only, but also with their posterity at Horeb. D.

VER. 4. To us. Heb. and Sept. "to you."—Face to face, in such a manner that no doubt could be entertained of his presence. S. Aug.—God addressed the decalogue to all the people, who saw no similitude. But to Moses he delivered the rest of his ordinances, with as much familiarity and condescension as one friend would use in speaking to another. Ex. xxxiii. 2. C.

VER. 5. Mediator. S. Paul acknowledges this title of Moses, (Gal. iii. 9.) who was a figure of Jesus Christ, the mediator of the New Testament. Heb. viii. 6. ix. 15. xii. 24. C.—Let not Protestants, therefore, reject this title with so much indignation, when it is applied in the like limited sense to the saints, to denote that they pray for us, as we pray for one another. Christ is the one mediator (1 Tim. ii.) of redemption. H.

11 ^fThou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for he shall not be unpunished that taketh his name upon a vain thing.

13 Six days shalt thou labour, and shalt do all thy works.

14 ^gThe seventh is the day of the sabbath, that is, the rest of the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not do any work therein, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy ox, nor thy ass, nor any of thy beasts, nor the stranger that is within thy gates: that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest even as thyself.

15 Remember that thou also didst serve in Egypt, and the Lord thy God brought thee out from thence with a strong hand, and a stretched-out arm. Therefore hath he commanded thee that thou shouldst observe the sabbath-day.

16 ^hHonour thy father and mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee, that thou mayst live a long time, and it may be well with thee in the land, which the Lord thy God will give thee.

17 Thou shalt not kill.

18 Neither shalt thou commit adultery.

19 And thou shalt not steal.

20 Neither shalt thou bear false witness against thy neighbour.

21 ⁱThou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife: nor his house, nor his field, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is his.

VER. 7. Sight. Chaldee, "Thou shalt not have any other god but me." Elohim often designates the true God. C.—See the decalogue explained, (Ex. xx.) where we have observed, that pictures are only forbidden when they are the objects of sovereign worship, as the context here plainly shews, v. 9. Other images God himself authorized, (W.) even in the old law, and in the most sacred place, where people were ordered to fall prostrate before the ark, to adore his footstool. Ps. xlviii. 5. If, therefore, a people so prone to idolatry as the Jews were, might have pictures in the temple of God without danger, how can any one suppose that the images of Jesus Christ, and of his saints, are necessary incentives to idolatry among Christians, who all know that God will allow of no rival! H.

VER. 9. Serve. We must neither treat idols, nor their images, with the honour due to God alone. S. VER. 15. Therefore. This is another reason why the Jews were to observe the sabbath with particular rigour. The institution of a day of rest every week, (H.) was intended to preserve the memory of the creation. C.—God also requires that his people should be grateful on this day for the rest which he had granted to them, (H.) and preserve carefully all the monuments of the true religion. C.

22 These words the Lord spoke to all the multitude of you in the mountain, out of the midst of the fire and the cloud, and the darkness, with a loud voice, adding nothing more: and he wrote them in two tables of stone, which he delivered unto me.

23 But you, after you heard the voice out of the midst of the darkness, and saw the mountain burn, came to me, all the princes of the tribes and the elders, and you said:

24 Behold the Lord our God hath shewn us his majesty and his greatness; we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire, and have proved this day, that God speaking with man, man hath lived.

25 Why shall we die therefore, and why shall this exceeding great fire consume us? For if we hear the voice of the Lord our God any more, we shall die.

26 What is all flesh, that it should hear the voice of the living God, who speaketh out of the midst of the fire, as we have heard, and be able to live.

27 Approach thou rather: and hear all things that the Lord our God shall say to thee, and thou shalt speak to us, and we will hear and will do them.

28 And when the Lord had heard this, he said to me: I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they spoke to thee: they have spoken all things well.

29 Who shall give them to have such a mind, to fear me, and to keep all my commandments at all times, that it may be well with them and with their children for ever?

30 Go and say to them: Return into your tents.

31 But stand thou here with me, and I will speak to thee all my commandments, and ceremonies and judgments: which thou shalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I will give them for a possession.

32 Keep, therefore, and do the things which the Lord God hath commanded you: you shall not go aside neither to the right hand nor to the left:

33 But you shall walk in the way that the Lord your God hath commanded, that you may live, and it may be well with you, and your days may be long in the land of your possession.

CHAP. VI.

An exhortation to the love of God, and obedience to his law.

THESE* are the precepts, and ceremonies, and judgments, which the Lord your God commanded that I should teach you, and that you should do them in the land, into which you pass over to possess it:

2 That thou mayst fear the Lord thy God, and keep his commandments and precepts which I command thee, and thy sons, and thy grandsons, all the days of thy life, that thy days may be prolonged.

3 Hear, O Israel, and observe to do the things which the Lord hath commanded thee, that it may be well with thee, and thou mayst be greatly multiplied, as the Lord the God of thy fathers hath promised thee a land flowing with milk and honey.

4 Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord.

5 Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with thy whole strength.

6 And these words which I command thee this day, shall be in thy heart.

7 And thou shalt tell them to thy children, and thou shalt meditate upon them, sitting in thy house, and walking on thy journey, sleeping and rising.

8 And thou shalt bind them as a sign on thy hand, and they shall be and shall move between thy eyes.

9 And thou shalt write them in the entry, and on the doors of thy house.

10 And when the Lord thy God shall have brought thee into the land, for which he swore to thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: and shall have given thee great and goodly cities, which thou didst not build,

11 Houses full of riches, which thou didst not set up,

VER. 23. You said, by the mouths of your princes. Ex. xx. 19.

VER. 25. Die. Past experience did not entirely remove from them the fear which was so generally entertained, that the sight of the heavenly beings would prove destructive. So Daniel (C. x. 17,) said on a similar occasion, my breath is stopped. H.

VER. 29. A mind. God speaks like men, and insinuates how agreeable to him is a disposition influenced by a salutary fear. He does not mean that He cannot convert the heart of man. E.—God exerts his power over our will by persuasive invitations. Minionides.

VER. 32. Left: a proverbial expression, to signify that no sort of transgression is to be allowed. M.—It is of the same import as, You shall not add, &c. C. iv. 2. C.

VER. 5. Whole heart . . soul . . and strength. God admits of no partner, nor will he suffer any rivulet to be drawn from the fountain of love, which is not ultimately referred to himself. Our neighbour we must love only for his sake, and by the observance of this two-fold precept, we shall fulfil the whole law and the prophets. Matt. xxii. 40. H. See S. Aug. de Doct. i. 22.—We must love God disinterestedly for his own sake: we must sacrifice our soul and life for his honour, with all our strength, beginning every good work with fervour, and persevering in our undertakings. All our faculties and senses must be consecrated to the divine service, as well as all our goods; in which sense the Chaldee, &c. understand the word strength. Heb. lit. ex toto valde tuo. By this singular expression, Moses seems to insinuate, that he cannot find words to specify how much we ought to love the Sovereign Good. C.—"The measure of loving God, is to love without measure." S. Bernard II.—By many words, the same thing is more forcibly inculcated. T. M.—In the gospel we find, with thy whole mind, (Luc. x. 27,) added by the lawyer. H.—We must give God the preference before all, and thus have our heart perfect before him, like David, &c. T.

VER. 7. Tell. Heb. "thou shalt chew them" as nurses do bread for their little ones; or thou shalt "sharpen," like a razor, "explain clearly and often," these precepts, which are of the utmost importance.—Meditate: speak of them to others, (C.) and entertain thyself with them in thy own heart. The mouth of the just man shall meditate wisdom, and (that is) his tongue shall speak judgment. Ps. xxxvi. 30. Ex. xiii. 9.—Sleeping. The spouse, in the canticle, (v. 2,) says, I sleep, and my heart watcheth. If we carefully direct our intention, we may merit even when we are incapable of thinking. God will reward our good desires. Our last and first thoughts ought, in a particular manner, to be consecrated to God, (H.) when we go to rest and when we arise, (M.) as he is our first beginning, the source of all graces, and our last end, to whom we ought to refer every thing, even our ordinary actions of sleeping, labour, and diversion. If we make his divine perfections and his law the subject of our daily meditations, our soul will naturally be affected with the same sentiments during the night. Quicquid luce fuit tenebris agit. "The occurrences of the day have an influence upon our dreams;" (Petronius: and as we are accountable for many things by placing the cause, which in the hours of sleep or of drunkenness we are not able to prevent, so it cannot be doubted but that we shall increase in virtue, if we regulate our thoughts and actions in a proper manner, even when our soul is incapable of exerting her faculties. Hence we may perceive, of what vast importance it is to have a pure intention. H.

VER. 8. Sign, or seal, (Cant. viii. 6. C.) attached to the ring which the Jews wore on their fingers, (H.) to seal their letters, after they were enveloped and tied with linen. The Jews have bandages of vellum on their hand, with sentences of the law inscribed upon them, (C.) as well as others upon their forehead; while many get the whole law, particularly the Book of Deuteronomy, by heart: for which purpose, the Rabbins inform us, there were above 400 schools and synagogues at Jerusalem, where the law of God was learnt and explained. The design of this injunction was not, however, to enforce the wearing of such bandages, as the Pharisees imagined, (Mat. xxiii. 5,) but to put all in mind that they ought to meditate frequently upon the commandments, (T.) and regulate their lives by their direction.—Shall move. Sept. adds a negation, but to the same import, "it (the sign) shall not be removed from before thy eyes." H.—Heb. "they shall be as totaphoth, frontlets," ornaments hanging between the eyes. (Ex. xiii. 9. C.) "Tephilim," (Chald.) or "spectacles." Grotius.

VER. 13. Only. This is omitted in Heb.; but the Sept. and Jesus Christ retain it, (Mat. iv. 10,) as the sense requires. You cannot serve God and mammon. Lu. xvi. 13. C.—Name, and not by that of idols, whenever you may be authorized to take an oath. H.—To swear by any other, is to acknowledge him in some sort for a god. VER. 16. Temptation. Heb. "in Massa," where Moses gave the people water from Horeb. Ex. xvii. 7.

VER. 25. Merciful. Heb. "he will justify us." Chal. "reward us." Justice often denotes the mercy which God shews to his people, and the punishment which he inflicts upon their enemies. C. Mat. vi. 1.—Past, present, and future benefits concur to make the Hebrews observe the commandments. God had rescued them from slavery; (v. 21,) he had already given them great possessions, and would grant them still more if they would be faithful; as on the other hand, all will be lost if they prove rebellious; v. 15. II.

CHAP. VII. VER. 1. Destroyed. So the Vulgate often expresses the Hebrew term, which signifies, "to cast out."—Seven. Ten are mentioned, Gen. xv. 9; but some of the less powerful nations were either mixed with the others, or were exterminated. The Hivites are omitted in the passage of Genesis, and sometimes no notice is taken of the Gergesites or the Pherezites. The latter had been already conquered by Moses, as well as the Raphaim and the Amorrites, over whom Og and Sehon ruled. C. iii. 5. C.—It seems, however, that some of the same nations, on the other side of the Jordan, remained to be subdued, and that any one of them was naturally too strong for the Hebrews, v. 7. Hence the latter might be convinced, that their victories were to be attributed to God.

VER. 2. League. Yet Josue, (ix. 3,) by mistake, entered into one with the Gabaonites, and observed it; (II.) whence we may conclude, that only such leagues are forbidden as would leave these nations in possession of their lands and idols. C. xx. 10. xxiii. 6. With foreign nations it was lawful to make leagues defensive and offensive, as David, Asa, and the Machabees did with the 24 And the Lord commanded that we should do all these ordinances, and should fear the Lord our God, that it might be well with us all the days of our life, as it is at this day.

CHAP. VII.

No league nor fellowship to be made with the Chanaanites: God promiseth his people his blessing and assistance, if they keep his commandments.

WHEN *the Lord thy God shall have brought thee into the land, which thou art going in to possess, and shall have destroyed many nations before thee, *the Hethite, and the Gergesite, and the Amorrite, and the Chanaanite, and the Pherezite, and the Hivite, and the Jebusite, seven nations much more numerous than thou art, and stronger than thou:

2 And the Lord thy God shall have delivered them to thee, thou shalt utterly destroy them. *Thou shalt make no league with them, nor shew mercy to them: *

3 Neither shalt thou make marriages with them. Thou shalt not give thy daughter to his son, nor take his daughter for thy son:

4 For she will turn away thy son from following me, that he may rather serve strange gods, and the wrath of the Lord will be kindled, and will quickly destroy thee.

5 But thus rather shall you deal with them: *Destroy their altars, and break their statues, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven things:

6 *Because thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God. *The Lord thy God hath chosen thee, to be his peculiar people, of all peoples that are upon the earth.

8 But because the Lord hath loved you, and hath ram, Benadad, and the Romans, 3 K. xv. 18, &c. If the Hebrews were so hostile to the nations of Chanaan, it was in execution of God's decree, who had sentenced them to die; and Tacitus hence unjustly inferred, that they hated all but their own nation. See Grot. Jur. ii. 15.—Them. This was ill executed. Joa. xiii. 18 Judge. i. M.

VER. 3. Marriages. Some believe that it was unlawful to marry the people of Chanaan, if they were even converted, and also those of other nations, as we find that Esdras (1 C. x. 2. 12,) ordered such strange wives to be sent away. But the context shews, as well as the practice of the most pious Hebrews, that it was only forbidden to marry with those who adhered to their idolatry, v. 4. Salmon took to wife Rahab, of Jericho; Mahalon and Booz successively married Ruth, the Moabitess, and Moses himself allows the Hebrews to espouse their captives, and to preserve the lives of women and children, C. xx. 14. xxi. 11. C. See Ex. xxxiv. 15.—Hence all the Chanaanites were not necessarily to be slain. The few exceptions did not hinder the rule from being general. See v. 16. Num. xiv. 23.

VER. 1. Gods. So great is the natural tendency to evil, that though a woman be generally inclined to follow the incantations and religion of her husband, yet, when his method of living is more repugnant to flesh and blood, she is but too apt to influence him to glide smoothly with her down the hill of pleasure, into the very abyss of dissipation. The prediction, she will turn, &c. is so often verified, that those who marry with unbelievers ought to tremble. H.

VER. 5. Things. This was to be done with regard to the idols of Chanaan, when it was first conquered, v. 25. Afterwards David made no scruple in wearing a crown, which had been taken from the spoils of Melchior, the idol of the Ammonites. 1 Par. xx. 2. C.

VER. 6. Peculiar. Heb. sogula, laid up like something most precious and desirable. M.—God seemed to have abandoned other nations to the corruption of their own heart. "This was, by a particular mystery, a prophetic nation." S. Aug. ep. cii. Ex. xix. 5. C.—Therefore must they destroy every idol in their land, to set a pattern to all other less favoured nations how they ought also to treat them.

VER. 7. Joined. Heb. "has set his love upon you." God is the most disinterested lover. H.

kept his oath, which he swore to your fathers: and hath brought you out with a strong hand, and redeemed you from the house of bondage, out of the hand of Pharaoh the king of Egypt.

9 And thou shalt know, that the Lord thy God, he is a strong and faithful God, keeping his covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments, unto a thousand generations:

10 And repaying forthwith them that hate him, so as to destroy them, without further delay, immediately rendering to them what they deserve.

11 Keep therefore the precepts and ceremonies, and judgments, which I command thee this day to do.

12 If after thou hast heard these judgments, thou keep and do them, the Lord thy God will also keep his covenant to thee, and the mercy which he swore to thy fathers:

13 And he will love thee and multiply thee, and will bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy vintage, thy oil, and thy herds, and the flocks of thy sheep upon the land, for which he swore to thy fathers that he would give it thee.

14 Blessed shalt thou be among all people. *No one shall be barren among you of either sex, neither of men, nor cattle.

15 The Lord will take away from thee all sickness: and the grievous infirmities of Egypt, which thou knowest, he will not bring upon thee, but upon thy enemies.

16 Thou shalt consume all the people, which the Lord thy God will deliver to thee. Thy eye shall not spare them, neither shalt thou serve their gods, lest they be thy ruin.

17 If thou say in thy heart: These nations are more than I, how shall I be able to destroy them?

18 Fear not, but remember what the Lord thy God did to Pharaoh, and to all the Egyptians, VER. 9. Strong. Heb. el, means also God. He requires us to imitate his perfections, as much as we are able. Being faithful, he will comply with his covenant exactly, and will punish those who neglect it. C.

VER. 10. Deserve. Heb. "he will repay to his face," or "he will punish immediately the person who hateth him to his face." God does not always defer the correction of the wicked till their death. C.—But this seems to be spoken principally of those who have engaged in the covenant, 2 Mac. vi. 12. D.—Thus he immediately chastised those who adored the calf, Core, Mury, &c. (M.) and he does not dissemble the faults even of his chosen servants. T.—The Chaldee and some Rabbins give another interpretation. "The Lord rewards his enemies for the good works which they perform in this life, reserving their punishment till the life to come. He does not delay to reward what good they do, but he will punish them (for their crimes) in another world." C.

VER. 12. If. The promises of God to the Hebrews were conditional. W.

VER. 13. Womb. He will grant thee many children. M.—This was esteemed a very great blessing, at a time when they might hope to give birth to the Messias. C.

VER. 14. Cattle. This shews, that no precept to marry is here given, but only a blessing. Even men cannot be commanded not to be barren, as that is not in their own power. It was, however, deemed a mark of some secret transgression when married people had no children. Vasquez. T.

VER. 15. Sickness, sent in punishment of sin, (H.) like the plagues of Egypt. Ex. ix. M.—Egypt was afflicted with some peculiar disorders, such as the leprosy, called Elephantiasis. Plin. xxvi. 1. The people were also much troubled with sore eyes, or blindness, and with ulcers upon their legs. Juven. Sat. xiii. 91. One-fourth of the inhabitants of Grand Cairo have sore eyes, or are blind. Brun.—Joinville speaks of the diseases which attacked the army of S. Louis in Egypt, preying chiefly upon the legs and gums, and causing them to putrify. C.

VER. 16. Consume. Kill the inhabitants, plunder their effects, (M.) destroy their idols.

VER. 19. Plagues. Heb. "trials." God manifested by this means the latent dispositions of the Egyptians, while he punished their wickedness at the same time. H.

the stretched-out arm, with which the Lord thy God brought thee out: so will he do to all the people, whom thou fearest.

20 ^bMoreover the Lord thy God will send also hornets among them, until he destroy and consume all that have escaped thee, and could hide themselves.

21 Thou shalt not fear them, because the Lord thy God is in the midst of thee, a God mighty and terrible:

22 He will consume these nations in thy sight by little and little and by degrees. Thou wilt not be able to destroy them altogether, lest perhaps the beasts of the earth should increase upon thee.

23 But the Lord thy God shall deliver them in thy sight: and shall slay them until they be utterly destroyed.

24 And he shall deliver their kings into thy hands, and thou shalt destroy their names from under heaven: no man shall be able to resist thee, until thou destroy them.

25 ^cTheir graven things thou shalt burn with fire. thou shalt not covet the silver and gold, of which they are made, neither shalt thou take to thee any thing thereof, lest thou offend, because it is an abomination to the Lord thy God.

26 Neither shalt thou bring any thing of the idol into thy house, lest thou become an anathema, like it. Thou shalt detest it as dung, and shalt utterly abhor it as uncleanness and filth, because it is an anathema.

CHAP. VIII.

The people is put in mind of God's dealings with them, to the end that they may love him and serve him.

ALL the commandments, that I command thee this day, ^dtake great care to observe: that you may live, and be multiplied, and going in may possess the land, for which the Lord swore to your fathers.

VER. 20. Hornets. Abenezra understands the leprosy, which the Hebrew may also signify. But hornets and such like insects are very destructive in hot countries; and Pausanias informs us that the Misiens were driven out of their country by them. C.—God destroyed the army of Sapor II. the Persian king, by sending an army of gnats, at the prayer of S. James of Nisibis, A. D. 350. "Lord, said the saint, thou art able by the weakest means to humble the pride of thy enemies, defeat these multitudes by an army of gnats." Butler, July 11.—We may, therefore, explain this text in a literal sense. C. Wisd. xii. 8. and xvi. 9. Jos. xxiv. 12.

VER. 21. Fear. Sept. "be wounded." In the war with the Midianites, not one was killed, (Num. xxxi. 49,) as Josephus (iii. 2.) informs us, was also the case when king Amalec and his people attacked the Hebrews. Ex. xvii. 13. The people seem to have expected such a miraculous interference of Providence in their favour; and hence, when 36 were slain at the siege of Hai, all were greatly dejected. Jos. vii. 5. H.

VER. 22. Thee. Three millions of people not being sufficient to cultivate the land. Ex. xxiii. 29. M.—God could easily have destroyed those mighty nations at once; but he would not give the Israelites any occasion of boasting. D.—If they never succeeded to expel them entirely out of the country, they might attribute it to their own negligence and other sins. H.

VER. 25. Graven things. Idols, so called by contempt. Ch.—Made. Heb. "gold (plates) on them," to cover the wood, &c. See v. 5.

VER. 26. An anathema. That is, a thing devoted to destruction; and which carries along with it a curse. Ch.—Like it. The curse rested upon those who kept any of the spoils. This brought death upon Achan, (Jos. vii. 1,) and upon some of the soldiers of Judas the Machabees, who had secreted some of the donaries of the idols of Jamnia, which the law forbiddeth to the Jews, 2 Mac. xii. 40. C.

CHAP. VIII. VER. 1. Live a long and happy life; which was often promised to the carnal Jews, to encourage them to fulfil God's commands. Christians are willing to forego these temporal advantages, that they may obtain such as may last for ever. C.

VER. 2. Prove, which is done frequently by prosperity also, v. 8. 12. 14. After trying the fidelity of his people by various means, to make them sensible thee, and that the things that were in thy heart might be made known, whether thou wouldst keep his commandments or not.

3 He afflicted thee with want, and gave thee manna for thy food, which neither thou nor thy fathers knew: to shew that *not in bread alone doth man live, but in every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

4 Thy raiment, with which thou wast covered, hath not decayed for age, and thy foot is not worn, lo this is the fortieth year.

6 That thou shouldst keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways, and fear him.

7 For the Lord thy God will bring thee into a good land, of brooks, and of waters, and of fountains: in the plains of which and the hills deep rivers break out:

8 A land of wheat, and barley, and vineyards, wherein fig-trees, and pomegranates, and oliveyards grow: a land of oil and honey.

9 Where without any want thou shalt eat thy bread, and enjoy abundance of all things: where the stones are iron, and out of its hills are dug mines of brass:

10 That when thou hast eaten, and art full, thou mayst bless the Lord thy God, for the excellent land, which he hath given thee.

of their own weakness and inability to do good, God takes pity on them, v. 16. C.—Known. Heb. "to know (by experience) what was in thy heart, whether," &c. The original term signifies also to make known to others. Gen. xxii. 12. H.

VER. 3. Not in bread alone, &c. i. e. That God is able to make food of what he pleases for the support of man. Ch.—Obedience to his law will ensure a happy life, v. 1.—God can support a person's life without any sustenance, as he did Moses, Elias, &c. for a long time. When the usual food is wanting, he can send some of a supernatural kind, as he did the manna.—Word. Heb. "by whatever proceedeth," &c. The Sept. and our Saviour (Mat. iv. 4.) cite it, however, agreeably to the Vulgate. The word of God and Jesus Christ nourish our souls. S. Chrys.—Philo says, "God feeds us with his most universal word . . . which is more ancient than the creation." C.—God could make the most poisonous things afford more nutrition, if he commanded us to eat them, than even the most delicious viands. Abulensis. T.—God can make food of whatever He pleases, or sustain men without meat. W.

VER. 4. Worn, for want of shoes. C. xxix. 5. Chaldee. This miracle of the Hebrews, being so well provided with raiment in a desert country, is mentioned, 2 Esd. ix. 21. Cosmas (B. v.) allows only that merchants constantly supplied them, and Abenezra thinks that they had brought plenty for change out of Egypt. C.—But the Scripture seems to acknowledge something more wonderful; namely, the good condition of the people's feet, and of their garments, after they had been worn for such a length of time. As their numbers had not increased, the children might be supplied with the clothes of the deceased; so that there is no need of making the miracle still greater, by asserting, as some have done, that the garments grew larger with the bodies of those who wore them. H.—The miracle was in favour both of good and bad, like manna, &c. T.

VER. 5. Up, by mildness and correction alternately. Heb. "chastiseth thee." Prov. iii. 12.

VER. 7. Out. The Jordan was the only river of consequence; but there were many torrents, &c. which rendered the country very different from that where they had been travelling for 40 years. H.—Heb. "of fountains, of abysses, which spring in vales and on mountains," having their origin in the sea. Chal. Eccli. i. 7. "Judea is famous for its waters, says Solinus, (35,) and the Jordan, a most enchanting river, runs through regions of equal beauty." C.

VER. 8. Honey, extracted from dates. D.—Almost all the luxuries of the earth might be found in the promised land; so that it was justly said to flow with milk and honey. H.

VER. 9. Iron, equal in hardness, and used to cut things, in the same manner as we use iron or steel. Isai. lx. 17.—Brass. There were mines of both in Mount Libanus; and David collected great quantities of such metals from Coelosyria, 3 K. xviii. 3. 1. Par. xxii. 3. 14. Sidon was noted for its brass. Homer, Ody. xv. 425. Sarepta probably took its name from the "foundry" established there. Dan and 18 But remember the Lord thy God, that he hath given thee strength, that he might fulfil his covenant, concerning which he swore to thy fathers, as this present day sheweth.

19 But if thou forget the Lord thy God, and follow strange gods, and serve and adore them: behold now I foretell thee, that thou shalt utterly perish.

M.—In all things give thanks, 1 Thes. v. 18. Our Saviour did so at the last supper. Mat. xxvi. 26. At taking the cup, the Jews say, "Blessed be thou, O Lord, who createdst the fruit of the vine." At the end of the repast, one of the most dignified at table, holding a cup full of wine, says, "Let us bless Him, who has fed us with his goods, and who preserves our life by his goodness;" and all answer, "Blessed be He from whom we have received food and life:" after which a long prayer is recited. VER. 17. For me. Heb. "hath procured me this wealth," or strength, v. 18.

VER. 19. Thee. Heb. "I attest this day against you, (Sept. add heaven and earth) that you shall," &c. God had already forbidden the worship of strange gods. Ex. xx. 3. He now threatens to punish the transgressors most severely. All nations have deemed it criminal to abandon the religion of their ancestors, unless when there were evident proofs of its absurdity, as was the case when so many embraced the doctrine of Jesus Christ, for which they were so cruelly persecuted. The Athenians would not suffer a word to be spoken against their gods; (Josep. c. Ap. ii.) and Cicero (Leg. ii.) lays down this as a law, "Let no one have gods to himself, nor any new ones; let him not adore, even in private, strange gods; unless they have been publicly acknowledged." C.

VER. 20. Destroyed. Heb. "destroys." Some were already subdued, others on the brink of ruin.—Disobedient to. God punished this sin in the most exemplary manner. H.

Lest they should impute their victories to their own merits, they are put in mind of their manifold rebellions and other sins, for which they should have been destroyed but God spared them for his promise made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

HEAR, O Israel: Thou shalt go over the Jordan ^athis day: to possess nations very great, and stronger than thyself, cities great, and walled up to the sky,

2 A people great and tall, the sons of the Enacims, whom thou hast seen, and heard of, against whom no man is able to stand.

3 Thou shalt know therefore this day that the Lord thy God himself will pass over before thee, a devouring and consuming fire, to destroy and extirpate and bring them to nothing before thy face quickly, as he hath spoken to thee.

4 Say not in thy heart, when the Lord thy God shall have destroyed them in thy sight: For my justice hath the Lord brought me in to possess this land, whereas these nations are destroyed for their wickedness.

5 For it is not for thy justices, and the uprightness of thy heart that thou shalt go in to possess their lands: but because they have done wickedly, they are destroyed at thy coming in: and that the Lord might accomplish his word, which he promised by oath to thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

6 Know therefore that the Lord thy God giveth thee not this excellent land in possession for thy justices; for thou art a very stiff-necked people.

7 Remember and forget not, how thou provokedst the Lord thy God to wrath in the wilderness. From the day that thou camest out of Egypt unto this place, thou hast always strove against the Lord.

8 ^bFor in Horeb also thou didst provoke him, and he was angry and would have destroyed thee,

9 ^cWhen I went up into the mount, to receive the tables of stone, the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you: and I continued in the mount forty days and nights, neither eating bread, nor drinking water.

10 ^dAnd the Lord gave me two tables of stone written with the finger of God, and containing all the words that he spoke to you in the mount from the midst of the fire, when the people were assembled together.

11 And when forty days were passed, and as many

CHAP. IX. VER. 1. This day, very soon, (M.) within the space of a month. C.—Sky: an hyperbole to denote their surprising height. W.

VER. 2. Stand. Heb. "who can stand before the sons of Enak?" as if this were a sort of proverb. C.—The spies had formerly terrified the people with the report of the high walls and gigantic inhabitants of Chanaan. Num. xiii. 18.

VER. 3. Fire. See C. iv. 24. The conducting angel would fight for the Hebrews. H.

VER. 7. Strove. Heb. "irritated." C.—Sept. "continually disbelieved the Lord." Moses hence takes occasion to lay before the people their frequent and most heinous offences, on account of which they might justly have feared being destroyed, as much as the infamous nations whom they were about to supplant. They might thus be convinced that they had been chosen gratuitously. H.—For: God hates nothing more than ingratitude and presumption. C.

VER. 8. Would, if He had not been appeased by earnest supplication, as v. 20. VER. 12. Have quickly. Heb. "have become corrupt; they have quickly abandoned the way which I commanded them." H.—Sept. "the people hath sinned . . . they have quickly transgressed," &c. C.—Idol. Protestants have "image." The Hebrews had called the similitude of a calf their god. Ex. xxxii. II.

VER. 16. Sinned, by idolatry, which comprises every sort of sin. Hence the Scripture only specifies that Jeroboam caused Israel to sin, when it means to assert that he engaged the people in the worship of idols. C.

VER. 18. Sins. Many believe that Moses spent the whole time in obtaining pardon. Hiscuni agrees herein with the other Rabbins, only he thinks that Moses nights, the Lord gave me the two tables of stone, the tables of the covenant;

12 And said to me: ^eArise, and go down from hence quickly: for thy people, which thou hast brought out of Egypt, have quickly forsaken the way, that thou hast shewed them, and have made to themselves a molten idol.

13 And again the Lord said to me: I see that this people is stiff-necked:

14 Let me alone that I may destroy them, and abolish their name from under heaven, and set thee over a nation that is greater and stronger than this.

15 And when I came down from the burning mount, and held the two tables of the covenant with both hands,

16 And saw that you had sinned against the Lord your God, and had made to yourselves a molten calf, and had quickly forsaken his way, which he had shewed you:

17 I cast the tables out of my hands, and broke them in your sight.

18 And I fell down before the Lord, as before, forty days and nights, neither eating bread nor drinking water, for all your sins, which you had committed against the Lord, and had provoked him to wrath:

19 For I feared his indignation and anger, where-with being moved against you, he would have destroyed you. And the Lord heard me this time also.

20 And he was exceeding angry against Aaron also, and would have destroyed him, and I prayed in like manner for him.

21 And your sin that you had committed, that is, the calf, I took, and burned it with fire, and breaking it into pieces, until it was as small as dust, I threw it into the torrent which cometh down from the mountain.

22 ^fAt the burning also, and at the place of temptation, and at the graves of lust you provoked the Lord:

23 And when he sent you from Cades-barne, saying: Go up, and possess the land that I have given you, and you slighted the commandment of the Lord your God, and did not believe him, neither would you hearken to his voice:

24 But were always rebellious from the day that I began to know you.

25 And I lay prostrate before the Lord forty days was all the time in the tabernacle. Other 40 days, or a third rigid fast, were requisite to obtain the second tables of the law, as the text seems to insinuate, (v. 25. C. x. 10,) unless Moses repeat what he has here asserted, as many able expositors suppose. Torneil, Usher, &c. C. T.—The former opinion is maintained however, by Salien, &c. Ex. xxxiv. H.

VER. 21. Sin. The Scripture designates by this name not only the evil action but also the propensity to it, the object, matter, occasion, punishment, or victim of sin.—The calf. He broke the idol in pieces, and then ground it small. Ex. xxxii. 20. C.

VER. 22. Burning, &c. The places called in Heb. "Tabera, Masa, and Kib roth Huttaavah." H.—At the first, the murmurers were burnt; (Num. xi. 1.) at the second, or at Raphidim, (C.) the people demanded water, and were supplied from Horeb; (Ex. xvii. 2. 7. M.) though some confound this with the former place. It seems rather to refer to the temptation, or murmur of the people, on account of quails. Num. xi. 34. Ps. lxxvii. 18. C.

VER. 23. Slighted. Heb. "rebelled against," &c. as v. 24. Sept. "you were incredulous to." See Num. xiii. 3.

VER. 24. To know you. When Moses slew the Egyptian, and would have pacified two of his contending brethren, they refused to receive his mediation; so also, when he returned from Midian, to rescue them from slavery, they presently began to murmur against him, and continued to do so frequently for 40 years. H.—Sept. refers this to God, "from the day that he was known to you," and received you for his peculiar people. Ex. xi. 25.

VER. 25. Nights. See v. 18. C.—After specifying various seditions of the and nights, in which I humbly besought him, that he would not destroy you as he had threatened:

26 And praying, I said: O Lord God, destroy not thy people, and thy inheritance, which thou hast redeemed in thy greatness, whom thou hast brought out of Egypt with a strong hand.

27 Remember thy servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: look not on the stubbornness of this people, nor on their wickedness and sin:

28 Lest perhaps the inhabitants of the land, out of which thou hast brought us, say: The Lord could not bring them into the land, that he promised them, and he hated them: therefore he brought them out, that he might kill them in the wilderness, 29 Who are thy people and thy inheritance, whom thou hast brought out by thy great strength, and in thy stretched-out arm.

CHAP. X.

God giveth the second tables of the law: a further exhortation to fear and serve the Lord.

AT that time the Lord said to me: Hew thee two tables of stone, like the former, and come up to me into the mount: and thou shalt make an ark of wood,

2 And I will write on the tables the words that were in them which thou brokest before, and thou shalt put them in the ark.

3 And I made an ark of setim-wood. And when I had hewn two tables of stone like the former, I went up into the mount, having them in my hands.

4 And he wrote in the tables, according as he had written before, the ten words, which the Lord spoke to you in the mount from the midst of the fire, when the people were assembled: and he gave them to me.

5 And returning from the mount, I came down, and put the tables into the ark, that I had made, and people, Moses returns to what he had been saying respecting the tables of the law, and shews with what difficulty he obtained pardon for the people, and the second tables. H.—Some people believe that Moses was thrice 40 days in the mountain. He mentions the prayer which he addressed to God before his first descent. Ex. xxxii. 11. M.

CHAP. X. VER. 1. Wood. Moses had received this injunction, before he ascended the mount the second time. Ex. xxv. 10. But he executed it only after he had received the second tables of the law. Ex. xxxvii. 1. M.—Some pretend that he made an ark of setim-wood, to contain the tables, till Beseleel should have completed his, which was covered with gold, and inclosed the former. Drus.—But this seems unnecessary. C.

VER. 3. I made, or gave orders to have one ready against my return. C.

VER. 4. To me. God had already promulgated the same laws in the hearing of all. Ex. xix. 17. H.
